Preface

This is a remarkable moment for Ethiopian studies. 11 years after the Encyclopaedia Aethiopica project was marked by the appearance of the first volume, and almost 20 years since the first idea of a comprehensive lexicon for Ethiopian studies was discussed within a small circle of scholars animated and stimulated by the visionary proposal of Siegbert Uhlig, the ambitious project has finally come to an end with the publication of its last fifth volume. Almost 20 years of efforts and continuous work have now arrived at a successful end.

As already remarked by reviewers of the previous volumes, the importance of this encyclopaedia is that of providing a scholarly standard upon which further and deeper research can grow and upgrade our knowledge, while acknowledging past research, through a balanced presentation of the most advanced state of the art in the field. From this point of view, the Encyclopaedia Aethiopica, albeit from the perspective of a small field of studies, intends to flank similar works in Classical, Islamic, Egyptological, Coptic and Iranian Studies, just to quote some examples. As for these works, we can confidently say, that even scholars from other fields than Ethiopian studies will find a useful and in many cases even indispensable reference work in the Encyclopaedia Aethiopica.

The humanities and social sciences – from archaeology, history and prosopography, historical geography, ethnology and linguistics, to literature, art history and religion – remain the core of the thematic scope of the Encyclopaedia Aethiopica. Yet reliable basic data on the context – land and people, regional resources, flora and fauna as well as economic and environmental, social and political developments from prehistoric times to the second half of the 20th century are provided. Not rarely, extensive primary research had to be conducted for the articles to take their present shape.

Morevoer, for the broadness of the scope and the number of disciplines involved, this work remains a unicum within the research tools available for Sub-Saharan Africa.

The present volume is very different from what the readers have become used to. Its relatively minor share is dedicated to entries for the remaining letters of the alphabet (Y–Z, 169 articles). Some two hundred pages contain 229 entries that supplement articles originally planned for the previous volumes that were impossible to include at the time due to editorial reasons. These entry titles were referred to in the previous volumes with the endorsement "s. EAE vol. 5". Almost all of them have actually been realized as independent articles. In a few cases small rearrangements have been carried out and a cross-reference will lead to the new relevant article. A small set of new articles has also been included, which eventually appeared necessary in the course of the work, because of recent discoveries and researches, or emerging of new data.

The "Addenda and Corrigenda" intend to emend errors and omissions of the articles in the previous volumes and are based upon feedbacks from the authors and checks of the editorial team. They do not claim to be exhaustive.

The remaining part of the volume contains a set of tools that brings the useability of the entire encyclopaedia to a higher level. A series of tables and synopses provides information on basic historical facts. A set of maps cartographically displays geographical, climatological, environmental as well as archaeological, historical, linguistic, administrative, and political informations. The maps section also represents a fresh new contribution that results from extensive first-hand work carried out appositely for the redaction of this volume.

Last but not least, the Index provides targeted access to all 4,360 articles in the five volumes. This is the necessary tool to take full advantage of the mass of geographical, prosopographical, and historical information collected in the Encyclopaedia Aethiopica.

Not yet a systematic repertory, it can already be used as a good starting point for whatever research of this kind in the field. Its compilation and finalization took much working time and energy during the prepation of the present volume. Along with the maps section, the index is a complex scientific accomplishment in itself. It is the result of intensive methodological research and year-long efforts. Provided with a series of detailed qualifiers and structured entries, it matches the standard required by the best international areal lexica.

As in the previous volumes the active participation of young or emerging scholars in the authorship of the Encyclopaedia Aethiopica has to be emphasized. The lower number of articles in absolute terms, and the fact that the supplementary section has been marked by a large contribution of authors who were somehow overburdened in the previous volumes, gives account for the smaller range of authors (160) and respectively countries (21) involved in this volume.

As already mentioned, the Encyclopaedia Aethiopica provides a basic research tool for the students and scholars of Ethiopian Studies, more general African Studies and Oriental Studies. Its articles as well as bibliographies for further study offer precious synthetic overviews that make further research possible and many specialized areas more easily accessible. Moreover, the Encyclopaedia Aethiopica also has the great merit of contributing to demarcate (although for the first time, but definitely in a clearer way) the perimeter of Ethiopian Studies as a coherent field of studies at a crossroad of a wide and complex spectrum of disciplines. Finally, it has also become a point of reference for those involved in economics, politics, diplomacy and development work. It is among the frequently consulted publications in many University libraries, including those in Ethiopia. The positive feedback received from colleagues and users rewards the editorial team, co-editors, field specialists, and authors, for the often difficult tasks they have undertaken in order to successfully complete this collaborative enterprise.

Acknowledgements

Like the chief editor of the previous volumes of the Encyclopaedia Aethiopica, among the many individuals who have generously contributed, I think that the first acknowledgement for the accomplishment of this complex, international, long-run project is duly reserved for the single authors. Without their confidence in this enterprise and continuous dedication, nothing would have been possible. Even for this volume, notwithstanding other main commitments, they took the effort to deliver their contributions timely enough for the necessary adjustments and corrections of the editorial team, for collecting feedback from reviewers and supplying the articles with maps and illustrations wherever needed: since the last volume this task has become more than crucial because further extension was impossible. Many had to work under a particular pressure – whether for personal or health reasons, or because they were asked to replace another author – in order to ensure that Volume 5, with its 398 articles, maps and index, could be completed. To all of them I would like to express my most heartfelt gratitude.

It is a due and particularly sad task to mention here that three of the co-editors of the Encyclopaedia Aethiopica have passed away in the course of 2013, and were not able to see the accomplishment of the work to which they actively contributed till the very last moment of their life. They are Paolo Marrassini (d. 10 January 2013), Gideon Goldenberg (d. 30 July 2013), and Donald Crummey (d. 16 August 2013). In the present volume it was unfortunately only possible to include a dedicated article for Paolo Marrassini. We will deeply miss all of them as masters, colleagues and friends.

Other authors who passed away already before the print of Volume 4 appear here as posthumous contributors for Volume 5: they are Sevir Chernetsov, Hussein Ahmed and Meseret Chekol Reta.

Several scholars have been advising us in the course of the work. Their help was of great value for the scholarly quality of the volume, and I would like to thank all those, too many to be listed here, who have been constructively responding to our queries.

Numerous institutions, archives and private persons have provided illustrative materials for the Encyclopaedia Aethiopica and have allowed us to use the information: they all are also to be most heartly thanked. In this respect, my special thanks go to Michael Gervers.

As for the other volumes, David Appleyard is responsible for the quality of the English used throughout the volume. Joe McIntyre has strongly supported him in this task. The standard in transliteration of Ethiopic terms was additionally checked by Maija Priess. To them I owe my most deepfelt gratitude.

Matthias Schulz was in charge of preparing the maps that appear in this volume in the article sections, and his skillful work deserves once more much appreciation.

The special maps section in Volume 5, almost entirely realized at the Hiob Ludolf Centre for Ethiopian Studies in Hamburg, was also made possible by the valuable cooperation between Matthias Schulz and Luisa Sernicola, who spent several periods of time in Hamburg intensively working on the maps together with the editorial team. The single responsibilities are detailed in the maps section as well as the acknowledgements for the support of various field specialists who offered advice finalizing the maps.

The main work load remained, however, on the shoulders of the gradually smaller group of members of the Hamburg editorial team at the Hiob Ludolf Centre for Ethiopian Studies, as the former Research Unit Ethiopian Studies has been renamed since 2009. Without their selfless commitment, patience, and mutual understanding, always essential in team work, the appearance of this volume would have been impossible. Their efforts went far beyond formal corrections; they took active part in all important decision-making processes and ensured that the high scientific level of the work could be maintained.

The work on the Index was entirely in the hands of the editorial team. Several members of the team have contributed to this complex undertaking that lingered for over ten years. The project was first launched by Dirk Bustorf and Andreu Martínez d'Alòs-Moner in September 2003 and in successive stages other colleagues joined in, including Alexander Meckelburg and Sophia Dege. The final and the most intricate phase of the work was carried out by Evgenia Sokolinskaia and Andreu Martínez, with a significant input from Alexander Meckelburg and Maria Bulakh.

Finally, all questions related to layout and preparation for the print were constantly and carefully handled by Thomas Rave.

In addition to the members of the editorial team listed on p. xi, I would like to express my deep gratitude to Angela M. Müller, who helped the work in many ways. I extend my gratitude to Janneke Langen-Hegemann, who worked as a student assistant, for her dedication and engagement.

My work as the editor-in-chief of the Encyclopaedia Aethiopica for Volume 5 started immediately after Volume 4 was finalized for the print. From that moment on I have felt the responsibility of keeping the standard and the quality of the work initiated by my illustrious predecessor and co-editor Siegbert Uhlig. This work will rightly remain tied to his name. I am extremely grateful to him that even during these last years of work on Volume 5 he has always been able to find time, energy and determination to support the work and productively contribute and advise on many crucial issues.

As expected for a project of long run and such a broad scope, the Encyclopaedia Aethiopica would have never succeeded without continuous and substantial financial support. The Deutsche Forschungsgemeinschaft is to be thanked first for having largely sponsored the project from its very beginning and for over 13 years on. Generous support was also provided by the Zeitstiftung Ebelin und Gerd Bucerius. Special sponsoring was provided twice by the Fritz Thyssen Stiftung. Considerable help at different times was offered by the German Israeli Foundation. Yearly subsidy came from the Johanna und Fritz Buch Gedächtnisstiftung since the first steps of the project, which helped to overcome emergency situations. Long stays of authors working on the Encyclopaedia Aethiopica were allowed by the Sigrid Rausing Trust. The German Academic Exchange Service has repeatedly helped a lot with generous travel grants. The Stiftung Akademische Auslandsstelle at the University of Hamburg has also provided help to the project in a very difficult moment. The DeutschÄthiopischeStiftung has always supported the project from the background, supplying easy solutions for difficult questions.

Finally, the University of Hamburg has played an essential role, since it has provided the various "homes" where the project has found its accomodation in the course of time. Without its continuous support and constant readiness to help, the life of the editorial team and the whole project would have been much more difficult and uncertain in many senses.

Technical and editorial issues have found an ideal partner in the Harrassowitz Verlag and the Memminger printing press, who were always ready to indicate the most appropriate solutions. Thanks to them, the Encyclopaedia Aethiopica could maintain its high-quality appearance. A subsidy by the Deutsche Forschungsgemeinschaft has once again made it possible that the volume can be sold at its relatively modest constant price and largely disseminated.

Notes for the User

The Encyclopaedia Aethiopica uses several conventions that on the one hand standardize the appearance of the articles, and on the other hand facilitate their understanding by the readers. For the transcription and transliteration used in the Encyclopaedia Aethiopica s. the corresponding tables in the Notes for the User section in Volumes 1 and 2 as well as the article on Transcriptions in the present volume. A Key to Detail Maps can also be found in Volumes 1 and 2. The section devoted to Abbreviation Rules is reproduced in the current volume due to the fact that more bibliographic titles and general abbreviations have been incorporated.

Abbreviation Rules

The Encyclopaedia Aethiopica works with different types of abbreviations. First and foremost, the main heading is always abbreviated throughout the entry, to one letter if it consists of one or more than two words, and to two letters, if of two words (e.g., "Yaᶜəqob" – "Y.", "Zärᵓa Yaᶜəqob" –"Z.Y.", "Zäwde Gäbrä Śəllase" – "Z."). The subheadings and titles of subarticles are not abbreviated. If an entry title can have both singular and plural forms, both are abbreviated by the same syglum, the grammatical meaning being elicitable from the context (e.g., "C." in the article "Cowrie" stands for both "cowrie" and "cowries").

In order to keep the texts compact, a limited set of general abbreviations is used. The frequently used bibliographic references are also abbreviated. The clues are provided in tables on the following pages.

Yaᵓa

Y. (from Orom. yaaᵓa, ‘place were ceremonies are held) is a Muslim ↗pilgrimage centre located in Tongo wäräda in Beni Šangul-Gumuz Regional State. It is a village formed around the mausoleum of al-fakī Aḥmad ᶜUmar (b. 1891, d. 2 April 1953 [17 Rağab 1372 H.]), a Tiğānī šayḫ from Bornu, Nigeria. The residents of Y. are Tiğānī followers (↗Islamic brotherhoods), consisting of Oromo migrants from ↗Wälläga, ↗Ǧimma and ↗Illubabor, and their descendants. Y. is also the name of a qäbäle of the Tongo wäräda.

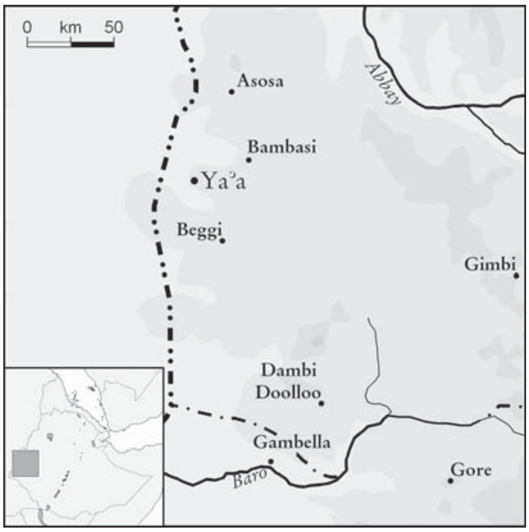
Al-fakī Aḥmad ᶜUmar, leaving Bornu to make the pilgrimage to ↗Mecca at the age of 19, entered Ethiopia via Khartoum, allegedly led by a divine message. His ethnic origins are unknown, but he is vaguely considered to have been a “Fellata”, i.e. Fulbe. At ↗Asosa, ↗Beni Šangul, al-fakī Aḥmad ᶜUmar served under däğğazmač Muḥammad ᶜAbdurraḥmān (the son of Tor al-Ġurī). Around 1920, al-fakī Aḥmad ᶜUmar migrated south to ↗Qälləm awrağğa in western ↗Wälläga. At Finčo, Aḥmad ᶜUmar became known as abbaa qoričča (Orom. ‘healer’), and was granted land at Ripa (10 km east of ↗Dambi Dolloo) by the governor of ↗Qälləm awrağğa, däğğazmač ↗Bərru Wäldä Gäbrəᵓel. He was also granted land at Minko (5 km east of Ripa), where he established his maasaraa (Orom. ‘residence of a highly venerated person’). While living in Minko, Aḥmad ᶜUmar was recognized as a ↗walī. Furthermore, many local Oromo, who followed their autochthonous ↗religion, or were partly Christianized, started venerating him and converted to ↗Islam. He was reverentially called šeekota Dambi (i.e. grand šayḫ of Dambi Dolloo), his fame spreading as far as ↗Ǧimma.



During the Italian occupation (↗Africa Orientale Italiana), Aḥmad ᶜUmar efficiently acted as mediator between the Italian colonizers and the local Oromo. After the Italian occupation, he had admirers from all over western Oromoland. In 1942/43 al-fakī Aḥmad ᶜUmar retreated to Kusaye, where he stayed for five years. He then moved to Ǧimma area where most of his descendants live today. He settled near Afallo (Geeraa wäräda) for about three years.

In 1951 Aḥmad ᶜUmar accomplished the ḥağğ, accompanied by his Ethiopian followers. At Mecca, he is said to have received a divine message to go to Y., an uninhabited piece of land owned by qäññazmač Muḥammad wad al-Amīn. Leaving his followers in Mecca, he promised to return after a farewell visit to his relatives in Bornu. In 1952 he reappeared in Asosa, and accompanied by his chief servant, ḥāğğ Adam Abbaa Dikko (alias “Abbaa Qoro”), he settled at Y., after having received permission from qäññazmač Muḥammad wad al-Amīn. The land was sparsely inhabited by ↗Mao, ↗Komo and ↗Berta (especially Fadaši, cp. ↗Fadasi, s. EAE vol. 5), and a group of Oromo followers migrated in order to construct his last maasaraa; they eventually became the first residents of Y.

After al-fakī Aḥmad ᶜUmar’s death, ḥāğğ Adam took the initiative in developing an irrigation system in and around the village. The communalistic way of life of the community al-fakī Aḥmad had founded gradually deteriorated after 1991, but the residents of Y. still hold the hospitality of pilgrims as obligatory. The ziyāra to Y. is conducted on Muslim holidays, such as the ↗Mawlid, the Miᶜrāğ and ᶜArafa (↗Aräfa).

Yabello

Y. (ያቤሎ, Orom. sp. Yaaballoo, Yaabello, also Oobda) is a market town and administrative centre in the Boorana region (administrative name until 1991: ↗Boräna) in southern Ethiopia, situated on the main road connecting Kenya and ↗Moyale with the Ethiopian highlands. According to the 2005 Census, the town has a population of 18,478. The majority of the inhabitants are ↗Boorana, the rest belong to other ↗Oromo groups, ↗Amhara, ↗Burǧi, ↗Konso, ↗Somali, ↗Gabra, ↗Gurage and ↗Waata.

The original name of Y. was Gaddiisa Oobda ('shadow of Oobda'), after a man known in local tradition by the name of Oobda as well as a mountain near the town. Folk etymology renders Y. as yaaʾa ballo ('place of the big yaaʾa', cp. Leus – Salvadori 2006: 669). During the yaaʾa 'ceremonial assembly' the Boorana leaders of the same ↗gadaa grade (↗abbaa gadaa and adulaa) had to live in the same camp (olla yaaʾa, 'yaaʾa hamlet'), and, according to oral tradition, such a place existed in Y. in the past. Leus and Salvadori (ibid.) suggest that Y. was chosen for this purpose because of its good wells. Though the wells are not of superior quality, they certainly contributed to the attractiveness of the place. Some of the wells were improved only in recent times, e.g., those of Eela Garbii (ibid.) were renovated by the Protestant mission.

The formation of Y. town is linked with the establishment of Ethiopian rule over the Boorana in 1897. Between 1904 and 1912, a tax office was established in Y. With the traditional conflict between the Boorana and ↗Guǧǧi escalating around the same time – and ever more ↗fire-arms being imported into southern Ethiopia – a police station and an army camp were also established at Y. Until 1944 Y. served as an administrative centre, but then Areeroo (↗Arero) assumed this function.

People from Konso started to migrate to and farm around Y. in the 1940s. In the late 1940s the livestock market was started. In 1947, the master plan of Y. was signed by Awwäqä Yəgläṭu, later (1957–68) the governor of Boorana, and by däǧǧazmač Alula Bäqqälä, an officer residing in Addis Abäba (Jaatanii Diidaa 2007: 12f.). Since 1950 Y. town grew when Boorana and other ethnic groups, such as Amhara, Konso and others, gradually settled there. Y. then became one of the main markets of the Boorana region.

Today, market is still held in Y. on Tuesdays and Saturdays. Important local products sold there are butter, milk, yoghurt, soodda and mogaado (two types of ↗salt from the Booqee salt lake), while maize, sugar, coffee, tobacco, and cloth etc. are major products brought from other regions.

Since 2002 Y. has served as administrative centre of Y. wäräda as well as of Boorana zone, Oromiyaa Regional State (Leus – Salvadori 2006: 669). The town received this status, after ↗Nagallee, until then the capital of the Boorana awrağğa, had become part of the new Guğği zone.

Yädəbba Maryam

Y.M. (የድብ ፡ ማርያም, 'St. Mary of the Bears') is a church complex in northern ↗Wällo (north-west of ↗Däse), ↗rock-hewn but also using natural caves. According to a local tradition, the place was discovered and adapted for the Christian cult by abunä ↗Muse, the successor of abba ↗Sälama (hence its alternative name Däbrä Abunä Muse).

The main church dedicated to St. ↗Mary is called "St. Mary of the Bears", an allusion to the legend in which abba Muse is said to have "taken over" the cave from a bear. It is arranged in a large cave-like oval room (ca. 11.4 m x 7.5 m, 3.4 m high) accessible from two entrances cut into the face of the rock (the central one is presently blocked). Above the entrances there are three open windows. The eastern part of the room is raised and screened by four large pillars connected by arches. Large engaged pillars protrude from the western wall. A podium is constructed in front of the eastern part of the room and along the southern and western walls. A wooden pole and panels visible on the podium may be parts of an old chancel. Steps between the pillars lead to a space preceding three chapels which are also used as sanctuaries (↗mäqdäs). In one of them, believed to have served as praying place for abba Muse, there is a monolithic altar below a shallow cupola. The other two are dedicated to the Archangel Gabriel and to St. ↗Täklä Haymanot, respectively.

Steps in the north and south of the central room lead to adjacent parts of the complex. On the northern side there is a passage and several small rooms, one of them dedicated to the Archangel Michael. To the south, a corridor leads to the second, smaller church (5.5 m x 4.5 m, 2.4 m high) of St. George, which has its own entrance from outside. Two arched openings are cut into the interior eastern wall to the right and to the left of a thick pillar leading to an ambulatory and to a chapel which also serves as the mäqdäs. In both churches pillars are decorated with false brackets crudely cut only inside the subarches. The architecture of the complex has not been properly studied.

The complex is extensively decorated with wall ↗paintings dating to the 16th cent. Their stylistic features and iconography closely resemble the murals in ↗Gʷəḥ Yəmʾata. Holy figures, frequently accompanied by inscriptions and sometimes by invocations (e.g., Bəʾəse Sälam, Habtä Maryam and Tənśaʾe Wäld), are depicted in small and large groups on the walls, pillars and ceilings. An ornament composed of interlaces and floral motifs frames the compositions and decorates the inside of the arches. The paintings in the smaller church were never finished.

Only some of the depicted subjects have been identified. In the church of St. Mary one finds the Ancient of Days in a mandorla supported by the symbols of the Four Evangelists and accompanied by the Twenty-Four Priests of Heaven; ↗John the Baptist; Archangel Afnin; Abraham and Isaac; Mary with Child (holding a bird) flanked by Michael and Gabriel; the apostles; ↗Gäbrä Mänfäs Qəddus and an abba Samuʾel; two pairs of ↗equestrian saints: ↗Qirqos and Victor and ↗George and Theodore (playing an ancient game, in which noble riders used lances to catch and keep a ring). On the southern wall, two ↗devils and another infernal creature are perhaps the remnants of a larger composition depicting Hell or the Last Judgement. In the northern corridor there are rows of unidentified saints. In the chapel of abba Muse, two figures are still visible behind the altar; the one holding a chalice may be St. Stephen. The archangels, ↗angels and cherubs are represented on the ceiling of the chapels; on the walls are biblical figures and martyrs, some of whom are rarely depicted: Adam, Noah, James the Brother of the Lord, and St. Mamas riding a lion. Also exceptional for 16th-cent. murals are the ↗Trinity and Mary orans.

In the church of St. George, beside nine figures (possibly the "↗Nine Saints"), there are representations of King ↗David facing ↗Solomon, several archangels and the ↗Zagʷe kings: ↗Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos and ↗Lalibäla are on horseback, the latter followed by courtiers, two of them playing trumpets. Four standing figures without haloes (one holding a sword) may represent other members of the dynasty. By analogy with the paintings in the church of Mary, two unidentified figures playing a horse game are probably two other equestrian saints. St. George and abba ↗Nob with an attendant are also depicted on horseback. The entry to the sanctuary is guarded by two angels with raised swords; on the ceiling inside one finds five archangels arranged in a circle and saints including abba Muse accompanied by abba Mäṭaᶜ (↗Libanos).

The church preserves an iron staff cross, a 15th-cent. shafted cross, and a manuscript of the Acts of Muse with historical notes in Gəᶜəz and Amharic.

Yaᶜəbikä Ǝgziʾ

Y.Ǝ. (የዕቢከ ፡ እግዚእ) was a local lord in ↗Təgray during the first half of the 14th cent.; the centre of his power was located in ↗Amba Śännayti.

The main source on Y.Ǝ. is an additional note in the "Golden Gospel" (↗Wängelä wärq) of ↗Däbrä Libanos of Šəmäzana. In this document, written probably in 1318/19 A.D., mäkʷännən Y.Ǝ. is said to have donated a ↗gʷəlt-land to Däbrä Libanos (CRDLib 200f., no. 17). Apparently, by that time Y.Ǝ. had extended his realm, accumulated power and bore a number of titles: in the document he styles himself as governor (śəyyum) of Däbrä Maᶜṣo, Zäreda and Ǝntərta (thought to be the same as ↗Ǝndärta, but cp. Conti Rossini's comment, CRDLib 195, suggesting rather an area in ↗ᶜAgamä or ↗Akkälä Guzay). According to the same land charter (CRDLib no. 17), Y.Ǝ. donated the land on his own authority, there being no mention of the reigning monarch (↗ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon I). In doing this, he probably continued the policy of his predecessor Täsfanä Ǝgziʾ (cp. his charter dated to 1305, CRDLib 199, no. 15); but Y.Ǝ. ran into confrontation with the King. Perhaps Y.Ǝ. refused to submit to ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon or even contested his throne (TadTChurch 73). However, Y.Ǝ. was defeated, as deduced from a contemporary note in the "Gospel of ↗Iyäsus Moʾa", from ↗Däbrä Ḥayq Ǝsṭifanos (ms. EMML no. 1832; s. Taddesse Tamrat 1970: 95f., esp. n. 43) and a later document in the Mäṣḥafä ↗Aksum (CRAxum no. 29, issued by aṣe ↗Ləbnä Dəngəl).

The Acts of ↗ᶜAbiyä Ǝgziʾ are another source that recounts the story of the rebellion; the name of Y.Ǝ. is not explicitly mentioned, but the anonymous governor of Amba Śännayti, who incited the chief of ↗Tämben to rebel against the king, must definitely be Y.Ǝ. (cp. Conti Rossini 1948: 419ff.). It seems that Y.Ǝ. was defeated by 1322, since the office of Ǝntərta was occupied by a different person by the same year (Queen Bəlen Saba; cp. CRDLib 31f., no. 20). Y.Ǝ.'s fate after his defeat is not known. He may have been buried at ↗Däbrä Mäᶜar in Gärᶜalta, as deduced from a document included in the "Golden Gospel" of Däbrä Mäᶜar (Heldman – Devens in VarAeth 98, n. 78). It is not clear who the descendants of Y.Ǝ. were, and if his lineage retained power, at least in Amba Śännayti.

The most important reference to Y.Ǝ. is found in the colophon to the ↗Kəbrä nägäśt, according to which Y.Ǝ. authorized the translation of the book by Yəsḥaq, nəburä əd of Aksum, after it had been "found" in ↗Nazre[t] (BezKebr 172 [text]). This information became a cornerstone for contemporary representations of the history of early Solomonic Ethiopia. It seems very likely that the Kəbrä nägäśt was not initially meant as an ideological device for the kings of the line of ↗Yəkunno Amlak (from ↗Amhara, s. EAE vol. 5). Rather, it emerged in the 14th cent., in northern Ethiopia; being linked to the old local nobility and opposing the hegemony of the southerners' dynasty, Y.Ǝ. used the Kəbrä nägäśt to support his own claim to power. When the revolt of Y.Ǝ. was suppressed by ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon, the Kəbrä nägäśt was "taken over" by the victor, and adopted to strengthen the quest for power of the Solomonic dynasty (but the subscription with the name of Y.Ǝ. was not purged from the work).

Abunä Y. (ያዕቆብ, fl. around 1340), a 14th-cent. metropolitan of Ethiopia, is known from the Ethiopian hagiographic literature concerning the "Cycle of the Holy Monks in Conflict against the King", which includes five texts: Gädlä ↗Bäṣälotä Mikaʾel of Däbrä Gol (Amhara); Gädlä ↗Filəppos of Däbrä ᶜAsbo (↗Däbrä Libanos of ↗Šäwa); Gädlä ↗Anorewos of Däbrä Ṣəgaga (Šäwa); Gädlä ↗Aron of Däbrä Daret (Bägemdər); Gädlä ↗Samuʾel of Däbrä Wägäg (Šäwa).

Y. arrived in Ethiopia in 1337 and, together with some of the leaders of the local monasticism, devoted himself to evangelizing the non-Christian regions of ↗Šäwa, ↗Fäṭägar, ↗Wäǧ, ↗Damot, ↗Ǝnnarya and ↗Ifat. He elected twelve monks, led by Filəppos, to be sent into the regions to evangelize the people. According to the Gädlä Samuʾel, Y. and a group of monks were in conflict with aṣe ↗ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon I (↗Säyfä Arᶜad in other hagiographies) because the king had married the wife of his father. In consequence the metropolitan was flogged and sent back to Egypt while the monks were exiled (Kur 1968: 9–11 [text] = 7–9 [tr.]). Gädlä Anorewos relates that King Säyfä Arᵓad promised to marry only one wife and to pardon the exiled monks. Instead he married one of his father's wives. Anorewos, after protesting, was beaten and exiled. In the Gädlä Anorewos, Gädlä Aron and Gädlä Filəppos it is said that the monks who did not agree with the royal positions were sent as punishment to the "pagan land". This exile, however, became an opportunity for them to spread Christianity in these regions.

Y. is mentioned in a note dated 524 A.M. during the reign of ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon (r. 1339/40), in the colophon of a manuscript from the monastery of Ḥayq (Taddesse Tamrat 1970: 98 nn. 56–57; Munro-Hay 2005: 12).

Yaᶜəqob

Aṣe Y. (ያዕቆብ, regnal name Mälkəᵓa Sägäd; b. 1587, d. 1607) ruled Ethiopia from 1597 to 1603 and from 1605 to 1607. Having failed to have a son with his wife ↗Maryam Śəna, aṣe ↗Śärṣ́ä Dəngəl promised the crown to his nephew ↗Zädəngəl. However, in the interim, one of Śärṣ́ä Dəngəl's mistresses – a woman from Səmen named Ḥarägo – bore him a son, the future aṣe Y. (Perruchon 1896: 358, 361; Páez 2008: 599f.; BecRASO III, 207f.). In 1596, the Empress and her power-hungry sons-in-law – ras ↗Atnatewos, the governor of Goǧǧam, and ↗Kəflä Waḥəd, the governor of Təgray – persuaded the dying sovereign to bequeath the throne to the young Y. During Y.'s adolescence, the administration was entirely in the hands of Atnatewos, who presided over a steady decline in Ethiopia's fortunes (PerChron 48 [text]; BecRASO XI, 220). According to the Jesuit ↗Páez, Atnatewos persuaded the nobility that the time had come to mint coins, which should have featured the crowned image and the name of Y. (cf. Páez 2008: 137; BecRASO II, 109).

At the age of 15, Y. began to rule the empire on his own and immediately took steps to curtail the influence of his brothers-in-law. Atnatewos consequently rebelled and Y. managed to have him incarcerated. Thereafter, an aggrieved captain, ↗Zäśəllase, convinced Atnatewos and Kəflä Waḥəd that Y.'s exiled cousin, Zädəngəl, would make for a more tractable monarch. In September 1603, while Y. was at his court in Qoga, Zädəngəl was brought to the capital and proclaimed emperor. At the same time, Y.'s rivals accused him of un-Christian behaviour (PerChron 63 [text]; Páez 2008: 708f.; BecRASO III, 379; XI, 322) and had him exiled to the neighbouring kingdom of ↗Ǝnnarya (Páez 2008: 76; BecRASO II, 20; XI, 220f.).

In the meantime, Zädəngəl proved to be less pliant than his benefactors had hoped. Suspicious of the powerful lords, the new monarch had them removed from his council. In response, Zäśəllase and Atnatewos denounced Zädəngəl on the grounds of his inclination towards ↗Catholicism and launched an insurrection, with the approval of abunä ↗Ṗeṭros. Soon after, Zädəngəl was killed by Zäśəllase, giving rise to a vacuum in leadership. One of the leading contenders to the throne was ↗Susənyos, who was anointed emperor on 13 December 1604. However, the following June, Y. appeared in Dämbəya and soon received the backing of his powerful brothers-in-law. Y. sought to come to terms with his rival (PerChron 52–56 [text]), but Susənyos would settle for no less than the crown (ibid. 74–78 [text]).

Throughout the next year, Y. attempted to forge ties with the few ↗Jesuit missionaries in the country with the objective of garnering their support in his power struggle against Susənyos. Y. even promised to embrace the Catholic faith in return for a contingent of Portuguese soldiers from India that never materialized (Páez 2008: 644–51; BecRASO III, 281–91; XI, 247f.).

Y.'s efforts to coerce Susənyos into submission ended in complete failure. In February 1606, Susənyos defeated the numerically-superior forces of Zäśəllase, who was subsequently removed from his position as Y.'s chief minister. Towards the end of that year, the ex-chief minister defected to the enemy camp. On 10 March 1607, the combined forces of Susənyos and Zäśəllase defeated the rival army, and Y. was slain on the field of combat (PerChron 83–94 [text]; Páez 2008: 651–54; BecRASO III, 293–97; XI, 249f.).

The only extant chronicle on the short reign of Y. is a very brief manuscript (Perruchon 1896; Páez 2008: 599; BecRASO III, 207).

Yaᶜəqob

Y. (ያዕቆብ; d. 1609) was the name assumed by one of the early 17th-cent. pretenders to the throne.

In 1608, Y. rebelled against the recently-crowned aṣe ↗Susənyos, claiming to be the emperor aṣe ↗Yaᶜəqob, who had been deposed (and possibly killed) a year earlier. The rebellion arose first in Təgray, where Y. declared himself to the monks of ↗Däbrä Bizän. He gained a popular following and was able, because of wider conditions of unrest in the province, where "many Bands of Robbers ranged about" (Tellez 1710: 182f.), to sustain his rebellion for up to a year, despite repeated attempts to capture him by the governors of Təgray. However, in 1609, betrayed by some of his followers he was killed and beheaded (ibid. 187; DombrChr 190; BecRASO XI, 263).

The mystery around the deposition and death of aṣe Yaᶜəqob gave rise to more similar claims. Over a century later, in 1724, a rebel arose against aṣe ↗Bäkaffa, who declared to be the son of aṣe Yaᶜəqob by the name of Ḥəzqəyas (GuiIohan 308; BegCron 111; DombrChr 278). He was executed, but in 1739, yet another pretender arose, calling himself Bäkaffa (who had died in 1730), and, again, claiming descent from aṣe Yaᶜəqob (GuiIyas 86f. [text] = 93 [tr.]).

Social and political instability created the conditions in which rebels might arise. Attachment to an enduring myth, in this case the suppressed legitimacy of aṣe Yaᶜəqob, provided a symbolic tool, by which to rally support across the social spectrum. Similar processes occurred in other contemporary monarchies, such as Russia during the Time of the Troubles, when not fewer than three false Dimitris arose, Dimitri having been the son of the last legitimate tsar, murdered by the usurping Boris Godunov.

Yaᶜəqob

Abeto Y. (ያዕቆብ; b. ca. 1527/28, d. 1556/57) was the fourth and youngest son of aṣe ↗Ləbnä Dəngəl and ətege ↗Säblä Wängel. Unlike his older brothers ↗Gälawdewos and ↗Minas, Y. never ascended the Solomonic throne, nor is there any evidence that he played a substantial political role during his lifetime. On account of his offspring, however, real or alleged, he holds an important place as a nodal figure in Ethiopian dynastic history. Through his son ↗Fasil Gärram ('F. the Meek') Y. is the grandfather of aṣe ↗Susənyos. By extension, Y. thus is the forefather of all subsequent Gondärine monarchs. The House of ↗Šäwa, which nationally came to power with ↗Mənilək II in 1889, equally based its claim to Solomonic descent on a lineage going back to Y.

This Šäwan claim however is not easily substantiated. It has its roots in traditions from ↗Mänz, the region of origin of the Šäwan kings, that claim Y., whose childhood falls into the years of ↗Aḥmad b. Ibrāhīm al-Ġāzī's ǧihād against the Christian Kingdom, was left behind in Mänz while the rest of the royal family fled ever further north before the advancing muǧāhidūn. These traditions, however, are intrinsically problematic and find no corroboration in contemporary sources. A remark by ↗Castanhoso even suggests that, in mid-1541, Y. was with his mother on ↗Däbrä Damo.

About Y.'s liaisons and offspring the sources are not fully clear and unanimous. An early 19th-cent. genealogy of ras ↗Ḫaylä Mikaᵓel Əšäte and däǧǧazmač ↗Goššu Zäwde identifies a Gondärine noblewoman named Nəgəśtä Azeb as Fasil(ädäs)

Gärram's mother (Kropp 1989: 178ff.). The Tarikä nägäśt by blatten geta ↗Ḫəruy Wäldä Śəllase adds that Nəgəśtä Azeb was Y.'s lawful wife and that the couple had two more sons as well as a daughter, namely Śəgwä (or Śägwä) Qal (through whom the House of Šäwa traces its origin back to Y.), Täzkarä Dəngəl (hypochoristically Täzkaro), and Wälättä Maryam (AWTarik 25f., 36, 66ff.). From among this supposed additional offspring, only Täzkaro, whom the baḥər nägaš ↗Yəsḥaq in the early 1560s briefly and unsuccessfully installed as a counter-monarch against aṣe ↗Minas, is attested in contemporary sources (KrLebD 56–60 [text]). A few years later Yəsḥaq then challenged aṣe ↗Śärṣ́ä Dəngəl by proclaiming the boy Marqos emperor; according to Śärṣ́ä Dəngəl's chronicle Marqos was another son of Y. (CRHist 18, 80 [text]). Again this maneuver failed to produce the desired results. Nevertheless this repeatedly demonstrated proximity between Yəsḥaq and Y.'s sons lends credibility to the notice in a marginal Portuguese source (the Décadas of de ↗Barros and do ↗Couto; cp. PankBord 236) that a daughter of Y. – Wälättä Maryam? – was married to Yəsḥaq's son Täklä Mikaᵓel. As for Marqos, while his historicity and genealogy cannot be in doubt, surprisingly he is not mentioned in Ḫəruy's work. Finally there are traditions about Y. marrying a ↗Betä Ǝsraᵓel woman called "Wesenabi" (Quirin 1992: 76, 243 [n. 186]).

Yaᶜəqob Gäbrä Iyäsus

Y. (ያዕቆብ ፡ ገብረ ፡ ኢየሱስ, It. Ghebre Jesus Jacob; b. 11 April 1889, Ḥebo, d. 22 January 1969, Asmära) was an Eritrean Catholic priest and theologian who contributed to the study of the ↗Təgrəñña language.

Y.'s parents were ato Gäbrä Iyäsus Gäbrä Mädḫən and wäyzäro Śəllas Č̣äggär (later, as a nun, Ǝnnate Śəllas). Y.'s grandfather, qäšši Gäbrä Mädḫən, was an Orthodox priest from a noble family of Gʷälᶜa, ᶜAgamä, related to Emperor Yoḥannəs IV and däǧǧazmač Säbagadis, who was converted to ↗Catholicism by Giustino de ↗Jacobis and moved to Ḥebo to carry out his priestly duties.

Y. received a Catholic education at Aḵrur and Kärän. After he was ordained priest by bishop Camillo Carrara on 30 April 1913, he worked in the parishes of Bäraqit, Gindaᶜ, Aḵrur, and ↗Sägänäyti. In 1918 Y. replaced abba ↗Jérôme as translator and advisor to Carrara. He was also in charge of censorship for the publications printed at the Francescana Printing Press.

In 1921, Y. was appointed the parish priest of Kidanä Məḥrät Church in Asmära. He had the church building renovated and established several maḫbär confraternities, in addition to teaching Gəᶜəz, Amharic and Təgrəñña at the Italian school Vittorio Emanuele.

When ↗Kidanä Maryam Kaśa was consecrated as the first native Eritrean Catholic bishop, on 3 August 1930 Y. was elected as one of the five vicars forane, with responsibility for the ↗Ḥamasen region. From October 1934 to 1942 Y. served as the parish priest of Sägänäyti and vicar forane for the ↗Akkälä Guzay region. Among the greatest achievements of his tenure was the construction of Qəddus Mikaᵓel church in Sägänäyti. In 1942 Y. was assigned to Maᶜräba, where he had more time to study and to write. From 1946 to 1950 he taught at the newly instituted Comboni school in Asmära.

On 7 November 1950, Pope Pius XII appointed Y. Apostolic Administrator of Eritrea. He was nominated bishop of Eritrea on 8 February 1951, and consecrated together with abba ↗Ḫaylä Maryam Kaḥsay by Cardinal Eugène ↗Tisserant at the Vatican on 1st May 1951. On 26 October 1951 Y. became Apostolic Exarch of Eritrea.

The combination of old conflicts that Y. inherited and his own personality, seen by many as domineering and partial, made his position gradually untenable. After extensive consultations, on 13 February 1956, the representative of the Holy See Lodovicus Mathias announced the (temporary) nominations of abba ↗ Abraha François as vicar delegate for the Exarchate and abba Täsfagiyorgis Təġar for the Kärän area, thus practically splitting the Exarchate into two (Mekonnen Amanuel 1996: 44). Y. was forced to resign. From 1957 to 1967 he stayed at the Collegio Damasceno in Rome as "ordaining bishop". He spent his last two years in Asmära and was buried in Ḥebo on 25 January 1969.

Y. is remembered as a gifted man of learning and as a prolific writer. He published a lot, but many more texts are believed to remain unedited (cf., e.g., ErDizBio 172; esp. Bərhan July 1951: 7, 1969: 2, mentioning 11 published and 32 unpublished works).

Yaᶜəqob: Gädlä Yaᶜəqob

The G.Y. (ገድለ ፡ ያዕቆብ, 'Contending of Jacob' or 'Testament of Jacob') is the third of the "Testaments of the three Patriarchs", after Gädlä ↗ Yəsḥaq and Gädlä ↗ Abrəham. It is modelled on the Biblical narrative of the death of Jacob (Gen 48–50), and is closer to the Biblical-apocryphal genre of "Testament" than the other two Testaments.

The Archangel Michael is sent to notify Jacob of his approaching death. He is ready to die, having been able to see his son Joseph once again after he came down to Egypt (Gen 46: 30). Michael or another angel, closely resembling Isaac, reveals to Jacob that he is his guardian angel and that he had already saved him from Laban and from his brother Esau. Jacob calls for his son Joseph and instructs him about his burial (Gen 49). The narrator continues with Ephraim and Manasse's blessing, followed by a short version of Jacob's blessing his twelve sons. After that, like Isaac, Jacob is taken to the next world. He is first taken on a tour through hell, and then to heaven with all its bliss. Back in his bed, Jacob dies. The Lord comes down and takes his soul to heaven in a holy chariot, cherubim and seraphim singing before it. After relating Gen 50: 1–14, the narrator encourages the reader to keep the memorial day of Jacob, which is the same for all three Patriarchs, 28 Näḥase.

The G.Y. is extant only in Coptic (Bohairic), Arabic (a literal translation of the Coptic Version) and ↗ Gəᶜəz (Haelewyck 1998: 56–61; Heide 2012a: 29–34). Like the Gädlä Yəsḥaq, it was composed not earlier than the 4th cent. A.D. (Heide 2012a: 37–50; 2012b; for the origin of G.Y. s. the entry on Gädlä Yəsḥaq). The specific introduction to the Bohairic, Arabic and Ethiopic versions of the Testament of Abraham (Gädlä Abrəham), which points to the commemoration day of the patriarchs on 28 Näḥase, is reflected in the text of G.Y. 7: 22–28 (Heide 2000: 277, 303).

Besides retelling the biblical text, the G.Y., like the Gädlä Yəsḥaq, emphasizes asceticism and good works in strict observance of the feast of the patriarchs.

Three Gəᶜəz versions of the G.Y. exist:

1) a literal translation from the Arabic, extant in two manuscripts from ↗ Gundä Gunde (Gundä Gunde 67, 18th cent. and 142, 15th cent.). A third fragmental manuscript (not mentioned in Heide 2000) from the Vatican library (Et. 279) has four folia with the G.Y. which were originally part of Gundä Gunde 142 (Heide 2012a: 32f.). Another Ethiopic manuscript from the 15th cent., EMML no. 1496 (EMML IV, 630ff.), is a textual witness to the same type of text (Heide 2012a: 12–17, 32ff.). In addition, the text is known from mss. EMML nos. 8812 and 7040 (18th–19th cent.), and probably also from further manuscripts (cp. Erho 2012). The text transmitted in these manuscripts is also reflected in the popular edition (Täklä Mikaᵓel 1986; Heide 2000: 9–14, 38–44);

2) the "Fälaša-Version", evidently based on the aforementioned text-type and extant in at least six late manuscripts from the 18th–20th cent. (Tel Aviv, Sourasky Central Library, Faïtlovitch 9, 10, 12, 13; Cambridge, University Library, Or. 1878; EMML no. 7703bis; s. Heide 2012a: 18–25, 34; Erho 2012);
3) a free translation from Arabic, preserved in only one manuscript, BN Éth. 134, 15th cent. (ZotBNat 200–03; Heide 2000: 9, 30ff.).

Another 15th-cent. manuscript from ↗Däbrä Ṣəyon in Gärᶜalta has been reported (Caquot 1988).

Yafqərännä Ǝgziᵓ

Y.Ǝ. (ያፍቅረን ፡ እግዚእ; b. ca 1309, d. 1372 or 1376), was a 14th-cent. saint of the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox (Täwaḥədo) Church. He is commemorated in the ↗Sənkəssar on 19 Ṭər (ColSyn IX, 136–41).

The main source of information on the life of Y.Ǝ. is the Gädlä Yafqərännä Ǝgziᵓ published by Wajnberg 1917 (1936) from the manuscript BN d'Abbadie 56. The gädl gives a comprehensive impression of the 14th-cent. situation of ↗monasticism around Lake ↗Ṭana, as well as the spread of Christianity accelerated by the respective rulers.

Y.Ǝ. was born around the year after the arrival of abunä ↗Yoḥannəs as patriarch, in Hamla, a village in the Hagäray district of ↗Təgray. His father was Gäbrä Iyäsus, his mother Ofomya. He was ordained monk by Adḫani in Təgray (although other traditions claim that he was a disciple of ↗Mädḫaninä Ǝgziᵓ). Through both of them Y.Ǝ. would stand in the direct monastic genealogy of abunä Täklä Haymanot (Getatchew Haile 1982–83: 9, 14 [text] = 24, 28 [tr.]). The question has been raised whether Adḫani and Mädḫaninä Ǝgziᵓ are one and the same person (Wajnberg 1936: 8, 17; Conti Rossini 1937: 414; Bosc-Tiessé 2008: 53), nevertheless both are named as disciples of Täklä Haymanot (Getatchew Haile 1982–83: 9, 14 [text] = 24, 28 [tr.]). Y.Ǝ. was ordained deacon by abunä ↗Yaᶜəqob.

According to the gädl, after contemplating pilgrimage to ↗Jerusalem, during the first years of ↗ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon I's reign Y.Ǝ. joined the community of ↗Ṭana Qirqos in Lake Ṭana, which was led by a monk named Arganon. At this time the activities of the monastery were still controlled by the ruler of Goǧǧam, Žan Ḵəmər or Ṣärä

Qəməs, whose permission was required to admit the young monk. During the coming years greater royal control was exerted over the area, but when Y.Ǝ. attempted to settle in the area on the southern shore of the lake in the district of Bäd, the local ruler, nägaśi Wədəm, opposed this attempt at Christian expansion. In fact, Y.Ǝ. is said to have made attempts to settle at several different locations in the Lake Ṭana region, with a period of extreme ascetism on the island of ↗Gälila (where he spent three years) and the island of ↗Daga Ǝsṭifanos. Eventually, Y.Ǝ. founded the communities of Məṣle (Fasiladäs) and Gʷəgʷəben. Nothing remains of Gʷəgʷəben, though the memory of Y.Ǝ.'s settlement there was still alive in the 1920s and 1930s, when Robert Ernest ↗Cheesman travelled the region, and was told about the former church on top of the hill of Gʷəgʷəben (ChTana 170f.).

According to his Acts, Y.Ǝ. established himself as an influential figure both within and beyond monastic circles. His powers were reflected not only in the rewards which were granted to those who obeyed him, but also in the punishments which those who ignored him incurred. Y.Ǝ. split the clergy of Məṣle over the consecration of women as nuns. Still centuries later, his rule was obeyed. The author of the Gädlä Wälättä Ṗeṭros (↗Wälättä Ṗeṭros) reports that according to the rule of Y.Ǝ. no female creature should set foot on the monastery island (Wajnberg 1917: 11; Ricci 1970: 62f.). The acts of Zena Marqos report on a meeting between Zäkaryas of Däbrä Gälila and Y.Ǝ. (Cerulli 1962: 197).

Among the more interesting episodes recounted in Y.Ǝ.'s Acts is the story of ↗Qozmos, an extreme ascetic from Təgray who lived in a separate cell and refused all cooked food, including Eucharist. Qozmos left the monastic environment and joined those who practised the "religion of the Jews" (haymanotä ↗Ayhud) in Səmen and ↗Ṣällämt. Qozmos became the leader of a group of rebels against aṣe ↗Dawit II (Conti Rossini 1920: 571f. [text] = 574 [tr.]).

According to his Gädl Y.Ǝ. had several disciples, such as əččäge ↗Yoḥannəs Käma and Gərlos, founder of Məṣraḥa Maryam and teacher of ↗Zärʾa Buruk (Wajnberg 1936: 50f.). Gərlos is depicted together with Y.Ǝ. on a cruciform icon made by ↗Fəre Ṣəyon, who was himself a monk at Gʷəgʷəben (Heldman 1994: 49ff.). A figurine of Y.Ǝ. can be found on Məṣle island (Bosc-Tiessé 2000: 220).

In addition to the gädl, there are unpublished ↗mälkəʾ and hymns commemorating Y.Ǝ. (KinBibl 95; ms. EMML no. 2096, BN d'Abbadie 183; Mäṣḥafä ↗ʿArke, IES, ms. 34).

Yagba Ṣəyon

Aṣe Y.Ṣ. (ያግባ ፡ ጽዮን, also Yagbaṣəyon, Agbəʾa or Yagbəʾa Ṣəyon; regnal name Solomon; r. 1285–94) succeeded aṣe ↗Yəkunno Amlak, being probably his eldest son. Before ascending the throne, he may have been a governor in North Ethiopia, since he is mentioned as ↗maʾəkälä baḥər in a note included in the "Golden Gospels" of ↗Däbrä Libanos of Ham (CRDLib 194, no. 10). A land charter issued by aṣe Y.Ṣ. for ↗Däbrä Ḥayq Ǝsṭifanos is found in the "Gospel Book of ↗Iyäsus Moʾa"; the document is dated 1293/94, and it recounts the victory of Y.Ṣ. (here called "Yagba Ṣəyon") over a certain Yəʿqäbännä, probably a rebel or pretender to the throne (EMML no. 1832, fol. 338v; Taddesse Tamrat 1970: 92; TadTChurch 72; Taddesse Tamrat in PICES 4, 502; DerDom 140). The manuscript furnishes more notes in which Y.Ṣ. is mentioned as benefactor of the monastery (EMML no. 1832, fols. 25v, 26r; s. also Taddesse Tamrat 1970: 91). Y.Ṣ. is also mentioned in the royal genealogy attached to the ↗Kəbrä nägäśt (BezKebr 173).

Arabic sources (s. Cuoq 1981: 109–12) speak of letters to the sulṭān of Egypt al-Manṣūr Sayfaddīn Qalāwūn (cp. ↗Mamluks) sent by an unnamed Ethiopian king (one letter is dated to 1290, the time of Y.Ṣ.), in which the latter asks for a new metropolitan (↗Pappas) to be sent from Egypt, and complains about "Syrian metropolitans" who cannot be tolerated in Ethiopia anymore (Wiet 1938: 120ff.). Thus Y.Ṣ. probably continued the efforts of his father Yəkunno Amlak in obtaining a metropolitan from Egypt, but did not score a success. So far, however, only speculations about the ecclesiastic situation of that period are possible: whether two metropolitans, one Egyptian and one Syrian, were in Ethiopia at the same time (Hammerschmidt in GerKir 43); or whether abunä ↗Qerəllos was indeed succeeded by a Syrian hierarch (Jacobite or Melchite, cp. TedEthPrel 1009). As to the "Syrian metropolitans", Y.Ṣ. seems to have banned them from any authority. No other sources contain hints that would help to reconstruct these events.

The form of the name as appears in the early sources possibly reveals the influence of a colloquial language (↗Amharic?). In the more recent period, some of the literati might feel the necessity to dissimilate the King's name from yagba, (formally, the subjunctive of agäbba, its major meaning in Amharic being, among others, "to marry"). Therefore, in most of the later Ethiopian sources the King's name appears in a "normalised" Gəᶜəz spelling as Agbəᵓa Ṣəyon ("He has returned the Zion") or, less frequently, Yagbəᵓa Ṣəyon (lit. "May he return the Zion!").

Some information on Y.Ṣ. appears in an unusual historiographic discourse included in the Vita of abunä Märqorewos which tells of a religious controversy (reminiscent of that of the ↗Stephanites) that emerged during the reign of the King (here Agbəᵓa Ṣəyon) when some of his subjects rejected prostrating themselves in front of the Cross and sacred images (of St. Mary). Soon they repented under the pressure from the King (Conti Rossini 1904: 12ff. [text]).

The "Short chronicles" mention only the name of the King or list his sons: Ṣənfä Arᶜəd, Ḥəzbä Asgäd, Qədmä Asgäd, Žan Asgäd, Säbᵓa Asgäd. They are said to have reigned five years all in all (BassÉt 10 [Yagbəᵓa Ṣəyon]; BegCron 5; DombrChr 153 [Agbəᵓa Ṣəyon]) and have had no children to succeed them (s. Kropp 1981). Some later traditions speak of five brothers of Yəkunno Amlak who reigned together, while one of them, in the context of a fierce succession struggle, established the "royal prison" on ↗Amba Gəšän (cp. Taddesse Tamrat in PICES 4, 503). Thereafter ↗Wədəm Räᶜad, another son of Yəkunno Amlak and a brother of Y.Ṣ., ascended to the throne in 1299.

Yäǧǧu

Yäǧǧu history before the 18th century

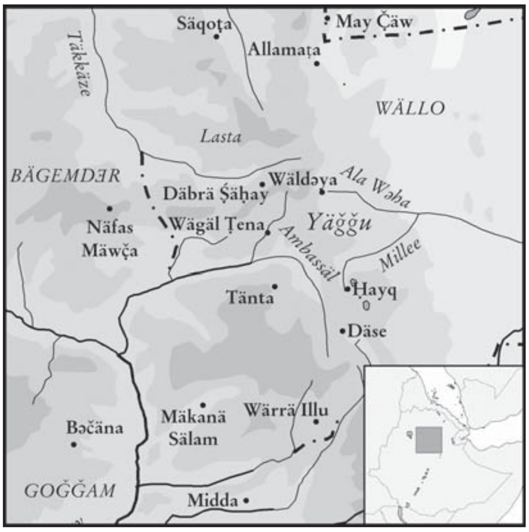
Y. (የጁ) is a historical region in northern ↗Wällo. Despite variability of administrative boundaries and partitioning that eventually led to the disappearance of Y. as a formal entity in federal Ethiopia, it still corresponds to a strong regional identity which can be approximately delineated. Its southern boundary with South Wällo is delimitated by the upper course of the River ↗Millee and its northern limit with the ↗Rayya region of Southern Təgray is marked by the River Ala Wəha (also Aloha). In the west and north-west, Y. forms a rather flat plain which extends to a mountain wall, on top of which are the highlands of ↗Ambassäl and ↗Lasta. It stretches out to the east in a series of steep hills and valleys reaching the lower foot of the escarpment bordering on the ↗ᶜAfar country.

Y. is thus a strip of land mostly situated within the moderate ↗wäyna däga ecological zone (1,500–2,000 m A.S.L.), with good climatic conditions and regular rainfall, as reflected by a popular Amharic saying, Yäğğu əgziʾabəḥer mähal əğğu, 'Y. is the palm of God's hand'. The territory, however, can be occasionally hit by severe droughts, as in 1973 and 1984 (cp. ↗Famine).

This territorial setting corresponds approximately to the extension of the ancient territory of ↗Angot, which was predominantly Christian. The presence of ancient Islamic settlements on the eastern fringe is a hypothesis that would need archaeological confirmation. According to local oral traditions (collected by Molla Tikuye 1994), one of the ancient native populations in the area before the 16th cent. was called Bäqoče. A population called al-ᶜIğğu is identified in the ↗Futūḥ al-Ḥabaša (BassHist 291) as originating from the district of Qäwat in ↗Yəfat. They had their own language, distinct from the languages of the neighbouring ↗Amhara and Muslims. The majority embraced ↗Islam but some were Christians. A number of al-ᶜIğğu men were made to join the war of ↗Aḥmad b. Ibrāhīm al-Ġāzī ("Grañ") against Amhara (s. Merid Wolde Aregay 1971). The question whether these groups could be northern extensions of the pre-16th cent. Argobba clans who were settled in similar regions in eastern Wällo and eastern Šäwa, or whether they were semi-nomads linked ethnically with the ᶜAfar, like the ↗Dobaᶜa, who lived in neighbouring areas north of Y., remains open. After the end of the 16th cent., Y. was dramatically transformed by the settlement of Oromo migrants who progressively intermingled with native societies. The name of Y. is sometimes mentioned as a group of Oromo settlers, but this seems to be wrong. The Oromo groups who reached Y. belonged principally to the Märäwa and ↗Wəčale clans and sub-clans of the ↗Baarentuu moiety. Apart from these vague indications, there are still a lot of gaps in our knowledge of the local history of Y. prior to the rise of the so-called Y. dynasty.

Yäğğu dynasty (18th–19th cent.)

The Y. dynasty was the ruling family in Gondär, acting as regent or king-makers during the ↗Zämänä mäsafənt period. It is most frequently designated in the sources as Wärräsek, Wärrä Šekočč or Wärrä Šehočč, from Oromo warra 'household' and the Amharic plural form of the Arabic ↗šayḫ, meaning thus the 'house of the *šayḫ*s'. This name reflects the group's mixed character: Oromo, Amhara (or Argobba?) and Islamic. The alternative etymology proposed by aläqa ↗Tayyä Gäbrä Maryam (1987: 81), wärrä-ših, 'house of thousands', seems to be a later reconstruction in order to blot out the Islamic connotation.



Historical traditions trace the origins of the Y. dynasty back to a certain šayḫ ᶜUmar who allegedly migrated from Arabia and settled in the region of Märsa at the time of the "Grañ" wars (Molla Tikuye 1994; GueCopMen 198; Tayyä Gäbrä Maryam 1987: 81). The indications concerning this initial phase are more mythical than historical. The most likely hypothesis is that this family of Muslim dignitaries settled in the area and accumulated power between the 17th and the 18th cent. while Oromo migrants were in the course of sedentarization in the area. This family played a role in the process of Islamization of the region.

Some generations (sources diverge between two and six) after the founding figure, the next outstanding member of this dynasty was Abbəyye "Abba Getəyye" of Märsa, a petty lord and/or a religious authority who has remained very famous regionally as a saintly figure. His son, ↗Gʷangul "Abba Seru", is the first to be mentioned in written sources, appearing in the Chronicle of ↗Iyoʾas and in the account of ↗Bruce, whether as an ally or an opponent of ras ↗Mikaʾel Səḫul. Gʷangul had three wives, one Muslim, two Christian, who were daughters of landlords of the neighbouring territories of Ambassäl and Lasta. The only descendants of Gʷangul were born from Gälläbu, the daughter of ras ↗Fares of Lasta and Säläwa. This gave them landrights in Lasta and led them to play a role in the competition between landlords that broke out during the reign of Iyoʾas.

Being of mixed Oromo-Amhara ethnic (like aṣe Iyoʾas and his kin) and Muslim-Christian religious background, the descendants of Gʷangul had a very ambiguous position that allowed them to shift easily from one side to the other. This flexibility helped their ascension to the highest offices into the dismantled Christian kingdom. The installation of the dynasty of Y. in Gondär started with ↗Ali Gʷangul, later known as ras Ali I or ras Ali the Great. He began his career under the care of aṣe ↗Täklä Giyorgis I, who made him əndärase of Bägemdər in 1784. But, after a few months, he led the coalition of lords who overthrew Täklä Giyorgis. Two years later, he managed to be recognized by the other lords as their overlord, ruling in the name of the king with the title of ↗ras bitwäddäd. He ruled until his death in 1788. Ali was succeeded by his brother ↗Aligaz, who was, however, defeated by the lords of Lasta (↗Ḫaylu Wänd Bäwäsän) in 1791. In 1802, it was the turn of the nephew of Ali and Aligaz, the son of their sister Käfäy, ↗Gugsa, to take over the office of ras. He exerted this responsibility during 23 years until 1825, which was a period of fewer conflicts. After his death, Gugsa was succeeded, consecutively, by his three sons who ruled during short periods (↗Yəmam, 1825–28, ↗Marəyye, 1828–31 and ↗Dori, 1831). The continuation of the dynasty was ensured by the young ↗Ali [II] Alula, Gugsa's grandson. He was tutored by his mother, ətege ↗Mänän Libän, the daughter of imām ↗Libän of the ↗Mammädočč dynasty of ↗Wärrä Himäno. His rule, and the success story of the Y. dynasty, came to an end when he was defeated in the Battle of ↗Ayšal in June 1853 by däǧǧazmač Kaśa Ḫaylu of Qʷara (later aṣe ↗Tewodros II).

At the peak of their power, the dynasty of the Y. leaders in Gondär became progressively separated from Y. itself. They tried to keep control of their homeland, and for this reason they needed to control the provinces of Lasta, Wadla, Dälanta and Däwənt, lying between Bägemdər and Y. However, there were internal divisions between two branches: those who exerted power in Gondär were Christianized and allied with neighbouring Christian powers, whereas those in Y. remained faithful to Islam and claimed autonomy against the interests of their Gondärine relatives. This was particularly the case with Goǧǧi, son of Aligaz, who rebelled against the rule of ras Gugsa.

Starting from the reign of Tewodros (who had married into the Y. dynasty), Y. progressively lost its influence, but some aristocrats from this area remained closely associated, through marital bonds, with most leading families. The chronology of events in Y. between 1855 and 1889 is not well established. Under Tewodros, Y. was governed by a certain Ali Bərru, who had rebelled against ras Ali II. In November 1868 ↗Täklä Giyorgis II crushed the rebellion of Fares Ali. ↗Yoḥannəs IV forced the submission of Ali Bərru, who was still in charge, in 1872. In 1875, Yoḥannəs quelled the rebellion of ↗Amäde Libän "Abba Waṭäw". Later during his reign, Y., or a part of it, was ruled by däǧǧazmač Zägäyyä Bərru, who had strained relations with the Emperor because of a disagreement over the delimitation of Y. boundaries. In the same period, ↗Mənilək, who shared with Yoḥannəs some authority in Y., appointed his close ally and future brother-in-law (through ↗Ṭaytu Bəṭul), däǧǧazmač ↗Wäle Bəṭul over this territory, or part of it. Wäle's and Ṭaytu's father, ↗Bəṭul Ḫaylä Maryam, had governed Səmen under Ali II and descended from the Wärräsek dynasty through his mother Ḫirut Gugsa, ras Gugsa's daughter. Wäle's nomination to the head of Y. provoked a dispute with däǧǧazmač Zägäyyä Bərru, who died in a battle not precisely dated. In compensation, Zägäyyä Bərru's son, Gʷangul Zägäyyä, was named ↗wag šum. The latter was the second husband of the later ətege ↗Zäwditu. Wäle was promoted ras with the addition of Lasta under his authority, before getting in 1900 the governorship of Təgray.

Yäǧǧu in the 20th century

During the 20th cent., Y. progressively disappeared from the political map of the contemporary state of Ethiopia, being swallowed into the extended definition of Wällo as a province. High-ranking members of the Wärräsek were stripped of all power they had, probably as a consequence of their failed attempts to take over royal power, first in 1910 when ras Gugsa Wäle, the son of ras Wäle, took part in a rebellion against the nomination of ləǧ ↗Iyasu as heir to the throne, then in 1928, when the same Gugsa, husband of ətege Zäwditu since 1900, rebelled against the seizure of power by nəguś Täfäri Mäkʷännən (later aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I). The extension of Y. shrank to its narrow historical nucleus, as an awraǧǧa, with Wäldiya as its capital.

Today, Y. does not exist as a territorial unit. Its location corresponds to the wäräda of Ḥabru and Gubba Lafto in North Wällo zone.

Yäǧoka

Y. (የጆካ, also Ǧoka) is the name of the place in Yäbaze, ↗Čaha, where the highest council of the Säbat bet ↗Gurage holds its gatherings; the council itself carries the same name. Y. is the assembly of all political and religious representatives of the Gurage region. It is basically composed of the clan chiefs of the Säbat bet Gurage. This includes the representatives of the main cults of the traditional ↗religion of the Gurage (cp. also ↗Dämʷamʷit, ↗Božžä, ↗Waq) and in the 20th cent. also the šayḫ of ↗Abret (s. EAE vol. 5), whose presence gives a religious value to the political or legal decisions of the council. In addition, any influential or respected person from the Säbat bet can participate.

The Y. meetings are unscheduled, and occur according to demand. The debates are punctuated by ritual practices. Final decisions have to be approved unanimously by all participants. Otherwise, a new session is scheduled. The composition, procedures and full competences of Y. have been described by William A. ↗Shack (ShGurage 157–65) and Gabreyesus Hailemariam (1991: 35–59).

According to oral tradition, the name Y. is derived from the Gurage expression y(ä)-äǧ wäka ('the hand has pierced'), referring to the form of the branches of the ↗tree under which the assembly is held, resembling the arm of a man planting his spear (alternative etymologies: 'that has hit or pierced', from äǧ yoka [Dənbäru Alämu et al. 1994/95: 113] or from ǧok[k]a, 'matter discussed [at the meeting]', probably related to Orom. ǧekka, 'opinion, remark', s. Leslau 1979: 315). This tree is situated in Yäbaze, and informants insist on the fact that this village was chosen as the main assembly ground because it constitutes the geographical centre of Gurage, and not because of political domination of Säbat bet Gurage by the Čaha. The tree belongs to the sacred shrine of Čaha's Waq spirit. Partly burnt by lightning, it is also associated with Božžä, the deity of thunder and social order. Additionally, oral tradition mentions that it was chosen to be the home of ṭur, the spirit or principle of justice (Shack 1996). Thus, the assembly tree of Y. symbolizes the close relationship between spiritual forces, human politics and law. Moreover, this association shows that, like the Waq and Božžä cults, the Y. institution cuts across segmental groupings, based on lineage and clan principles.

The Y. assembly fulfilled different functions in the course of its history. The analysis of oral sources shows that this institution was set up during the 19th cent., before the conquest of Gurageland by the Christian empire (Gabreyesus Hailemariam 1991: 138; oral information). At that time, the confederation of clans known as Aməst bet Gurage (Amh. Amməst bet Gurage, 'Five Houses of Gurage', i.e. Čaha-Gumär, Äža [↗Əža], Inor [↗Ənnämor], Mʷäḫər [↗Muḫər] and Gʸäta [Geta]) tried to organize themselves in a unitary way. This led to the creation of the central position of a "governor", that rapidly collapsed, and to the establishment of the central institution of Y. In the early period of its existence, the Y. covered a double political function: it regulated the political relations between the different "houses" (notably in decisions of land repartition), and organized collective campaigns directed against neighbouring people. In parallel, the Y. acted as a legislative body that harmonized common 'rules' and 'laws' (qič̣č̣a or rather qʸəč̣a) of daily life for the entire Aməst bet, and later the Säbat bet population.

The political activities of Y. disappeared with the establishment of the Ethiopian Imperial rule in the Gurage region and beyond, during the first part of the 20th cent. Nevertheless, it has continued to work as a legislative and judicial organ until today in order to enact new laws, thus adapting qʸəč̣a to contemporary life. It still functions as a "supreme court" in cases of disputes, ranging from torts to crimes, which cannot be solved in the sphere of kinship, of the clan, or of the "house". Informants stressed the fact that Y. renders judgements and imposes sentences in addition to those rendered and imposed within the national judicial system. The role of Y. in cases of homicide is particularly relevant, because it can prevent revenge, formerly considered an obligation of Gurage life. The Y. seeks to determine the voluntary or involuntary aspect of the crime, and it fixes the fine (yädäm waga, 'blood price') in function (ShGurage 164ff., 196ff.). The fines ranged to a maximal amount of 500 bərr in 1962 and grew to 30,000 bərr in 1986 (Dənbäru Alämu et al. 1994/95: 118ff.).

An example for a Y. meeting is described in the short novel Shinega's Village by Sahle Sellasie Wolde Mariam ([tr. by Leslau] 1964; cp. also Leslau 1966: 10ff., 94–101.

Yäkka Mikaᵓel

The church of Y.M. (የካ ፡ ሚካኤል, more commonly Waša Mikaᵓel) is an extraordinary example of ↗rock-hewn architecture found 6 km north-east of Addis Abäba (9°2'34''N, 38°48'25''E). Although this structure was never brought to completion, the ambition expressed within its unfinished proportions indicates that the undertaking was one of substantial purpose. While conforming largely to conventions of northern prototypes of Təgray (Wəqro Qirqos [↗Dängolo], ↗Ṣ́əraᶜ Abrəha wä-Aṣbəḥa) and Wällo (Bilbäla Qirqos, ↗Ǝšätän Maryam), Y.M. is remarkable for its southerly placement – within Ethiopia's tradition of monolithic church architecture the sole more-southerly placed comparable example is ↗Adadi Maryam (s. EAE vol. 5). Local traditions credit the legendary kings ↗Abrəha and Aṣbəḥa with the foundation of the church. Another tradition (recorded by De Castro 1915: 209–13) dates the construction to the time of ↗Zärᵓa Yaᶜəqob in the 15th cent., a more plausible hypothesis (s. Sauter 1957: 35), despite proposals that claim greater antiquity – into the age of the ↗Zagʷe (Monneret de Villard 1941).

Y.M. was first recorded by ↗Rochet d'Héricourt in 1842, who referred to the then badly damaged structure as a grotto situated in a locality called Yäkka (Malécot 1972: 51–63). The name of Mikaᵓel (presently associated with the residing ↗tabot of St. Michael) is first mentioned in a report issued by the French Ministry of Colonies in the late 19th cent. (Vignéras 1897: 163–66). In the early 20th cent., De Castro again notes the structure's dilapidated state (De Castro 1915: 209–13).

Though unfinished and deteriorating Y.M. is nevertheless a monument of significance. The missionary A.F. Matthew, who visited the structure in 1934, suggested that the ruins' highest value is that it offers understanding of the method of monolithic construction (Matthew 1969). According to Sauter (1966:15–36), Y.M. is one of Ethiopia's most prodigious examples of rock-hewn architecture (cp. also Strachan – Pankhurst, in preparation).

With a width (west wall) of just under 20 m (19.38 m), by nearly 8 m in height (7.62 m), the completed Y.M. structure would have been one of Ethiopia's largest hypogean churches. Eight elegantly tapering 78 cm wide x 15 cm deep pilasters divide the frontal façade into seven vertical sections. These correspond to three interior aisles and a central nave, originally fitted with high set window apertures. Voluminous octagonal pillars, ca. 400 cm in circumference, divide the structure's format into five rows. However, as work halted prematurely, the plan's unfulfilled ambition is indeterminable. Likewise, as no undertaking to detach the building's eastern portion is evident, the resulting arrangement is by definition semi-monolithic. Consequently the adjoining trenches form a U-shape, featuring a rectangular courtyard to the west. The depth and length of the north and south trenches are unverifiable due to silt inundation.

As in examples of hypogean architecture found further north, attributes of Aksumite style are also revived within the Y.M. example. These are pronounced in the structure's linear gesture, which converges inward and upward towards an imaginary vanishing point, as well as within the various trompe-l'œil components such as pillars, pilasters, arches, beams and cornices, artfully sculpted from the continuous stone to mimic what would, in conventional architecture, be added-on elements of wood or stone.

At first glance an approximately two-metre high freestanding stone slab, located in the north-west corner of the courtyard, appears to be a stele. Upon closer examination however this object bears neither inscription nor marks left by tools, suggesting that it might instead be a remnant from the adjoining bedrock, left standing simply as the result of natural occurrence. An equally feasible theory is that the entity may have had an initial purpose, but that like the church itself, it too simply remains unfinished. A crude arrangement of smaller stones encircling it suggests that at some point during the site's post-abandonment it may have become incorporated informally – possibly as a funerary totem. Without comprehensive examination however, all speculation remains inconclusive.

Yäm

Yäm language

Y. (self-designation Yämsa, also Yem, Yemma, Ǧanǧäro and variants) is an ↗Afro-Asiatic language belonging to the ↗Omotic (or West ↗Cushitic, according to a few scholars, cf. Lamberti 1994) branch, spoken by a few thousand speakers in the former Ǧanǧäro (Yengar[u]) kingdom (↗Käfa province). It is closely related to the ↗Ometo and the ↗Gonga languages as well as to ↗Benč̣. Nevertheless, as the "Northern Group" of Omotic it has a relatively isolated position within its family. This classification is justified by the fact that Y. shares all its case endings of the noun inflexion, the demonstrative forms, the most part of its verb morphology and most of its lexicon with the rest of Omotic, and it is thus related with the rest of its family by recurrent sound correspondences. Also typically Omotic are the forms of the personal pronouns, of the possessives and most of the basic numerals.

Historically, three distinct lexical registers existed in Y. (CerStud III, 61; VSAe III, 272f.): beside Common Y., a specific idiom was employed to address the royals and still another in conversation with dignitaries. Today, the three have largely merged (but s. Wedekind 1986), and the description provided concerns Common Y. (Lamberti 1993: 26ff.).

Y. is a tone language with a low-, mid- and high-tone level (cf. Lamberti 1993: 56 and Wedekind 1990: 78). Tone functions as gender marker in nouns, pronouns and some verbal forms (masc. have high tone, fem. low tone) and differentiates nouns from verbal forms (e.g., futú 'sweep!' vs. futù 'broom', cf. Lamberti 1993: 56f. for more examples). There are also several lexical minimal pairs that are differentiated only by tone. Word stress is free. It may coincide with the tone (final vowel, as, e.g., in high-tonal nouns). In verbs, stress usually lies on the verb stem, though sometimes, especially if they terminate in high tone, the ending can be also stressed.

Y. has ten vowel phonemes: i, e, a, o and u and their long counterparts. It has a devoiced low-tonal -ə which mostly alternates with -Ø; its phonemic status is not clear. Diphthongs are rare.

The consonant phonemes of Y. are: stops b/p, d/t, g/k and glottal ʾ; affricates ǧ and č; fricatives (f), z/s and š; nasals m, n, ñ and ŋ; ejectives p̣, ṭ, ṛ (often realized as retroflex ɽ in intervocalic position), č̣ and q; liquids r and l; preglottal ʼy; glides w and y. Voiceless stops are realized aspirated before palatal vowels. It is unclear whether p(ʰ) and f are allophones or distinct phonemes. The glottal p̣, ṭ, q and č̣ developed from the fusion of a stop with a laryngeal, or entered the language through loans. The Proto-Omotic ("Old Cushitic") ejectives either resulted in ʾ (and later eventually disappeared) or were in the course of time deglottalized (cf. Lamberti 1993: 33f.). Such other sounds (reported, e.g., in CerStud III) as h (and variants), ʦ, ṣ, ḍ, glottalized mm̮ may have entered Y. through recent loans or be particular to a specific dialect. Gemination is seldom phonologically relevant and mostly appears in loans.

The usual syllable structures are C[onsonant]V[owel] and CVC. Most word stems are biconsonantal, but also triconsonantal stems (of the type CVCVC-, CVCC- or CVS[onorant]C-) are present. Within the sentence, most words end in a vowel often consisting of a suffixed morpheme. All (short) vowel phonemes can also occur in word-final position, regardless of the grammatical gender.

Y. has a morphologically complex noun system. Nouns and pronouns distinguish two genders (but cp. CerStud III, 52), fem. (default) and masc., marked by tone (s. above). The opposition is also reflected in the verbal inflexion of the 3rd pers. sg. (cp., e.g., bár zagifé, 'he does it', vs. bàr zagifà, 'she does it').

Nouns are marked for definiteness/indefiniteness by the definite article -s suffixed to the noun stem. Case endings are added after the stem, which results in two declensions, definite (with the article) and indefinite (cf. Lamberti 1993: 72).

Y. has eleven cases, marked by the respective case morpheme suffixed to the noun stem governing the whole noun phrase: Nominative (Absolutive and Subject case; marked by Ø in indef. vs. -s(i) in def.), Object (-Ø or -ni vs. -si-n [masc.]/ -so-n [fem.]), Genitive (-ni vs. -sa/-so), Dative (expressing also benefactive and instrumental functions; -ni-k vs. -si-k), Comitative (-nee-n vs. -si-nee-n), Directive (-ni-ki vs. -s-ki), Inessive (-ssi vs. -s-si), Locative (-ta vs. -s-ta), Ablative (-ni-ki- n vs. -s-ki-n), Exitive (-ssi-n vs. -s-si-n) and Vocative (-now). Besides, the morpheme -ta-n (-s-ta-n) serves to mark the "comparative case" (s. Lamberti 1993:79 for examples). The morpheme -r, which almost exclusively occurs in combination with the personal pronouns, expresses belonging (e.g., taa-r-u wa, 'it belongs to me').

There is no marker for plural in nouns. To express plurality, nouns are used in sg., or a particular construction with the noun in Gen. + kiyo/kito can be employed (e.g., asú 'person', asú-nì kiyó/asú-nì kitó 'persons', asú-sà kiyó/asú- sà kitó 'the persons').

The personal pronouns are: 1st pers. sg. ta, 2nd pers. sg. ne, 3rd pers. sg. masc./fem. bár/bàr, 1st pers. pl. inno, 2nd pers. pl. nitto, 3rd pers. pl. basso, polite direct sg. ni, pl. niino, polite indirect bas.

The possessives can be expressed by personal pronouns in Gen. (ta, ne, basa/bari, inno, niito, basso; ni, niino) or by possessive suffixes which developed from the respective old personal pronouns (e.g., 1st pers. sg. -na- < Old Omotic an-*, vs. ta in today's Y.; s. Lamberti 1993:95–98 for examples). The demonstratives are: this: ʾán/ʾàn (masc./fem.), that: yés/yès, ʾák/ʾàk, ʾá/ʾà (masc./fem.). The interrogatives are ʾoo(n-) 'who', ʾaw 'what', ʾaw-ni boorʾa 'why', ʾay-ta 'where', ʾay 'to where', ʾay-n 'from where', ʾaage 'when', ʾakka/marʾo 'how', ʾawnefa 'how much', ʾappun 'how many', ʾaaffa 'which'. The interrogatives usually take the same case endings as nouns.

In the Y. verbal system, the Proto-Omotic flexion has been almost completely replaced by relatively recent innovations. The inflexion is exclusively based on suffixes (and eventually on tones). The most frequent derived stems are causative/transitive -s-/-is(s)- and also rarely -t- (cf. ʾim 'give' vs. ʾim-s- 'make someone give') and benefactive/intransitive/passive -t- and more rarely -(V)st- (cf. ʾim-t- 'to be given'). Iteratives are formed by means of the total reduplication of the verbal form or of the verbal stem (gir- 'enter', giri-giri 'he entered many times'). There are three conjugations in Y., depending on the stem vowel: [1] -a-/-Ø, [2] -o-/-e-, [3] -u-/-i- (cf. Lamberti 1993:173–76).

Y. verbs are marked for affirmative/negative/interrogative by appropriate suffixes. Indicative mode is the most usual one.

In the indicative, the verbal paradigm distinguishes two numbers (sg./pl.) and three persons; gender is only formally (or tonally) expressed in the 3rd pers. sg. 2nd and 3rd pers. pl. are used to express respect.

The negative marker varies according to tense and mode: ʾane (prefix, past tenses, e.g., ʾánè ʾam-út 'I did not go'), -atta (suffix, present tenses, e.g., ʾam-a-náá-ttà, 'I am not going'), ʾafa- + -za (prefix + suffix, future tenses, e.g., ʾáfà ʾamaná-za, 'I will not go'), -ta (imperative).

The copula is Ø/-wa (sg./pl.).

Syntactically, Y. is a Subject–Object–Verb head-final language. Within the noun phrase, modifiers usually precede their head noun. In possessive constructions the possessor always precedes the possessed which is also the head noun. In verb phrases auxiliaries follow their main verb.

Y. has a few particles serving to emphasize a certain element within the sentence. These facultative "focus" particles, wa (for the verbal complex, 'it is that …', cf. the Somali verbal focus waa; s. CerStud 24ff.) and -(m)ba (or -m-be; cf. the Somali focus particle baa) and -tu (for noun phrases), immediately follow the element they emphasize.

The ten-word list for Y. is: ʾisar 'one', yep 'two', keez 'three', geeya 'fire', ʾaka 'water', ʾawa 'sun', ʾassa 'moon', ʾanna 'blood', terma 'tongue', ʾaʾya 'tooth'.

Yäm ethnography

The Y. (የም, also Yem, Yemma; Orom., Amh.: Ǧanǧäro) are an ethnic group inhabiting the area of the former Ǧanǧäro (Y.: Yengar[u]) kingdom (later part of ↗Käfa province). Today, they are administered by the Y. special wäräda of the Southern Nations, Nationalities and Peoples' Region. Y. country is located in an angle formed by the River ↗Gibe and the Little Gibe Rivers on a small mountain range in which Mount Bor reaches the height of ca. 2,950 m A.S.L. The Y. number about 160,000, but only ca. 80,000 live in Y. country proper. Many Y. migrated to neighbouring districts during the last century (CSA 2008; Popp 1997, ch. 3).

Y. has a turbulent history. This is reflected in the oral traditions of various clans and particularly in the history of the kingdom, which shows that dynastic changes occurred frequently. There is a basic stratum of divine ↗kingship of Omotic-speaking origin, with one dynasty claiming Yemeni origin – through which Islamic influence reached Y. –, and the so-called Gondär dynasty of Y. with Christian elements claiming northern Ethiopian connections. The kings (Sg. taato, cp. also ↗tato) of this dynasty implemented expansionist policies, taking Y. to a position of leadership among the neighbouring Omotic kingdoms (e.g., Toba which became an integral part of the kingdom). From the middle of the 19th cent. the Oromo kingdom of ↗Ǧimma gained the upper hand in Y. several times. The year 1894 saw the end of Y.'s independence, when it was conquered by ras ↗Wäldä Giyorgis (together with his Ǧimma ally) and taato Abbaa Bagiboo (not to be confused with the Oromo king ↗Abbaa Bagiboo) fled. For more than ten years sulṭān ↗Abbaa Ǧifaar II of Ǧimma ruled in Y. Later, after Abbaa Bagiboo's son Geerano had been baptized, he regained power as a ↗balabbat.

Ǧanǧäro is first mentioned as Zənǧäro in a victory song of aṣe ↗Yəsḥaq, paying tribute to the Christian Ethiopian empire in horses (Littmann 1914: 14). European travellers and scholars showed considerable interest in the Y. kingdom. Since the first European Antonio ↗Fernandes visited the country in 1613 (BeckHuntAlm 155–62). There are accounts from James ↗Bruce ([1790] BruNile II, 316–21), Charles T. ↗Beke (1843: 260f.), William C. ↗Harris ([1846] HarAeth 143ff., 171), Ludwig ↗Krapf (1858: 90ff.), Paul ↗Soleillet (1886: 169), and Antoine d'↗Abbadie ([1890] AbbGeogr 370–77). They became interested in Ǧanǧäro because, apparently, it was once the centre of an extensive kingdom called ↗Damot (which is not attested) and because there are several cultural features and practices unique to southern Ethiopia which have been ascribed to Y. culture, e.g., the cutting off of men's nipples, manipulation of the testicles (↗Body modification, EAE vol. 5), human sacrifice and a crocodile cult.

Y. had a most elaborate and rigid form of divine kingship. The sacred character of the taato was emphasized by his identification with the ↗sun

Stone-platform of one of the king's houses in the former royal compound (tunna) in Anǧir; photo 2009, courtesy of the author and the ↗moon. There were many ↗sacrifices for him, but he was also subject to strict ceremonial regulations. He lived secluded from the people in several courts (tunna), in each of which he stayed for a certain period. Some of these places are still maintained by the Y. today (VSAe III, pl. 24; Šäʾu 2, 2008:36). As the supreme judicial authority the king could decide over life and death. He had at his disposal a great number of court functionaries most of them eunuchs (↗Castration). Tradition asserts that when a king died his eunuchs were all killed (VSAe III, ch. 5). At Sofkar, the burial place of the kings, many undecorated stone ↗stelae, with an average height of 2 m, can still be seen (Šäʾu 2, 2008:31).

The administration was rigidly and hierarchically organized. Next to the king was a powerful council and even the king had to follow its political decisions. After the death of a king this council elected his successor (VSAe III, 346).

After the flight of taato Abbaa Bagiboo many of the religious rituals were changed or discontinued. However, smiths still produce paraphernalia for a renewed form of the crocodile cult (Šäʾu 2, 2008 inside back cover). Still known is the interesting concept of an ↗iron pillar (biriisi) which God fixed into the earth as the centre post of the world. According to myth, when it was cut down on the order of a king, a long trench opened and even split Mount Bor. At the remaining stump bulls were sacrificed yearly before it was dismantled by the ↗Amhara. However, the stone basis of the iron pillar, still visible near Fofa is an important historical landmark.

The particularly high number of clans is due to various immigrations in the history of Y. Clan rivalry contributed to the hierarchization of society. There are two distinct groups of endogamous full-time craftworkers (↗Handicrafts): yirfo ('smiths') and bera ('tanner-potters', also ↗fuga). Besides their crafts they also perform rituals during healing sessions, rites of passage and funerals. In addition, they carry out propitiation rituals (VSAe III, 316–22; Getachew Fulle 2001:47). Today, one finds wealthy traders among the bera. Only weaving and woodwork can be undertaken by anybody.

Being highland peasants, the Y. cultivate Ensete ventricosum (Y.: eewa, Amh.: ↗ənsät) as their staple food; wheat and barley are also important crops among a diversity of others. The most important cash crop is ↗coffee. Cattle-breeding does not play an important role. On the eastern mountain slopes there are stonewalled and irrigated terraces.

Although only half of the Y. live in the Y. country, a sense of togetherness and their quest for identity (Popp 1997, ch. 4) help to maintain their culture and cultural heritage, which also finds expression in the annual journal Šäʾu published by the Y. special wäräda.

Yämanä Krəstos

Ras bitwäddäd Y.K. (የማን ፡ ክርስቶስ, in Jesuit sources also "Emana" or "Imano"; fl. 1600–32) was an important military and political figure. The son of ↗Ḥamälmal Wärq (s. EAE vol. 5) and Śärṣ́ä Krəstos, he was half brother of aṣe ↗Susənyos and full brother of Hafä Krəstos and Mälkəʾa Krəstos.

Y.K. was involved in several episodes related to Susənyos during the latter's years as šəfta and pretender to the throne. On 14 December 1604, he was present at the short-lived proclamation of Susənyos as Emperor at Ḥaräsma, which he allegedly opposed (PerChron 47, 135). In ca. 1605, he refused to side with Susənyos in the latter's struggle against aṣe ↗Yaʿəqob and shortly thereafter he suffered defeat against ↗Zäśəllase (PerChron 61).

In 1607, probably already as däǧǧazmač of Amhara, Y.K. helped the ↗Jesuits to obtain lands for their residence at ↗Gorgora (BecRASO VI, 190; XI, 160). Two years later, Susənyos sent him to quell the rebellion of the slave Mälkä Ṣedeq, achieving an important victory against the latter in Wägära on 19 April 1609 (PerChron 97f.; BecRASO III, 336f.). In 1611, he was made abägaz and participated in a campaign against the ↗Tuulama Oromo in Gərarya. In the same year he was also made bitwäddäd (BecRASO III, 347; PerChron 106, 115).

In ca. 1612, Y.K. quarrelled with Susənyos, who took away his title of ras and gave it to ↗Səᶜəlä Krəstos (BecRASO III, 351). Around that time too, while he was governor of Bägemdər, Y.K. began to take an open stand against the missionaries and Susənyos's pro-Catholic leanings. In early 1617, the political-religious crisis he was involved in came to a head. Y.K. formed a powerful alliance with ↗Yolyos, abunä ↗Səmᶜon, ↗Kəflä Waḥəd and Mähaymənä Krəstos to challenge the ruler. While Yolyos led an armed uprising in Dämbəya, Y.K. made himself strong in Mäläk Amba near ↗Tädbabä Maryam (perhaps Atronsä Maryam), refusing to obey the orders of his brother. The rebels were, however, defeated and Y.K. was captured by his brother däǧǧazmač Hafä Krəstos. He was sentenced to death but then pardoned and sent to exile in Goǧǧam (ARSI, Goa 39 I (2), 105r; BecRASO III, 360f.; IV, 7; XI: 319, 331ff., 386; PerChron 131–37).

In early 1630, while actively quelling the rebellion of one Qač̣a Maryam in Amhara, Y.K.'s and ras Səᶜəlä Krəstos's armies came to the verge of confrontation. The clash could only be averted through the intervention of ᶜaqqabe säᶜat Ḥablä Śəllase (PerChron 239; BecRASO XII, 429). In ca. February 1632, Y.K. was again governor of Bägemdər, where he re-established the Alexandrian rite (BecRASO I, 148).

Y.K.'s whereabouts during the reign of his nephew aṣe ↗Fasilädäs are unknown, as is the date of his death. He had at least three sons, Ambäsay, Ǝdä Krəstos and Śärṣ́ä Krəstos. He also tried to marry off one of his daughters, whose name is unknown, to Walay, son of ↗Gedewon (PerChron 136).

A number of Y.K.'s namesakes were active during the same period. In ca. 1603 one lämbade Yämano, brother of ṣäḥafe lam "Seno" (Śənno?), rescued Susənyos during a campaign of the latter in ↗Ǝnnamora (PerChron 38; BecRASO III, 311). One abba Y.K. (fl. 1627) converted to Catholicism, proselytized in ↗Wälqayt and was killed by Orthodox followers (BecRASO VII, 6; XII, 287). One ṭəqur (i.e. "Black") Y.K., a veteran soldier in the squadron named Enoch in the army of Səᶜəlä Krəstos, was killed on 24 May 1631 by the rebel Śärṣ́ä Krəstos (BecRASO VII, 113; XII, 494). A fourth Y.K. (fl. 1630–40), the son of ↗Benäro and married to a daughter of Səᶜəlä Krəstos, was ruler of ↗Ǝnnarya (BecRASO XIII, 47; Lange 1982: 35). Towards 1632, a fifth Y.K. was captain of a rebel lord (Bihono?; BecRASO VII, 156). Finally, an azmač Y.K. (fl. 1570–1633), a second cousin of Susənyos and fervent Catholic, had his possessions expropiated in 1633 because he had refused to profess the Alexandrian faith (BecRASO VII, 209; I, 149).

Yämaryam Barya

Y.B. was the son of däǧǧazmač Ayo (d. February 1764) from whom he inherited the right to rule Bägemdər. His father had also held the title žan ṣərar, suggesting that the family may have originated in the ↗Wällo highlands near ↗Amba Gəšän. Y.B. was already deeply involved in court and national politics, by the time his father died. He had been present at the death of ↗Iyasu II in 1755 and had supported the succession of ↗Iyoʾas I and the continuation in power of ətege Məntəwwab (↗Bərhan Mogäsa; GuiIyas 170 [text] = 181 [tr.]). In October 1760, he was appointed grazmač and married wäyzäro ↗Aster, Məntəwwab's daughter (GuiIyas 194 [text] = 203f. [tr.]). Two years later he was promoted to ↗balambaras (GuiIyas 197 [text] = 206 [tr.]) and, not long after, to the rank of ↗däǧǧazmač.

Y.B. had a long-standing rivalry with ↗Mikaʾel Səḥul, ruler of ↗Təgray, over tribute from ↗Lasta. Early in 1766 their troops confronted each other on the Bägemdər-Lasta border, but avoided bloodshed following the intervention of court officials from ↗Gondär. In 1768, following the death of däǧǧazmač ↗Ǝšäte of Qʷara, then ruler of ↗Agäw Mədər, disagreement over the control of Ǝšäte's legacy (GuiIyas 230 [text] = 239 [tr.]) brought Y.B. and Mikaʾel Səḥul into open conflict. Ǝšäte's son, ↗Ḫaylä Mikaʾel Ǝšäte, took sides with Mikaʾel Səḥul (Kropp 1989: 15).

Y.B. tried to rally the support of däǧǧazmač ↗Lubo from Wällo, one of the relatives of aṣe Iyoᵓas, but the result was a complete falling out and the replacement of Y.B. as governor of Bägemdər (GuiIyas 232 [text] = 239 [tr.]) by Lubo's brother, Biräle. Y.B. resisted this appointment, which formally made him a rebel against the crown and on 16 June 1768, killed Biräle in action near Gondär.

Early in 1769, Iyoᵓas and Mikaᵓel Səḥul campaigned against Y.B., whom they defeated at what James ↗Bruce calls the battle of Näfas Mäwč̣a, in ↗Gayənt (BruNile II, 691f.), following which Y.B. withdrew beyond ↗Č̣äč̣äho. On 3 February, Y.B. was captured and brought to court, where, at the instigation and with the participation of Lubo, he was beheaded in revenge for the death of Biräle (GuiIyas 240f. [text] = 249f. [tr.]; BruNile II, 694–95). Bruce, who visited Gondär shortly after these events, attributed to Y.B. strong anti-"Galla" views, but this is unlikely in light of the chronicle's assertion that, in 1768, Y.B. had tried to forge an alliance with the Wälloye against Mikaᵓel Səḥul.

Y.B. was the father of Ḫaylä Iyäsus, Iyäsus Barya, Ḫirut, wayzäro Səhəltu and wayzäro Yäwärq Wəha. He made a major bequest to Səhəltu and Yäwärq Wəha of ↗rim lands tributary to a number of major Gondärine churches, Qaha Iyäsus, Däbrä Ṣ́äḥay Qʷəsqʷam, Lədäta Maryam, Bäᵓata Lämaryam and Narga Ś́əllase prominent amongst them (BritLib Orient–604, fol. 1).

Yaᶜqūbī, al-

Y. (Abū l-ᶜAbbās Aḥmad b. Abī Yaᶜqūb b. Ǧaᶜfar b. Wahb b. Wāḍiḥ al-Yaᶜqūbī) was an Arab geographer and historian (fl. second half of the 9th cent.; d. 893 [?], Egypt).

Y.'s biography is almost unknown. Born in Baghdad into a family belonging to the ḫalīfa's administration, he visited Armenia and then worked in Ḫurasān as a secretary of the Ṭāhirid state. After the fall of the Ṭāhirid dynasty in 872–73, Y. travelled to India and eventually settled in Egypt.

Y.'s main works are 1) the Taᵓrīḫ ('History', first ed. Houtsma 1883; several re-editions in the Arab world exist), a concise but comprehensive history of the world since the creation until the ḫalīfa al-Muᶜtamid (d. 892); and 2) the Kitāb al-Buldān ('Book of the Countries', completed 891, first analyzed by de Goeje 1860; first published by Juynboll 1861; ed. de Goeje 1892, French tr. Wiet 1937; many modern editions are available), a treatise on the geography of the regions of the Islamic world and the neighbouring areas. Both contain valuable details on the Ethio–Eritrean region, in particular on the ↗Beǧa people.

Generally speaking, Y.'s literary production shows many of the typical features of adab ↗historiography and geography, such as, primarily, the anthological character of the Taᵓrīḫ (one of the few extant earliest examples of a "short universal history" in Arabic) and the incorporation of many references to the customs, traditions and beliefs of the peoples and regions mentioned. The reliability of the information Y. collected may be questionable but his usage of non-Islamic and pre-Islamic sources and his accuracy in describing the early Shiite movements suffice to give his work an outstanding position in the panorama of Islamic historiography.

In reference to the Ethio-Eritrean region, the Taᵓrīḫ mentions quite cursorily the Nūba and deals at length with the Five Beǧa kingdoms and their tribes. Due to the uncertainty and vagueness of the spellings in the manuscript tradition of the work, the text of this section of the Taᵓrīḫ remains partially unreadable and only tentatively interpretable. However, Y. surely mentions the following kingdoms (mamlaka): 1) Naqīs located immediately south of Aswān (capital town: Haǧar) comprises several different tribes (among them the Zanāfiǧ) and hosts mines of gold and deposits of precious stones. Muslims are at truce with it and are active in the exploitation of its mineral wealth. 2) Baqlīn (↗Baqulin) is a wide, rainy land with many towns. The religion of the local people is similar to that of the Zoroastrians and Dualists (al-Maǧūs waṯ-Ṯanāwīya): they call God AZBḤYR and the devil ṢḤY ḤRᵓQH. They pluck their beards, extract their middle incisors and are circumcised; 3) Bāzīn borders ᶜAlwa and Baqlīn and is at war with them. Its inhabitants drink milk; 4) Ǧārīn extends from Bāḍiᶜ on the coast up to the border of Baqlīn and is governed by a "serious king" (malik ḫaṭīr). The people extract their middle incisors, because they do not want to have "teeth like those of the donkeys" and pluck their beards; finally 5) Qaṭᶜa, stretching between Bāḍiᶜ and Faykūn, is inhabited by brave and strong people. They have a place called "dār as-sawā" where the strongest youth are trained to fight in war. The sixth kingdom in Y.'s series is that of the Christian Jacobite ↗Nağāšī whose capital is Kaᶜbar. According to Y., the Arabs come to trade with this powerful kingdom, receiving tribute from all the kings who rule in al-Ḥabaša, through the ↗Dahlak islands (ed. Houtsma 1883, vol. 1, 217ff.; tr. [Engl. partial] Vantini 1975: 70–73, Hopkins – Levtzion 1981: 19ff., [French] Cuoq 1985: 49–52, [Ital.] Conti Rossini 1928: 274f., [Russian, with Arabic text] Kubbel'-Matveev 1960: 37–41).

The Kitāb al-Buldān contains more references to the Nūba (cp. ↗Noba) and the Beğa, especially the Ḥadārib (cp. ↗Ḥədaräb) whose capital is Hağar, where also Muslim traders can be found, and the Zanāfiğ whose head lives in Baqlīn. Both these Beğa groups worship an idol called ḤǦᵓǦ/ḪŪ and do not know any divinely revealed Law. Regarding the peculiar customs of Beğa, Y. in his Kitāb al-Buldān writes that they excise the nipples of young men, so that they do not look like the breasts of women, they eat millet, ride camels and throw spears which never miss the target (ed. Juynboll 1861: 124f.; ed. de Goeje 1892: 335ff.; tr. [Eng.] Vantini 1975: 76–79, [French] Wiet 1937: 191f., [partial French] Cuoq 1985: 48f., [Russian, with text] Kubbel' – Matveev 1960: 41–46). Speaking about the "islands of Yemen", Y.'s Kitāb al-Buldān, for the first time in Arabic geographical literature, mentions the "island" of ↗Zaylaᶜ "in front of al-Mandab" and then calls the Dahlak "the island of the Nağāšī" (Juynboll 1861: 105; de Goeje 1892: 319; Wiet 1937: 159).

Scholars of Ethiopian studies have referred to Y. since the first editions of his works became available. Conti Rossini (1928: 274ff.) provides a comprehensive assessment of Y.'s description of the Beğa; Trimingham (TrIslam 49ff.) extensively draws upon Y. in his reconstruction of the first spread of ↗Islam in Ethiopia, and Zaborski (1965; 1970; 1972; 1984) in his historical sketch of the Sudan-Eritrean border area at the time of the rise of Islam; Cuoq (1981) frequently quotes Y. in his historical depiction of the Islamic presence in Ethiopia; Fiaccadori (2010) confronts Y.'s texts with other Arabic and Ethiopic sources to shed light on the relationships between Islam and ↗Christianity in Northern Ethiopia at the end of the 9th cent.

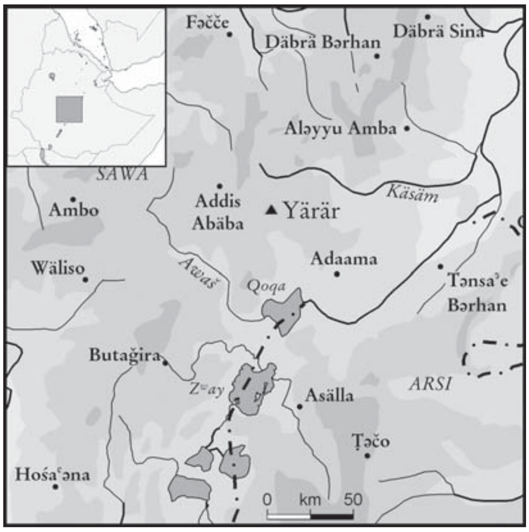
Yärär

Yärär geography

Mount Y. (የረር ፡ ተራራ, Yärär Tärara, also Erär; 8° 54' N, 38° 58' E; 3,099 m A.S.L.) is an Upper Cenozoic (Pliocene) dormant and eroded volcano (↗Seismology) which rises 10 km to the north of Dukäm (1,950 m A.S.L.). The collapsed and dismantled caldera of the summit has a towering rock in its centre which was a former chimney. The gullied slopes of the volcano are covered with scattered woods. Mount Y. is officially registered as a National Forest Priority Area.

Borelli (1890: 212), in the 19th cent., wrote of a holy spring where followers of the old ↗Oromo religion offered to the spirit of the mountain.



The name Y. was adopted by the Y. and Kärräyyuu awrağğa which was a division of ↗Šäwa province until 1987 and then part of South-eastern Šäwa sub-province from 1987 to 1991. Today, the area belongs to Eastern Šäwa zone of Oromiyaa Regional State.

The Oromo clans that inhabit the western side of the mountain belong to the Galan while those on the east are the Gəmbiču and the Adaᵓa who are also found to the south of the mountain.

Yärär history

In ↗Morät legend tells that aṣe Həzbä Nañ (↗Täklä Maryam), being trapped by his arrogance, galloped on a flying animal called Tora which took him from his palace at Däy Giyorgis (not far from present day ↗Ǝnnäwari) and threw him on the mountain of Y. There, a local princess realizing that he had royal blood, took him to her residence. After his recovery from the fall he married the princess. Bäsəmu, the son of the couple, is said to have become the ruler of the Morät district and then of the whole of Ethiopia.

According to the manuscript EMML no. 1942 version of ↗Dərsanä Uraᵓel, ↗Abrəha and Aṣbəḥa built seven churches on Mount Y. (dedicated to Mikaᵓel, Gäbrəᵓel, the Four Heavenly Creatures, the Twenty Four Heavenly Priests, a Cherub and the Angel Surafel). The text adds that the two kings established Däbrä Yärär as their seat of government, the location being in the centre of Ethiopia (EMML no. 1942, fol. 68v–69r). In the next version of the Dərsanä Uraᵓel this last idea is retained: Y. was considered as the "centre" of Ethiopia. As is narrated in oral tradition, such medieval kings as ↗Yəkunno Amlak, ↗Zärᵓa Yaᶜəqob, and ↗Ləbnä Dəngəl frequented Y. as one of their favourite royal camps (↗Kätäma).

In 1973 an archaeological excavation by Lanfranco ↗Ricci and Claudio Barocas on the eastern side of Y., near present day Tewodros church, uncovered a large rectangular structure with carvings in the refined style of medieval royal churches (Anfray 1978:164). This church is known in the literature as Ginbi (Gəmb Tewodros). Inside this structure, 14 tombs were excavated. Unfortunately, the bone samples sent for radiocarbon dating did not produce any results (Ricci 1976:200). According to the oral tradition collected during the excavation (and by Deresse Aynachew in 2006), the church was dedicated to Mary and destroyed by imām ↗Aḥmad b. Ibrāhīm al-Ġāzī's troops.

Ricci hypothesizes that the excavated church was the church of Badoqe (Ricci 1976:195) known only from the ↗Futūḥ al-Ḥabaša (BassHist II, 114, 215), where it is mentioned as one of the royal residences of Ləbnä Dəngəl located in the province of ↗Fäṭägar. The foundation of the church is ascribed to the mother of Ləbnä Dəngəl, queen ↗Naᶜod Mogäsa. According to the Futūḥ, when the royal residence was about to fall into the hands of the Muslim armies, Ləbnä Dəngəl ordered his houses and those of his brothers to be burned but the church to be left intact. The church itself was burnt by Aḥmad b.

Ibrāhīm al-Ġāzī's soldiers (BassHist II, 214f.). In 1817/18 the church of Śəllase was established during the reign of nəguś ↗Śahlä Śəllase of Šäwa.

Mount Y. preserves many other archaeological testimonies of long-term human settlement. Recently, Breternitz and Pankhurst (2009: 209–49) described the remains of what they interpret as the "City of Sire" located six kilometres from the church of Ginbi, with a double wall system on the hill-top, strong fortifications and trenches and other structures which are not precisely described. They consider it could be the old town of ↗Zärᵓa Yaᶜəqob, as claimed by d'Abbadie (1890: 299). However, a double wall structure could be attributed not only to the medieval period because this type of fence system has been used by the nobility even up until mid-20th cent.

There are also a number of caves with mummified human bodies, one of which is displayed as a local saint in Yärär Śəllase church. These mummies could be related to the builders of tumulus graves excavated in ↗Mänz that may be dated between the 8th and the 12th cent. In other words, mount Y. could have been a highly revered place before the introduction of Christianity or Islam in this region (s. Fauvelle-Aymar – Deresse Ayenachew – Hirsch 2007–08).

Mount Y. was also famous for its slave market located at its northern foot and named Roge. This market was mentioned by many travellers of the 19th cent.; among them Rochet d'Héricourt who explains that the slaves there came from different regions: ↗Yäm, ↗Käfa, ↗Gurage and other places where the Oromo were at war (Rochet d'Héricourt 1841: 254; Ahmed Hassen Omer 2007: 541, annex 92).

Yared

Y. (ያሬድ, also known as Y. maḫletawi or maḫletay, 'Y. the melodious') is a highly venerated saint of the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox (Täwaḥədo) Church, with many churches dedicated to him, and frequent representation of him in paintings. A priest who lived in the 6th cent., during the reign of the Aksumite king ↗Gäbrä Mäsqäl, Y. is credited with the invention of Ethiopic sacred music and hymnody (↗hymns; cp. ↗zema). Y. is commemorated in the Sənkəssar on 11 Gənbot (ColSyn XIII, 243ff.).

The principal source concerning biographical data of Y. is his Vita (Dərsan wägädl zäyared, 'Homily and Acts of Y.') published by Conti Rossini in 1904 on the basis of ms. d'Abbadie 227 (19th cent.). Yet the mss. EMML no. 1844 (16th cent.) and BritLib Orient 12860 (17th cent.) show a richer text (Tedros Abraha 2009: 347f., n. 3).

According to his hagiography, Y. was born in Aksum and received a traditional ↗education from a priest of ↗Aksum Ṣəyon, abba Gedewon, his relative. The names of his parents vary in the sources. Attested names for his father are: Abəyud, Yəsḥaq, Gämaləyäl and Adam; for his mother: Kristina and Tawkələya (for the different names cp. Tedros Abreha 2009: 347, n. 3 and 351 n. 15 and Aklilä-Bərhan Wäldä Qirqos 1959).

His Vita reports that the young Y. was unable to memorize the ↗Psalter and, tired of his teacher's hard corporal punishment, escaped to the solitary place where Ǝbnä Ḥakim (↗Mənilək I) was buried. There he sat down in the shade of a tree and saw a caterpillar which was trying to climb the tree. It fell down several times but always rose up and tried again. Y. drew his inspiration from the caterpillar's perseverance and, having returned to his teacher, recited to him the Psalms and the holy books in one day. Later he was appointed deacon at Aksum Ṣəyon. He married and became a father, but soon discovered that his wife had a lover. Y. planned to kill him, but God sent him three birds from Eden. The birds took him to Heaven and Y. entered the heavenly Jerusalem. There he heard harmonious music in praise of God. He learned this music and, back on earth, reproduced it in Aksum Ṣəyon. King Gäbrä Mäsqäl, his wife, the court, the metropolitan, the priests and people flocked to the cathedral to listen to the melodious chant.

On day, Y.'s singing moved aṣe Gäbrä Mäsqäl in such a matter that he jabbed his stick in the saint's foot (s. ill.). A lot of blood flowed from the wound, it poured down the church floor and out in the street. But Y. did not stop until he completed his singing. The King regretted his act and promised him to fulfil any wish. Y. asked him for the permission to become a monk far from Aksum to which Gäbrä Mäsqäl agreed. As a token of gratitude the Saint knelt down to pray on the ↗tabot and his feet levitated one cubit from the floor. He moved to ↗Ṣällämt, and led a solitary life, praying, fasting and teaching his music, until his death. He was buried in eastern Səmen but his burial place is unknown.

A legend in his Vita relates that Y. met abba Həryaqos (bishop Cyriacus of Behnesa) near the spring of ↗May Kerwaẖ (Aksum) and spoke with him using the ↗araray mode of chant. According to another version, reported in the Mäṣḥafä ↗Aksum, abba Həryaqos and abba (Ephrem) Läbḥawi the Syrian, on the recommendation of the Virgin Mary, gave Y., at May Kerwaẖ, the service books and the liturgy of the Virgin and stayed with him for three days and three nights (CRAxum 5 [text] = 5 [tr.]).

Tradition reports that Y. developed three modes of chant: ↗gəᶜəz, ↗ᶜəzəl and araray. They are still used in the Ethiopic liturgy during the annual liturgical cycle. He also composed five collections of liturgical chants known as ẖamməstu ṣäwatəwä zema ('five categories of chant'), which are still in use in the Ethiopic liturgy: ↗Dəggʷa, ↗Ṣomä dəggʷa, ↗Zəmmare, ↗Mäwaśəᵓət and ↗Məᶜəraf (cp. Tedros Abreha 2009: 349, 357f.). Y. is also credited with the composition of the ↗Anqäṣä bərhan and of the ↗Qəddase (Məkrä Śəllase et al. 101).

The Gädlä Arägawi reports that Y. once visited ↗Zämikaᵓel Arägawi to see the church that Gäbrä Mäsqäl had built for him and to sing the Psalms. Zämikaᵓel Arägawi, who was able to predict the future, had prophesised to his disciples the Saint's visit (Guidi 1896: 76f.; Van den Oudenrijn 1939: 57f.).

Tradition also ascribes to Y. the authorship of the Gädlä Arägawi, Gädlä ↗Ṣəḥma and Gädlä ↗Yəmʾata. In these hagiographies, Y. appears as Y. qäsis maḫletay bərhana läʾityopya ('Y. the melodious priest, light of Ethiopia'), Y. maḫletay kahənä Aksum ('Y. the melodious priest of Aksum'), Y. mäzämmər kahənä Aksum wäʾityopya ('Y. psalmist, priest of Aksum and Ethiopia'), respectively, but there are no reliable elements to corroborate his supposed authorship (Brita 2010: 57f.). In the Gädlä Yared Y. is called mänfäsawi arganon ('spiritual harp', cp. Conti Rossini 1961: 35), an expression close to the appellative Kenārâ d-Rûḥâ (Syr.), by which Ephrem Läbḥawi is commonly known. Y.'s liturgical texts and hymnody are local Ethiopian productions. As such they represent a decisive element of distinction between Egyptian heritage and native creations.

Yared Gäbrä Mikaʾel

Qäññazmač Y. (ያሬድ ፡ ገብረ ፡ ሚካኤል; b. 1915/16, Gobäla, Ǧəru, northern Šäwa, d. 19 May 1974, Addis Abäba) was a prominent writer and journalist.

Y.'s parents were däbtära Gäbrä Mikaʾel Yämanu and wäyzäro Dästa Wäldä Yoḥannəs, sister of ṣäḥafe təʾəzaz ↗Wäldä Giyorgis Wäldä Yoḥannəs. In 1919, the family moved to Addis Abäba where Y. began his traditional ↗education in the Əsṭifanos church. Recognizing his brilliance in learning liturgy (↗qəddase) and the chant (↗zema), his teacher, mämhər Asrat, named his student Y. (after Saint ↗Yared). Y.'s parents died early, and so his uncle Wäldä Giyorgis Wäldä Yoḥannəs took Y. under his care. He sent his nephew to the ↗qəne bet of the Qəddus Marqos church in the compound of the palace of ras Täfäri Mäkʷännən (later aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I), under aläqa Bälay. Y. continued his training in the New Testament under the famous traditional scholar aläqa Ayyälä, in the Emperor's palace. Y.'s studies were interrupted by the Italian invasion of 1936, at which point Y. began serving as a deacon at Qəddus Marqos.

After the Liberation in 1941, Y. enrolled in the army where he served in the cavalry regiment. In 1944 he was discharged due to illness, upon which he joined the Press and Information Bureau. There, he wrote articles for newspapers (↗Journalism). Shortly afterwards, he was sent to Ǧimma for two years to educate the public about the benefit of reading newspapers (↗Press).

Upon his return to Addis Abäba, Y. first served as editor of the ↗Bərhanənna sälam magazine. He was subsequently appointed editor of the weekly Sändäq ᶜAlämaččən (↗ Banderaččən). At the same time, he served on the board administering the Press and Information Bureau. He remained in charge of Sändäq ᶜAlämaččən until the newspaper was closed in 1969. After that, he served as an advisor to the ↗ Addis Zämän newspaper. In 1972, on the occasion of the Emperor's 80th birthday, the title of ↗ qäññazmač was conferred on Y. in recognition of his long service.

Besides his journalistic career, Y. both delivered and published praises of aṣe Ḫaylä Śəllase and ətege ↗ Mänän, offering them as presents during holidays such as the Emperor's birthday and Coronation anniversary. He recorded the life and work of the ruler in numerous books and poems. He was asked to prepare the obituary for ↗ Mäkʷännən Ḫaylä Śəllase in 1957 as well as the biography of ətege ↗ Mänän on the occasion of her 67th birthday.

A prolific author, Y. wrote both poetry (e.g., Yäʾafrika ṣ́äḥay, Kəbrä lədät) and prose. His most popular book was Yäᶜənsəsat agälgəlot; it served as a textbook in some elementary schools. Y. himself donated many copies of the book to schools, in addition to being a member of a group which helped build schools in his native Ǧəru and Ǝnnäwari districts of Šäwa.

Y. was survived by his wife, Ǝǧǧəgayyähu Abbäbä, and their children, six sons and two daughters.

Yared School of Music

Y. is the oldest secular-run government ↗ music school in Ethiopia. Plans for such an institution began to take shape in 1946, after Polish violinist Alexander Kontrowicz was invited to become director of a music school with 40 part-time pupils and three teachers in a house in Addis Abäba. In 1948 this school became the National School of Music. Its founder and first director, Aššännafi Käbbädä (↗ Ašänafi Käbbädä), envisaged the school as an institution that would cater to both national and international music repertoires. In 1967 it was renamed Institute, later changing its name to the Yared School of Music, in honour of St. ↗ Yared. In 1998, it was incorporated into ↗ Addis Ababa University.

Although operational in 1966, Y. was officially inaugurated by the Emperor ↗ Ḫaylä Śəllase I in 1967 when the Bulgarian government funded a new building complex as a gift to Ethiopia, providing instruments, books and recordings, initial instructors, a concert hall, and other resources (Yared Annual 1973). The school complex was completed 7 July 1970 (Helen Afework 2006: 1). Its present location acquired in 1976 consists of a three-building 70-room complex near Səddəst Kilo (Yared Annual 1973). In 2012 three additions to Y. were under construction including a multi-story building to house students, an adminstrative office, and a modern state-of-the art perfomrance complex. The 1968 and 1973 Y. annual reports listed faculty members coming from Ethiopia, India, USA, Italy, Hungary, Armenia, and Greece. Under the Därg, only Ethiopian instructors were hired (Yared Graduation Magazine 1989–90). Initially, completion of the 8th grade was required for admission; in 1980 the requirement was raised to the 10th grade.

From the very beginning, the School's mission was to train music teachers and professional musicians, promote cultural exchanges, impart social prestige to the profession, and educate the public. Students were required to study both Western and Ethiopian instruments in addition to studies in western classical music theory, harmony, and solfège (Yared Annual 1973). The B.A. curriculum as revised in 1999 added the training of music arrangers and organizers for cultural institutions.

The school has played an important role in producing music professionals, many of whom are Y. graduates (Aššännafi Käbbädä 1995). Between 1967 and 2006 Y. issued 535 diplomas. The school, which admits 25 students each year, graduated its first B.A. students in 2003. In 2010, Y. became part of the College of Performing and Visual Arts.

Y. (የሰበካ ፡ መንፈሳዊ ፡ ጉባኤ, lit. 'the spiritual council of a parish', also translated 'parish council') is an administrative structure of the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox (Täwaḥədo) Church (EOTC) devoted to supervising and organizing religious life in a parish church. The institution of Y. was created through a decree, called Qalä ᶜawadi (lit. 'herald's voice'; in the following: QA), signed by abunä ↗Tewoflos on the 25 October 1972 (15 Ṭəqəmt 1965 A.M.) and published in the ↗Nägarit Gazeṭa. This decree aimed to establish a council in charge of managing a parish's income and organizing parish life throughout the country.

Priests and laymen of the parish should share posts within the Y. and its jurisdiction corresponds to the ↗aṭbiya (QA 1972: article 8). But its president is inevitably the ecclesiastical head of the parish church while the vice president is elected from the representatives of the laymen (QA 1972: article 8). The Patriarchate placed these councils under the control of the diocese, to which also the election of the council members and their decisions should be submitted (QA 1972: articles 6 and 8). The Y. was involved in an administrative chain linking the parishes with the central authority. The Patriarchate created three other types of councils gathering clergymen and laymen at the level of the awrağğa, the diocese and at its own level (QA 1972: articles 13, 14 and 15). Each grade of the administration had to give account to their hierarchical superiors, thereby creating a pyramidal administration.

Yet such a reform was difficult to realize (Ancel 2009: 943–49) and finally, the Ethiopian ↗Revolution of 1974 slowed down the establishment of the parish councils (Ancel 2006: 245–249). The Patriarchate finally announced in May 1978 a new Qalä ᶜawadi which established new regulations for the Y. The text of 1978 made a change by setting up at each level an assembly gathering representatives issued from the lower levels, applying the parish model at the levels of wäräda, awrağğa and diocese. The highest level of this administrative structure was the general assembly of the Patriarchate, chaired by the Patriarch himself. The Patriarchate assembly had the power to establish regulations concerning parishes (QA 1978: 41). The purpose of the text of 1978 was primarily the improvement of the Patriarchate's handling of the parishes. But its goal was also the rationalization of the management of income. The finance of the Church was in fact at stake. Since 1975, the Church could not rely anymore on its income from property. From then on, the financial contribution of the faithful was becoming vital to the Church. Following the example of the decree of 1972, the text of 1978 offered the membership of the parish only to those who gave donations to the parish church. In exchange for their contribution, the faithful would be exonerated from payment for religious services (QA 1972: article 12; QA 1978: 52).

Starting from 1983, the administrative system was in place. The elections for each level were organized and the general assembly of the Patriarchate could, for the first time, be convened, in June 1983. This took place at the central headquarters of the Patriarchate in Addis Abäba under the chair of abunä ↗Täklä Haymanot. The number of parish councils increased from 3,213 to 13,689 between 1981 and 1988 (Inter-Church AID Department 1980: 21). Because of political problems and instabilities it was then necessary to wait more than fifteen years, and three more Qalä ᶜawadi, till the number of the Y. was close to the number of the existing churches in Ethiopia in 1986. In 2001–02, the official number of churches which had a parish council reached 16,843.

Y. (ያሳይ) is an Ethiopian saint of "Roman" origin (in his Acts he is called rətuᶜa haymanot nəguśä rom 'orthodox king of Rome'; ↗Rom (s. EAE vol. 5), known for his rigorous ascetic life.

Y. is briefly commemorated in the ↗Sənkəssar on 9 Mäskäräm for having above all fulfilled his spiritual combat in the top of a tree (wäfäṣṣämä gädlo mälᶜəltä ᶜəṣ́). His Acts are preserved in a single manuscript found in ↗Daga Ǝsṭifanos (Dāgā Esṭifānos 66 = Ṭānāsee 177), palaeographically dated to the 14th/15th cent., and containing also the ↗Testamentum Domini in Galilea (fols. 1r–28v), some texts about the Ascension of Christ (fols. 29r–43v) that on different from those on the same subject known so far and allegedly translated from Hebrew into Arabic, and several Acts of saints (Mercurius fols. 45r–56v, Cyriacus [↗Qirqos] and Julitta fols. 57r–80v, ↗Ṗänṭälewon fols. 81r–97r, and Y., fols. 97r–112r, with the final part missing).

The catalogue (SixTana III 11f., 236) also quotes a king of Egypt called Y. who appears in the ↗Täʾammərä Maryam, but whose story does not show any discernible connection with the Ethiopian Y., and concludes that this text on Y. is a hapax. Budge (BudSaint 34) adds to the name of Yâsây in the Sənkəssar "[Yûsyâs who lived in the eighteenth century]".

This Y. should not be confused with the 14th-cent. abba ↗Yasay of Mändabba (s. Conti Rossini 1945: 337f., s. also KinBibl no. 169).

Y. (ያሳይ, also Yəsay, Asay, fl. 14th cent.), a saintly monk and contemporary of aṣe ↗ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon I, is considered to have been the founder of the important monastery of ↗Mändabba Mädḫane ᶜAläm, on the ↗Gorgora peninsula. To date, there is no information on his life, though his Vita (↗Gädl) probably exists at least in the monastery of Mändabba. The information provided in the notice in KinBibl 96, no. 169, remains uncertain since it has not yet been possible to locate the places dedicated to Y. according to this source. Remarkably, the valuable hagiographic collection in a manuscript from ↗Däbrä Daga Ǝsṭifanos, geographically close to Mändabba, contains the Vita of a different saint ↗Yasay (Dāgā Esṭifānos 66, SixTana III, 233–37), "King of Rom", whose veneration is recorded at a few places in Təgray. In the monastery of Mändabba, a "stone ↗tankʷa-boat" is displayed, in which Y., according to the local oral tradition, arrived at the place.

Y. appears as one of the seven disciples ("seven stars") of abunä ↗Mädḫaninä Ǝgziᵓ in some spiritual ↗genealogies (cp. Getatchew Haile in OrbAethChoj 236f.); the respective passage on Mädḫaninä Ǝgziᵓ is also included in some of the "short chronicles" (cp. BassÉt 10; "Y. of Manda Amba"; BegCron 7). In the Vita of Mädḫaninä Ǝgziᵓ, Y. is only mentioned once in the spiritual genealogy of the former (Colin 2010: 524f.). However, a few genealogies originating from North Ethiopia (the circle of ↗Ewosṭateans) present Y. as spiritual son of a certain Zäᵓamanuᵓel (whose spiritual father was Sinoda of Zägʷan), a so far unknown monk from the Lake Ṭana region (e.g., Conti Rossini 1901: 155; 1943: 338). The genealogies report that Y.'s spiritual children were abba Nob of ↗Rema, Ǝsṭifanos of Mäqdäsä Maryam in ↗Gədəm, Ṣənᶜanä Krəstos of Däbrä Zäyt in Dakna and some others (Conti Rossini 1901: 155, 1943: 337; Lusini 2004: 263f., 266f., 269f.).

Yäšimmäbet Guumaa Aagaa

Wäyzäro Y. (የሺመቤት ፡ ጉማ ፡ አጋ; b. 9 April 1916, Burii, Gidaamii wäräda, d. 14 December 2009, Addis Abäba) was a member of the underground resistance movement during the Italian occupation of 1936–41, and is also remembered for her dedication to social welfare in post-liberation Ethiopia.

Born as Lilluu Guumaa Aagaa to fitawrari Guumaa Aagaa Bulii and wäyzäro Ǧaallee Ǧootee Tulluu, Y. grew up in the gəbbi of her grandfather däǧǧazmač ↗Ǧootee. There she received private secular as well as primary church education. Later in life she would also master French, Italian and English.

As a teenager, Y. was given in marriage to Hambisaa Kumsaa Morodaa (däǧǧazmač ↗Habtä Maryam Gäbrä Ǝgziᵓabəḥer), to cement the relationship between western and eastern ↗Wälläga. Their daughter Mäḥṣänte Habtä Maryam married prince Śahlä Śəllase, the youngest son of aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I, and gave birth to prince Ǝrməyas Śahlä Śəllase, the president of the ↗Crown Council, thus linking the Oromo royal family of Wälläga to the ↗Solomonic dynasty.

In 1936, Y.'s uncles, däǧǧazmač Hossaᶜəna Ǧootee and däǧǧazmač Yoḥannəs Ǧootee, with the support of Habtä Maryam and 30 other local ↗*balabbat*s, forged a political entity called the ↗Western Galla [Oromo] Confederation with the aim of establishing an autonomous Oromo state. Y. is said to have mediated between her uncles and her husband. The endeavour failed, as by that time the ↗United Kingdom had agreed to the ↗Hoare-Laval plan, and thus had already acquiesced to Italian demands to occupy southern Ethiopia (Robertson 1975: 440ff.).

Hossaᶜəna and Yoḥannəs, who had a grudge against Ḫaylä Śəllase I, for the imprisonment and killing of their elder brother fitawrari ↗Mardassaa Ǧootee, assumed service under the new Italian government. Hossaᶜəna became president of the parliament with the title of ↗ras, Yoḥannəs was given the governorship of Western Wälläga with the title of abeto (↗Abetohun). Habtä Maryam also submitted eventually, but was never trusted by the Italians after his initial contribution to the ↗resistance. He was subsequently poisoned and died. As for Y., she refused to join her brothers in Addis Abäba and ↗Gidaamii and joined the underground. From her base in ↗Naqamtee, in 1936, she helped her aunt wäyzäro Askalä Ǧootee (the wife of ləǧ ↗Iyasu) and her infant son däǧǧazmač Kaśa Wäldä Maryam to escape to Kenya. In 1939, Y. married another prominent patriot, fitawrari (later ras) ↗Mäsfən Sələši; the couple had nine children.

After the ↗Liberation, Y. turned to active philanthropic work. Among others, she contributed to the Ethiopian Red Cross Society (starting in 1941), the Ethiopian Women's Humanitarian Association (also starting in 1941) and the Ethiopian Women's Welfare Association (starting in 1945). She particularly promoted education in primary schools by providing financial help to ca. 5,000 students annually until the ↗Revolution of 1974.

Y. and her husband were arrested during the Därg period (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council). Mäsfən Sələši was executed 1974; and Y. and her children were imprisoned. She stayed in prison for four years and was eventually allowed to go into exile. Y. spent a total of 18 years mostly in Beverly Hills, California. She returned to Ethiopia shortly before her death.

Y. was buried in the Patriots section of the cemetery of the ↗Qəddəst Śəllase cathedral. Her funeral was attended by numerous high officials as well as by members of the Ethiopian Patriotic Association (↗Yäṭəntawit Ityoṗya Ǧägənñočč Arbäñňočč Maḫbär); a eulogy was read by the Patriarch abunä Ṗawlos.

Yasin Maḥammoda

Fitawrari Y.M. (ያሲን ፡ ማሓሞዳ, ᶜAfar sp. Yasin [also Yaaseen] Macammoda; b. 1910, Hereyssa, Tiiᶜo, d. 1969, Asmära) was a leading ᶜAfar politician. He was the son of fitawrari Maḥammooda Gumḥed (ᶜAfar sp.: Macammoda Gumced), one of the prominent chiefs of the Dahimela (ᶜAfar sp.: Dahimmela) sub-group; his mother was Ḥalima Musa (ᶜAfar sp.: Calima Musa). In his youth, Y.M. received a basic Islamic education at the court of a famous religious teacher, šayḫ ᶜAli Ḫalifa (ᶜAfar sp.: Qali Califa) in ᶜEdd (ᶜAfar sp.: Qiddi). After that, he travelled to Yemen where he improved his Arabic. As a young man Y.M. cautiously observed the court of his father and, as his father aged, he assumed responsibility for his group. Gradually, his study of Arabic, Islamic theology and ᶜAfar history made him a well-informed and visionary man.

In the late 1920s Y.M. resisted the campaign organized against Yasin Ḥaysama (ᶜAfar sp.: Yasin Caysama), sulṭān of Biḍu (ᶜAfar sp.: Bixu), who challenged the colonial authorities. Y.M. strongly believed it was unjust and immoral to fight against other ᶜAfar, even those who collaborated with the colonial rulers (Colonia ↗Eritrea). It was possibly at this point that the seed of ᶜAfar nationalism was planted in his mind. Later, Y.M. was arrested by the Italians and imprisoned in ↗ᶜAsäb.

Following Italian colonial rule i.e. when Eritrea became a British protectorate in 1941 (↗British Military Administration), Eritreans engaged in political activities for the first time and started taking part in the fate of their country. Y.M. and his peers took the opportunity to involve themselves in Eritrean politics. Y.M. represented the ᶜAfar in Dancália/↗Dänkäl and went to New York to attend the ↗United Nations conference in March 1949 where the Eritrean case was discussed. Y.M. believed that, as nearly 90 % of ᶜAfar resided in Ethiopia, an arrangement had to be made in order to tie the ᶜAfar in Eritrea to Ethiopia. Hence, he fought for the federation of Eritrea with Ethiopia (↗Ethiopian Eritrean Federation).

In 1952 aṣe Ḫaylä Śəllase I awarded Y.M. with the title of qäññazmač in ↗Massawa for his role in the political history of the ᶜAfar and for his struggle to keep the ↗Dankáli ᶜAfar as part of the ᶜAfar nation in Ethiopia. Furthermore, he was given the post of Governor of Tīᶜó (ᶜAfar sp.: Tiiqo) as well as manager of Tīᶜó port, the third largest port after ᶜAsäb and Massawa. Y.M. considered reuniting the ᶜAfar of Eritrea and Ethiopia as an initial step in the long process of unifying the ᶜAfar in one administrative region; in Ethiopia the ᶜAfar were divided among four administrative provinces, namely Təgray, Wällo, Šäwa and Harär.

As early as 1954 Y.M. wrote several petitions to convince the Ethiopian government that a united ↗ᶜAfar country would mean a preservation of the territorial integrity of Ethiopia. In 1962 he organized a conference of ᶜAfar chiefs and notables in Tīᶜó to discuss the idea of unity and sent the conference's proposal both to Asmära and Addis Abäba. The Ethiopian government did not offer the desired response and, thus, in 1967 Y.M. went to Addis Abäba together with religious leaders, elders and other representatives of the Dankáli ᶜAfar to plead with the Emperor. The delegation was given a cordial reception, and Y.M. was given Yasin Maḥammoda; photo ca. 1963, courtesy of the family the title of fitawrari, but nothing tangible came out of the mission. Although the government recognized the advantage of a unification of the coastal ^{c}Afar with Ethiopia, they could not tolerate an ethnically homogenous ^{c}Afar administrative unit of such a size in this strategic area.

In 1956, when the Christian Red Sea Mission opened a school and a clinic in Tī^{c}ó, Y.M., who saw education as a key to success, managed to convince his people, who feared the missionary influence, to accept these new institutions. Y.M. also encouraged the government and local ^{c}Afar merchants to jointly fund a boarding school for the ^{c}Afar which was established in ^{c}Asäb in the 1960s.

Moreover, Y.M developed the idea of exploring the mineral deposits in the Dallol area (↗^{c}Afar Depression, ↗Salt). In 1951/52 he went there together with the Italian engineer Tullio Pastori and asked ras ↗Śəyyum Mängäša, then Governor General of Təgray, for mining permission. Though his initiative was rejected, his idea drew the attention of the royal family and thereupon, the U.S. American Parsons Company signed a mining contract in Dallol, probably for potash, agreeing to pay millions of bərr per year. This money, however, never flowed through formal budgetary channels but was shared between the Emperor, ↗Tänaññä Wärq, her husband ras ↗Andargaččäw Mäsay and ras Śəyyum (after his death his son, ras Mängäša) until 1965.

Y.M. expressed his engagement with ^{c}Afar unity in poems and nationalistic songs. Among them, Yinay Yibaaxo Yaqassinay, played in the 1960s by the famous ^{c}Afar musician Aḥmed al-Ǧawharī, is still considered as a symbol of ^{c}Afar identity. In his poem Yi Fiqma, he promoted education; in another poem, Ameri Ginni, he condemned what is considered as ^{c}Afar's harmful traditions. In another poem, Gocoyu, he described the awful end result of alcoholism.

Y.M. collected ^{c}Afar ↗customary law (mad^{c}a; ^{c}Afar sp.: madqa) and oral historical traditions from ^{c}Afar elders. Today, the fruits of his research have been translated from the original Arabic into English and Amharic and are documented in the ↗Institute of Ethiopian Studies.

In his last years, Y.M. suffered from throat cancer. He received treatment in Asmära and later in London. He died in Eritrea.

The Y. or Ethiopian Patriotic Association (የጥንታዊት ፡ ኢትዮጵያ ፡ ጀግኖች ፡ አርበኞች ፡ ማኅበር, lit. the 'Association of Heroes and Patriots of Ancient Ethiopia') – not to be confused with ↗Mäk^{w}ännən Habtäwäld's earlier established Hagär Fəqər patriotic organization (↗Hagär Fəqər Tiyatər) – is a patriotic veterans' association, founded after Ethiopia's Liberation in 1941 (↗War of Liberation) to represent freedom-fighters who had resisted the five-year Italian Fascist occupation (↗Italian war 1935–36). It had its roots in the coordinated patriot ↗resistance organized in 1937 by ras ↗Abbäbä Arägay in the Tägulät area of Šäwa.

The organization came into formal existence on 20 April 1961 when 70 founding members signed a Memorandum of Understanding, and received formal Ethiopian Government recognition on 25 July 1966. Ras ↗Mäsfən Səläši was elected its president. The Y., which was dedicated to the memory of the patriots, serves as a welfare organization for veterans and their families, as well as a forum for nationalist sentiment – figuring prominently on official occasions. The society is administered by a seven-man committee, elected every five years, with a president, vice-president and secretary-general; it owns property in Addis Abäba, opposite the Parliament building; and has a small museum and library (s. ↗Archives and libraries, EAE vol. 5; ↗Museums, EAE vol. 5).

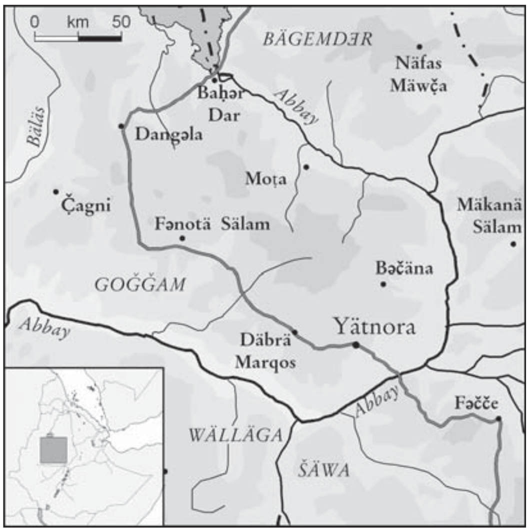
Yätnora

Y. (የትኖራ) formerly a village and now a qäbäle is located close to the gorge of the Blue Nile in East Goǧǧam, in Däǧän wäräda, about 12 km northwest of Däǧän, the wäräda capital, along the major highway that runs from Addis Abäba to Baḥər Dar. Y. is situated in a flat and fertile area in the ↗wäyna däga ecological zone, suitable for ↗ṭef cultivation. Y. is not be confused with Yätnora, a sub-district of ↗Ǝnsaro in ↗Sälale.

According to local oral tradition the village's name is associated with historical events from around 1600. During that time, a woman named Kolä Gännät, allegedly of ↗Agäw descent, had migrated and settled in Y. Being an ordinary woman, her livelihood was based mainly on farming. When the ↗Oromo invaded the area, she left the place and sought refuge in a deep cave close to the gorge of the Blue Nile, called Gurṭəna wašša, south of present-day Y. When the conflict was over, Kolä Gännät returned with a ↗tabot on her head, a sword in her right hand and a bell in her left. When she returned to the village, the first question raised by those surprised to see her was "Yätnora?" ('Where did she live?'). In Y. Kolä Gännät erected a church in the name of St. Mary which is still to be found there. As time passed, the descendants of Kolä Gännät became the owners of the land. Over the centuries the village remained the property of a few noblemen who used to receive various types of rental income and labour services up to the 1974 Ethiopian ↗Revolution. Prior to the Revolution, during the years 1965 to 1968, the peasants of Y. revolted against the reign of aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I to obtain a reduction in taxes.



Y. Agricultural Producers' Cooperative was a model agricultural producers' cooperative during the Därg regime (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council) and one of the 477 producers' cooperatives that existed in Goǧǧam (1977–91) but collapsed after the Därg regime fell apart and the People's Democratic Republic of Ethiopia was ousted in 1991. The elementary and junior high school and the clinic, built during the Därg period, still exist, rendering services to the peasants and the neighbouring community. There is a small weekly market at the edge of the village, close to the Addis Abäba–Däbrä Marqos road.

Yayyo Maḥámmad

Sulṭān Y.M. (ᶜAfar sp. Yaayyo Macammad, b. 1860s, Gargori, near Aysaᶜiyta [Aysaqiyta], d. 1927, Gargori, or 15 October 1926 [according to Ǧamāl – Ḥāšim 1997], r. 1912–27) was the son of sulṭān ↗Maḥámmad "Illálta" Ḥanfaḍé who ruled the Sulṭānate of ↗Áwsa for 40 consecutive years and had over 40 children from different wives. In the late 1890s he handed over authority to his nephew Maḥámmad Aydâḥis instead of his equally capable sons.

Y.M. and his brothers rebelled against their cousin Maḥámmad Aydâḥis. However, equipped with legitimacy by the ailing and yet very popular sulṭān Maḥámmad Ḥanfaḍé, Maḥámmad Aydâḥis won the allegiance of the main ↗ᶜAfar sub-groups and soon quashed the rebellion. Some of the contenders were killed; others were sent into exile or fled. Y.M. was exiled to ↗Ǧimma under the watchful eyes of ↗Abbaa Ǧifaar II by the order of aṣe ↗Mənilək II. The fratricidal wars lasted for nearly 20 years and the situation in the sultanate became chaotic. During these years, Y.M. himself, his half-brother ᶜAli-Miraḥ and his half-brother Ḥanfaḍé Maḥámmad, seized power in Áwsa but were unable to bring peace and stability.

When Y.M. reappeared in 1908, he virtually disempowered Ḥanfaḍé Maḥámmad with whom he had officially shared power for two years, until Y.M. was able to eliminate the supporters of his co-ruler. This period – the first time in history that two sulṭāns ruled Áwsa at the same time – is popularly referred to as namma misli dabaana (lit. 'the era of two chiefs'). Sulṭān Y.M. took firm control through the quasi-military force he had established among the young generation known as simbille. He also established a new type of administration. He appointed loyal agents and tightened security, constructed residential houses and offices and appointed ministers. His sojourn in Ǧimma seems to have inspired him to implement these reforms. He thus abolished traditional ways of arbitration and compromise in dealing with the diverse ᶜAfar subgroups. The idea of the sulṭān as a patron of his people was replaced by a more rigid and centralized administration with which he could pacify the sultanate for the rest of his rule.

In Y.M's relations with the French and Italian colonial powers in the ᶜAfar coastal areas, Y.M. pursued a policy of peaceful co-existence, being unable to dislodge them from the land they had occupied. His relations with the neighbouring highlanders were delicate and at times precarious, but he managed to maintain a semi-independent status. The Ethiopian government dispatched punitive expeditions, e.g., during the period when Y.M. sheltered ləǧ ↗Iyasu, whom he continued to recognize as the ruler, after the ↗Coup d'état of 1916 (s. EAE vol. 2, 1081). However, despite the scorched earth policy of these expeditionary forces and the fact that they sacked Y.M.'s capital Gargori, they did not get hold of ləǧ Iyasu. The highlanders installed the deposed ex-sulṭān Ḥanfaḍé, but his followers were again dispersed when Y.M. returned.

To avoid another war of succession, Y.M. eliminated all those who threatened him and his designated heir. Y.M. was succeeded by his son ↗Maḥámmad Yayyo.

Yäzareyitu Ityop̣ya

Y.I. (የዛሬዪቱ ፡ ኢትዮጵያ, 'Today's Ethiopia') was a weekly government newspaper launched on 3 Taḫśaś 1945 A.M. [12 December 1952 A.D.]. It was a bilingual publication, with both Amharic and French sections, the latter under the title L'Éthiopie d'aujourd'hui.

The mission of Y.I., as stated in its masthead, was to inform the public of the country's progress in agriculture, industry, and commerce. In addition, it carried international news and sports as well as always reporting on the activities of aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I.

Y.I. was particularly designed to attract the youth and the growing educated class in the country. The first editor of the Amharic section was ato Ahadu Sabure. Under his tenure, the newspaper was popular among readers because he reported on such sensitive events as the trial of Mängəśtu Nəway, leader of the 1960 abortive ↗Coup d'état (s. EAE vol. 2, 1081f.).

The French section was edited by Gingold Duprey. Its main readership was the small community of French-speaking Africans and Europeans in Addis Abäba, who were mainly diplomats and professionals working for international organizations. Outside Ethiopia it targeted the educated class in neighbouring Djibouti, then a French colony. Between 1955 and 1957, the French Unitarian theologian and scholar Roger Sauter (1919–2007), then a lecturer at Haile Selassie I University (↗Addis Ababa University), published a series of articles in the newspaper. Sauter also served as its acting editor when Duprey was away in France for several months.

In September 1961 the French section broke away from its Amharic counterpart to appear as a newspaper in its own right, still with four pages. The following year it became a magazine, without changing its name. However, L'Éthiopie d'aujourd'hui ceased publication in 1965, giving way to another French newspaper, Addis Soir. Addis Soir, a daily, was designed to serve the growing Francophone community in Addis Abäba, following the founding of the Organization of African Unity in 1963. Addis Soir was closed down in 1975 by the Därg (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council).

Meanwhile, in the 1960s, the Amharic section of Y.I. was upgraded from a four-page to an eight-page broadsheet. The newspaper continued to be popular, despite the occasional change of editors. Part of the reason for its popularity was the fact that readers were able to get all the major stories of the week in one paper. Regular educational columns such as "Professionals' Corner" and the sports column also contributed to this popularity.

During the Därg period, Y.I. was not much different from other government newspapers. Like the dailies ↗Addis Zämän and ↗Ethiopian Herald, it devoted most of its pages to reporting on the activities of Chairman (later President) Mängəśtu Ḫaylä Maryam and the gains of the Revolution; it mobilized the public for the "Call of the Motherland" and published government proclamations. It also had regular columns on women and youth.

The Y.I. continued to appear for five more years after the fall of the Därg. The government finally closed down the newspaper in February 1996, citing inability to meet the fast-increasing cost of printing.

Yəbaba

Y. (ይባባ; 11°21' 50 N, 37°27' 00 E) was a military camp (mädina, ↗kätämä) and assembly ground for Gondärine emperors from the mid-17th to the mid-18th cent. Located immediately north-east of ↗Däbrä Mäwiʾ and just west of the ↗Abbay in present-day South ↗Gondär region, Y. was a station on the line of march from Gondär to lands south of the Abbay. Together with nearby Qäbäro Meda, Y. was especially popular with aṣe ↗Yoḥannəs I and aṣe ↗Iyasu I, who used it as a dry-season residence and as the staging ground for military campaigns, such as those that Yoḥannəs I led against the ↗Agäw and Iyasu I against the trans-Abbay ↗Oromo. Indeed, Y. is first mentioned in the context of Yoḥannəs's campaign against the Agäw of Gam in 1670. Clerical synods also met there under Yoḥannəs, Iyasu, and ↗Täklä Haymanot I at which rival clerics debated the doctrines of ↗Qəbat and ↗Täwaḥədo.

A synod in 1671 at which Täwaḥədo was condemned led to four years of civil war centered in Lasta and Wag. Extremist Qəbat monks attempted to assassinate Yoḥannəs at Y. in 1674 over religious observances and the legitimacy of the royal marriage. In May 1681 Yoḥannəs and Iyasu, his son and heir, were reconciled at Y. following a Täwaḥədo-inspired rebellion in Gondär that saw Iyasu, partial to Täwaḥədo, flee across the Abbay out of fear of his father. Aṣe Iyasu summoned clerics and monks from major monasteries to Y. in May 1699 in another attempt to resolve the quarrel over doctrine. Reconciliation was seemingly achieved, but it was short-lived.

In September 1707, ↗Dərmən, uncle of Täklä Haymanot I and governor of Goǧǧam, killed ʿAmdä Ṣəyon, a Qəbat monk and pretender to the throne, and all of his clerical and Oromo allies, in a great slaughter at Y.-Qäbäro Meda. In 1711 aṣe Tewoflos defeated a rebellion of the Baso Oromo at Y. When the Baso sought refuge in the church of Däbrä Mäwiʾ, Tewoflos ordered it burned to the ground. During the reign of Iyasu II a few lords were associated with the region of Y.: azzaž Mammo, ligaba Ləʿulä Qal and däǧǧazmač Č̣olle (GuiIyas 47, 108, 176 (text) = 50, 118, 186 [tr.]).

Among buildings constructed at Y., the chronicles mention a castle (taᶜka) and the church of Ǝgziᵓənä Iyäsus. These structures and a large courtyard were surrounded by an oblong stone wall with arched gateways and round towers that measured 300 m by 190 m. In the late 18th cent. James Bruce claimed that Y. was the capital of "Maitsha" (i.e. ↗Mäčč̣a) and described "a house or small castle belonging to the king". He also reported that, by then, the town was one of the largest in Ethiopia and that its land was governed by the azzaž of Y., "whose employment is worth 600 ounces of gold" (BruNile IV, 24f.). From 1761–68 a cousin of ətəge Məntəwwab (↗Bərhan Mogäsa), däǧǧazmač Awsabyos, held this appointment.

Nothing remains of the castle and church today, but the wall, averaging one to two metres in height, still encircles the site. The church of Däbrä Mäwiᵓ a few kilometres to the west is closely associated with Y.–Qäbäro Meda. Aṣe Täklä Giyorgis (1779–84) also established a church in Y.

Yədnäqaččäw Täsämma

Y.T. (ይድነቃቸው ፡ ተሰማ; b. 11 September 1921, Ǧimma, d. 20 August 1987, Addis Abäba) was a prominent Ethiopian footballer, cyclist and athlete. The son of the German-educated Ethiopian intellectual ↗Täsämma Ǝšäte and his second wife Mulatwa Gäbräśəllase, he was born when his father was serving seven years of political exile in Ǧimma. He began his education in an Ethiopian Orthodox church school, where he remained until the age of six, after which he attended the Alliance Française, Mənilək II and Täfäri Mäkʷännən schools, and, after the Fascist occupation, the Italian Catholic Mission at Gullallee. Becoming a keen footballer at the Täfäri Mäkʷännən School at the age of eight, he was soon chosen as captain of the junior team, after which he joined Addis Abäba's Qəddus Giyorgis ('St. George') Team, for which he played for 23 years (from 1935 to 1958), and served for a time as its captain and coach. After retiring as a player, he coached the Ethiopian national football team and, in 1962, led them to their only championship in the African Cup of Nations.

After Ethiopia's Liberation Y.T., who was fluent in French, English and Italian besides Amharic, served as a translator in the Ministries of Education and Public Works, and later as translator and director of archives in the Ministry of Public Health. Always interested in ↗sports he resigned from Government service in 1947 to establish a private one-room sports office at Addis Abäba's ↗Ǧan Meda, sports-field while earning a living as a translator for the ↗Imperial Bodyguard. He subsequently played a major role in the establishment of the Ethiopian Sports Confederation. He became its secretary-general in 1960, with the rank of director-general in 1963, assistant-minister in 1968, and vice-minister in 1972, and was Commissioner of Sports from 1976 to 1981. He also served as leader of Ethiopian Olympic delegations, from the Rome meeting of 1960 to that at Moscow in 1980. Between 1966 and 1974, Y.T. served as member of the FIFA Executive Committee and, from 1971 to 1987, he was member of the International Olympic Committee.

Y.T. was actively involved in establishing the African Football Federation, in 1957, and served as its first Vice-President until 1972, when he became its President; he remained in this office until his death. Always a great protagonist of professionalism, as well as a vigorous opponent of both corruption and apartheid, he devoted the last years of his life to the founding of two other organizations: the Union of African Sports Federations, and the Association of African National Olympic Committees. The former honoured him by making him its President, and the latter its Honorary President.

Yəfat

Y. (ይፋት) is an historical area in former north-eastern ↗Šäwa, including the traditional ↗Amhara territories of ↗Mafud, Rasa, ↗Armanya, ↗Gədəm, Efrata, Qäwät, ↗Anṣokiya and Gämza, the ↗Argobba territories of Korugussa, Rasa, and the ↗Oromo territories of Fursi, Harṭumma and Ṭəmmugga. It is bordered by ↗Mänz and ↗Tägulät in the west, Ankobär in the south, the ᶜAfar lands in the east and by ↗Qallu in the north.

The name Y. derives from the historical region and sultanate of ↗Ifat. The area was integrated into Šäwa by nəguś ↗Śahlä Śəllase and became, with a smaller territory, an awraǧǧa under aṣe Mənilək II.

After World War II a large Mänz–Yəfat awraǧǧa (capital ↗Däbrä Sina) was formed which existed until ca. 1967. Then, between ca. 1967 and 1989 the area formed part of the Yəfat–Ṭəmmugga awraǧǧa (capital: Aṭaye [Efeson]) which included the wärädas of Mafud, Qäwät, Efrata, Gämza, Fursi and Ǧilee. In the late Därg period (1989-91) the wärädas were abolished and "Y." became the name of a small awraǧǧa (capital: Šäwa Robit), including only the territories Mafud and Qäwät, of the North Šäwa zone. In 1991 Mafud and Qäwät reappeared as wärädas. Y., since then, is no longer used as an administrative name. In 1994 the former wärädas were merged into larger wärädas (rather similar in size to the 1989–91 awraǧǧas, but different in make-up). The new wärädas are ↗Ṭarma Bärr (initially Mafud, Mäzäzo and Moǧǧa–Wädära, later only the first two), Qäwät, Ǝfrata–Gədəm, Anṣokiya–Gämza, together with the western and southern wärädas were included in North Šäwa zone. The Oromo areas now belong to the Oromiyaa Zone of Amhara Region.

Contemporary Y. is located along the upper stretches of several big rivers, such as (from north to south) Ǧarra, Robi, Ǧä Wəha and Awadi, which flow eastwards into the ↗Awaš river basin. Along the lower courses of these rivers and the rolling plains in between, seasonal rain and occasional flooding bring down deposits of rich soil from the uplands. This supports cereal cultivation and some livestock breeding. The area mainly belongs to the ↗wäyna däga ↗ecological zone. Ṭarma Bärr and Däbrä Sina are däga areas while Robit and Rasa are situated at the lowest elevation (qʷälla).

Today, the most important commercial centres of Y. are Däbrä Sina, Mafud, Robit, Aṭaye (Efeson), Mağäte, Sänbäte and Qarraqore. Products of Y. are crops such as ↗ṭef, barley, sorghum, maize, legumes, sunflower, sugar cane, fruits and vegetables, spices and condiments, ↗čat, coffee, cotton and tobacco and aromatic shrubs and ↗wood (s. EAE vol. 5). While sheep are common in the upper areas, the midlands are dominated by goats, and cattle are numerous in the lowland plains.

Y. is composed of Amhara, Argobba and religiously mixed Oromo. Under the influence of Mänz Amhara Christians in the west and Muslim ᶜAfar in the east, and under shifting political, economic and social conditions, the population of Y. has undergone rapid social and cultural changes. Interethnic incursions, natural disasters, and food shortages have over the years in Y. contributed to migrations, a temporary reduction of population in the early 1990s and caused human displacements.

While most Y. Amhara are Ethiopian Orthodox Christians, the Argobba almost all are Muslim. Among the Oromo the religious distribution is mixed. Beliefs concerning zar ↗possession cults, ↗spirits and the evil eye (↗buda) cross cut religious boundaries. ↗Pilgrimages to saintly sites are widespread practices among the peoples of Y.

Yəggäzu Bähabte

Näggadras Y.B. (ይገዙ ፡ በሀብቴ; b. 1879/80, Ankobär, d. 17 June 1943, Addis Abäba) was a diplomat and a prominent politician in the government of aṣe ↗Mənilək II and in the early reign of ras Täfäri (later aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I).

Y.B. was the son of näggadras Bähabte and belonged to a powerful Šäwan family from ↗Harär. He acted as näggadras of Harär and was later also appointed azzaž of ↗Wähni Amba and ↗Ankobär.

In 1907 Y.B. was one of the envoys who participated in the delegation headed by ↗Mäšäša Wärqe. The main object of the mission, which visited Germany and Austria, was to purchase ↗firearms. The mission also visited Rome and Istanbul on its way back to Ethiopia.

Between 1910 and 1911 Y.B. served as Minister for Foreign Affairs. He replaced näggädras ↗Ḫaylä Giyorgis in this office, and he, in turn, was replaced by fitawrari ↗Habtä Giyorgis. From 1918 he served as Minister of Commerce with the title bäǧərond and as käntiba of Addis Abäba (MockWar 397).

Y.B. was an opponent of ləǧ ↗Iyasu. After ras ↗Täsämma Nadäw's death, Y.B. supported ras ↗Abatä Bʷayaläw in May 1911 against the heir to the throne, which probably led to his imprisonment, though the official accusation was on the grounds of financial fraud. He was also accused of the attempt to cede parts of the Bako province to Great Britain (Garretson 1979: 429; ↗United Kingdom). Y.B. played an active role during the conspiracy in 1916 which, eventually, let to the successful ↗Coup d'état against Iyasu (s. EAE vol. 2, 1081; MolLit 53).

In May 1936 Y.B., who was assigned to be in charge of the government during the ↗Italian war 1935–36 in the absence of the Emperor (MolLit 112), opposed Ḫaylä Śəllase's leaving Ethiopia, but eventually joined him on the train to Djibouti and spent the Italian occupation in Jerusalem, and died soon after returning to Ethiopia.

Y.B. is buried in the Gännätä Ṣəge Giyorgis church in Addis Abäba. He was married to one of ləǧ Iyasus's ex-wives, Säblä Wängel (MockWar 18), and was the grandfather of ↗Täʾammərat Yəggäzu.

Yəḥa

Y. (ይሐ) is a settlement in northern Ethiopia, in the Central Zone of the Təgray region, ca. 17 km to the north-east of ↗ᶜAdwa (and ca. 40 km from ↗Aksum). Its primary importance as an archaeological site whose findings, including constructions, stone ↗inscriptions, arms, ↗pottery and various other objects, date back to the early first millennium B.C. (↗Pre-Aksumite culture).

Archaeology

On a rocky hill on the edge of the present-day village, there are ruins of a building that was 11 m high, 18 m long and 15 m wide. The site was first described by Henry ↗Salt in the early 19th cent. and has continuously attracted the attention of archaeologists and historians of Ethiopia.

The building is believed to have been a temple dedicated to an important South Arabian deity. It is constructed in a way comparable to that of many monuments of South ↗Arabia. The limestone masonry shows a high level of skill. The façades, elevated on a stepped basement, reveal carefully carved and fitted stone blocks, both on the inside and on the outside. Some blocks are up to 3 m long and ca. 20 cm high. No mortar was used in the construction, and, with the exception of the frames, no wood. The building is thus held together by an ashlar masonry structure – and that since three millennia, a unique case in East Africa. The upper parts have been disturbed in some places, but on the whole, the general condition is stable, and the analysis of the photographs taken by the ↗Deutsche Aksum-Expedition (DAE) shows that nothing has changed over the past century. New archaeological evidence of the site of the great temple was brought to light by the 1998 mission headed by Alessandro de Maigret and Christian Robin, which discovered an access structure to the building and its original pavements.

In 1960, on the rocky slope to the south-west of the temple, several tombs carved in rock were discovered (↗Graves). In the funeral vaults, remnants of bones and of domestic items were excavated: bronze pots, pottery, remains of ↗swords, ↗knives and iron tools including bronze axes and sickles, balances and weights as well as ↗jewelry beads. A number of bronze objects in animal form (lion, bull, ibex) measuring about a dozen centimetres, are composed of characters in South Arabian writing. At the back, a grip make them resembling great seals; they were probably identity marks.

In 1971, excavations were carried out by the Ethiopian Institute of Archaeology at a place called Grat Bäᶜal Gəbri. Located ca. 200 m northwest of the old temple, was a mound of rubble with four massive pillars on the south side which had been described by the DAE in 1906. Important remnants of a building destroyed by fire were observed. In the central part of the ruins, the thick walls were constructed of rubble bonded with earth; the ruins are 3 m high. A wooden frame was incorporated into the masonry, and an earthy coating had been applied to some parts of the walls, stained in places with white and red.

An examination of the remains (only a quarter of the area of the site has been excavated) showed that two structures were built consecutively on the same spot. Large carefully hewn pillars (they were originally eight in number, aligned in two parallel rows, six to the south and two to the north) were symmetrically arranged on their massive bases. This and a basement, several metres deep, suggest that the portico had been constructed for a more prominent building than the average structure installed there later. At this stage it is difficult to determine the eventual function of these buildings. Their elevation, the size of the basements, the thickness of the walls, the number of rooms, all indicate that the buildings had a sacral and not a private residential character.

Since 2009, archaeologists of the Deutsches Archäologisches Institut have been conducting excavations at Y. (cp. Phillipson 2010).

History

The testimonies of Y.'s ancient past – architectural remains, inscriptions, sculptures, ↗incense burners, ibex and bull heads carvings – all indicate its important political, economic and religious position around the 8th cent. B.C. It is possible that it was part – if not the capital – of the kingdom of ↗D^{c}MT known from several inscriptions dating to ca. 8th–7th cent. B.C. The kingdom had close links with South Arabia but was independent, as inscriptions attest. Some of the items, such as an alabaster vase, could indicate ties with ancient ↗Nubia.

In later periods, the site lost its prominence. However, archaeological vestiges of the ↗Aksumite period (1st–7th cent. A.D.) have been observed, including pottery and ↗coins among which one of King ↗Armaḥ excavated by Rodolfo Fattovich. The baptistery still housed in a corner inside the large temple dates to the same period and is comparable to those of Ǝnda Čerqos, ↗Adulis, ↗Mätära and ↗Dəgum.

The tradition credits abba ↗Afṣe, one of the so-called ↗Nine Saints, with the evangelization of the area in the 5th cent. A.D. A church dedicated to St. Mary, constructed next to the great temple, attracts hundreds of pilgrims in June each year (29 Gənbot) for the commemoration of abba Afṣe. The entire precinct of the church and the temple is known as Ǝnda Abba Afṣe.

Yəkunno Amlak

Aṣe Y.A. (ይኩኖ ፡ አምላክ, r. 1270–85), a pivotal figure of Ethiopian history, is considered to have (re-)established the rule of the ↗Solomonic dynasty, having overthrown the last ↗Zag^{w}e king in 1270.

Few contemporary sources of Y.A.'s reign are available. They differ from later traditions offering another image of the ruler. Perhaps the most important piece of information on Y.A. is provided by the church paintings in ↗Gännätä Maryam and ↗Ǝmäkina Mädḫane ᶜAläm in Lasta and ↗Waša Mikaᵓel in Angot. Gännätä Maryam appears to have been founded by Y.A. himself, possibly as a sign of his power in the former domain of the Zagʷe. The inscriptions on murals explicitly mention Y.A. as the patron of the church, which was initially dedicated to abba Mätaᶜ (↗Libanos). He himself is depicted and associated to Mäḥari Amlak, an ecclesiastic attested in another inscription found in Waša Mikaᵓel as the ṣäware narge of the kingdom (Mercier 2002: 144f.) – an office which plays a role in the ceremony of the coronation of the kings (DillmZarY 18; Derat 2010: 30 n. 60) – and Nəḥyo Bäkrəstos, another ecclesiastic unattested elsewhere (s. DicEthBio pl. 10; Heldman – Getatchew Haile 1992: 230ff.). According to the inscriptions on the murals of Waša Mikaᵓel, the church was founded by Mäḥari Amlak himself during the reign of Y.A. (Mercier 2002: 143f.). Two other historical figures are depicted in Waša Mikaᵓel, a certain śəyyum Nəwayä Krəstos and Ḫer Amlak, scribe (ṣäḥafi). Moreover in Gännätä Maryam, two additional historical figures are depicted: a royal son named Kʷəleṣewon, associated to his mother, Təḫrəyännä Maryam. Təḫrəyännä Maryam appears also on the murals of the church of Ǝmäkina Mädḫane ᶜAläm, located on the upper part of the mountain above Gännätä Maryam at about two hours walk (Balicka-Witakowska 2004: 28f.). Surprisingly, Y.A. is not represented in this church.

The nature of the relation between Y.A. and these two figures is not clear. It cannot be assassed whether Kʷəleṣewon was the son of Y.A. and Təḫrəyännä Maryam was the latter's wife. The only known son of Y.A. is ↗Yagba Ṣəyon, his successor (Taddesse Tamrat 1970: 91).

Another Lasta church traditionally associated with Y.A. is ↗Žämmädu Maryam (cp. BeckHuntAlvar 200ff.). However, the foundation of this church seems to have occurred later, according to the Acts of Bärtälomewos, who is considered the founder of the church and presented as a contemporary of aṣe ↗ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon I (Derat 2009: 74).

Another type of contemporary sources on Y.A. is found in land donations of two different manuscripts: the Gospel book of ↗Däbrä Libanos of Ham (CRDLib nos. 10, 11), and the Gospel book of Iyäsus Moᵓa (EMML no. 1832, fol. 24–25; Taddesse Tamrat 1970: 91). After 1270, Y.A. consolidated power over extensive areas, reaching far into the north, as is demonstrated by his land grant to Däbrä Libanos of Ham (CRDLib no. 10) that follows a grant by the (otherwise unknown) King Dəlanda (of the Zagʷe line [?]). In the next document (ibid., no. 11), Y.A.'s name is presented as Yəkʷənat (an hypochoristic variant of Y.A.). He also extended his control over the ↗Amhara region, making grants to the church of ↗Däbrä Ḥayq Ǝsṭifanos, led by ᶜaqqabe säᶜat Zäᵓiyäsus at that time.

The last kind of sources on Y.A. consists of the correspondence between the Ethiopian king and the Egyptian sulṭān. Here, Y.A. is presented as the ḥaṭe (s. ↗aṣe), king of ↗Ḥabäša, but also of Amhara (Cuoq 1981: 108) in 1274. According to a letter sent by Yagba Ṣəyon, the metropolitan at the time of Y.A. was probably appointed by the Syrian patriarch of Antioch, and not by the patriarch of Alexandria (MHAlex 199–203). This appointment caused unrest in the kingdom which Yagba Ṣəyon tried then to calm down by requesting a new metropolitan from Egypt (Cuoq 1981: 110).

Y.A. is known as the king of Amhara by the sulṭān's secretary in Egypt, meaning he was probably in this position before he could gather under his authority the rest of the kingdom, from ↗Ǝndärta to Amhara, including the Lasta region. He founded at least one church in Lasta, where his predecessors, the Zagʷe, had already built many churches; and it is in Gännätä Maryam that he is depicted among his partisans, ecclesiastics and royal family members. This church was linked with two others in the region, built at the same time, by his partisans. Y.A. had a particularly strong relationship with the church of Ḥayq Ǝsṭifanos to which he made donations and with which he made a pact concerning the celebration of the ↗täzkar of any newcomer to the church (EMML no. 1832, fol. 269r; Kropp 1998: 309–18).

Judging from the contemporary sources, it remains unknown how Y.A. defeated the Zagʷe, from where he took his power, and what his family background was. Later sources on Y.A., relatively numerous, biased and of compilative nature, construct an image of Y.A. as the restorer of the Solomonic dynasty.

The "short chronicles", compiled after the 16th cent., recount that ↗Dəlnaᶜod was the last king of the "old Solomonic line", from whom power was transferred to the "usurpers", i.e. the Zagʷe. However, the Solomonic line had persisted; its descendants kept living in "hiding" until Y.A., a son of Wədəm Asgäd, appeared on the scene (BegCron 4ff.; DombrChr 151ff. [tr.]; cp. BassÉt 98 [tr.]; Belaynesh Mikael in DicEthBio 160).

A few sources report extensively on Y.A.'s youth; the best known of them is the Vita of abunä ↗Iyäsus Moᵓa, also compiled from different texts not before the beginning of the 17th cent. It makes him a son of Täsfa Iyäsus, a descendant of Dəlnaᶜod, and a maid in the house of azzaž Kela of Mäkʷanäñña in Sägärat (a locality in today's South Wällo), where Y.A. was born (s. KurMoa; cp. Conti Rossini 1922: 294). Another hagiography, the Vita of abunä ↗Qäwəstos (the writing is later than the 15th cent.), elaborates on the story, making Qäwəstos a relative of Y.A. There are a few other traditions, placing the origin of Y.A. in different localities of the historical Amhara or northern ↗Šäwa (cp. Belaynesh Mikael in DicEthBio 181). In any case, the Amhara elite background of Y.A., which provided him strong support in the struggle for power, seems historically significant and quite probable.

An Amharic tradition in the (recent) ms. BN Mondon-Vidailhet 30, translated by Conti Rossini (1922: 299–311) tells that Y.A. was imprisoned by Elmaknun – the Zagʷe king whose royal name was ↗Yətbaräk – but was able to escape and around 1270 organized a successful revolt against the ruling king.

Hagiographic traditions recount that Y.A. concluded "pacts" (cp. ↗kidan) with religious leaders from important monasteries, Iyäsus Moᵓa (of Däbrä Ḥayq Ǝsṭifanos) and ↗Täklä Haymanot (of Däbrä Libanos), which secured the success of his struggle (the essence of the account provides the ground for the very brief passage about Y.A. in the "short chronicles", s. DombrChr 151f. [tr.]; BassÉt 10 [text]; BegCron 5). It has been proved that, historically, Täklä Haymanot could have hardly participated in the struggle for power (as is recounted in the late 17th-cent. treatise ↗Bəᶜəlä nägäśt), since he must have been still very young at that time (Conti Rossini 1922). Moreover, the episode of his "pact" with Y.A. is missing in the early hagiographic works devoted to Täklä Haymanot (cp. DerDom 100; Nosnitsin 2007). The Vita of Iyäsus Moᵓa (KurMoa) appears to be a recent hagiographic compilation, but the tradition of the alliance between Y.A. and Iyäsus Moᵓa was recorded in different documents preserved in the Gospel of Iyäsus Moᵓa (EMML no. 1832; Kropp 1998).

Besides, Y.A. received military support, probably from the southern part of historical Šäwa: the mention of "seven lineages" (gʷədam) from seven regions in a historiographic note published by Conti Rossini (1922: 295ff.) has been interpreted in this way. The "seven lineages" come from the well-known names of historical regions in Šäwa: ↗Wägda, Dənbi, ↗Mugär, ↗Wag, Wäräb, Ṣəlalis, and Mʷal/Marhabete (Kropp 1983–84: 59; KrAmdS 27, n. 140 [tr.]). However, this document includes military support given to Y.A. in an alliance between Y.A. and Täklä Haymanot. It is thus a late tradition that Conti Rossini (1902: 376; 1922: 296f.) dated to the time after the reign of aṣe ↗Śärṣ́ä Dəngəl.

For the rest, not much actual information is available concerning the structure, real extension or administration of Y.A.'s kingdom. The above mentioned documents prove his presence and authority as far as today's Eritrea; large areas in the historical Amhara and Šäwa must have also been under his control. As his successors, he had to deal with rebellions, like that of the chief of ↗Saḥart, who, according to the 14th-cent. Egyptian chronicler al-Mufaḍḍal, captured the royal embassy to Egypt (cp. Cerulli 1943: 264f.). The assumption that his power extended over the Muslim principalities and the realm of ↗Motälämi is less secure, supported on later Ethiopian hagiographic sources and the situation known from the reign of aṣe ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon I. Rather, Y.A. could stay at the beginning of the conquest of the "Muslim Šäwa" (cp. Cerulli 1941: 222f., 241).

The existence of a Vita of Y.A. (Gädlä Yəkunno Amlak) in Lasta has been reported (Lepage 1976: 328). This text reflects an attempt by the church of Gännätä Maryam to gain recognition of Y.A. as a saint, as well as its neighbours, the Zagʷe rulers. This attempt may be a recent one as the scribe is a contemporary of aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I (Gädlä Yəkunno Amlak, fol. 83rb) and the document is in fact a compilation of many hagiographical texts, in particular the Acts of Täklä Haymanot and the Acts of Iyäsus Moᵓa.

Yəlma Däressa

Ləǧ Y.D. (ይልማ ፡ ደሬሳ, b. 1907 Chuutaa wäräda, Gimbii awraǧǧa; d. 1979, Addis Abäba) was an Ethiopian statesman, diplomat and politician during the reign of aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I. He was also a historian of high repute and one of the intellectual architects of modern Ethiopia.

Y.D. was the son of blatta Däressa Amante and the grandson of mootii ↗Bakaree Goodanaa (s. EAE vol. 5). He received his primary education at the Mənilək II Secondary School in Addis Abäba in the 1910s. In the early 1920s he was sent by his father to pursue his secondary education in Egypt, at Victoria College, Alexandria. After meeting Crown Prince Täfäri (later aṣe Ḫaylä Śəllase I) in Egypt in 1924, Y.D. went to Britain to enrol at Birkbeck College in London. He received his Bachelor of Science degree in Economics from the London School of Economics (1928–32). During his diplomatic years in Washington he followed the graduate studies curriculum in history at Georgetown University, U.S.A.

Y.D. returned to Ethiopia in 1934 and was appointed by the Emperor as the head of the ↗League of Nations desk in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. During the Italian occupation, Y.D. was among the leaders of the ↗resistance, becoming the first president of the ↗Ṭəqur anbäsa movement. He surrendered to the Italians with ras ↗Ǝmməru Ḫaylä Śəllase on 19 December 1936, and was imprisoned first on the island of Ponza and later at Lipari near Sicily. He was released in 1939 through the sustained efforts of his father, a refugee turned businessman in the Sudan, who supported the patriotic movement with money from abroad.

After 1941 Y.D. became a close associate of Ḫaylä Śəllase I. He was the official interpreter at Great Bitter Lake, Suez, when the Emperor met with President Roosevelt in 1945. Y.D. held various political offices in post-liberation Ethiopia, including Secretary General in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Director General and Vice Minister of Finance and, finally, Minister of Commerce (1944–53). After serving, from 1953 to 1958, as Ethiopian Ambassador to the U.S., Y.D. returned to the cabinet, serving as Minister of Foreign Affairs (1958–60); Minister of Finance (1960–69); and Minister of Commerce, Industry and Tourism (1969–71). He also served on many boards, including chairing the Board of Governors of Ḫaylä Śəllase I University (↗Addis Ababa University, 1962–69), serving as President of the Board of Directors of the Ethiopian Airlines and the State Bank of Ethiopia. He was Vice-President of the Ḫaylä Śəllase I Foundation and a member of the ↗Crown Council (1971–74). Y.D. was a member of a group that was drafting a new constitution on the eve of the 1974 ↗Revolution.

Domestically, Y.D. accomplished, among other things, the revision of the ↗gäbbar system and the introduction of tax payment by money (↗Tributes and taxation). He got the government to operate on a budget, established the National Bank of Ethiopia (↗Banks), and re-introduced the Ethiopian currency, the bərr, after it had been abolished by the Italians; he had the bərr minted in Philadelphia. He also introduced a tripartite land tax system whereby many feudal lords who held large tracts of undeveloped land had to give up ownership, as they were not able to pay the taxes.

Y.D. was a principal representative in the negotiations to return the ↗Ogaden to Ethiopia; he also spearheaded Ethiopia's entry into the newly formed International Atomic Energy Agency.

Thanks to Y.D.'s diplomatic finesse, he was twice appointed Vice President of the ↗United Nations General Assembly. Between 1962 and 1969 he was elected as chairman of the Board of Governors of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank). In 1963, he served as the chair of the 2nd Independent African countries' conference held in Addis Abäba and contributed to the creation of the ↗Organization of African Unity and the latter's choice of Addis Abäba as its permanent headquarters.

Despite the fact that he has sometimes been considered to be an integral part of the conservative establishment of the feudal order, Y.D. was in fact radical for his time. He was a member of the pre-war Ethiopian intelligentsia who helped organize the progressive association La jeunesse d'Éthiopie.

Y.D.'s most influential historical contributions were the study of the ↗Byzantine empire (1965) and of 16th-cent. Ethiopia (1967), the latter being an important milestone of Amharic ↗historiography. Some assume that the attention Y.D. lent in his monograph to the ↗Oromo invasion of highland Ethiopia in the 16th cent. was a major reason for the anti-Oromo elements in the government to pressure the Emperor to retire Y.D.

Y.D. was imprisoned by the Därg in June 1974. He died of cancer in a hospital in 1979 in Addis Abäba.

Däǧǧazmač Y.M. (ይልማ ፡ መኰንን, "horse name" Abba Ṭena, b. Šäwa [?], 1872/73 [1877 according to HSLife 18], d. 10 October 1907, Harär), was a son of ras ↗Mäkʷännən Wäldä Mikaʾel, thus a great-grand son of nəguś ↗Śahlä Śəllase. Y.M. was also a half-brother of ras Täfäri (later aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I). Y.M.'s mother was an otherwise unknown common-law-wife of ras Mäkʷännən.

Y.M. was recognized by his father as his legitimate son only after saving his life at the Battle of ↗ʿAdwa (Marcus 1975: 227).

After the death of his father in 1906 and by the order of aṣe ↗Mənilək II on 9 May, Y.M was given the governorship of ↗Harär. This move was arranged by ətege ↗Ṭaytu whose niece, wäyzäro ↗Assälläfäčč Wände, Y.M. had married in 1901 (after her divorce from däǧǧazmač Däməssäw Näsibu). Assälläfäčč remained his wife until the end of his life. Y.M. died of pneumonia.

Y.M.'s son, däǧǧazmač ↗Mängäša Yəlma, took the position of Director of the War Ministry. Y.M.'s daughter, Yäšašäwärq Yəlma, married first ras ↗Gugsa Arʾaya, then ↗Mäkʷännən Däməssäw and then, in 1936, ↗Mäkʷännən Ǝndalkaččäw.

Yəlmana Dänsa

Y.D. (ይልማና ፡ ደንሳ, Orom.: Ilmaana Dansaa) is an area near Lake ↗Ṭana probably named after one of the ↗Oromo army regiments of abetohun ↗Susənyos that settled in ↗Goǧǧam and ↗Dämbəya at the beginning of the 17th cent. (BTafA 421; BassÉt 173, 198).

Most likely the Y.D. were an army contingent recruited from the Oromo of ↗Goǧǧam and given the name ilmaana dansa,a 'good sons' or 'good children' similar to, e.g., the qeerroo regiments of the medieval period. Immediately to the south of Lake Ṭana, the locality where they settled still bears the same name (though in its Amharic corruption, Yəlma [ən]na Dänsa, 'Yəlma and Dänsa'). James Bruce states that "Elmana and Densa" were "two districts" near Lake Ṭana inhabited by Oromo clans (BruNile II, 530, 624; PankBord 319). Today, however, Y.D. as a name of an Oromo clan does not exist.

The locality of Y.D. is interchangeably also called ↗Mäč̣č̣a (Maccaa), though the latter was applied to a bigger territory inhabited by an Oromo group of the same name (BruNile III, 564). Many Mäč̣č̣a Oromo were settled near Lake Ṭana by aṣe Susənyos to help him consolidate his power against other Oromo groups. Since then, several rulers continued to sanction the settlement of many Oromo. During the reigns of aṣe ↗Iyasu I, aṣe ↗Täklä Haymanot and aṣe ↗Bäkaffa, Y.D. was mentioned as an army regiment (BassÉt 173, 198; BTafA 421, 938). By 1768 the number of Oromo settlers in the Mäč̣č̣a district alone numbered about 15,000. Together with the other Oromo in Goǧǧam and Dämbəya, they continued to play an active role in the ↗Gondärine kingdom throughout the 17th and 18th cent. Däǧǧazmač Libo, chief of ↗Wällo and a brother of Wəbit, the wife of aṣe Iyasu II, once governed ↗Amhara province and commanded the Y.D. and Mäč̣č̣a before the Emperor's death in 1768 (BTafA 938).

Like the Oromo south of the Abbay River, those of Mäč̣č̣a practiced a ↗gadaa system. The ↗abbaa bokkuu had more power over them than the emperors at Gondär. The most important centre of Mäč̣č̣a and Y.D. was ↗Yəbaba where several Gondärine rulers (such as Iyasu I, Täklä Haymanot and ↗Yosṭos) built castles and used it as temporary capital (PankIntro 147; BruNile IV, 24f.). Today, the Oromo of Y.D. are completely assimilated to the Amharic speaking society though they recognize their Oromo ancestry. In addition to Y.D. and Mäč̣č̣a, there are several Oromo place names near Lake Ṭana including Guutaa, Adama, Ambo, and the Burqaa River.

Yəmam Gugsa

Ras Y.G. (ይማም ፡ ጉግሳ; r. 1825–28, d. 18 January 1828), a scion of the Wärräšek rulers (↗Yäǧǧu), was the son, and immediate successor, of ras ↗Gugsa Märsa and brother to Wäle, ↗Dori and ↗Marəyye. He was succeeded by the latter two brothers.

On the death of his father, Y.G. assumed the title of ↗ras and was elected to the leadership of the Wärräšek (CRNuov 367f.). He inherited the Wärräšek concern to maintain the vassalage of the neighbouring provinces of ↗Goǧǧam, ↗Wägära and ↗Səmen. In doing so he faced the intricacies of dynastic and marital politics. Däǧǧazmač Wäldä Rufaᵓel, husband of Y.G.'s full sister, Aster, pressed Y.G. for appointment to the governorship of ↗Damot. However, Y.G. was constrained by the fact that the sister of his brother, Dori, was married to däǧǧazmač ↗Maru, ruler of Dämbəya and neighbouring territories. Wäldä Rufaᵓel intrigued to set Marəyye against Y.G., but Y.G. quickly squashed this incipient rebellion.

Y.G.'s first expedition was to Goǧǧam. During his absence from ↗Däbrä Tabor, däǧǧazmač ↗Ḫaylä Maryam, ruler of Wägära and Səmen, entered Gondär and proclaimed ↗Bäᵓədä Maryam as successor to the Solomonic throne, displacing the Wärräšek appointee, ↗Gigar. Y.G. then returned to confront Ḫaylä Maryam, who, at the beginning of 1826, fled to Wägära where he died. Y.G. appointed Maru, ruler of Dämbəya, to rule Wägära, but this appointment was soon challenged by Ḫaylä Maryam's son, ↗Wəbe (CRNuov 370). Y.G. used Wəbe to curb the ambition of Maru (CRReal 840–43 [text] = 900–03 [tr.]). Maru then challenged Y.G.'s control of Goǧǧam and, in response, Y.G. marched against Maru. En route his troops sacked the monastery at Čänqär, where Kaśa Ḫaylu (future ↗Tewodros II) was a student. In October 1827, Y.G. defeated Maru at the Battle of Koso Bär in Goǧǧam, where Maru died (CRNuov 371f.; CRReal 844 [text] = 903f. [tr.]).

On his return to Däbrä Tabor Y.G. received an appeal from the clergy of the church of Bäᵓata, Gondär, against the oppression of his brother, Marəyye. Y.G. summoned Marəyye to Däbrä Tabor, but before Marəyye could reach there, Y.G. was dead.

Y.G., like other Wärräšek rulers, lived under the suspicion of favouring ↗Islam and formally returned to ↗Christianity under interdict (CRNuov 372f.; CRReal 845 [text] = 905 [tr.]).

Yəmᵓata

Abba Y. (ይምአታ; also Yəmᶜata ይምዐታ) was one of the ↗Nine Saints, a group of foreign monks who probably arrived in Ethiopia in the 5th–6th cent.

The principal source on Y. is his unpublished Vita (↗Gädl), found in ten manuscripts (20th cent.) recently discovered (Hagos Abreha 2009). One of them is preserved in the church ↗Gʷəḥ Yəmᵓata, allegedly founded by Y. (Brita 2010: 237f.) and famous for its wall paintings. Another copy of the Gädlä Yəmᵓata is mentioned in a list of books in the ms. EMML no. 1601 (tit. 616). The authorship of the Vita is attributed to saint ↗Yared but, until today, there is no evidence to support this assertion.

According to the Vita, Y.'s mother was a descendant of Moses while his father was a member of a royal and sacerdotal family of Alexandria. His parents wanted him to become engaged to a daughter of the king of Antioch but Y. chose the path of monasticism. He came from the town of Qosyat (or Qosya), whose location is still uncertain. According to Nöldeke's hypothesis Qosyat is a wrong transcription of the Arabic town of al-Fusṭāṭ while according to Conti Rossini it might be identified with "Kussaye". Marrassini suggests recognizing Qosyat as the Arabic-Egyptian town of al-Qūsiyya, near Koskam (↗Qʷəsqʷam; Marrassini 1990: 36; Brita 2010: 31).

A hymn dedicated to Y. is found in the ↗Zəmmare manuscripts BN Éth. 372 (GrébGriaule III, 121 no. 68), 18th cent., and VatLib Aeth. 280, 18th cent. (Van Lantschoot 1962: 483).

Y. is mentioned: (a) in an ancient homily written for the feast of abba ↗Gärima, published by Getatchew Haile (1985) found in the two 14th-cent. manuscripts EMML no. 1763 and BritLib Orient. 8192; (b) in a ↗sälam dedicated to abba ↗Libanos (Bausi 2003: xxiii [tr.], and ch. 566); (c) in an episode of Gädlä Liqanos while he accompanies ↗Liqanos on a journey to heaven on a bright cloud (Brita 2008: 403–08 and 491–97); (d) in a miracle of ↗Gärima narrated in the Gädlä Gärima (Conti Rossini 1897: 576–79; Ducati 1939: 147); and (f) in the unpublished Gädlä Guba (abba ↗Guba; Brita 2010: 217).

Y. is commemorated in the Sənkəssar on 28 Ṭəqəmt (ColSyn VI, 154f.).

Yemen, relations with the

The Y., a fertile mountainous country and an ancient cradle of civilization across the ↗Red Sea, has enjoyed a long history of political continuity and of identification of local cultures with local state orders. Prior to the rise of ↗Islam, and after the third millennium B.C., the Y. had been ruled by various dynasties such as the Sabeans (↗Sabaᵓ) and the Ḥimyarites (↗Ḥimyar), and was a source of immigrants to the ↗Horn of Africa who significantly influenced the emergence of the ↗Aksumite kingdom and its culture. Between 518 or 523 and ca. 570 A.D., the Aksumites ruled in the Y., and then were expelled and replaced by the Persians (↗Iran, relations with). The rise of Islam and its spread to the Y. did not erase its unique character. The Zaydīya, a variation of Šīᶜite Islam, was adopted to legitimize the practically independent local rulers. Zaydī imāms, integrating political and religious authority, ruled from 897 until the revolution of September 1962, and led the royalist camp during the civil war of 1962–69. Their independence was occasionally challenged (a dynastic kingdom of ex-slaves, called "Abyssinian Mamluks" had ruled in ↗Zabīd from 1021–1159) by the Mamluks of ↗Egypt and later by the Ottomans (↗Ottoman empire). The latter made special efforts to control parts of the Y., especially when the Red Sea acquired strategic importance. This was the case, for example, during their 16th-cent. conflict with the Portuguese (↗Portugal, relations with), and during ↗World War I. In 1918, the Y. under imām Yaḥyā (d. 1948) was proclaimed independent. In 1839, the British occupied Aden and its hinterland, proclaimed it a colony, and ruled there until 1967. They thus created South Y., which united with the Y. in 1990.

Though the *imām*s and the practically autonomous Zaydī tribes of the mountainous north were happy to confine themselves to their lands, ↗Yemenis, especially those of urban background, had quite an impact on Ethiopia over the years. ↗Trade relations, mainly ↗coffee and ↗čat, immigration since ancient times, and religious scholars spreading Islam in the Horn – all gave room to the often-recycled Arab myth that the Ethiopians were originally Yemenites. More concrete, however, were actual relations at major historical junctures. The Ethiopian occupation of the Y. in the 6th cent. A.D. and the attempt of the Ethiopian local commander ↗Abraha to conquer ↗Mecca in 570 left a mark on Islamic history. Yemenis' participation in ↗Aḥmad b. Ibrāhīm al-Ġāzī's attempt to occupy and islamize Christian Ethiopia (recorded in the ↗Futūḥ al-Ḥabaša by the Yemeni ᶜArabfaqīh) left its impact on Ethiopia. An effort in the 1640s by aṣe ↗Fasilädäs to build a Red Sea anti-Ottoman and anti-European alliance with his contemporary *imām*s led a Yemeni mission to visit his court (recorded by envoy ↗Ḥasan Aḥmad al-Ḥaymī). The mission failed, due to imām al-Mutawakkil ᶜalā Allāh Ismāᶜīl's (r. 1644–68) insistence that the Ethiopian emperor should convert to Islam. Throughout the 19th cent., Yemeni traders and scholars had substantial influence on the islamization process of the Oromo, and many Yemeni men settled especially in Ǧimma and in Harär, intermarrying with locals. In 1924, ras Täfäri (later ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I) visited Aden to promote trade and to encourage Yemeni traders and craftsmen, including many Jews, to settle in Ethiopia. In 1926, the Italians in Eritrea signed a treaty with the Y. hoping eventually to use her as a jumping board to ↗Arabia. In 1934, Ḫaylä Śəllase I sent aid to imām Yaḥyā, who was then fighting for, and losing, a northern province to the Saudis. The agreement on establishing formal diplomatic ties between Ethiopia and the Yemen was signed in Ṣanᶜāᵓ on 22 March 1935.

In 1949–50 the Yemeni Community School (Madrasat al-ǧālīya al-yamanīya) was founded in Addis Abäba. The first consulate of the Yemen was opened in 1952. Ethiopia's diplomatic mission was established in Ṣanᶜāᵓ a year later. The relations between North Y. and Ethiopia were upgraded to the ambassadorial level in 1967.

The Y.'s relevance to Ethiopia culminated during the 1962–69 civil war in the Y., which developed into a struggle between pan-Arabism and Arab conservatism. Imperial Ethiopia rendered help to Yemeni royalists headed by the deposed imām Aḥmad.

After the 1974 Ethiopian ↗Revolution, South Y. (independent since 1967) became even more relevant. Led by ᶜAlī Nāṣir Muḥammad, it joined the Soviet camp, helped to train Eritrean separatists and in 1981 officially allied with Mängəśtu's Ethiopia in a tripartite treaty that included Libya. The northern Y., meanwhile, saw the victory of a traditional-modern formula. In 1969, the pan-Arab revolutionaries in the capital Sanᶜāᵓ were defeated and the Zaydī tribes, who themselves finally abolished the Imāmate, built a sort of tribal-parliamentarian-modern republic. With the deterioration of the Soviet Union, the People's Republic of [South] Y. was weakened and in 1990, it united under the hegemony of northern Y. Since the overthrow of the military regime in Ethiopia in 1991, bilateral relations with the united Y. have been continuously strengthened by economical ties.

Yemenis in Ethiopia and Eritrea

Beginning from the late 19th and the early 20th cent. a steady stream of Yemeni emigrants settled in the Horn of Africa, especially in the major Ethiopian and Eritrean towns where they established themselves as shopkeepers and itinerant traders. During the following Italian occupation (↗Africa Orientale Italiana), the Italians, who had strong relations with the Y., recruited Yemenis as labourers for the construction of roads. After the ↗Liberation, a great number of Yemenis chose to remain in Ethiopia while new emigrants arrived in the 1940s and 1950s many of them marrying Ethiopian women. Most of the Yemenis who settled in Eritrea before and after the Italian war of 1935–36 originated from the mountains of ↗Ḥaḍramawt and are, therefore, known under the name of ǧabali ('mountain people'). Important Yemeni families in Eritrea were the Bazarᶜa, Bakherheb, Bahuberš and Bamušmuš etc.

In ↗Addis Abäba, during the first decades of the 20th cent., the mutton ↗trade "was mainly in the hands of Yemeni Arabs, Greeks and Armenians" (Pankhurst 2005:213). Some were ↗č̣at and water vendors. The petty Yemeni traders gradually evolved into wholesale merchants, exporters of ↗coffee, grain, ↗spices, and hides and skins (↗Leather), and importers of textiles and other products for the domestic market. There were also Yemeni teachers, lorry drivers and restaurateurs. There were quarters in several towns exclusively inhabited by Yemenis (e.g., in ↗Däse). The Yemenis hired Ethiopians as assistants in their small retail shops (ያረብ ፡ ሱቅ, yaräb suq, Eritrea: ያረብ ፡ ዱኳን, yaräb dukkʷan) and gave them informal training. It was these Ethiopians who eventually filled the gap created by the departure of the Yemenis shortly before and during the Därg (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council) regime (s. below).

The Yemenis played a crucial role in the dissemination of the Yemeni Arabic dialect in Ethiopia. In contrast to the first immigrant generation, the second-generation (so-called kəlləs; Arab. muwallad) were fluent in Amharic, but they made no attempt to publicly propagate the Šīᶜite sect of Zaydī, suggesting that the majority of Yemenis were Sunnīs (cf. Ḥaḍramawt).

The status of the Yemenis in imperial Ethiopia was ambivalent. Before the ↗Italian war 1935–36 imām Yaḥyā Muḥammad Ḥāmidaddīn, king of North Y. (r. 1926–48), recognized the northern Yemenis residing in Ethiopia as his subjects. As expatriates the Yemenis were not legally allowed to buy land. However, this was not enforced because they had children born of Ethiopian mothers; and they could purchase houses and other forms of property. Some Yemenis could reach higher positions and were patronized by the Court, such as, e.g., the carpet trader šayḫ Muḥammad Aḥmad Šariyān who received the title of qäññazmač. Already in 1896/97 ᶜAbdallāh Ṭāhā had been appointed governor of ↗Ǧiǧiga and there supervised the construction of the fortress and the establishment of a special security force and a customs office. In 1904 he led a military expedition in the ↗Ogaden.

After World War II the immigrant Yemeni population in Ethiopia started to become a reason for debate among non-Muslim intellectuals. A memorandum in Amharic written in 1948, most likely by ↗Gäbrä Wäld Ǝngəda Wärq, identified the Arab community in Ethiopia as agents of Islamic expansion and Muslim opposition in the country. It recommended that the Ministries of Interior and Foreign Affairs should be instructed not to grant residence and work permits to Arabs (Wudu Tafete Kassu 2006:271). In 1969, ignoring the role played by the Syrian Front for the Liberation of Eritrea, the Arabian governments including the Yemen were accused of supporting the Eritrean independence movement. In many towns there were state-orchestrated protest demonstrations calling for the expulsion of the resident Arabs. Indigenous merchants were also suspected of fomenting this sentiment in order to end the predominance of the Arabs in the retail trade. A few Yemenis were physically harassed and assaulted, and their shops sacked. The Yemenis in Addis Abäba and Asmära staged demonstrations against the anti-Arab public hysteria and a significant number left the country. However, possibly because of the fear of reaction from the Arab world, neither the imperial government nor its successor implemented any formal directive that compelled the Arabs to leave Ethiopia.

During the 1973/74 ↗famine in Ethiopia, the Yemenis contributed a significant amount of money for relief work. But this did not protect them from further discrimination. After the outbreak of the ↗Revolution, the Därg government implemented a policy that nationalized private enterprises. This led to the second wave of re-migration of Yemenis to the Y. Today's small Yemeni community in Ethiopia is relatively free from negative stereotypes attached to foreigners and their economic activities have increased again.

Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos

Y.K. (ይምርሐነ ፡ ክርስቶስ; r. second half of the 12th cent.) was the third king of the ↗Zagʷe Dynasty, son of Gərwa Śəyyum and successor of his paternal uncle Ṭänṭäwədəm.

As in the case of most other important Zagʷe rulers, the main source of information on Y.K.'s life is his ↗Gädl – a text written according to the hagiographical, not historical, literary tradition. It is known from three manuscripts at least, VatLib Cerulli 224, EMML no. 6031, and EMML no. 7911, all from the 19th cent. and derived from the same archetype. He is also commemorated in mälkəʾ, usually together with ↗Lalibäla and ↗Näʾakkʷəto Läʾab (s., e.g., ms. EMML no. 1548, with three mälkəʾ, one for each ruler, as well as another hymn to Lalibäla; mss. EMML no. 1837 fol. 130r and 4139 fols. 23r–29r with one mälkəʾ for the three rulers).

As usual in the Zagʷe traditions, the story begins with problems of royal succession: the uncle of Y.K. (whose name is usually shortened to "Yəmrəḥa"), Ṭänṭäwədəm, is jealous of the boy, son of his brother Gərwa Śəyyum, and is afraid he could take the throne instead of his son; he eventually decides to kill the boy, but Y.K.'s mother arranges his escape. After being ordained deacon by the Patriarch, Y.K. lives in foreign countries, hidden from the king. He wanders "from desert to desert", always protected by the Holy Spirit, and gets married only after some insistence from the Lord. After this he becomes a priest. Once, while Y.K. is singing in the church, Our Lord predicts his reign, and gives him the royal name of Dawit (i.e. David). He arrives in his country (Bəgʷna), where he composes, at the request of the local people, a homily on the Creation, and settles a rivalry between two brothers. After the death of his uncle he becomes king, but continues to concern himself with the contrast between priesthood and kingship.

Y.K. begins to build an edifice (of an unclear nature) in Wägrä Səḫin, on a site pointed out by the Lord and St. Raphael, and places there the tabot of St. Cyriacus (↗Qirqos). This connection of the entire Zagʷe dynasty with the Child Qirqos is very important: ms. EMML no. 4816 contains a miracle of Cyriacus helping Y.K. to build the church dedicated to the martyr (fols. 59r–63r); according to tradition and to the Acts of ↗Iyäsus Moʾa, the last Zagʷe king, ↗Yətbaräk, sought refuge from ↗Yəkunno Amlak in the church of the same Qirqos (KurMoa 28 [text], s. ↗Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos church).

Following the indication of the Lord, Y.K. transforms the building into a magnificent church, receiving different ornaments and decorations from ↗Egypt (having asked for these from the king of Egypt in a letter accompanied by a gift of gold) and Rome (↗Byzantine empire). Y.K. dies during an expedition to take gold and silver for the church (not approved by the Lord) "towards the West" (or "towards Arabia", in both cases mängälä aräb), on 19 Ṭəqəmt. Before dying, Y.K. asks Jesus Christ to reinstall "Israel" on the throne (i.e. the legitimate ↗Solomonic dynasty, dethroned, according to tradition, by the Zagʷe).

It is difficult to point out truly "historical facts" in the Acts of Y.K. Perhaps the only ones are the building of the church (very common in the Zagʷe dynasty, but also in general for Ethiopian kings), and the relationship with ↗Egypt. According to Taddesse Tamrat, Y.K. "inaugurated the Zagwé tradition of building ↗rock-hewn churches, and the communication with the ruler of Egypt about building material probably indicates a fresh revival of the long and close cultural contacts between the two countries" (TadTChurch 58), but these contacts are only discussed very generally. When ↗Abū Ṣāliḥ reports that the kings of Ethiopia were also priests, it does not necessarily have to “only fit with Yimrha” (ibid., cp. also Pirenne in PICES 10). While Y.K. was indeed already a priest before his coronation, some degree of connection between political and religious function is common among Ethiopian rulers, who received a traditional education and frequently served as deacons. Thus, the restriction to only one person of what could be a more general characteristic of Ethiopian kingship may be arguable (s. Marrassini 1995: 3f.).

Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos in art

Similarly to the ↗Zagʷe kings ↗Ḥarbay, ↗Lalibäla and ↗Näʾakkʷəto Läʾab, Y.K. has appeared in ↗painting since the 15th cent., primarily in the regions connected to this royal dynasty, i.e. ↗Lasta and ↗Wag.

It seems that the oldest presently known pictures of the king are found on two triptychs dating to the 15th/16th cent. and originating from Lasta. On the first, IES 3450, Y.K. is depicted as a holy rider, wearing a halo in addition to a royal diadem, mounted on a white horse and holding a lance together with a staff cross. Placed on the left wing of the triptych he faces St. ↗George, both of them flanking a representation of Mary with Child. In a similar context and with the same characteristics he is depicted on the second triptych belonging to the church of Näʾakkʷəto Läʾab near ↗Lalibäla. The 16th-cent. wall painting of the ↗Yädəbba Maryam church applies the same iconography despite the fact that the invocation which accompanies the picture emphasizes Y.K.’s priesthood.

From the 17th cent. numerous representations of Y.K. are known. There are the miniatures: in the collection of Zagʷe kings’ lives belonging to the ↗Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos church and in the ↗sənsul kept in the ↗Ǝšätän Maryam church near Lalibäla. They are executed in the “geometrical style” connected to Lasta and portray the king alongside the other Zagʷe rulers, all rendered frontally and each holding a book. On these representations were based the painting on the external wall of the civil building in the Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos church complex and the Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos, detail of a triptych, 16th cent., church of Näʾakkʷəto Läʾab; photo 2007, courtesy of the author coloured drawing illustrating the life of Y.K. in a manuscript kept in this church.

In the church of ↗Wəqro Mäsqäl near ↗Säqoṭa Y.K. is depicted on the external wall with three other Zagʷe kings, all mounted, armed and haloed.

Many round churches in Wag, decorated with wall paintings between the 18th and 20th cent., add portraits of Zagʷe kings including Y.K. to the suite of the ↗equestrian saints, as for instance the church of Däbrä Ṣ̌äḥay in Säqoṭa.

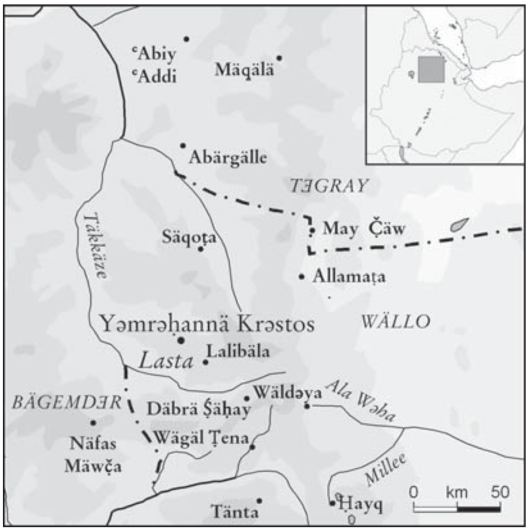
Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos

Y.K. (ይምርሐነ ፡ ክርስቶስ) is a church situated in a natural cave on the slopes of the Abunä Yosef massif in ↗Lasta, 17 km from ↗Lalibäla. According to hagiographic tradition, it was built by the ↗Zagʷe king ↗Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos and dedicated to St. ↗Qirqos. Architecturally, it probably belongs to the mid-13th cent. and is contemporary to Betä Amanuʾel in Lalibäla. North of the church are two lay structures thought to have served as "royal appartments". Three tombs to the south are said to house the remains of Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos, a patriarch from Alexandria and the king's daughter or wife. The betä ləḥem (↗Church buildings) lies to the south-east, beside the 3 m-high wall that encloses the whole complex within the cave.

The church shows features considered common to Aksumite ↗architecture, although it frequently diverges from ancient techniques. It is constructed of split stones dressed with white stucco and with wooden planks. 90°-angle buttresses support the four corners. Quoins and buttresses render unnecessary the wall ties or "monkey heads", typical of ↗Däbrä Damo and other early churches. There are portals in the north (main entrance), south and west façades.

The church is built on a basilica plan, the interior measuring 10.6 m x 7.9 m. It consists of four bays. The eastern bay is occupied by a sanctuary flanked by two side rooms (2.9 m high), the western may be considered a pseudo-narthex. The ceilings are flat, except for the domed sanctuary and the 6.55 m high ceilings below a saddle-back roof of the second and third bays of the nave. Two pairs of stone pillars separate the nave from the aisles and support arches resting on bracket capitals. A triumphal arch stands at the entrance to the sanctuary. The church has 26 windows, of which six are blind. The windows on the north and east façades are decorated with alternating ↗wood and white-stone tracery, or carved wooden panels. In the interior, everything from the aisle ceilings and up is constructed entirely of wood. The wooden dome (2.6–2.7 m in diameter), supported on an octagonal frame, stands 7 m above the sanctuary. Stretching north-south across the centre of the saddle-back ceiling is a massive tie beam. A wooden carved door, possibly of Coptic manufacture, separates the sanctuary side-room from the north aisle.



The coffered saddle-back roof and the cupola, the central tie-beam, friezes and panels of the architrave, the arches, capitals and spandrels are adorned with geometrical and vegetal ornament in the form of wood carvings (often painted), wooden inlay and painted stucco. Two aisle ceilings at the north and west portals bear motifs: animals, fabulous creatures, and human figures. The style is reminiscent of the Copto-Islamic international style, which developed from the 11th cent. in the areas influenced by Arabic culture, and may have been brought to Ethiopia by Coptic craftsmen.

The wall ↗paintings in the northern aisle show saints and Christological scenes: northern wall: the Entry of the Holy Family into Egypt, the Baptism of Jesus, the Washing of the Apostles' Feet, the ↗Crucifixion (without Christ's body on the cross), the Holy Women at the Tomb, Noli me tangere, and Doubting Thomas; eastern wall: Entry into Jerusalem, Ascension – Maiestas Domini, Pentecost, ↗Equestrian saints (Philoteos, probably Qirqos, Sisinios and ↗Menas) and, in the south-east corner, possibly the ↗Evangelists. The style and iconography of the murals probably points to a Coptic workshop of the mid- to late 13th cent.

Two painted panels with fantasy animals are presently fastened to the upper exterior frame of the church's north portal. When the panels were first noted by Alessandro Monti della Corte and identified as parts of a box or a small coffer, they were five in number. The provenance and dating of the object, obviously imported, cannot be established with certainty but it shows some resemblance to an Indian painting inside a shield recently discovered in the church of the Saviour of the World in ↗Lalibäla.

The only known standing civilian buildings to have survived from before the 16th cent. are found close to the north wall of the cave. They share a common east-west wall. The easternmost, probably older, structure could have served as a reception hall, and the tower-like one at the west end as a residence and treasury. The external eastern wall of the "hall" bears a painting in the 17th-cent. geometric style of Lasta: a figure with a halo holding a sword, most probably Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos, flanked by the epitomes of the ↗Sun and the ↗Moon. The double-hung door presently providing access to the church compound may once have served as the entrance portal to the "hall". It bears a low relief showing a pair of confronted horses.

The property register of the church lists some 205 objects and liturgical implements including 58 ↗manuscripts, among them the one containing the Acts of Zagʷe kings ↗Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos, ↗Lalibäla, ↗Näʾakkʷəto Läʾab and ↗Ḥarbay, and one of the Acts of Qirqos, which also contain stories related to Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos. Both date to the 17th cent. and are illuminated in the geometric Lastan style.

Four old wooden mänabərta tabotat (↗tabot) were registered in the church, all decorated with carved floral and cross motifs, and two paintings on wood: a 16th-cent. triptych with the ↗Trinity in the central panel and two wings of a triptych belonging to the 15th-cent. school of painting associated with ↗Fəre Ṣəyon.

Among 32 ↗crosses in the possession of the church, the most valuable are: an iron staff-cross executed between the 12th–14th cent., a probably 14th-cent. shafted circular bronze cross, a 15th-cent. iron four-lobed hand cross, a shafted cross with openwork design using birds, palmettes and cross motifs and a probably 16th-cent. metal hand cross of foreign manufacture, decorated with low relief in a repoussé technique.

Yərba

Y. (ይርባ, also Irba) is a small town in today's ↗Sidaama zone of the Southern Nations, Nationalities and Peoples' Region. It is the administrative centre of Yərba-Borričča wäräda and has a population of 4,156 (CSA 2008).

The town came into existence in the 1880s as a traditional politico-religious centre. The central spot was the gudumaale, a sacred ↗sycamore tree under whose shade religious rituals and administrative meetings were held. In particular, the place served for the celebration of the fičee, the Sidaama New Year's ceremony. The founder of Y. was Worawo Heeyyakko, the chief notable (balabbat) of the Yanaase clan. As such, Y. is one of the very few towns in Sidaama zone that was not originally founded as a garrison (↗Kätäma).

Formerly, Y. was also known as buʾla ama dikko ('market for buʾla') because the main item sold at its market was high-quality ↗ənsät starch (S. buʾla, Amh. bulla). Nowadays, Y. is an important commercial centre between Lekku and Baleela. In earlier times people from as far as ↗Allaaba and ↗Arsi regions came to trade in Y. During the Italian occupation an all-weather road was constructed which starts at Moroččo, crosses Y. and ends in Diinto, near the Bilate River.

Yərba Muda

Y.M. (Amh. ይርባ ፡ ሙዳ, Or. Yirbaa Muudaa, 2,491 m A.S.L.) is a small town located on the Šašämänne–Nägäle–Boräna road (for location s. map for Yərba). It is part of the Bore wäräda of the Boorana zone of Oromiyyaa kəlləl. Before the 1987-administrative reform it belonged in the Ǧämǧäm awraǧǧa of the ↗Sidamo province.

Y.M. was founded as a ↗kätäma after the Ethiopian conquest which controlled the ↗Guǧǧi Oromo highlands. Y.M. was also one of the regional ↗coffee markets. During the Italian occupation it became a stopping place on the then planned Addis Abäba–Mogadishu road. In this small administrative centre of a coffee and ↗ənsät region there are a school, a Norwegian mission (during the 1960s) and a few shops as well as hotels and a garage along the main street.

Y.M. is also one of the places of the Guǧǧi ↗pilgrimages (s. also ↗abbaa muudaa, ↗muudaa; ↗qaalluu; Van de Loo 1991: 14, 54).

Its population increased rather slowly: 915 inhabitants in 1984, 2,035 inhabitants in 2004, 2,235 inhabitants in 2007 (CSA 2008).

Yərgaläm

Y. (ይርጋለም, also Yərga ^{c}Aläm; 6°45' N, 38° 25' E) is a town in the Sidaama zone of today's Southern Nations, Nationalities and Peoples' Region (for location s. map for Yərba). The original inhabitants of the area around Y. belong to the ↗Sidaama ethnic group. According to the 2007 census the population is 30,348 (CSA 2008).

The town lies at 1,760 m A.S.L. in the ↗wäyna däga agro-ecological zone. Hence it enjoys a relatively mild temperature with a mean average of 19.2°C and an average annual rainfall of 1,450 mm. Y.'s topography is rugged. Its reddish-brown soil combined with the mild climate and abundant water resources make the area very suitable for the growth of ↗coffee, ↗ənsät, ↗maize and various fruits.

Y. is one of the largest “garrison towns” (↗kätäma) of the southern region. It was founded in 1933 between the watersheds of Gidawo and Woyma rivers by ras ↗Dästa Damṭäw. The town fell into the hands of the Italians in 1936 till its liberation in 1941. Y. became capital of the ↗Sidamo province in 1933 and remained so until the mantle was passed to ↗Awasa in 1967.

Although the Italians initiated some elements of modernity during their brief stay, the development of the town was very sluggish and remains so. In addition, its challenging terrain has hindered development. Moreover, the transformation of Awasa into the provincial capital in 1967 (later kəlləl and zonal capital) is another major factor in the arrested development of Y. However, since 1941 some steps towards modernization can be observed in Y. As a coffee centre the town boasts water mills for coffee processing. A secondary school, a Mekane Yesus Youth Hostel, a big regional hospital built by the Norwegian Lutheran Mission and the Gidaawo hot water springs can also be cited as example.

Since the 1990s the town has shown signs of rapid growth. The main examples which can be cited in this respect are the Furra Institute of Development Studies, the Sidaama Radio Station and the Aräggaš Tourist Lodge.

Yəsḥaq

Aṣe Y. (ይስሐቅ; regnal name Gäbrä Mäsqäl; r. 1414–29/30, d. August 1430) was an Ethiopian emperor. The son of aṣe ↗Dawit II, it is not clear which of Dawit's wives was his mother, although it may have been ↗Ṣəyon Mogäsa. Y. came to power following the death of his brother, ↗Tewodros I, who ruled for only a few months. The overall image of Y. which emerges from the sources is one of a powerful and confrontational leader who fought his enemies, both political and religious, on several fronts.

Y. did not continue his father's efforts to reintegrate the ↗Ewosṭateans into the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox (Täwaḥədo) Church, but rather strongly supported the position of the Egyptian abunä ↗Bärtälomewos. (Their relationship was, however, not without its difficulties, for during the time of Y., Bärtälomewos was accused of having supported the heretical Sabellian theology according to which the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit were three names but only one person.) Y.'s anti-Ewosṭatean position not only led to renewed persecution of its members, but also appears to have resulted in his support of Däbrä ᶜAsbo (later ↗Däbrä Libanos). During his reign a new church dedicated to its founder ↗Täklä Haymanot was erected. These sentiments notwithstanding, Y. is said to have honored the pro-↗Sabbath ↗Giyorgis of Sägla upon the latter's death. The ↗Stephanite movement also appears to have its origins in the pro-Sabbath position of its founder for which he was punished during the reign of Y.

Y. also pursued an aggressive policy against the Fälaša (↗Betä Ǝsraʾəl) demanding their submission, imposing tributes and ultimately initiating a process of disenfranchisement. Although some of the Betä Ǝsraʾəl leaders in the regions of ↗Səmen and ↗Dämbəya had agreed to pay tribute to Y., the local governor Bet Agir refused. Y. personally took to the battlefield against him and defeated him. While he granted gʷəlt to those Betä Ǝsraʾəl who had been loyal, Y. built churches in Dämbəya and ↗Wägära and sought to impose Christianity on his foes. He began to remove them from their lands, decreeing "He who is baptized in the Christian religion, may inherit the land of his father, otherwise let him be a fälasi" [i.e. Betä Ǝsraʾel].

However, the keynote of Y.'s policies may be said to have been his strong oppositon to ↗Islam in the region. Early in his reign, in 1415, Y. killed the Walašma sulṭān of ↗Ifat ↗Saᶜdaddīn Abū l-Barakāt Muḥammad b. Aḥmad Ḥarb Arᶜad and conquered extensive territory reaching as far as ↗Zaylaᶜ. The members of the Walašmaᶜ family, including his sons, had to flee briefly to Yemen. (Y. fought with them again upon their return.) He also pursued military campaigns against the northern Muslim strongholds of ↗Massawa and ↗Dahlak.

Although Y. was one of the last Ethiopian rulers who did not leave behind a royal chronicle. Much detail about his reign is found in the works of al-↗Maqrīzī as well as in scattered Gəᶜəz sources, and in an early Amharic poetic text. According to the former ḥaṭi (aṣe) Y. (b. Daʾūd b. Sayf Arᶜad) was also called Abram (Ibrāhīm). During his reign, Circassian military slaves from ↗Mamlūk Egypt established workshops for making armor, swords and other weapons. An exiled Egyptian aṭ-Ṭabunġā Mufri reorganized both his army and the governance of the kingdom. A Copt, Faharwaddawla, is credited with reforming the system of tax collection and also introducing the practice of the Emperor dressing in "splendid" clothes and carrying a cross in his right hand.

Towards the end of his reign, Y. made the earliest known contact of Ethiopia with a European ruler. He sent a delegation led by a Persian merchant, at-Tabrīzī, who was accompanied by two Ethiopian monks to ↗Europe in 1427. They carried a letter proposing an alliance against the Muslims which they eventually presented to ↗Alfonso V of Aragon, in Valencia in 1428. Alfonso, who appears to have been aware of at least some elements of the Solomonic legend, responded positively by sending artisans as well as at least one priest, although they died on the way. More successful in reaching Ethiopia were a Spaniard from the Kingdom of Naples, Pietro, and an unidentified Frenchman. Y.'s delegation appears to have been detained by the Mamlūks on their way back to Ethiopia.

Y. was buried in ↗Tädbabä Maryam, like his short-lived predecessor Tewodros and successor ↗Ǝskənder. Despite the claim that Y. was assassinated (BudHist 303), Taddesse Tamrat believes that the sources have attempted to gloss over his death in battle against the Muslims (TadTChurch 153 n. 5). Al-Maqrīzī records that he was struck down by the wrath of God for proposing an anti-Muslim alliance (s. above) to the Europeans. Following his death, Ethiopia was ruled by his son Ǝndrəyas (Ǝskənder), whose reign lasted for only a few months. Y.'s brother Ḥəzbä Nañ (↗Täklä Maryam) then assumed the throne. Another son of Y. (al-Maqrīzī also mentions a short-lived ruler called Salmūn b. Isḥāq) may have ruled as well, although it appears more likely that two of his nephews Śärwe Iyäsus and ᶜAmdä Iyäsus ruled for short periods. Ultimately, it was yet another son of Dawit and brother of Y., ↗Zärᵓa Yaᶜəqob who re-established stability in the kingdom.

Yəsḥaq

Baḥər nägaš Y. (ይስሐቅ; d. 26 December 1588, ᶜAddi Qorro) was one of the most prominent Ethiopian lords of the 16th cent.

There is no reliable information on Y.'s family background or the early period of his life, nor on the time when he was appointed ↗baḥər nägaš, the governor of the strategic coastal province, called mədri baḥri in Təgrəñña, with its trade routes and external links through the ↗Red Sea. The first baḥər nägaš known by name, before a long lacuna (during which the office did exist), seems to be ↗Ros Näbiyat, who was baḥər nägaš in 1524–26. Y. probably helped aṣe ↗Ləbnä Dəngəl during his flight from the Muslim forces, and was awarded with the office of baḥər nägaš for this service (Conti Rossini 1921: 5). It was possibly Y. who approached the Portuguese at Məṣəwwaᶜ (↗Massawa) in 1541, influencing the decision of Estevão da ↗Gama to dispatch help to aṣe ↗Gälawdewos (Christovão da ↗Gama). He then hosted the Portuguese at ↗Dəbarwa, his capital, playing an important role in the further support of the expedition, and participated in the operation against the ruler of ↗Zaylaᶜ. Already during that period, he had established close ties to the Portuguese (s. report of ↗Castanhoso, Whiteway 1902; remarkably, Castanhoso never refers to Y. by name, but only by his title).

In 1557 Y. was seemingly not much disturbed by the landing of the Turks in Məṣəwwaᶜ; however, he repelled the inland incursion led by ↗Özdemir pasha, who had captured Y.'s capital Dəbarwa and burnt ↗Däbrä Damo. Y. also defeated their ally, Queen ↗Gaᶜəwa of Mäzäga (Conti Rossini 1918: 285f., 291f.; ConzGal 77 [text]). In 1557 Y. significantly extended his realm; this is seen in a charter in the Mäṣḥafä ↗Aksum (CRLib no. 52) referring to him as "azmač of Aksum, ↗nəburä əd of Aksum". Y. thus had both the sacred city of the ↗Ark of the Covenant and the ↗trade routes to the Red Sea under his control.

Having succeeded Gälawdewos in 1559, aṣe ↗Minas, reshuffling governors and offices, dismissed Y. from his position (along with təgre mäkʷännən Degäna; Conti Rossini 1918: 286; the Chronicle of Minas does not mention this episode) and appointed (Məlməl) Zärᵓa Yoḥannəs in his place. As a result, Y. rebelled and joined another rebel, ↗Kəflo, who was about to enthrone Täzkaro (Täzkarä Dəngəl, a son of abeto ↗Yaᶜəqob; DombrChr 179; Pereira 1888: 30 [text]). Minas's officer, Zärᵓa Yoḥannəs (who possibly held both the offices of ↗təgre mäkʷännən and baḥər nägaš), pursued Y. and defeated him at ↗Adyabo. In the end, however, Y. was pardoned by Minas who probably reinstalled him. Kəflo and Täzkaro, who were also supported by some of the Portuguese, were defeated, and killed.

However, Y. soon rebelled again. He received the ↗Jesuits who had been expelled from the court (shortly after 1558, including ↗Oviedo), and hosted them in Təgray (but the assumption that it was Y. who let them establish the base at ↗Fəremona is difficult to prove; cp. Girma Beshah – Merid Wolde Aregay 1964: 64f.; Dombrowski 1985: 22, probably on the basis of a letter from Oviedo, no. 56, BecRaso X, 203ff.). On the other hand, when it turned out that Portuguese military support through receiving the Jesuits was illusive, he turned to the Turks and paša Zemur (Əsdəmur, i.e. Özdemir, in the Chronicle of Minas; cp. Pereira 1888: 75, n. 130). This step alienated the Jesuits, but the Turks were the real power in the area, and possessed the ↗firearms. Y. and his ally Ḥarbo raised a new candidate for the throne, the young Marqos (a son of abeto Yaᶜəqob; Pereira 1888: 32f. [text]; Conti Rossini 1918: 287). With Turkish support, Y. advanced to Əndärta and defeated Zärᵓa Yoḥannəs in April 1562. Minas, lacking the resources to confront them, was compelled to withdraw temporarily from Təgray. In the middle of the preparation for a new campaign, he died on 30 January 1563, and the young aṣe ↗Śärṣ́ä Dəngəl was enthroned. Y. was thus left in full control of North Ethiopia.

In the first years of Śärṣ́ä Dəngəl's rule, Y. joined ↗Ḥamälmal Wärq (s. EAE vol. 5) and Täklo (↗Täklä Haymanot of Damot) who did not recognize the new monarch, and even sent his officer to Goǧǧam to arrest Śärṣ̌ä Dəngəl (s. CRHist 7 [text]). Soon, however, the ambitious lords disagreed (Ḥamälmal raised his own pretender, Täklä Maryam), and Y. withdrew to Təgray. After some time, he started to look for reconciliation with Śärṣ̌ä Dəngəl, sending him tributes and contacting his relatives (Conti Rossini 1918: 287f.); the reason for that might have been Y.'s fear of the growing power of the Emperor, and/or a new, growing menace from the Turks. The final reconciliation took place in 1571 (CRHist 37f. [text]); in the following year, Y. was already in service, fighting the Turks.

Despite having re-established relations, neither Y. nor Śärṣ̌ä Dəngəl were satisfied with the outcome, and both knew that the peace would not last. By 1575, Y. was showing that he was unwilling to follow royal orders. At the same time, he was plotting with the Turks and sulṭān ↗Muḥammad b. Naṣīr b. ^{c}Uṯmān of ^{c}Adal. In 1577, Y. raised yet another puppet pretender to the throne, a certain Wäldä Zäṭa^{c}os, while Muḥammad b. Naṣīr also rebelled (CRHist 51f. [text]). Śärṣ̌ä Dəngəl quickly defeated Muḥammad b. Naṣīr, but the campaign against Y. was postponed. Y. missed a chance for reconciliation with Śärṣ̌ä Dəngəl, and relied upon the Turks. In 1578 Śärṣ̌ä Dəngəl started the final campaign, suddenly attacking Y. in Təgray; in November 1578, Śärṣ̌ä Dəngəl increased military pressure upon both Y. and the Turks. Although offered a last chance for peace, Y. refused to drop the alliance with the Turks. On 13 November Y. and the Turks were defeated at ↗Ǝnṭič̣č̣o; on 26 December 1578 their troops were completely crushed at ^{c}Addi Qoro, and both Y. and the Turkish paša were killed (the events, including Y.'s last tragic hours, are described in great detail in the seventh chapter of Śärṣ̌ä Dəngəl's Chronicle). A few days later, Śärṣ̌ä Dəngəl entered Dəbarwa.

The defeat of Y. marked the fall of the most powerful lord of North Ethiopia, and significantly strengthened royal power (which was highlighted by Śärṣ̌ä Dəngəl's ↗coronation in Aksum). After the defeat of Y., his realm was merged (though temporarily) with that of təgre mäk^{w}ännən, and the local centre of power shifted to Təgray. The Ottomans were substantially weakened and confined to a very small area on the coast. Śärṣ̌ä Dəngəl did not use the chance to establish full control over the coastal area; but by the late 1580s the Turkish presence on the Ethiopian side of the Red Sea was reduced to a minimum (cp. ↗Ḥərgigo). In 1588 Śärṣ̌ä Dəngəl appointed a new baḥər nägaš, with quite limited authority. No later ruler of the coastal province had power comparable to that of Y.

Despite narratives about Y. in the Ethiopian chronicles and some references in European sources, Təgrayan sources are silent on Y. Except for the general information that the capital of Y. was Dəbarwa, nothing is known of the internal organisation of Y.'s realm nor his local supporters or of the further fate of his family, except that his family and his treasures "fell into the hands of the King" (CRHist 77 [text]) and that two of his sons were killed by the Turks around 1565 (s. Conti Rossini 1918: 287).

Abunä Y. (ይስሐቅ, birth name: Wäldä Kidan; b. 1878, Wag, d. 10 August 1955, ^{c}Addi Abun) was one of the first four Ethiopians who were consecrated as bishops in Cairo in 1929 and later liqä pappasat of ↗Təgray.

Y's parents were märigeta Kənfu and wäyzäro Färrädä Ǝšätu. Y. attended the first and second stages of traditional church ↗education at Sobəl Säfärä Maryam under aläqa Tädla. Y. started the ↗mäṣḥaf bet at ↗Däbrä Ḥayq Ǝsṭifanos. Upon receiving holy orders at ↗Žämmädu Maryam Y. proceeded to ↗Boru Meda. There he was educated by the famous mämhər ↗Akalä Wäld in ↗dəggʷa and ↗qəne. After teaching ↗zema in Wäldəya for five years Y. returned to Boru Meda and continued mäṣḥaf bet under Akalä Wäld. At that time Y. transcribed the orally transmitted commentary (↗Andəmta) of mämhər Akalä Wäld. On completing all levels of traditional education, Y. went to ↗Näᵓakkʷəto Läᵓab in ↗Lasta and later to Č̣agal Mädḫane ᶜAläm in ↗Šäwa where he taught mainly exegesis.

Y.'s knowledge was highly esteemed and even caught the attention of the palace. Ǝtege ↗Zäwditu appointing him head of ↗Ankobär Mikaᵓel Church and later of ↗Mänbärä Mängəśt Qəddus Gäbrəᵓel.

After Y.'s ordination as bishop in 1929 his diocese covered ↗Eritrea and Təgray. When ↗Italy invaded Ethiopia in 1935 Y. joined the patriotic front in Təgray which was led by ras ↗Śəyyum Mängäša (↗Resistance). During an attack by Italian soldiers Y. was captured along with other patriots. He was first imprisoned on Nokra island near ↗Massawa and then taken to Naples, Italy, where he stayed for two years until he was able to return to Addis Abäba due to the intervention of abunä Abrəham who was the authorized Archbishop at the time.

After abunä Abrəham died and əč̣č̣äge Yoḥannəs was made patriarch, Y. was appointed əč̣č̣äge of ↗Däbrä Libanos in 1939 and stayed there until the liberation in 1941. When Emperor ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I returned to power, one of his reforms was to revive relations between the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox (Täwaḥədo) Church and the ↗Coptic Church. The latter insisted that the bishops who had been consecrated during the Italian occupation was to be excommunicated, but allowed Y., who had been consecrated earlier, to continue his service. Thus, Y. was given ↗Goǧǧam, ↗Gondär, Təgray and ↗Illubabor as his dioceses and served until he was transferred to Wällo in 1948.

In his final years, Y. returned to the diocese of Təgray and continued his service at ↗ᶜAddi Abun. After a brief illness, he died in 1955 and was buried in ↗Aksum Ṣəyon.

Abunä Y. (ይስሐቅ) was an Egyptian monk who was appointed metropolitan of Ethiopia during the 13th cent.

After the dismissal of ↗Mikaᵓel II of Fuwa, aṣe ↗Lalibälä sent the Ethiopian ambassador to Egypt to demand the designation of a new metropolitan. The Egyptian patriarch John VI (1189–1216) selected the brothers Y. and Yosef from the tribe of Bešaṭmir (Perruchon 1899: 84 = SawHist vol. 3, 2, vi), pious monks who had achieved the higher degree of holiness in the monastery of St. Anthony in Egypt. Y., who was more learned than his younger brother, was ordained metropolitan in a consecration ceremony held in Cairo on 7 March 1210, while Yosef was ordained priest.

According to Taddesse Tamrat (TadTChurch 62 and n. 2), Y. died during the reign of ↗Näᵓakkʷəto Läᵓab (MHAlex 196).

Abunä Y. (ይስሐቅ, also referred to as Y. II; d. ca. 1500) was the metropolitan (↗P̣appas) of the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox (Täwaḥədo) Church from ca. 1480 to ca. 1500. He succeeded abunä Gäbrəᵓel (d. ca. 1458; ↗Gabrəᵓel and Mikaᵓel) after a long vacancy of the Ethiopian Episcopal throne.

Y. arrived in Ethiopia during the reign of aṣe ↗Ǝskəndər in ca. 1481 (133 of the "Era of the Martyrs"; s. KolTrad I, 54), with another Coptic bishop, ↗Marqos, the coadjutor bishops Mikaᵓel and Yoḥannəs, and qomos Yosef (Kur 1972: 88 [text]; s. also Guidi 1899: 3 [text]). Information about Y.'s episcopacy is fragmentary in Ethiopian documents. According to the Acts of ↗Märḥa Krəstos, 9th əččäge of ↗Däbrä Libanos of Šäwa, Y. accompanied King Ǝskəndər to Däbrä Libanos, ordained several priests and proceeded to the consecration of Märḥa Krəstos granting him authority over all the churches of Ethiopia (Kur 1972: 88). This consecration seems to be a topos in hagiographical works originating from the Däbrä Libanos scriptorium. Similar kinds of grants of authority are described in the hagiographies of ↗Täklä Haymanot and ↗Filəppos and refer to the claim of Däbrä Libanos monastery to hold authority over the whole of ecclesiastical life in Ethiopia (Budge 1906: 69f., 206ff.; Turaiev 1905: 193–98 [text]).

Y. is mentioned in Stephanite hagiography, e.g., in the Acts of ↗^{c}Ǝzra of ↗Gundä Gunde, where he revokes the long-standing excommunication of Stephanite adherents (Caquot 1961: 81f. [text]). Y. is the bishop who ordained ↗Gäbrä Mäśiḥ, head of the Stephanite movement between 1476 and 1522, as a priest in ca. 1481–84 (Beylot 1991: 8).

Y. has long seemed to have played a role in ↗Gə^{c}əz literature; the translation of the life of St. ↗P̣änṭälewon and a hymn in honour of the Virgin Mary being ascribed to him (↗Wəddase Maryam; Conti Rossini 1946: 7). Yet, the life of P̣änṭälewon is already attested in 14th-cent. manuscripts.

Y. died during the reign of aṣe ↗Na^{c}od and was buried at ↗Bärara in Šäwa (Caquot 1961: 88; Guidi 1899: 3). According to the available Ethiopian sources, Y. was succeeded by abunä Marqos (Caquot 1961: 88; Guidi 1899: 3). But some foreign sources – Portuguese and Arabic – clearly state that abunä ↗Ya^{c}əqob assumed the role of metropolitan between the episcopacies of Y. and Marqos (Fiaccadori 2004: 686ff.).

Yəsḥaq: Gädlä Yəsḥaq

G.Y. (ገድለ ፡ ይስሐቅ, ‘Contending of Isaac’ or ‘Testament of Isaac’) is the second of the “Testaments of the three Patriarchs”, modelled after the well-known Gädlä ↗Abrəham (the third being Gädlä ↗Ya^{c}əqob).

As the death of Isaac approaches, the Archangel Michael is sent to tell him that he should make his will and set his house in order. Subsequently, Isaac informs Jacob of his near death. Jacob wants to accompany his father, but Isaac encourages him to stay and tells Jacob of his genealogy, beginning from Adam and ultimately leading to Jesus, the Messiah. He speaks extensively about the strict obligations on all priests. Isaac is then taken to the eternal world. First, an angel takes him on a tour through hell, where he sees the tortures inflicted on sinners. This vision is modelled after similar tours of hell (cp. Apocalypse of ↗Peter). Afterwards, he is taken to heaven, where he sees his father Abraham. A conversation between God and Abraham ensures compassion and forgiveness for every believer who does good works, especially for those who keep the memorial day of Isaac, 28 Näḥase. Back in his bed, Isaac dies, and his soul travels to heaven in a holy chariot, cherubs and seraphs singing before it.

The G.Y. is extant only in Coptic (Sahidic and Bohairic, the second being a more or less literal translation of the first), Arabic (a literal translation of the Bohairic Version) and ↗Gə^{c}əz (Haelewyck 1998: 56–61; Heide 2012a: 29–34). Usually, the G.Y. is viewed as having been composed originally in Greek somewhere between the 2nd and 4th cent. A.D., but no Greek textual witness of the G.Y. is known. In addition, the specific introduction to the Bohairic, Arabic and Ethiopic versions of the Testament of Abraham (Gädlä Abrəham) is missing from all Greek textual witnesses and from the Sahidic version (4th cent. A.D.) of the Gädlä Abrəham (Heide 2012a: 41–50). This introduction points not only to the G.Y. and the Gädlä Ya^{c}əqob, but also to the commemoration day of the patriarchs on 28 Näḥase. This commemoration day is reflected in the text of G.Y. 6: 10–23 (Heide 2000: 262f., 289f.). These facts strongly suggest a common origin of the Coptic introduction to the Gädlä Abrəham and of the Coptic composition of the G.Y. The Coptic version of the G.Y. cannot have been made before the 4th cent. A.D. (Heide 2012a: 37–50; 2012b). In contrast to the Gädlä Abrəham, the author of the G.Y. emphasized asceticism and good works, against the threat of the tortures of hell and in strict obeisance of the holiday of the patriarchs. The G.Y. has to be viewed as of Christian origin. Although the introduction to the Bohairic, Arabic and Ethiopic Testament of Abraham mentions ↗Athanasius as the author of all three Testaments, the G.Y. and Gädlä Yaʿəqob were never copied outside the Coptic, Arabic and Ethiopian Orthodox Church nor outside the Beta Ǝsraʾel, respectively.

The Gəʿəz Version of the G.Y. can be divided into three types:

a) a literal translation from the Arabic, extant in at least five manuscripts (Gundä Gunde 142, 15th cent., Gundä Gunde 67, 18th cent., and EMML nos. 1496 [15th cent., cp. EMML IV, 630ff.], 8812 and 7040 [both 18th–19th cent.] and probably some additional manuscripts [cp. Erho 2012]; Heide 2012a: 12–17, 32ff.). The text transmitted in these manuscripts is also reflected in the popular edition (Täklä Mikaʾel 1986; Heide 2000: 9–14, 38–44);
b) the "Fälaša-Version", evidently based on the aforementioned text-type and extant in at least six late manuscripts only from the 18th–20th cent. (Tel Aviv, Sourasky Central Library, Faitlovitch 9, 10, 12, 13; Cambridge, University Library, Or. 1878; EMML no. 7703bis; s. Heide 2012a: 18–25, 34; 2000: 10; Erho 2012);
c) a free translation from Arabic, preserved in only one manuscript, BN Éth. 134, 15th cent. (ZotBNat 200–03; Heide 2000: 9, 30ff.).

Another 15th-cent. manuscript has been reported to come from ↗Däbrä Ṣəyon in Gärʿalta (Caquot 1988).

Yəsḥaq Täwäldä Mädḫən

Mämhər Y. (ይስሐቅ ፡ ተወልደ ፡ መድኅን; b. 27 August 1889, Gäläb, d. 8 July 1978, Asmära) was a famous Eritrean publicist, teacher and educator.

Y. was the son of Pastor ↗Täwäldä Mädḫən Gäbrä Mädḫən and wäyzäro Amätä, daughter of Pastor Zärʾa Ṣəyon Muse, one of the founding fathers of the Evangelical Church of Eritrea (ECE). His brother blattengeta Efrem Täwäldä Mädḫən was a civil servant and diplomat under aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I.

Y. was educated at the schools of the Swedish Evangelical Mission (SEM; ↗Evangeliska Fosterlands Stiftelsen; s. also ↗Sweden) in ↗Gäläb (s. EAE vol. 5) and Asmära. He received his higher education in Italy and at the American University of Beirut in 1913. Later he taught at the SEM schools in both Gäläb and Asmära for 20 years.

After the colonial government shut down all SEM's schools, Y. moved to Mərara, where he worked as a farmer and entrepreneur during ↗World War II. He returned to teaching and writing on issues related to pedagogy and the ↗Təgrəñña language during the ↗British Military Administration in post-war Eritrea under Major H. Kinneston Snell, head of Department of Education. There Y. was instrumental in helping Snell to recruit and train teachers. He compiled articles, stories, sayings, puzzles from the Nay Erətra Sämunawi Gazeṭa, added his own stories and published the book Ḥaṣṣir mäšḥaf nəbab bətəgrəñña – arbəᶜan arbaᶜtän zanta in 1943.

In 1944 he was part of a team that called a symposium to discuss the standardization of the writing and pronunciation of Təgrəñña letters and words. The same year he published the first book of arithmetic in Təgrəñña, Mäbaᵓta qʷəṣri bətəgrəñña, and became known as an innovator in the field of abbreviations and equivalents of weights and measures as well as the standardization of punctuation marks in Təgrəñña. Furthermore he promoted the enrolment of girls in schools and was instrumental in the opening of the Adulis School for Girls in Asmära and two other schools for girls in the lowlands (mätaḥət). Y. encouraged the establishment of Parents' Committees in schools and was involved in the establishment of a middle school in Bet Gärgəš. He was an active member of the Evangelical Church of Eritrea.

Yətbaräk

Y. (ይትባረክ; r. 1240[?]–68) was the last king of the ↗Zagʷe dynasty. Son of aṣe ↗Lalibäla by his wife, ↗Mäsqäl Kəbra, Y. is believed to have succeeded his cousin ↗Näᵓakkʷəto Läᵓab, son of Lalibäla's brother ↗Ḥarbay.

A text entitled Gädlä Yətbäräk is mentioned by Taddese Tamrat as "a curious composition [...] a collection of numerous anachronisms and contradictory traditions", to which "the Lalibäla community [...] did not give official recognition" (TadTChurch 63, n. 4). This manuscript (now in private possession) seems to be a copy of an original from a monastery dedicated to Y. at Mäkanä Satwa, in Təgray (the site is still unidentified). According to Taddese Tamrat, this text is mainly concerned with "the dispossession of [Y.'s] rightful place in Lasta tradition", and also tells how Lalibäla and Mäsqäl Kəbra forced Y. to go to Təgray, where he lived in poverty. Taddese Tamrat also sees this connection of Y. with Təgray reflected in the tradition about the migration of the ↗Adkämä Məlgaᵓ from ↗Säraye to Eritrea, because, according to the texts quoted by Conti Rossini (1911–12), Y. was the grandfather of their ancestor, Amotagär. In these traditions Y. is cited as the son of Lalibäla and father of a certain Gare Mariàm (Gäbrä Maryam) who was killed during a Šäwan invasion. Several manuscripts of the Acts of Y. are mentioned by Kinefe-Rigb (KinBibl 97, no. 175); a manuscript has been recorded in the collection of the church of ↗Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos (Balicka-Witakowska – Gervers 2001).

The well-known legendary tradition is reported in the ↗Bəᶜəlä nägäśt and in the Gädlä ↗Iyäsus Moᵓa (24 [text] = 19f. [tr.]): a cock was heard singing that the person who eats its head shall become king. Y. asked advice from abunä ↗Täklä Haymanot (or Iyäsus Moᵓa, respectively) and was told to eat the head immediately. He ordered the cock to be cooked for him, but the unknowing servant threw the head away, and ↗Yəkunno Amlak, at that time a boy in the service of the King (or of a rich man in the Gädlä Iyäsus Moᵓa), found and ate it. Of course no historical conclusion can be drawn from such a story – besides, similar motifs seem fairly common in African and international folklore (cf. Huntingford 1965: 5ff. and Basset 1918: 240, referred to also in Conti Rossini 1922: 291f. n. 2).

The historical elements in these and other texts (e.g., the Acts of Lalibäla and of Näᵓakkʷəto Läᵓab, the documents in CRDLib, etc.) can perhaps be the following: 1) there was a struggle for power between Y. and Näᵓakkʷəto Läᵓab – the two are mentioned, alongside Lalibäla and Mäsqäl Kəbra (who was possibly also involved in this struggle, s. TadTChurch 63), in the context of contacts between Egypt and Ethiopia at the time of John, the 74th patriarch of Alexandria (History of the Patriarchs, s. Perruchon 1899: 85, SawHist^2 vol. 3, part 2, 193); 2) Y. may have had "some responsibility" in Təgray; 3) on Lalibäla's death, Näᵓakkʷəto Läᵓab first defeated Y. in the armed struggle for succession, but soon Y. regained the throne; 4) Yəkunno Amlak was a servant of Y.; 5) according to the Gädlä Iyäsus Moᵓa, Yəkunno Amlak was accused before Y., and was imprisoned by Y. on a mountain called Mälot, for a period which is not clearly indicated; "after many days" he escaped by a rope made of monkey hair, and went to Iyäsus Moᵓa on Lake Ḥayq (where the saint, according to the same story, had arrived 20 years earlier, in the first year of Y.'s reign); 6) at last, in 1268 (but s. for the dates CerDLib II–III and XI), Yəkunno Amlak defeated Y. and killed him in the precinct of the church of Qirqos, in the "country of Ansäta which is part of Gayənt", in ↗Bägemdər; 7) after the death of Y., a certain Dəlanda, surely a Zagʷe prince, continued with the help of six generals to fight against Yəkunno Amlak for two more years (1268–70).

Y.'s entire life seems to be shrouded in mystery: Taddese Tamrat speaks repeatedly of his name being erased from historical documents (TadTChurch 62, 68 n. 1), and his nickname əlmäknun 'the hidden one' (obviously an Arabic one, although we do not know the exact reason for the usage of Arabic in this context, found in the Bəᶜəlä nägäśt, s. Conti Rossini 1922: 299f. [text] = 306f. [tr.]) points to the same direction.

Qäññ geta Y.N. (ዮፍታሔ ፡ ንጉሤ; b. 1892/93, Däbrä Gännät Elyas, Goğğam, d. 1946/47 Addis Abäba) was a prolific writer with a pronounced background in traditional church ↗education and a pioneer of Ethiopian ↗theatre and ↗Amharic drama.

Y.N. had completed three stages of traditional education (↗nəbab bet, ↗zema bet and ↗qəne bet) at ↗Däbrä Libanos by the age of 14. He also started ↗mäṣḥaf bet, but did not finish it, because of administrative tasks he had begun to receive. He was first appointed ↗mäččäne and qäññ geta, later the head of Dəmaḥ Gännät ᶜAlämayyähu Šašu parish. In 1917/18 he became ↗däbtära and later ↗aggafari of Däbrä Gännät Abbo.

In 1923/24 he was employed as an Amharic teacher at the ↗Mənilək II Secondary School. At this time he started to write his first literary works. Prior to the Italian invasion in 1935, Y. became one of the founders of the Ethiopian Patriotic Association (↗Hagär Fəqər Tiyatər). During the occupation, Y.N. fled to the Sudan, where he wrote patriotic plays and poems. After the Liberation, he returned to Addis Abäba and was appointed Vice President of the Senate.

Y.N. is said to have written many literary works, however many of them are missing, and still others are not yet analyzed or even catalogued. In fact, the only play that was published during his life time was Gʷäbäz ayyän, a drama promoting patriotic sentiment in the face of the looming Fascist menace. Among his other notable plays are Ṭəqəm yalläbbät č̣äwata, staged in 1930, and also Yäḥod amlaku qəṭat, as well as Affaǧǧäšəññ. Y.N. authored the lyrics for the Imperial National Anthem that was in use between 1930 and 1974.

Most of his works contain nationalistic motifs. He preached the unity of the people, speculated on the topics of truth and justice and scorned the mismanagement of the country's resources which, in his opinion, had made Ethiopia one of the poorest countries in the world.

Although new in genre, most of his works were quite traditional in linguistic form: many of his poems were composed using standard ↗qəne forms, or otherwise reveal an extensive usage of ↗Gə^{c}əz words.

Action in Y.N.'s plays was rudimentary; his characters designated social types, not real people. This can be explained by the fact that theatre was completely lacking roots in Ethiopian tradition. Y.N. was thus among the forerunners of modern drama in Ethiopia, introducing a new form of literature, which had not been practised until that time: the propagandistic genre. With his works, he also showed how literary forms characteristic of Gə^{c}əz could be integrated into modern Amharic poetry.

Abunä Y. (ዮሐንስ; Y. I; Yūḥannā) was a metropolitan of Ethiopia during the 9th cent. The main source of information on him is the History of the Patriarchs of Alexandria, where he is the first metropolitan of Ethiopia to be mentioned. He also appears in the chronicles of Ǧirǧis al-Makīn b. al-^{c}Amīd (tr. 1625: 183) and Abū Šākir b. Abī l-Karam Buṭrus b. ar-Rāhib (tr. 1903: 139, cp. CRAbb 195f.).

Y. was consecrated by Jacob (Ya^{c}qūb), the 50th Patriarch of Alexandria (819–30 A.D.), but he held office mainly after Jacob's death, during the patriarchates of Simeon II (Šim^{c}ūn, 830 A.D.) and Joseph I (Yūsāb, 831–49 A.D.). The biography of Joseph – written by his prison-mate – relates two episodes concerning Y. In the first, Y. was chased away by the Ethiopians while the king was at war, and, in disagreement with canon ↗law, was replaced by a new metropolitan chosen by the people themselves. Thereupon Y. retired to the Egyptian monastery of Dayr al-Baramūs (Wādi Ḥabīb) where he became a monk. Subsequently, God sent a violent epidemic upon Ethiopia, the king was defeated by his opponents, and all his followers were killed. On his return, the king discovered that Y. had been expelled on the order of the queen. He wrote to Joseph asking for Y. to return to Ethiopia. The patriarch thus sent Y. back to Ethiopia with a few of reliable aides. The second account relates that, some time after Y.'s return to Ethiopia, a group of critical clerics complained about the metropolitan's not being circumcised and insisted, together with the king, that Y. undergo this operation. However, when Y. was stripped bare to be circumcised, he was miraculously found to bear traces of circumcision – as if he had indeed been circumcised on the eighth day after his birth.

The first episode can be possibly dated to the first years of the patriarchate of Joseph (838 A.D.), when a violent bovine pestilence befell Egypt (Tedeschi 1967: 269).

Əč̣č̣äge Y. [I] (ዮሐንስ; d. ca. 23 March 1559) was the 14th abbot of ↗Däbrä Libanos of Šäwa, a contemporary of aṣe ↗Gälawdewos (CerDLib II, 153, 155f.).

The main source on Y.'s life are his Acts (Gädlä Yoḥannəs), composed in the 18th cent., two centuries after Y.'s death. Some mentions are also preserved in the sources on Gälawdewos's reign.

According to the Acts (↗Gädl), Y. was a native of Šäwa from a place called Dablat (RicEnbYoh IV, 137, 175, 202); the exact location of this place is uncertain. His four siblings, the brothers Ṗeṭros and Tewoglos and his sisters Dibora and Ǝfrata Maryam, also chose the monastic life (RicEnbYoh V, 177f.). Y., the youngest child, had to stay with his parents until their death (RicEnbYoh V, 174).

Y. completed the first stages of a traditional church ↗education at Däbrä Nägʷädgʷäd, between ca. 1524 and 1531. He also seems to have received recognition as a specialist in ↗dəggʷa (RicEnbYoh I, 138, 147).

After spending a number of years as an ascetic, Y. was appointed mämhər of Däbrä Libanos in 1541/42 under the metropolitan abunä ↗Ṗeṭros (ConzGal 54 [text]; BegCron 31; RicEnbYoh V, 190). As the term ↗əč̣č̣äge was not used for the abbot of Däbrä Libanos before the 17th cent., Y. is, in fact, never referred to as such. In his Acts, Y. is only "abba of Däbrä Libanos", whilst the chronicle of Gälawdewos designates him liqä mənet (↗Liq; ConzGal 54 [text]): the difference may be due to the specifics of the respective text genres.

In April 1552 Y. was present at the consecration of the royal church of ↗Tädbabä Maryam by abunä Ṗeṭros (RicEnbYoh V, 136, 142; ConzGal 54 [text]).

Y. was an active participant in the Emperor's wars against ↗ᶜAdal. He took part in the 1552 campaign (RicEnbYoh V, 183f.), and, according to his Acts, in the 1559 battle against ↗Nūr b. Muǧāhid (RicEnbYoh V, 192; FotiCr 105; BassÉt 113 [tr.]). According to his hagiographer, Y. fell in that battle, which makes him a martyr (↗Martyrdom; s. also CerDLib II, 153). According to other sources, however, he died at Däbrä Libanos. Y. was succeeded by abba Yoḥannəs [II].

Y. is credited with the authorship of a ↗mälkəᵓ in honour of St. ↗Täklä Haymanot (BegCron 33).

Besides providing information on Y.'s life, his gädl is an important source of religious and political information about Gälawdewos's reign. It contains many details on the Emperor's court and family and on other contemporaries, such as ↗Fanuᵓel, and reflects the hagiographer's anti-Catholic stance directed against the ↗Jesuits at Gälawdewos's court. It also mentions events such as the destruction of Däbrä Libanos by ↗Aḥmad b. Ibrāhīm al-Ġāzī (Grañ) in 1532 (RicEnbYoh V, 181) and alludes to the ensuing Oromo invasion: Y. had to escape the Oromo threat fleeing Däbrä Libanos ca. 1556/57 (RicEnbYoh IV, 142, 171), possibly more than once (RicEnbYoh I, 191).

The Acts reflect the beginning of a period of transition in the history of the community of Däbrä Libanos, as it was during that period that they moved in the direction of the ↗Gondär area (Rossignol 2004: 122). It seems to be a transitional period for the Däbrä Libanos community and for its evolution. The importance of this change may be among the reasons for the composition of the hagiography.

Abunä Y. (ዮሐንስ, also known as Y. II; fl. early 14th cent.) was metropolitan (↗P̣ap̣pas) of the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox (Täwaḥədo) Church from ca. 1310–30. He succeeded abunä ↗Qerəllos. The date of Y.'s arrival in Ethiopia is still unknown, but his episcopacy can be approximately placed in the last period of the reign of aṣe ↗Wədəm Räᶜad and the first half of that of ↗ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon I.

Y. appears twice in Ethiopian hagiographical texts, in the Vitae (↗Gädl) of abunä ↗Täklä Haymanot (Budge 1906: 69f., 206ff.) and abunä ↗Bäṣälotä Mikaᵓel (Conti Rossini 1905: 22). His name also appears in a land charter granted by ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon to the monastery of ↗Däbrä Ḥayq Ǝsṭifanos (Taddesse Tamrat 1970: 97).

In the hagiographical context, Y. played an ambiguous role. On the one hand, he represents the decadence of the religious spirit at the royal court denounced by Bäṣälotä Mikaᵓel. According to his acts, Bäṣälotä Mikaᵓel publicly accused Y. of simony for demanding payment for administrating the sacraments and ordaining priests.

On the other hand, Y. represents the allegiance of the high ecclesiastical hierarchy of the state with the reform established by the monastic world of these times. According to his Vita, Täklä Haymanot was proposed by Y. to be bishop of half of the kingdom. The monk declined the offer, but could consecrate churches and ↗tabot. The same proposal was made to ↗Filəppos, second successor of Täklä Haymanot by the metropolitan abunä ↗Yaᶜəqob (Turaiev 1905: 174–77), and to the 9th abbot of ↗Däbrä Libanos of Šäwa ↗Märḥa Krəstos by abunä ↗Yəsḥaq (Kur 1972: 88 [text]). No further information about Y. is available except these two episodes and the land charter. The date of Y.'s death is unknown; he was succeeded by abunä Yaᶜəqob.

Yoḥannəs I

Aṣe Y., (ዮሐንስ, regnal name Aᵓəlaf Sägäd; d. 19 July 1682, Ṭädda) was a Gondärine king (r. 17 October 1667–19 July 1682; ↗Gondärine kingdom). In contrast to his father and predecessor, aṣe ↗Fasilädäs, Y. was pliant, weak-willed, and shunned controversy and confrontation. He was dominated by the strong personalities around him, especially first minister blattengeta Mälkəᵓa Krəstos and ətege ↗Säblä Wängel, Y.'s wife. His reign was marked by religious strife and almost constant warfare.

In his first year (1668), Y. executed two Catholic priests who had appeared in ↗Bägemdər (CrumLand 82). That same year, he convoked a synod which issued momentous decrees. The "Franks" (↗färänğ), descendants of the Portuguese soldiers who had entered the kingdom in the early 1540s (↗Portugal: Luso-Ethiopians), as well as remnants of the ↗Jesuit converts of the 1620s, were offered the choice of conversion to Orthodoxy or expulsion from the kingdom (GuiIohan 9f. [text] = 8f. [tr.]). Muslims and the ↗Kayla Betä Ǝsraᵓel, long-settled in Gondär, were to live separately in their own quarters; and Christians were forbidden to intermarry or be employed by either group. Accordingly, the following April, the Catholics, living collectively in ↗Ṭaqussa, were escorted to the frontier with ↗Sinnār, disarmed, and forced across the border—the end of Portuguese presence and influence in the kingdom. Muslims and the Betä Ǝsraᵓel were settled below town on the banks of the Qaḥa (cp. ↗Kayla Meda and ↗Fälaša Bet; Perruchon 1899: 173; GuiIohan 9f., 35f. [text] = 8f., 36 [tr.]; DombrChr 59 [text] = 205 [tr.]).

During the reign of Y., who was a ↗Qəbat partisan, the quarrel between the Qəbat and ↗Täwaḥədo clerical camps matured and flared up in ecclesiastical debates. In pursuit of doctrinal supremacy, the court appointed and dismissed several ↗əččäge as it sought to weaken the Täwaḥədo opposition, and, in 1671, it went so far as to install a new metropolitan, abunä ↗Sinoda, while his predecessor, abunä ↗Krəstodolu II, favourable to Täwaḥədo, was still alive and active (Perruchon 1899: 173; DombrChr 59 [text] = 207 [tr.]; BassÉt II, 292). Thereafter, a succession of synods dealt with doctrinal questions (↗Christology) but also with ↗canon law as it related to marriage, and in particular, to the royal union. Säblä Wängel was a first-cousin or half-cousin of Y., a fact that produced heated controversy resulting in decrees of excommunication from Qəbat and Täwaḥədo monasteries and even an attempt on Y.'s life by extremist Qəbat monks in 1674, who accused Y. of failing to respect the laws and customs of Orthodoxy. The matter was not settled until a synod in 1678 in which both abunä Sinoda and the Alexandrine patriarch announced their recognition of the marriage as legitimate (GuiIohan 9f. [text] = 8f. [tr.]; CrumLand 82). Y. and Säblä Wängel had several children together; among the best known are Yosṭos (d. 1676, cp. GuiIohan 18 [text] = 18 [tr.], Bosc-Tiessé 2008: 120f.), Amlakawit (d. 22 January 1669, grandmother of aṣe ↗Yosṭos), ↗Ǝleni, aṣe ↗Tewoflos, and aṣe ↗Iyasu I (CrumLand 90).

Despite his anti-foreign behaviour towards the Jesuits and Portuguese, Y. entertained diplomatic relations with foreign rulers just as his father had done. In 1671 he sent the Armenian merchant ḫoğa ↗Murād on a mission to the Great Moghul in India (DonMurad 38), and in 1672 to the Dutch governor-general in Batavia (Jakarta; DonMurad 25, 47ff.). In 1679 the Armenian Yovhannēs T^{c}iwt^{c}iwnči, archbishop of Šemiramakert (Van) and perhaps kat^{c}ołikos (bishop) of Ał^{c}amar (1663–83), brought to Gondär a bone of the hand of ↗Ewosṭatewos. It was apparently the same Murād who was given the task of interrogating Yovhannes in order to prove the relics' authenticity (GuiIohan 38f. [text] = 39f. [tr.]; DonMurad 182).

Much of Y.'s reign was taken up with warfare. His armies raided the ↗"Šanqəllä" for booty and slaves, and campaigned against the Oromo (Perruchon 1899: 172). The years 1669 to 1674 saw almost annual campaigns in the ↗Agäw country south of Lake Ṭana. Y. personally led his armies, which ravaged ↗Mätäkkäl in central ↗Agäw Mədər, killing, plundering, carrying off captives and cattle, and forcing conversions to Christianity, a process whereby Y. imposed Orthodoxy upon much of Agäw Mədər (DombrChr 60 [text] = 209 [tr.]). So devastating were the raids in 1670 that the Agäw of Gam begged to be Christianized and agreed to pay tribute to avoid further attacks (GuiIohan 12 [text] = 12 [tr.]).

From 1676 to 1681 the kingdom was torn by religious internal wars, first in ↗Angot and ↗Lasta, then in southern ↗Təgray. These were Täwaḥədo lands whose clerics, nobles, and peasants rose in revolt against Y. The Lastan insurrection was bitterly fought and led to bloodshed not seen since the days of aṣe ↗Susənyos and the Catholics. By 1678 the Täwaḥədo-inspired rebellion had engulfed districts in Təgray, where two nobles, ↗Fares, future ras bitwäddäd under Iyasu I, and ↗Zämaryam supported a pretender to the throne, Maḫdäro Krəstos (DombrChr 59 [text] = 207f. [tr.]; GuiIohan 26f. [text.] = 26f. [tr.]). After campaigns that devastated southern Təgray led by Y's commander, däǧǧazmač ↗Dəlbä Iyäsus of Ǝndärta, Zamaryam defected and Fares was captured and submitted in 1681.

The death of Y.'s first minister Mälkəʾa Krəstos in 1680 set the stage for a reversal of court policies (Perruchon 1899: 175). A synod in May 1680 affirmed the divinity of Christ by union, the Täwaḥədo creed, and at another in October 1681, Qəbat and its clerical adherents were condemned, a development in which Y. acquiesced. Meanwhile, discontented nobles rallied around Iyasu, the heir apparent, perhaps impatient for the throne and partial toward Täwaḥədo. In January 1681 they staged an unsuccessful revolt, during which Iyasu fled across the Abbay to Oromo country. He returned in May only after Y. promised him protection; even so, Iyasu attempted a second flight following the 1681 synod, this time unsuccessfully. Despite these events, Iyasu's succession was assured and with it the ascendance of Täwaḥədo.

Y. built a castle beside that of Fasilädäs, completed in the last year of his reign, and the churches of Ṭädda Ǝgziʾabəḥer-Ab and Məṣraḥa Maryam on an island of Lake Ṭana, where he and his relatives are buried (GuiIohan 40, 49f.). Y. and Säblä Wängel are remembered in Gondär as a saintly couple who, rather than tax their subjects, supported themselves by weaving and selling mats and rugs. Y. had begun his reign with an amnesty for prisoners, cancelling a tax on cattle, and emptying the royal treasury by alms-giving, an act he repeated just before he died. Because of such deeds, he is known as Ṣadəqu, "the Righteous", but his personal piety must be weighed against the religious intolerance and bloody campaigns that characterized his reign.

Yoḥannəs II

Aṣe Y. (ዮሐንስ; b. ca. 1696/97, d. 15 October 1769, Gondär) was one of the short-lived puppet kings installed by ras ↗Mikaʾel Səḥul at the beginning of the ↗Zämänä mäsafənt. Y. was one of the two sons (alongside ↗Dawit III) of aṣe ↗Iyasu I and his favorite concubine ↗Qəddəste. Iyasu's sons with other concubines, aṣe ↗Bäkaffa (with Maryamawit) and aṣe ↗Täklä Haymanot I (with ↗Mäläkotawit), also sat on the throne in the course of time.

The violent death of Iyasu in 1706 caused the rival forces in ↗Gondär to fight over his succession. What followed were decades of unrest, changing coalitions and unstable rulers, giving room for such powerful figures as ətege ↗Bərhan Mogäsa (Məntəwwab) and ras Mikaʾel Səḥul. Finally, at the beginning of May 1769, Mikaʾel Səḥul murdered aṣe ↗Iyoʾas, Məntəwwab's grandson (GuiIyas 251 [text] = 260 [tr.]; BruNile II, 706). A few days earlier Y., who had already passed the age of 70 and had spent most of his life in custody (in 1721 he spent the rainy season with his brother Bäkaffa; cp. Shiferaw Bekele 2002: 97), was fetched from the royal prison of ↗Wähni Amba and put on the throne by Mikaʾel Səḥul. He was crowned on 10 May. Y. was also given Mikaʾel Səḥul's granddaughter Wälättä Śəllase (regnal name Ṣədəq Mogäsa) in marriage. He had, however, previously been engaged to other women, and his four children had different mothers. Apparently his sons ↗Täklä Giyorgis, ↗Täklä Haymanot II (his mother was wäyzäro Abalä Maryam, ms. BritLib Orient. 511, fol. 26) were both born in Wähni Amba, and brought to the Gondärine court with their father.

Y. was a weak and old emperor, who merely served as Mikaʾel Səḥul's puppet. Having spent his life praying and studying the Holy Scriptures, Y. had little interest in politics. He refused to lead the army into the battle, and allegedly preferred to return to Wähni Amba. His request was, however, rejected by Mikaʾel Səḥul, and discontent between the two grew.

Y. only reigned for five months. He died in the morning hours after a long period of illness. He was buried at Täklä Haymanot church in the same grave as his half-brother Bäkaffa, secretly and without a mourning ceremony. Y. was succeeded by his 15-year-old son Täklä Haymanot on 18 October, again only due to the intervention of Mikaʾel Səḥul.

The general source material on Y. should be viewed carefully, since most of it was copied from the accounts of James ↗Bruce (BruNile), who, however, did not arrive in Gondär until a few months after the Emperor's death and had to rely on hearsay. He reports that Y. was poisoned by Mikaʾel Səḥul during breakfast (BruNile II, 709), which seems unlikely (cp. Shiferaw Bekele 2002: 101). According to another account passed down by Bruce but probably more reliable, Y. was one-armed/handed (cp. ibid. 103f.). The second hand had allegedly been amputated by his own brother Bäkaffa when Y. tried to flee his custody. This story has admittedly found its way into Ethiopian historiography (cp. ms. EMML no. 1706 fol. 50; Getatchew Haile in PICES 10, 370 [text] = 372 [tr.]). In the chronicle of Bäkaffa numerous accounts of amputations and punishments are featured, Y. is, however, not mentioned (s. Shiferaw Bekele 2002: 104).

Yoḥannəs [III]

The metropolitan abunä Y. (ዮሐንስ; d. 15 November 1761, Gondär) succeeded abunä ↗Krəstodolu III and was a contemporary of emperors ↗Iyasu II and ↗Iyoʾas I.

The royal chronicles preserve a detailed account of Y.'s arrival in Ethiopia. Several years after Krəstodolu's death, in 1744, Iyasu II sent a delegation to Egypt, with a gift of 450 ounces of ↗gold, in order to ask for a new metropolitan. The mission, formed by ↗Giyorgis the Egyptian, aläqa Tewodros of Däbrä Sälalo, abba Lukyanos of Azäzo and three Muslims, had difficulties from the very beginning. The ↗nāʾib of Massawa required one half of the entire gold as compensation for permission to board ship. At Jeddah, during the long wait for the next ship, Lukyanos converted to ↗Islam, so that it was only aläqa Tewodros who reached Cairo and forwarded Iyasu's request to the Coptic patriarch, John XVII (1727–45). On 1 October 1743, a monk from Scete (Askät; Wādī n-Naṭrūn) was finally selected and consecrated metropolitan for Ethiopia, assuming the name of Y. On 18 April 1744, Y. and Tewodros reached Massawa, but were again halted by the nāʾib who wanted to be paid for permission to pass. However, by November the new metropolitan was established in the monastery of ↗Däbrä Bizän, having brought with him everything necessary for his episcopal service, including meron, liturgical vestments and books. He subsequently met the emperor, and on 23 January 1745, he finally reached his seat in ↗Gondär.

Around this time a Syrian priest appeared who, supported by ras ↗Mikaᵓel Səḥul of Təgray, claimed to be the legitimate metropolitan appointed by the patriarch of Antioch. In 1747 the pretender was put on trial by Y. and expelled from the country.

In 1752, the Franciscans Remedius ↗Prutky and Martin Lang arrived at the Ethiopian court with the mission of reaching an accord between the Catholic and the Ethiopian Orthodox Churches. As a result of strong opposition from Y. and the Ethiopian clergy, Iyasu II had to expel the Franciscans.

In 1755, Y. was in charge of the ↗coronation of Iyoᵓas as the new emperor. In 1758 he blessed the relics of emperors ↗Bäkaffa and Iyasu II on the occasion of their translation, following the orders of queen Məntəwwab (↗Bərhan Mogäsa) to ↗Däbrä Ṣ́äḥay Qʷəsqʷam.

In October 1761, Y. was confronted with the emergence of the ↗Ṣägga doctrine. He condemned the followers of the teaching proposed by the monk abba Ǝšäte – and supported by əč̣č̣äge Henok.

Y. was buried in the Gondärine church of Aṣṣaṣame Qəddus Mikaᵓel. He was succeeded, eight years later, by abunä ↗Yosäb.

Aṣe Y. (ዮሐንስ, nəguśä nägäśt, s. RubActa I, 213; b. ca. 1797, d. 1873/74, Aksum) was the last titular puppet ruler of the ↗Gondärine empire during the ↗Zämänä mäsafənt.

Son of aṣe ↗Täklä Giyorgis I, Y. first ascended the throne on 29 August 1840, with the help of his much older wife ətege ↗Mänän of Wärrä Himano, the de-facto ruler of Gondär. He was deposed a year later because of his support for däǧǧazmač ↗Wəbe Ḫaylä Maryam (which displeased Mänän's son and co-regent ras ↗Ali Alula; CRNuov 381), but became the titular ruler again in 1844/45. His wife's political fate also affected him: when she was captured in June 1847 by her grandson-in-law däǧǧazmač Kaśa (later ↗Tewodros II), Y. was likewise detained (cp. d'Abbadie 1868:24). He was back on the throne in 1850/51, and then continued to claim it, in competition with aṣe ↗Śahlä Dəngəl and his step-son ras Ali "nəguśä Ḥabäša", who in 1852 ratified the treaty of 2 November 1849, concluded between the "king of Abyssinia" (meaning ras Ali or Y.) and Great Britain, with his and the puppet Emperor's seal (RubActa I, 187f., 193). Y. was dethroned in 1851 by Kaśa, who took over Y.'s titles in 1855 (Y., however, continued to use the titles ↗nəguś and ḥaṣe [↗Aṣe] in his correspondence, s. RubActa I, 248, III, 14f.). Once dethroned, Y. separated from Mänän, had to leave the palace, and lived in a separate house in poverty. In 1854, he asked Napoléon III of ↗France to help him.

From his letters we know that Y. entertained good relations with the d'↗Abbadie brothers (calling Arnauld ras, perhaps a title conferred by him?), which included sympathy for their religious aims, i.e. furthering a Catholic mission in Ethiopia. Antoine d'Abbadie describes him as an "élite personality" and "a good king" (d'Abbadie 1868:24f.). In 1851 Y. converted to ↗Catholicism (CrumMis 79; OMahPh 69, 89, 117). Given his lack of influence and power, however, this did not cause any major unrest. In 1854, Y. renounced ↗Catholicism and returned to the Orthodox faith (RubActa I, 248).

A de-facto-hostage of Tewodros II for 13 years (RubActa III, 14: letter of 1869 to Napoléon III), at times detained at ↗Mäqdäla, Y. disappeared from the records; it was even speculated that he died in 1851 (s. BudHist 483, who characterized him as a drinker, passing most of his time in his "harem"). Y. was liberated by the ↗Napier expedition in April 1868. He went to Təgray, where he established himself at Aksum, as his father had done before him (RubActa III, 14).

When the power-struggle between the former wag šum, aṣe ↗Täklä Giyorgis II, the rəʾəsä mäkʷanənt Kaśa Mərč̣a of Təgray (later aṣe ↗Yoḥannəs IV), and däǧǧazmač ↗Kaśa Golǧa, from another Solomonic line, reached its peak in 1871, Y. tried to use this chance to regain the throne with the help of ↗France. In an unpublished correspondence with the French government he suggested that Kaśa Golǧa would be nominated head of government under French protection, with himself as Emperor, and ↗Samuʾel Giyorgis as chief minister. On paper they formed a "counter-government", but due to the French lack of involvement in the region following the Franco–Prussian war of 1871 this plot had no repercussions.

Y. had no known children, but brought up his brother's orphaned son ləǧ Täsämma Zärubabel and educated him in the Catholic faith. In a letter, written from the Catholic mission of ↗Kärän, the prince suggested that Y. had remained Catholic (RubActa II, 187). Y. figures in a recent American novel (Kurtz 2003).

VI. Yoḥannəs IV in Ethiopian imagination

Aṣe Y. (ዮሐንስ, birth name Kaḥśay [better known under its Amharic form, Kaśa], horse name "Abba Bäzbəz", "Wärrəsaw"; b. between 1831 and 1837, May Bəḥa, Tämben, d. 10 March 1889, Mätämma; ruler of ↗Təgray 1867–71, "King of Zion" and "King of Kings" of Ethiopia [as shown in his seal] 1872–89) is remembered as one of the leading architects of the modern state of Ethiopia.

I. Origin and rise to power

On the side of his father, ↗Mərč̣a [or Mərrəč̣a] Wäldä Kidan, Y. descended from the ruling dynasty of ↗Tämben where both his father and grandfather bore the traditional title of šum tämben, while his mother, Səllas Dəmṣ́u, was a daughter of balgäda Dəmṣ́u of ↗Ǝndärta and Tabotu Wäldu of ↗ʿAgamä, hence a niece of ↗Säbagadis Wäldu. He thus descended from the ruling families of Tämben, ʿAgamä and Ǝndärta. He also had connubial connections with some notables who came to his aid in the early stages: his cousin, Amläsu Arʾaya Śəllase, married ras ↗Alula Ǝngəda who remained loyal to Y. throughout his life; another cousin, Alṭaš Wahəd, married ras ↗Wäldä Mikaʾel Sälomon who fought on his side in the second half of the 1860s, though later he became his opponent. His sister, ↗Dənqənäš, was married first to Gobäze (later aṣe ↗Täklä Giyorgis) who supported his rebellion against aṣe ↗Tewodros II in the late 1860s and later to ras bitwäddäd Gäbrä Kidan, one of the leading supporters of Y. His chroniclers further remotely connect him genealogically to the branches of the ↗Solomonic dynasty in ↗Gondär and ↗Šäwa. All these relationships contributed toward Y.'s rise to power in the 1860s and 70s.

The story of the first half of his life is poorly documented. Even the date of his birth is uncertain; various sources place it between 1831 and 1837. The available sources merely indicate that he was the youngest of his siblings, that he had a seriously ailing childhood, that he received some church ↗education, and that he was initiated to manhood after killing some wild animals (lions and/or elephants) for trophies. The first mention of his appearance in the political arena comes up in connection with his visit to the imperial court of Tewodros in 1864–65 in the company of his brothers, Gugsa and Maru. Gugsa was given the title of ↗däǧǧazmač, and Maru that of ↗fitawrari. The lowest title, of ↗balambaras, was bestowed upon Kaśa, who was subsequently assigned to administer a sub-district within the governorship of his elder brother, Gugsa.

Shortly after their return to Təgray, Kaśa rebelled against the rule of Tewodros. What prompted his rebellion is not well established. Often two explanations, which are not essentially contradictory, are forwarded by the sources: the first is related to his dissatisfaction with the rank and function given to him by the sovereign, while the second interprets his rebellion as a response to the appeal of abunä ↗Sälama who in 1867 wrote from prison to many notables condemning the injustices of Tewodros. In any case, for some time he (together with his followers) retired to the eastern lowlands and found refuge among the ᶜAfar, from which ethnic group he married a Muslim after she had been baptized with the name Ṭəbäba Śəllase. Returning to the highlands, he raised more men and began his military campaign: in the years 1864-67, he consecutively defeated šum Ṣəraᶜ Gäbrä Mikaʾel, däǧǧazmač Baryaʾu Gäbrä Ṣadəq of ᶜAdwa and däǧǧazmač Täklä Giyorgis Qawlos of Šire. Baryaʾu transferred his allegiance to Kaśa whom he served faithfully until he was killed in a battle some ten years later. Täklä Giyorgis (who had killed Kaśa's mother, Səllas) fell in battle, and Kaśa subsequently assumed his title of däǧǧazmač. Kaśa then formed an alliance with wag šum Gobäze Gäbrä Mädḫən of Lasta against Tewodros and began to harass the imperial representatives on both sides of the ↗Märäb. He defeated the governors of ↗Säläwa and ↗Kələttä Awləᶜalo. In ↗Ḥamasen, däǧǧazmač ↗Ḫaylu Täwäldä Mädḫən, who contemplated resistance, was confined and replaced with däǧǧazmač (later ras) ↗Wäldä Mikaʾel Sälomon who had actively participated in Kaśa's military campaign against the imperial officials in Təgray.

By the time the British ↗Napier expedition against Tewodros arrived in the region, Kaśa had attained full control of most of the then province of Təgray as well as of the Christian highlands of Eritrea. He had even begun to conquer the regions west of the ↗Täkkäze including ↗Ṣällämt, ↗Wälqayt, ↗Ṣägäde and parts of ↗Səmen. Thus, the British needed his permission to cross his territory and reach ↗Mäqdäla. Kaśa allowed them free passage as well as the privilege to purchase provisions from the local markets on condition that they left the country immediately after the mission. Upon their return from the Mäqdäla expedition, the British expressed their gratitude by giving him weapons for a present: "a battery of mountain guns and mortars and sufficient smooth-bore muskets for one regiment" (ZewYohan 29).

Following the death of Tewodros, his brother-in-law Gobäze Gäbrä Mädḫən had himself crowned as nəguśä nägäśt ↗Täklä Giyorgis II. He successfully suppressed rebellions of ras ↗Wäldä Maryam of Bägemdər and Fares Ali of ↗Yäǧǧu, and reached a peace agreement with Mənilək of Šäwa (future aṣe ↗Mənilək II). Kaśa, however, refused to acknowledge the new emperor. Moreover, he had the new metropolitan abunä ↗Atnatewos sent from Alexandria in June 1869, and kept him in his dominion. Finally, on 11 July 1871, Täklä Giyorgis confronted Kaśa in a battle in the vicinity of ᶜAdwa (battle of ᶜAssäm), but was defeated and confined to ↗Ǝnda Abba Sälama, Tämben, where he would die two years later. Upon vanquishing the rebellions of Wäldä Iyäsus in ᶜAzäbo and ↗Kaśa Golǧa on the northern peripheries, on 21 January 1872 Y. was crowned in Aksum as Y. IV (↗Coronation). His ↗seal also changed from "... rəʾəsä mäkʷanənt" ['head of the notables'] to "... nəguśä Ṣəyon, nəguśä nägäśt zäʾItyopya" ['King of Zion, King of Kings of Ethiopia'].

II. Internal policy

The principle of Y.'s internal policy was to unite and aggrandize Ethiopia, a traditional ideal which had been revived by Tewodros II after almost a century of dissension and decline. To insure the realization of this policy, he toured each region and appointed governors, usually from the local nobility, regardless of their former attitudes toward him, as long as they submitted and expressed to him their unflinching loyalty. He thus managed, as the contemporary English vice-consul put it, "to hold the scales of justice with a firm and even hand"; "it was in 1884 the boast of King Johannes that a child could pass through his dominions unharmed" (Wylde 1901:7, 31, 33). In the first six years of his reign, he succeeded in achieving the unity of the predominantly Christian provinces, including ↗Wag and ↗Lasta, ↗Səmen and ↗Bägemdər, Amhara ↗Sayənt, ↗Goǧǧam, ↗Wällo and ↗Šäwa. He crowned Mənilək king of Šäwa in 1878 and ↗Täklä Haymanot king of Goǧǧam and Käfa in 1881 and encouraged them to expand the empire to the south, east and west. However, this advice created rivalry between the two regional kings, which came to a climax in the battle of ↗Ǝmbabo in June 1882. Y. reprimanded both of them for fighting without his permission, punished them by taking away a province from the jurisdiction of each of them and defined the direction of territories to be conquered by each of the two kings.

In the first ten years Y. had no fixed capital for his empire. He camped for about two and a half months in Aksum at the time of his coronation, but there is no indication that he would make it the imperial capital. It seems that he intended to revive the tradition of a mobile capital of medieval Ethiopia. There were, nonetheless, three centres which he frequented: ᶜAdwa where he usually celebrated ↗Mäsqäl, ↗Amba Č̣ara and Sämära (↗Däbrä Tabor), both of which were located in Bägemdər. In the early 1880s, however, he chose ↗Mäqälä (Ǝndärta) as his centre where he had a palace erected by an Italian craftsman, Giacomo ↗Naretti.

III. Religious policy

Y. inherited the empire encumbered with three religious questions which provoked him to seek a solution: the internal dissensions of the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox (Täwaḥədo) Church (EOC), the threat of ↗Islam to the state and Christianity, and foreign missionary activities (↗Missions). He regarded all of them as menaces to the unity and stability of the state.

By 1878, Y. was ready to tackle the problems by summoning a council at ↗Boru Meda, Wällo. Most of the high dignitaries and notables of Ethiopia were present at the council. The leading theologians of the three major disputing groups of the EOC – ↗Karra (predominant in the north), ↗Ṣägga or Śost Lədät (prevalent in Bägemdər and Šäwa) and ↗Qəbat (based in Goǧǧam and Lasta) – tried to defend their respective doctrines. The discussion was doomed to be biased, and some of the prominent ecclesiastical masters were brought in chains to the council. On the other hand, chronicler Gäbrä Śəllase notes (cf. BTafY, ch. 27) that Y. readily accepted corrections made by a notable on procedural matters. Apparently, he had a long-prepared plan for the council, as he had a letter from the patriarch of Alexandria read out at the end of the disputation which endorsed the imperial tenet. All those who did not adhere to the doctrine of Alexandria were punished with mutilation of the tongue or were forced to go in exile to Jerusalem and Rome. The policy transcended Y.'s reign, though there were indications that the suppressed tenets had by no means been eradicated.

Immediately following the council of Boru Meda, Y. appointed a couple of church scholars to conduct the Christianization of Muslim Wällo (↗Conversions). He had Muḥammad Ali, the governor of ↗Wärrä Himano, baptized under the name of ↗Mikaʾel (ras, later nəguś) and he himself became his godfather, while Mənilək sponsored Amäde Libän "Abba Waṭäw" (renamed Ḫaylä Maryam) of Wärräbabo. In the same year, a coercive decree was issued obliging Muslims to convert to ↗Christianity. Y.'s justification for his measure was allegedly that ↗Aḥmad b. Ibrāhīm al-Ġāzī ("Grañ") had Islamized the country by the power of the sword; likewise, he should apply force to Christianize the people. Nonetheless, the consequence was ruinous: many Muslims emigrated to the Sudan; foreign ↗trade, which was predominantly in the hands of Muslims, sharply declined; and several dignitaries of the empire were unwilling to enforce the decree. The measure also attracted criticism from foreign powers, a circumstance which turned out to be detrimental to Y.'s foreign policy. Two years later, the project was abandoned and Y. began to deny in his correspondence that an application of force had ever taken place.

Another stumbling block to Y's foreign policy was his relation with foreign missionaries. Both Protestant and Catholic missions had been established in the distant north long before Y. was crowned. There is no indication that Y. resented their presence as long as they were not involved in politics. Some of the French Catholic missionaries in ↗Akkälä Guzay could not, however, remain neutral. A contemporary document (cf. Bairu Tafla 2007: 190ff.) asserts that they exacted a particular annual tribute which was traditionally due to the ↗liqä kahənat of the Orthodox Church. At the time Kaśa and Gobäze were threatening to fight each other, the missionaries ridiculed the leaders by naming their dogs after them and making them occasionally fight for fun. A letter from the missionaries inviting Kaśa's rival to attack is also said to have been found in the possession of Täklä Giyorgis when he was taken captive in 1871. But the most serious provocation was that the native converts were advised to refuse payment of tax and to seek French protection. In the late 1870s, Y. sent a military contingent against them and destroyed several Catholic villages and looted their possessions. The missionaries withdrew to ↗Massawa for their safety and were not allowed to return, while the inhabitants of Akkalä Guzay surrendered to Y.'s rule. The Protestants were denied permission to teach in the empire and, hence, remained on the peripheries. When external criticism persisted and hardly any friendly diplomatic co-operation with Christian Europe was in sight in the late 1880s, Y. exerted pressure on Mənilək to expel all European missionaries, including those who conducted their activities in Muslim and/or areas where traditional religions dominated.

IV. Foreign relations

Another concern of Y. was the retrieval of lost territories, the delimitation of the boundaries of his empire, and the defence of the sovereignty of the state against the threat and interference of foreign powers. He visualized his country as an island of Christianity in a sea of Islam. With this in mind, he made friendly overtures to several powers including ↗Russia, ↗Italy, ↗Germany, ↗Austria, ↗France, ↗Greece, and the ↗United Kingdom soliciting their peaceful involvement in settling his dispute with ↗Egypt through negotiation. The reaction of the West was, however, rather apathetic, as it had more interest in Muslim Egypt than in Christian Ethiopia.

The first threat came from Egypt which, with the help of European and American adventurers, attempted the military control of all the African territories lying south-east of the Sudan. Y. defeated the invading forces at ↗Gundät and ↗Gura^{c} in 1875 and 1876, respectively. Two immediate by-products of these victories were the capture of a quantity of modern weapons and the consecration of a Coptic metropolitan together with three bishops for Ethiopia (↗Egyptian-Ethiopian war). More importantly, he attained respect for the sovereignty of his country, and for the first time European powers began to send delegations to his court, though their indifference to Y.'s cause never changed.

On behalf of Egypt, Great Britain negotiated an agreement known as the Treaty of ^{c}Adwa or the ↗Hewett Treaty of 1884 by which Y. was promised the right to import weapons through the port of Massawa and to take over some territories which were under Egyptian control, provided that he granted safe conduct to the Egyptian garrisons threatened by the ↗Mahdists of the Sudan. Y. fulfilled his obligation, but Great Britain conceded the occupation of Massawa by Italy, a non-signatory of the treaty. Still worse, Great Britain proposed the cession of certain coastal territories and an apology from Y. when in February 1887 ras ↗Alula Ǝngəda, the governor of the Eritrean highlands (↗Märäb Məllaš), attacked an intruding Italian army contingent at ↗Dog^{c}ali and killed over 400 of its soldiers. Y. refused the request, as he saw no reason why he should apologize for fighting the invaders of his country. For him, the cession of territories, regardless of their size or importance, could not be a point of discussion. Nonetheless, the Italians occupied the greater part of Eritrea two years later when Y. mobilized his men and marched to ↗Mätämma in the north-west to encounter the Mahdists of the Sudan who had invaded Bägemdər and destroyed Gondär. He was fatally wounded in the heat of the battle on 9 March 1889 and died the next day. Upon his death, the army, which was on the point of victory, disintegrated and fled. The Mahdists cut off Y.'s head and brandished it in Khartoum.

V. Personal life

Prior to and during his reign, Y. had numerous internal and external critics who either recorded stories about him in their books or spread anecdotes by word of mouth. Many of the criticisms were, however, exaggerated, deliberately distorted, or total fabrications with sinister designs, as later studies discovered (cf. Wylde 1901: 43ff.; Zewde Gebre-Sellassie in EncAfr 251ff.).

Y. had some personal peculiarities which gave rise to some of the criticisms. One of them was his resentment towards ↗tobacco. Even if, according to Wylde (1901: 44f.), who knew the sovereign well, the rumours of Y.'s "cruelty to smokers [...] are greatly exaggerated", on several occasions smokers "had their lips and nose slightly scarified so as, until the slight wound healed, they could not use tobacco". It is not clear whether he resented tobacco for its smell or on account of religious belief. Whatever the cause, no decree banning the plant or its use is known to have been issued.

Y. was also known to have been averse to alcoholic ↗drinks, though he offered them lavishly to his guests at banquets (↗Gəbər). In general, he was inclined to disciplinary self-denial. He lived in celibacy after the death of his wife, Ṭəbäbä Śəllase, and mother of his only son, ↗Ar$^{\supset}$aya Śəllase, whose sudden death in 1888 at the age of 18 caused him inexpressible grief. It appears that this grievous loss, coinciding with the impending troubles – the encroachment of the Italians from the north, the incursions of the Mahdists from the north-west, and the desertion of nəguś Mənilək and nəguś Täklä Haymanot in the central highlands – drove him to despair so that he fought in Mätämma unconventionally in the front and, like Gälawdewos, became a martyr. He received women in audience only in the ↗addaraš during working hours, a practice which once offended a lady of high birth (wäyzäro Laqäčč, sister to aṣe Täklä Giyorgis and wife of nəguś Täklä Haymanot) who arrived at the court late in the afternoon and, hence, was obliged to wait until the next day to be received. In this connection, aläqa ↗Lämläm speculated (and probably it was also a prevalent contemporary rumour) that the sovereign had a monkish cap which he put on at night (cf. ChMonV no. 72, ms. BN Éth. 259, fols. 18v–19r, ed. Chaîne 1913) There is, however, no evidence that Y. had a prejudice of any degree against ↗matrimony.

The story of Y.'s ethical life has nonetheless been tainted by a political legend coined after his death that he had a second son (cf. ↗Mängäša Yoḥannəs) by his elder brother's wife, and the legend eventually crept into history as a fact. Although a tradition of the country allowed the taking over of a brother's widow under certain strict conditions, there is no indication whatsoever that Mängäša was born after the death of Gugsa which occurred in 1869 (according to ZewYohan 280). 1867 is given as the birth date of Mängäša in the above-mentioned article, although other sources place it two years earlier (cf. Zewde Gebre-Sellassie in EncAfr 104; PrRosDic 223). Rohlfs, one of the most reliable European writers, did not refer to him as a 13-year-old child when he met him as a full-fledged imperial official in Šire in January 1881. He discussed with him a financial matter which Y. had planned for the envoy. But as far as the personality of Mängäša was concerned, he merely mentioned that he was "a nephew of the Negus" (cf. Rohlfs 1883:292). Perhaps the first foreigner who stated that Mängäša was "a son of the Emperor John" without mentioning his source was the British archaeologist Bent (1896:2) who visited Aksum in 1893. Some years later, the British vice-consul to the Red Sea region, Wylde, claimed to have received his information from an Ethiopian priest who was allegedly present in Mätämma at the time the sovereign died and stated, that Y. acknowledged Mängäša as his son on his death-bed, though no succession was properly agreed upon (Wylde 1901:42). These versions of the legend were retained by subsequent foreign writers, and the descendents of Mängäša were proud of their royal consanguinity.

The Ethiopian published sources and the oral traditions collected by Bairu Tafla from Šire, Aksum, ᶜAdwa, May Mägälta and Ǝndärta in 1970–73 slightly differ from the foreign sources. There are two versions of the story: the first alleges that the dying emperor summoned Mängäša and nominated him as his successor to the throne and, according to one source written by a northerner at the turn of the 20th cent. (cf. Yaqob Beyene 1987:119), the Emperor obliged his councillors to take an oath to obey Mängäša. The second version alleges that the Emperor demanded the summoning of ras Ḫaylä Maryam, an elder brother of Mängäša, not knowing that he had fallen in the battle, and when his officials told him that he had been wounded, Y. assumed that Ḫaylä Maryam was dead and he nominated Mängäša to be his successor to the throne instead (cf. Ḫəruy Wäldä Śəllase 2006/07:186; Täklä Ṣadək Mäkʷərya 1989/90:544 and 1990/91:64). In either case, the sovereign was interested in bequeathing the throne rather than in acknowledging a son. Most of the sources allege that the dying sovereign used the traditional Amharic expression – "my son and friend" – when nominating Mängäša which the foreigners understood to be a sign of acknowledgement of his natural son whereas the Ethiopians understood it as a common polite expression of elderly speakers often employed to impress the addressee. Empress ↗Ṭaytu used exactly the same phrase in her letter addressed to Mängäša a couple of years thereafter, although she was by no means his mother. In his futile attempt to mobilize the people of Təgray, Mängäša declared himself in his new seal that he was "The Son of Yoḥannəs, King of Zion, King of Kings of Ethiopia" (GueCopMen 355). He was unable to rally all dignitaries of his predecessor including some of his close kinsmen.

Portrait of aṣe Yoḥannəs IV; from Acton 1886:42

Y. was consistently placid even at crucial moments, a situation which led observers to underestimate his ability. He preferred peaceful negotiations to war and, hence, he repeatedly wrote to his enemies and to the European powers to settle impending conflicts by negotiation. To the surprise of his opponents and observers, however, he maintained his composure and remained steadfast, both in negotiation and battle.

The records scarcely reveal his exercise of vengeance against vanquished enemies, two cases (once against two officials and once against two regions) being exceptions. These are the blinding of Kaśa Golǧa and the life imprisonment of ras Wäldä Mikaᵓel Sälomon of Ḥamasen. The former had rebelled against Y. and fought him several times in the late 1860s and early 1870s, while the latter had killed two of Y.'s governors. His army caused considerable devastation in Akkälä Guzay when the Catholics refused to pay tax in 1878–79, and in Goǧǧam when nəguś Täklä Haymanot rebelled in 1888–89.

Y. was averse to war, particularly the shedding of Christian blood, as he often noted in his letters, and he took time before confronting his challengers. But at crucial points he fought with determination and full military tactics as in the case of aṣe Täklä Giyorgis's assault in 1871 and those of the Egyptians in 1875–76.

VI. Yoḥannəs IV in Ethiopian imagination

Y. has been remembered in Ethiopia as one of the great leaders of the country, though his history received little attention until the second half of the 20th cent. 30 years after Y.'s death, ↗Ḫəruy Wäldä Śəllase noted in his biographical dictionary that, "Wishing that God counts him among the martyrs, aṣe Yoḥannəs is being praised until today for sacrificing his blood on behalf of his country and religion" (HerTar 84). Apart from the legendary Queen of Sheba (↗Makəda) and Tewodros II, Ethiopian sovereigns are scarcely the subject of dramatic or novelistic writing. Nonetheless, there is one novel about Y. in Amharic by Mammo Wəddənäh (1992) which covers the sovereign's entire life emphasizing his devotion to the church, his heroic actions and his patriotic zeal. Quite a few poems of various types and historical anecdotes reflecting Y.'s character have also been transmitted by word of mouth, some of which were recorded in writing in the 20th cent. Most of them are related to his courage and skill in hunting when he was a young man and his military successes in the second half of his life as well as to his religious faith and practice throughout his life. In other poems his victories over the Egyptian army in Gundät and Guraᶜe as well as his expeditions to Bägemdər, Goǧǧam and Šäwa are repeatedly mentioned (cf. Getie Gelaye in PICES 16 [online], 1349–63; Täklä Ṣadəq Mäkʷərya 1989/90: 548). Even his fighting in the front at Mätämma in which his life was sacrificed is regarded as an expression of his bravery.

Among the poems collected and published by Ḫəruy Wäldä Śəllase (1910) one underlines Y.'s personal discipline that he abstained from alcoholic drink which "whirl the head", as the poet put it, while another one among the unpublished collection of Conti Rossini (preserved in the Accademia Nazionale dei Lincei in Rome) admires his consistent avoidance of sexuality after the death of his wife. There are also a couple of poems which praise him for his generosity in giving feasts and being a friend of the English (cf. Getie Gelaye in PICES 16 [online]).

Y.'s moral integrity and his devotion to his religion, at least according to a contemporary narrator, are told in a couple of anecdotes. Aläqa Lämma Wäldä Tarik (1868–1966) relates that a man was accused of serving ↗ṭäǧǧ which was exclusively the privilege of imperial appointees. Y. released him because he did not steal the honey and did not invite the public. Another anecdote told by the same narrator relates that the twin provinces of Mäqet and Šädäho were infested with criminals including looters and murderers, but Y. avoided leading a punitive imperial expedition to the regions, because he did not wish to hurt the Christian inhabitants (cf. Mängəśtu Lämma 1959: 43–47).

But this kindness does not seem to have extended to regions whose rulers had rebelled. In 1877 Y.'s army struck Šäwa, and in 1888–89 devastated Goǧǧam, both of which were predominantly Christian. The decimation of the cattle and the burning of grain severely hurt the inhabitants of Goǧǧam and many people expressed their sorrow in critical poems. (cf. Mammo Wəddənäh 1992: 331; Täklä Iyäsus 2009/10: 113–89). At least one couplet, associated with the death of wag šum ↗Täfäri Wäsän who had accompanied the sovereign, expresses the composer's wish that Y. should also depart:

> The trees are denuded and stones cleared
> May the nəguś, too, go the wag šum's road.

Not all the composers have been listed by name. However, among the poets specified by their appellations were Y.'s sister, Dənqənäš and a certain Gäbrä Śəllase, both of whom had received him with a crowd when he returned from hunting wild animals.

As far as images of Y. in ↗photography or ↗painting are concerned, the available publications offer very little. The few representations that have been reproduced in books were originally drawings of European travellers such as ↗Bianchi, ↗Vigoni and ↗Massaja (the last author drew mainly the palaces of the sovereign). Unfortunately, no attempt seems to have been made on the part of scholars to examine the churches and monasteries built or frequented by the sovereign for portraits of their famous benefactor. From among the reproduced engravings, the earliest seems to be the profile of the late 1860s or early 1870s in which his face is slightly turned leftward (cf. Pankhurst – Ingrams 1996: 87) borrowed from Roger Acton's collection of the British Expedition to Mäqdäla. Some ten years later the Italian traveller Vigoni drew a profile of the Emperor with his face inclining to the right. The German envoy Rohlfs reproduced it on the title page of his book published in 1883. It seems that the Staatliches Museum für Völkerkunde in Munich reproduced a miniature of the same picture in its exhibition catalogue (Girma Fisseha 2002, no. 11), but no source is given. The most majestic portrait of the sovereign in a royal gown, the crown on his head and holding the regal staff was published in the late 20th cent. (cf. RubInd, between pages 84 and 85). The author photographed a painting which hung on the wall of the Mäqälä residence of the governor of Təgray which was probably also the palace of Y. Unfortunately, none of the above-mentioned works tries to comment what aspect of the sovereign's character is supposed to have been depicted in the pictures (cp. also images in Pankhurst 1960: 24, 27; Girma Fisseha – Raunig 1985, no. 42; Biasio 2006, no. 150).

Yoḥannəs I

Liqä p̣ap̣p̣asat Y. (ዮሐንስ, birth name Ḥaddis Täkle, later nəburäʾəd Täklä Haymanot; b. 1883, Šäwa, d. 10 June 1956, Addis ᶜAläm) was subsequently mälʾakä bərhan, ↗nəburäʾəd, ↗əč̣č̣äge, bishop (↗p̣ap̣p̣as) of Šäwa and, finally, archbishop (liqä p̣ap̣p̣asat) of the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox (Täwaḥədo) Church (EOTC).

Born in the present North Šäwa diocese, Ḥaddis Täkle began his education at ↗Addis ᶜAläm Ṣəyon and at ↗Däbrä Libanos monastery and subsequently studied ↗zema and ↗aqqʷaqʷam in ↗Gondär, ↗qəne in Goǧǧam and came back to Gondär to follow the ↗tərgʷame teaching of mämhər Täklä Maryam. After having been the student of mämhər Täsfu in ↗Däbrä Tabor, Ḥaddis Täkle started his carreer at the church of ↗Maḫbärä Śəllase in Gondär. Later, he administrated the Lədäta church of Gondär. Called by ras ↗Gugsa, Ḥaddis Täkle became part of his court at Däbrä Tabor. From 1925 on, he became associated with the circle of the metropolitan abunä ↗Matewos, spent some time in Jerusalem and came back to administer the Mikaʾel church in ↗Ankobär. In 1929/30, he became the head of the church of Mäkanä Śəllase of Addis Abäba as mälʾakä bərhan. He stayed there only one year and in 1931 he replaced däǧǧazmač Wäldä Ṣadəq (1929–31) as nəburäʾəd of Addis ᶜAläm church assuming the name Täklä Haymanot.

During the occupation of Ethiopia (↗Africa Orientale Italiana), ↗Italy decided in November 1937 to cut the link of the ↗Coptic Church with the EOTC by appointing the former bishop of Goǧǧam Abrəham as the first Ethiopian archbishop of Ethiopia. Abrəham started consecrating Ethiopian bishops himself, and decided to make nəburäʾəd Täklä Haymanot both bishop of the newly-created diocese of Šäwa and əč̣č̣äge of Däbrä Libanos. On this occasion, Täklä Haymanot assumed the name Yoḥannəs I.

On 21 July 1939, Abrəham died and Y. succeeded him as archbishop of Ethiopia. Y. immediately consecrated five new Ethiopian bishops. During his tenure also a new administrative system for the EOTC was decided through the establishment of an ecclesiastical constitution.

After the liberation of the country in 1941, Y. was excommunicated by the Coptic authorities. Not recognized by ↗Ḫaylä Śəlasse I, he stayed under house arrest in Addis ᶜAläm until his death.

Yoḥannəs Admasu

Y.A. (ዮሐንስ ፡ አድማሱ; b. 9 October 1936, Addis Abäba, d. 13 June 1976, Harärge) was a famous poet and well-known scholar of ↗Amharic literature and poetry.

He attended the Ḫaylä Śəllase I Day School, (popularly known as kokäbä ṣəbaḥ, ‘The Morning Star’), both for his primary and secondary education, which he completed in July 1958.

After he completed a four year teachers training programme at the secondary level, he fulfilled the mandatory one year teaching service the following academic year (1958–59) at the Wäyzäro Səhin Secondary School (one of the earliest "modern" schools to be opened in the country in the 1920s) in ↗Däse.

Y.A. then joined the Addis Ababa University College in the academic year of 1959/60. After the abortive ↗Coup de état of December 1960 (s. EAE vol. 2, 1081), the college formed the nucleus of the new Haile Selassie I University (HSIU; ↗Addis Ababa University).

At the time, the ↗student movement was beginning to intensify on campus. Y.A. immersed himself in political activism, which was also reflected in his poems. Eventually he was suspended from the university in the academic year 1962/63.

In 1963 Y.A. went back to teaching at Wäyzäro Səhin Secondary School. Although he was readmitted to HSIU the subsequent year, he left for the USA before the end of 1963 and joined the University of California at Los Angeles. Here he studied alongside other senior Ethiopian students (e.g. ↗Abrəham Dämoz, ↗Habtä Maryam Marqos among others), who were focusing on various Ethiopian languages in their linguistic studies, under the guidance of Wolf ↗Leslau. Y.A. assisted Leslau compiling examples for An Amharic Conversation Book and his Amharic Textbook.

Y.A. returned to Ethiopia in 1965, rejoined the HSIU in 1966/67 and obtained his B.A. degree in 1967. The following year Y.A. was retained by the HSIU as a graduate assistant to teach in the Department of Ethiopian Languages and Literature.

During this period Y.A. collaborated with three of his department colleagues to produce a college level textbook for the teaching of Amharic, which is still extant as an unpublished ms.

Besides his teaching in the university and significant poetic contributions to modern Amharic literature, Y.A. engaged in research and critical writing on Amharic literature (e.g. ↗Sämənna wärq). His articles on contemporary Amharic fictional works in newspapers and magazines, aimed at the wider public, are seminal.

Y.A. did continuous research on the lives and works of Ethiopian intellectuals such as ↗Tayyä Gäbrä Maryam and ↗Yoftaḥe Nəguśe, who had largely contributed to the study of Ethiopian history and literary heritage.

Y.A. died under unknown circumstances in the Harärge region. His significant contribution, ቀኝ ፡ ጌታ ፡ ዮፍታሔ ፡ ንጉሤ ፣ አጭር ፡ የሕይወትና ፡ የጽሑፉ ፡ ታሪክ, is posthumously published in 2013 by the Addis Ababa University Press.

Yoḥannəs Afä Wärq ↗John Chrysostomos

Yoḥannəs Käma

Ǝččäge Y.K. (ዮሐንስ ፡ ከማ; 15th cent.) was the seventh head of the monastery of Däbrä ᶜAsbo (↗Däbrä Libanos) of Šäwa, successor of Yoḥannəs Śəwwər and a contemporary of aṣe ↗Yəsḥaq.

The tenure of Y.K. marks an important phase in the development of Däbrä ᶜAsbo and its literature. As reported in the Zena Däbrä Libanos, Y.K. ordered the construction of a church in which the relics of Täklä Haymanot were installed (CerDLib II, 141; Turaiev 1906: 352f.; DerDom 332f.). Besides, he was the first abbot of Däbrä ᶜAsbo who accepted lands granted from the royal court (CerDLib II, 142; Turaiev 1906: 353; DerDom 338–41).

It is usually thought that the acts of abba ↗Filəppos, third abbot of the monastery, were written during the tenure of Y.K. (CerDLib I, 234f.), just like the so-called first version of the acts of ↗Täklä Haymanot or the Ḥayq version (Derat and Nosnitisn do not agree on this point: cp. DerDom 76f; DerDomTh 77; Nosnitsin 2003: 149, n. 40). The History of the Translation of the Body of Täklä Haymanot may be added to these texts written during his tenure, even if there is still no clear evidence of a connection between the redaction of this text and Y.K. (CerDLib II, 142; Nosnitsin 2003: 153). According to the History, Y.K.'s tenure seems to have played a crucial role in the new stance of the monastery towards royal power and other monastic communities claiming a spiritual link to the teaching of Täklä Haymanot.

It is interesting to see that the acts of ↗Märḥa Krəstos, the 9th abbot, contrast the peaceful end of

Y.K. with the martyrdom of the abbots Filəppos and Ǝndrəyas, pointing to the close relations between Y.K. and the royal power at the time (Kur 1972: 93). In the northern part of Ethiopia, Y.K. is considered as the founder of the church Ǝnda Yoḥannəs Käma. Recently, new documents concerning Y.K. were found in Təgray (Nosnitsin 2012, in preparation). Y.K. was succeeded by Ǝndrəyas.

Yoḥannəs Mädäbbär ↗John of Nikiu

Yoḥannəs Məśraqawi

Y.M. (ዮሐንስ ፡ ምሥራቃዊ, 'John the Oriental', also Ǝč̣č̣ä Yoḥannəs, Yoḥannəs of Ṣägäro; cp. KinBibl 98f., no. 182) is an Ethiopian saint credited with the evangelization of the region of ↗Mänz.

The main source on Y.M. is his Vita (↗Gädl), known from five manuscripts, all of which seem to derive from the same archetype: VatLib Cerulli Etiop. 175, 121 fols., 20th cent.; EMML no. 119, 169 fols., 19th cent. [?]; EMML no. 1303 [IES 38], 189 fols., 20th cent.; EMML no. 4165 (from the church of Safəǧ Yoḥannəs, Angoläla, Šäwa), 127 fols., 20th cent. (all four used in the edition, Marrassini 1981); and VatLib Cerulli Etiop. 6, 165 fols., 17th cent. (with some differences; it was not considered for the edition, s. Marrassini 1988).

The Acts do not contain any clear historical allusions except for many (mostly unidentified) personal and place names, and a mention of aṣe ↗Zärʾa Yaʿəqob (ed. Marrassini 1981: 250, 408 [text]), who gives lands up to the River ↗Täkkäze to Y.M. (ibid. 252). This mention has become widely known thanks to an extensive treatment by Cerulli (CerLett 78ff., with a lengthy quotation [ed. 78–86]). The text is mainly made of fantastic elements, frequently of a high literary level (e.g., the saint's trip to the seven parts of the earth, ed. 282–94), and follows a general scheme for an Ethiopian gädl (s. Marrassini 1981: xxxiii–cix).

The life of the saint is followed from his birth (in Palestine, Fəl[əs]ṭ, from Levite parents; his father's name is given as Dilasor, which is the original name of ↗Kiros) to his death (in Gond in Bäläsa, ed. 264, 294–316) and translation (to Egora, ibid. 316–32). A period of novitiate in Egypt (ibid. 112–62) is followed by travels to different Ethiopian places or monasteries (↗Däbrä Libanos, Safəǧ, ↗Azälo, Ṣägäro, Gäro, Egora, Gond in Bäläsa), whilst the maximum attention is given to Däbrä Libanos (ibid. 182–98); also the narrative of the torture of ↗Täklä Haymanot by ↗Motälämi in Ṭomä Gərar is reproduced (twice, ibid. 162–82 and 334–54). The gädl is completed by 21 miracles (cp. ↗täʾammər).

From the hagiographical and historical points of view, two other personages should be taken into account, Ǝč̣č̣ä Yoḥannəs and Yoḥannəs of Wifat. Ǝč̣č̣ä Yoḥannəs is clearly identified with Y.M. by the Acts (ibid. 296). In the story, Y.M. is made head of Däbrä Libanos for seven days to replace the dead əč̣č̣ä (clearly an abbreviation from ↗əč̣č̣äge) Agnaṭewos "son of Täklä Haymanot", and is called by the community Ǝč̣č̣ä Yoḥannəs. In a ↗sälam to Ǝč̣č̣ä Yoḥannəs (ms. EMML no. 659, fols. 217r–219r, 18th or 19th cent.), there is a salutation to his fingers, "who searched fire, when [he] exercised his function in the house of Täklä Haymanot", which reflects a deed accomplished by Y.M. in Däbrä Libanos (ed. Marrassini 1981: 194ff.), when he stirred with his bare forearm a soup which was burning. The identification is also supported by the oral traditions of Mänz (cp. the story of the pregnant woman, and the false accusation against Ǝč̣č̣ä Yoḥannəs, summarized, in two versions, in Levine in PICES 2, 209f., cp. ed. Marrassini 1981: 256ff.; the place of Fərkut(t)a, widespread in oral tradition, does not appear in the Acts). These oral traditions put the life of Ǝč̣č̣ä Yoḥannəs in the time of aṣe ↗Iyasu I, for which time an əč̣č̣äge ↗Agnaṭəyos is also documented; thus, a historical personage Ǝč̣č̣ä Yoḥannəs should be put at the end of the 17th cent.

The connection between Y.M. and Yoḥannəs of Wifat, who lived at the time of the 15th-cent. aṣe Zärʾa Yaʿəqob, is more difficult to demonstrate. Very few elements of what we know about Yoḥannəs of Wifat correspond to those of the Acts of Y.M. According to the latter text, the Saint was the godfather of Zärᵓa Yaᶜəqob's son, ↗Bäᵓədä Maryam, who must have been born in 1448 (he died in 1478, when he was 30 years old, s. PerrZarY 182), whereas according to the "short chronicles", Yoḥannəs of Wifat died ten years after Zärᵓa Yaᶜəqob's accession to the throne, i.e. in 1444 (BassÉt I, 326 [text] = II, 96 [tr.]). In a manuscript illumination accompanying a sälam to the martyr Yoḥannəs of Wifat (ms. BN d'Abbadie 102, fol. 84r, 17th cent.; CRAbb no. 51; sälam quoted in Fiaccadori 1988:141, fig. after p. 144), he is shown dwelling in a kind of a barrel and giving his flesh to the birds; in the Acts of ↗Täklä Ḥawaryat, the protagonist meets Yoḥannəs of Wifat closed in a cell (ed. Conti Rossini 1910:71 [text] = 64 [tr.]) – none of these elements appear in the gädl of Y.M. On the other hand, the glorification of Däbrä Libanos, and the building of a church in the time of Zärᵓa Yaᶜəqob (reported by oral traditions) could be in keeping with the age of this Emperor. Besides, in the monastic genealogy of Kəlᵓat (EMML no. 2353, fol. 88v, 19th cent., tr. in Getatchew Haile 1982–83:34), Y.M. is credited with fathering əč̣č̣äge ↗Yoḥannəs Käma, another tradition that may hint at the 15th cent. for the saint's chronology (s. Fiaccadori 1988:141f., where the identification of Y.M. with the 14th-cent. Yoḥannəs of Kəlᵓat is proposed).

A tentative (although very mechanical) conclusion could be that the hagiographer, writing the 17th- (or rather 18th-) cent. Acts of Ǝč̣č̣ä Yoḥannəs, merged two traditions on two different personages with the same name.

Yoḥannəs of Däbrä Bizän

Y. (ዮሐንስ; ca. 1371–1449) was the second abbot of ↗Däbrä Bizän, the disciple and successor of the founder of the monastery, abba ↗Filəp̣p̣os.

According to his Gädl, Y.'s grandfather Qäso emigrated from Aḥsəᵓa, ↗Šire, the original place of his ancestors (śəyumanä Sire, 'prefects of Sire'), to ↗Bur, where he founded a village in the vicinity of Mayä Bäläsle with the same name of Aḥsəᵓa. Y. was born as Zärᵓa Haymanot to Qäso's son Gäbrä Krəstos and the latter's wife Akrosya. After meeting Filəp̣p̣os of Däbrä Bizän Y. changed his life, was accepted at the age of 15 into the monastery together with a certain Yonas and was taught by a certain Yəsḥaq. One year later he received the monastic habit and the new name of Y. At the death of Filəp̣p̣os, Y. was designated as his successor at the age of 23 notwithstanding the strong opposition of some of the older monks (Yəbarəkännä Krəstos, Erməyas, Fəre Mənaṭos, Sälwanos), whose resistance ceased only after the outbreak of plague.

Necessities of cohabitation and sometimes of confrontation with the Muslims are the peculiar features of Y.'s regency at Däbrä Bizän, where he is said to have founded three new churches (Mar Məhnam, Gäbrəᵓel, Mikaᵓel) and widely displayed his piousness and monastic qualities. Y. headed the community for 45 years till his death, in the years when the ↗Ewosṭateans faced confrontation with the monarchy, but also finally enjoyed the latter's favour. He was succeeded as abbot by ↗Śäräqä Bərhan.

The Gädlä Yoḥannəs is still unpublished in its entirety, though briefly summarized and partially published in excerpts only, with no translation, by Conti Rossini (1900:127–49 [text]) on the basis of fols. 63r–110r of a manuscript of the 18th/19th cent. "from a small village in the vicinity of Asmära", also containing the Gädlä Filəp̣p̣os on fols. 2r–62v. Both texts – not necessarly by the same author – probably date to the 15th cent., i.e. immediately after the narrated events, as evidenced by a final note where the author claims to have witnessed some episodes of Y.'s life and to have learned details from his disciples. A second manuscript of Gädlä Yoḥannəs (now ANLin Conti Rossini 10, 20th cent., fols. 1r–26ra, s. StrANL 31f.) was acquired in the course of time by the main investigator of Y.'s dossier, i.e. Conti Rossini, who had it copied in Eritrea from an exemplar different from that of the published excerpts. The early dating of the text of the Gädl is now confirmed by two more manuscript witnesses in the monastery of Däbrä Bizän (BauEr II, 42–47, nos. 8, 9), dating respectively ante 1531 and ante 1539. Both contain the Gädlä Filəppos (no. 8, fols. 1–78v; no. 9, fols. 3r–74) and Gädlä Yoḥannəs (no. 8, fols. 79r–152; no. 9, fols. 75r–139v), plus Gädlä ardəʾt (i.e. 'Vita of the disciples [of Däbrä Bizän]', in ms. no. 8, fols. 153–60, as a later-added fascicle; no. 9, fols. 140r–169r).

Y. is commemorated in the ↗Sənkəssar on 14 Ḫədar (ColSyn VIII, 74f.; BudSaint 245, which is the only occurrence of Däbrä Bizän in this edition of the Sənkəssar), but on 13 Ḫədar according to his Gädl (cp. Conti Rossini 1900: 148). The integral publication of the Gädlä Yoḥannəs in its entirety still remains an important desideratum of historical and hagiographical research.

Yoḥannəs of Wifat ↗Yoḥannəs Məśraqawi

Yoḥannəs Täsämma

Y.T. (ዮሐንስ ፡ ተሰማ; b. 1914 [Björnesjö 1980: 54] or 1916 [Raineri – Riva 2008: 11], Bəčäna Giyorgis, Goǧǧam, d. 28 June 1972, Addis Abäba) was an eminent Ethiopian painter (↗Art s. EAE vol. 5).

Y.T. was the grandson of a priest, received a traditional church education, learned some Gəᶜəz and spent many years in the Giyorgis church in Bəčäna in the service of the priests. Already as a child he had a strong desire to draw. According to the painter – and godchild of Y.T. – qes Adsamu Täsfaw, he studied painting with qesä gäbäz Antänäh Gäbru, who also taught ↗ᶜAlämu Ḫaylä Maryam. Around 1933 Y.T. moved to Addis Abäba, where he started to work together with ᶜAlämu's brother Yətbaräk. They began to make a living by producing paintings on paper for ↗ṭäǧǧ houses. In 1937 Y.T. painted in the workshop of the Georgian adventurer Djougashvilli, who called himself Prince Amiradjibi, where among others ↗Bälaččäw Yəmär, Yətbaräk Ḫaylä Maryam, ᶜAlämu Ḫaylä Maryam and ↗Bərhanu Yəmänu were employed. After a couple of years Y.T. left, and in 1953 he became a teacher of drawing at the Empress Mänän Handicraft School. In 1957 he was awarded a diploma of honour and a silver medal from aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I. He was the first Ethiopian painter to offer one of his paintings to the UNICEF.

Y.T. was also a major commercial artist in the city and was well connected with the expatriate community and the royal family. At the beginning of his career he was especially interested in religious themes. Later, in the 1960s, Y.T. was also interested in actual events. According to Addamu Täsfaw, Y.T. directed him to produce paintings commemorating the visits to Ethiopia of Queen Elizabeth II in 1965, and President Charles de Gaulle in 1966. Adamu produced these works from photographs in magazines. However, Y.T. put his own signature on them (cp. Silverman 2005: 34).

Y.T. also continued to paint such traditional subjects as battle and court scenes, the legend of the Queen of Sheba (↗Makədda), and, above all, scenes from everyday life. Examples of his works are reproduced in a number of publications (e.g., Biasio 2006: 126f.; EthObs 7, 3, 202–09; Pankhurst 1966: 53ff.; Girma Fisseha – Raunig 1985: 165f., fig. 48, 184f., fig. 91; Ricci 1989: 49; Appleyard 1993: 108–11 and Raineri – Riva 2008: 154–220).

Yoḥannəs Wäldä Giyorgis

Y. (ዮሐንስ ፡ ወልደ ፡ ጊዮርጊስ; b. 27 December 1921, ᶜAlitena, d. 18 September 2002, Addis Abäba) was Vicar Apostolic of Mäqi (Hayqočč-Butağira). He was the great-great-grandson of ḥanta Ṣaᶜru, representative of the Buknáyte ᶜÁre clan of the ↗Irob, who had welcomed Giustino De ↗Jacobis when he visited the area in September 1845.

After attending the Lədäta School, ᶜAlitena, Y. continued his primary education from 1935 to 1941 at the Catholic school in ↗Gʷalᶜa. In 1942, he entered the seminary in Addis Abäba. In 1947, he went to the Ethiopian College at the Vatican (↗Santo Stefano dei Mori), where, on 31 October 1954, he was ordained a priest. He was sent to Cambridge, England, for further studies and returned to Ethiopia in October 1957. From 1957 until 1969 he was Vice-Rector of the diocesan college in ↗ᶜAddigrat and from 1969 until 1981 he was the administrator of the parishes around ᶜAlitena on behalf of the Eparchy of ᶜAddigrat.

While in ᶜAlitena, in addition to his pastoral commitments, Y. initiated a variety of development projects, notably the building of roads to open up the mountainous countryside to transport, the most significant stretch, of 36 km, being that from Zälä Anbäsa to ᶜAlitena. Y. also promoted the building of the first clinic, which was served by nuns with medical qualifications.

On 8 December 1981, abba Y. was appointed Prefect Apostolic of Mäqi. When Mäqi was elevated to an Apostolic Vicariate, he was consecrated the first bishop of the Vicariate on 25 January 1992. Subsequently, Y. became actively engaged in establishing primary, senior and high schools as well as a school for the blind. In addition, he also opened a number of Women Promotion Centres, clinics, a hospital and the local congregation of nuns “The Daughters of Mary Immaculate”.

Yoḥanni of Däbrä ᶜAśa

Abba Y. (ዮሐኒ) was a Təgrayan monk primarily associated with the monastery of Däbrä ᶜAśa in ↗Tämben, also known as ↗Abba Yoḥanni (s. EAE vol. 5). He should not be confused with abba ↗Yoḥanni of Däbrä Damo, a contemporary and teacher of the 13th-cent. saint ↗Iyäsus Moᵓa.

Y.’s life is known from his Acts (↗Gädl), edited, as the very first ↗hagiography of an Ethiopian saint published in Europe, by Basset (1884) from ms. BN Éth. 132 (fols. 39–42; 19th cent.; ZotBNat 198f.). Other known witnesses include BritLib Add. 16,230 (fols. 5–8; DillmLond 51, n. XLVII), a copy made for Conti Rossini ca. 1900 (ANLin Conti Rossini 125, fols. 2r–5r; StrANL 308; s. Virgili 1983:309f.), mss. EMML nos. 1734 (fols. 106r–110r; early 19th cent.), 3445 (fols. 21r–26r; 18th cent.), 4268 (fols. 92r–93v; 16th cent.); a copy was reportedly kept in Abba Yoḥanni (KinBibl 99, no. 184), but it is not there today.

Y. is also evoked in a number of hymnological compositions; they may follow upon the Acts (e.g., ms. EMML no. 1734, fol. 110rv, ↗sälam to Y. and ↗Kiros) or appear separately in homiletic collections (e.g., ms. EMML no. 591: 5, 18th/19th cent., sälam to ↗Gäbrä Mänfäs Qəddus, Y. and Kiros). Hymns to Y. are included in many antiphonary collections: a ↗Zəmmare manuscript (BN Éth. 372 [Griaule 68], 18th cent.) includes four hymns to Y. (fols. 25v–27v) preceded by a hymn to his disciple Abaydo (fol. 25rv); cp. also ↗Mäwaśəᶜət (e.g., Ṭānāsee 79 = Dabra Māryām 21, fols. 19v–20r, 18th cent.; Ṭānāsee 92 = Rēmā 3, fol. 7v, 17th cent.; BritLib Add 14,227, fol. 9v; BritLib [Dillmann XXIX], fol. 13v; also ed. 1993/94: 30ff., 16f.), ↗Məᶜəraf (s. VelMe 138, 219) and also ↗Dəggʷa (e.g., Uppsala O Etiop. 36, fols. 40v–41r, preceded by a wazema on Abaydo; LöfUpp 69, no. 24). A homily (↗Dərsan) in honour of Y. authored by "Minas bishop of ↗Aksum" follows upon the saint's Acts in mss. BN Éth. 132 and StrANL no. 125; it is also transmitted in the homilies collection in ms. EMML no. 1763 (fols. 35v–37v; 1336/40).

Y. is commemorated in the ↗Sənkəssar on 5 Ḫədar (cp. ColSyn VIII, 252f.), his spiritual father abba Ammoni on 20 Gənbot and his disciple abba Abaydo (in some mss. Obaydo, s. Vat. Aeth. 111, fol. 57, BN Éth. 126, fol. 64r) on 4 Ḫədar (ColSyn VIII, 250f.).

According to his Acts, Y. was born to a wife of a šum Tämben as a result of her being raped by her brother-in-law during her husband's military campaign against the ↗Noba and Soba (s. ↗Soba noba, EAE vol. 5). She blamed the pregnancy on the hermit from Däbrä ᶜAśa, abba Ammoni, who subsequently brought Y. up. Y. remained in the desert after Ammoni's death, copying ↗manuscripts. Fleeing a confrontation with his mother, who was trying to seduce him, Y., with the help of the Holy Spirit and St. Gabriel, escaped to Heaven where he met Enoch and Elijah. Y. remained in Paradise, and St. Gabriel descended to tell Y.'s disciple abba Abaydo to write down his teacher's Acts. The narration ends with Abaydo's death.

The similarity of some text motifs with the ↗Bärälam wäyəwasəf may indicate a composition after the latter's translation into Gəᶜəz ca. 1553; however, the passages may have been inspired by other, earlier, sources (s. Basset 1884: 434–38). Basset (ibid. 439f.) tentatively identified Y. with the 14th-cent. metropolitan abunä ↗Yoḥannəs (X), a contemporary of aṣe ↗Dawit. He saw supporting evidence in the fact that in some manuscripts the Vita is followed by a homily by Minas (s. above) – who in this case could be identical with abunä Yoḥannəs's successor, Minas (IV). There is, however, no evidence to support the interchangeability of the names Yoḥannəs and Yoḥanni. Moreover, the same homily – ascribed by the tradition to the 4th/6th cent. bishop ↗Minas of Aksum – is transmitted in a much earlier manuscript (EMML no. 1763, not known to Basset), making this identification highly questionable.

The short hagiography falls typologically into the "Egyptian" type (s. Marrassini 2005). Interestingly, it is often transmitted in similar manuscripts that sometimes contain lives of saints of the ↗Aksumite period, or of other so-called "Egyptian" saints (e.g., Abib, Gäbrä Krəstos and Gärima in BN Éth. 132, Gäbrä Mänfäs Qəddus in EMML nos. 1734 and 3445, s. also the joint hymnological compositions above). This could be an indication that tradition itself places Y. in the Aksumite period.

It is not known whether there exists a connection with (another) abba ↗Yoḥanni of Däbrä Sina who is believed to have arrived from Egypt and founded ↗Däbrä Sina in Sänhit during the reign of the 6th-cent. Aksumite king ↗Gäbrä Mäsqäl (he is possibly listed, as João, alongside the Nine Saints by Luis dos Anjos in 1612; s. Brita 2010: 50, n. 148); some of the hymns may have been originally dedicated to this Yoḥanni, or to still another figure of the same name.

According to the local traditions of Tämben, Y. founded further 42 churches in the area, invisible to the eyes of mortals.

Yoḥanni of Däbrä Damo

Abba Y. (ዮሐኒ, fl. 13th cent.) was, according to some medieval Ethiopian sources, an abbot of the monastery of ↗Däbrä Damo and a spiritual teacher of both of the prominent monastic leaders of Ethiopia during the late 13th–early 14th cent. – ↗Iyäsus Moᵓa of ↗Däbrä Ḥayq Ǝsṭifanos and ↗Täklä Haymanot of ↗Däbrä Libanos of Šäwa. No hagiographic sources that feature Y. as the protagonist are known. The only texts that provide information about his life and activities are: the so-called Homily in honour of Iyäsus Moᵓa, the Acts of Iyäsus Moᵓa, the Acts of Täklä Haymanot (the Däbrä Libanos recension) and his commemoration note in the ↗Sənkəssar; and the Acts of ↗Zämikaᵓel Arägawi. These sources refer to Y. mainly in connection with the role allegedly played by him in the monastic investitures of both Iyäsus Moᵓa and Täklä Haymanot (cp. ↗Śərᶜatä mənkʷəsənna; ↗Monasticism).

The name Y. could be a Coptic vernacular form of the name of John, attested in Greek papyri of Egyptian provenance alongside such forms as Pawli, Ammoni, Absadi, etc. (cf. Preisigke 1922: 155; Marrassini 1999: 328). However, it is also possible that the name is of native Ethiopian origin, deriving from the Gəᶜəz verbal form yäw(wə)ḫanni 'He (i.e. God) has shown clemency to me' (for the verbal root and its derivatives s. LesCDic 628). Indeed, the variant form yäwḫanni as a personal name has been recorded on wall ↗paintings in the ancient ↗Gännätä Maryam church near Lalibäla (Balicka-Witakowska 1998–99: 198, n. 56; s. Nosnitsin in VarAeth 200, n. 9).

The Gädlä Iyäsus Moᵓa is the only source providing "hagio-biographical" data on Y. According to the text, during his life as a layperson Y. was "a great judge, administering judgment after the king" (i.e. second in authority only to the [unnamed] king himself). The king gave his daughter in marriage for Y. and appointed him the second highest official in his kingdom. Nonetheless, Y. denounced the worldly riches, willing to be rather a soldier (ḫara) of Christ than of king. Notwithstanding the opposition on the part of the king, Y. left the royal court for Däbrä Damo where he spent the rest of his life. He died at an unknown age on 8 Gənbot (KurMoa 20 [text]; or on 9 Gənbot, according to the Acts of Zämikaᵓel Arägawi, s. Guidi 1895: 35).

Y. first encountered Iyäsus Moᵓa, the future head of Däbrä Ḥayq Ǝsṭifanos, when the latter arrived at Däbrä Damo as a novice. It was Y. who conferred upon Iyäsus Moᵓa the "monastic garb" (albasä mənkʷəsənna) and the girdle (qənat) (or scapular [askema] and girdle, according to the Homily in honour of Iyäsus Moᵓa whose composition predates that of the Acts, cf. Marrassini 1986: 179, Nosnitsin in VarAeth 225).

When Täklä Haymanot, having spent seven years as a novice at Däbrä Ḥayq Ǝsṭifanos, went to Däbrä Damo, his teacher Iyäsus Moʾa asked him to bring him the scapular which Y. had reserved for Iyäsus Moʾa. Täklä Haymanot returned with the scapular (after seven years) and placed it upon the ↗tabot, so that his master could pick it with his own hands. On Iyäsus Moʾa's insistence ("no one is able to receive grace by himself, if it is not given to him from Heaven", KurMoa 38 [text] = 31 [tr.]), Täklä Haymanot is persuaded to give the scapular to his teacher.

According to the Däbrä Libanos recension of the Acts of Täklä Haymanot, Täklä Haymanot spends ten years at Däbrä Ḥayq where he was vested by Iyäsus Moʾa with the "monastic garb" (albasä mənk^{w}əsənna; Budge 1906: 69 [text]), and then he goes to Däbrä Damo. Täklä Haymanot is instructed by an angel to ask Y. for the monastic cap (qob^{c}) and askema and thus to have his investiture completed. Iyäsus Moʾa asks Täklä Haymanot to bring the cap and scapular also for him, since he had left Däbrä Damo without receiving these parts of the monastic habit. At Däbrä Damo Y., having learned that Täklä Haymanot is a disciple of Iyäsus Moʾa, states that Täklä Haymanot is "the (spiritual) son of his son" and bestows upon him the qob^{c} and askema (Täklä Haymanot is also represented as having received his monastic habit from Y. in a monastic genealogy found in ms. BritLib Add. 16, 253 and in another genealogy published in Conti Rossini 1901, where Y. is called the spiritual father of both Iyäsus Moʾa and Täklä Haymanot). Y. also gives Täklä Haymanot the cap and scapular for Iyäsus Moʾa which the latter receives from the former, declaring: "from this time onwards [...] I will be thy son, and thou shalt be [my] father" (Budge 1906: 76f. [text]). These words of the compiler of the Acts are sometimes interpreted as the claim that Iyäsus Moʾa openly acknowledged the spiritual superiority of his disciple, Täklä Haymanot, over himself.

The historiographic notes concluding the Acts of Zämikaʾel Arägawi (Guidi 1895: 34ff.) present somewhat contradictory picture of the activities of Y. as spiritual father of Iyäsus Moʾa and Täklä Haymanot: Y. confers the scapular upon Iyäsus Moʾa (Guidi 1895: 34) who thereafter returns to Däbrä Ḥayq. After a short while, Y. receives also Täklä Haymanot who comes "dressed like a soldier" (läbiso ləbsä ḥara [?]), confers upon him the scapular and cap and orders him to stay at Däbrä Damo. After 12 year, Täklä Haymanot returns to Däbrä Ḥayq, bringing with him the scapular and cap for Iyäsus Moʾa which the latter allegedly did not receive while staying at Däbrä Damo because he left "for the sake of the eager desire for righteousness, loving toil and seclusion" (Guidi 1895: 35; ^{2}1896: 95; for possible interpretations of the difficult passage, s. Nosnitsin in VarAeth 220f.).

The testimony of the Gädlä Zämikaʾel Arägawi seems to have been later incorporated, in an abridged form, into the text of the Acts of Iyäsus Moʾa (KurMoa 21 [text] = 17 [tr.]) and to have influenced the shaping of the relevant passages in the Acts of Täklä Haymanot (s. esp. Nosnitsin in VarAeth 217–23, nn. 56ff.). The spiritual authority of Y. is highly esteemed by the compiler of the Acts of Iyäsus Moʾa who places him as the only non-biblical figure among a number of biblical personages known for their sanctity and states that Iyäsus Moʾa was "accomplished in his monkhood like abba Y." (KurMoa 42–43 [text], 34 [tr.]).

Besides, the historiographic notes maintain that abba Y. was the seventh abbot of Däbrä Damo (Guidi 1895: 34); the claim which is chronologically impossible, as has already been noted (cf. TadTChurch 158, n. 4). According to the notes, during the tenure of Y. the monks constructed a church in a cave, which was to serve as a burial place for the brethren of the monastery. The notes also mention Y.'s successor, Zäʾiyäsus, whom Y. appointed himself. For the rest, the internal tradition of Däbrä Damo on account of Y. still remains unexplored.

Abba Y. does not have a separate commemoration note in the Ethiopic Sənkəssar; only in the second type of the Sənkəssar entry for Täklä Haymanot, represented, e.g., by ms. d'Abbadie 163 (GuiSyn III, 474 [text]; cf. BudSaint 1244–45; s. also Nosnitsin 2007: 145f.) does his name appear, remarkably in the form of "Yoḥannəs".

Yoḥanni of Däbrä Sina

Abba Y. (ዮሐኒ) was, according to local traditions, the founder of the Eritrean monastery of Däbrä Sina. He is said to have come from Egypt together with his followers in the reign of ↗Kaleb Ǝllä Aṣbəḥa (CRStor 158), of ↗Gäbrä Mäsqäl or, more likely, of the historical son of Kaleb whose name is attested in epigraphic evidence as ↗WʿZB. The history of the monastery written in the 19th cent. by Aśratä Maryam (publ. 1910) constitutes the main source of information on Y.

In 1612, Luis dos Anjos, the author of a biography of St. Augustine recorded by ↗Mendes (BecRASO VIII, 72f.) and later by Barradas (BecRASO IV, 315f.), mentions an Ethiopic manuscript in possession of ↗Santo Stefano dei Mori in Rome, in which a certain João, “who was old and like a prior over the others”, was numbered among the ↗Nine Saints (evidently replacing in this list Zämikaʾel Arägawi). Whilst Getatchew Haile (cf. Munro-Hay 2005: 150, n. 36), identified this João with abba ↗Yoḥanni of Däbrä Damo, Brita (2010: 50, n. 148) suggests the identification of this personage with Y. as more probable.

It is possible that some of the hymnological compositions in honour of a “Y.”, usually interpreted as dedicated to ↗Yoḥanni of Däbrä ʿAśa, were originally dedicated to the founder of Däbrä Sina.

Yolyos

Y. (ዮልዮስ; b. Wäläqa, d. 1617) was an Ethiopian nobleman. He appears to be associated with ↗Susənyos from an early date, before the latter attained power. He occupied important positions at Susənyos’s court: blattenočč geta zäʿabiyan wäzänəʾusan (“[↗]blatten geta of the great and small blattenočč”), head of the musketeers (näfṭ), ↗bašša, ↗ṣäḥafe lam, ↗wälasma of Ifat and ↗qaṭ of Mänz. Towards 1603, he was made wäʿali of Ifat and had once to be rescued by Susənyos when he was besieged on amba Gäfägäf (PerChron 130, also 36 [tr.]).

In 1607, after defeating aṣe ↗Yaʿəqob and gaining power, Susənyos made Y. Goğğam nägaš and married him to his daughter ↗Mäläkotawit (PerChron 102, also 130 [tr.]). Just before the rainy season of 1608, he was dağğazmač at the royal kätäma (PerChron 85 [tr.]). After the rainy season of 1609, when the rebellion Y. had launched together with ↗Kəflo against Susənyos failed, the Emperor removed Y. from Goğğam but soon pardoned him (Toubkis 2004: 698–730).

In 1610, a conflict, which was to continue over most of the decade, broke out between Y. and ↗Səʿəlä Krəstos (PerChron 104 [tr.]). Apparently, Y. had been appointed ṣäḥafe lam of Damot but with jurisdiction over a wider area in Goğğam (PerChron 106, also 102, 126, 288 [tr.]). Thus, his territory overlapped with that of Səʿəlä Krəstos. On 25-26 February 1612, the Emperor appointed Y. ↗təgre mäkʷännən and ↗baḥər nägaš and gave Goğğam “entirely” to his brother ras Səʿəlä Krəstos (PerChron 130, 142 [tr.]). Səʿəlä Krəstos now became master of an area that hitherto Y. had ruled whereas the latter was sent far away to the north to conduct a campaign. It is also remarkable that on 20 April 1626, when aṣe Susənyos gave several gʷəlt to Səʿəlä Krəstos, part of them were situated close to ↗Dänqäz, but others were situated precisely in that north-eastern part of Goğğam in the Amadamit region (PerChron 221 [tr.]; Pennec 2003: 224).

Y. and Səʿəlä Krəstos also clashed over the issue of religion. As early as 1612, while the latter was establishing himself in Goğğam, Səʿəlä

Krəstos's rapprochement with the missionaries and Catholicism could not escape the notice of Y. (BecRASO XI, 283; Pennec 2003: 222 n. 119). During the period from 1612 to 1617, Susənyos's royal chronicle shows Y. particularly active in Təgray, Wägära and Səmen. From 1614 to 1616 he conducted several campaigns against the ↗Betä Ǝsraʾel (PerChron 117, 120 [tr.]). In 1614, according to Manoel de ↗Almeida, the ↗Jesuits who were living in Təgray suffered the persecution of Y. (BecRASO VI, 335), by then clearly identified as one of the staunch supporters of Orthodoxy and enemy of the Catholics (BecRASO II, 393ff.; III, 354ff.; VI, 283f., 296, 302).

On 16 January 1617, when Səʿəlä Krəstos's "apostolic zeal" (Pennec 2003: 225) in Goǧǧam was growing, Susənyos, instead of his brother ↗Yämanä Krəstos, appointed Səʿəlä Krəstos bitwäddäd (PerChron 122f.). Only three months later, on 28 April 1617, the Emperor was informed that Y. had rebelled against him and Səʿəlä Krəstos (PerChron 126 [tr.]). Y. was beheaded and remained without burial (BecRASO II, 399f.).

Y. should not be confused with his contemporary abetohun Yolyos, wäyzäro Yolyana's son, who died at the ↗Gorgora royal camp during the rainy season of 1618 (PerChron 156 [tr.]).

Yona Boggalä

Y.B. (ዮና ፡ ቦጋለ; b. 1908, Wälläqa, d. 14 August 1987, Petah Tikva, Israel) is considered to be one of the foremost leaders of the Ethiopian Jews (↗Betä Ǝsraʾel) in the 20th cent. (↗Judaism).

Y.B., the son of a weaver, grew up as a shepherd. In 1920 Jacques ↗Faitlovitch, on his fourth expedition to Ethiopia, visited Y.B.'s village ↗Wäläqa and taught him and some other boys the rudiments of Hebrew, as well as some Hebrew prayers and songs. Faitlovich decided to take Y.B. and three other Betä Ǝsraʾel boys to Europe to acquire a Jewish and secular education. At first, Y.B. attended the Tahkemoni School in ↗Jerusalem. In 1924, he moved via Italy to Frankfurt, Germany, and in 1929 was sent to the prestigious Jewish school at Bex-les-Bains in Switzerland; from there, he moved to the Alliance Française School in Paris.

Y.B. had a natural gift for languages and spoke Hebrew, English, Italian, French and German fluently, in addition to his mother-tongue Amharic. In 1933 Y.B. returned to Ethiopia, and in 1936 began teaching at the "Fälaša School" set up by Faitlovitch in 1923 in Addis Abäba, and run by ↗Täʾammərat Amanuʾel.

In 1937 Y.B. was forced to flee to ↗Wälläga after the school was shut down and the Italian authorities had put out a search warrant for him. After the Italian occupation, in 1941, Y.B. was employed as a translator at the Ministry of Education. In 1953, he resigned in order to work for the Jewish Agency, which was establishing schools for the Betä Ǝsraʾel in Ethiopia. In 1954 Y.B. opened a "Fälaša School" in Asmära, with 57 male and female pupils. In 1954 and 1957 he selected two groups of students who would, through an agreement with aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I, study in the Kfar Batya School in ↗Israel and return home thereafter. Between 1957 and 1958 Y.B. opened 27 village schools for the Betä Ǝsraᵓel, using some of the Kfar Batya graduates as teachers.

Believing that agriculture was the key to economic success for the Betä Ǝsraᵓel, who were largely tenant farmers, Y.B. supported the Humera Agricultural Development Project (↗Ḥumära) to re-settle the Betä Ǝsraᵓel in Tačč ↗Armačǝho near the Sudanese border, but the project failed. In 1979 Y.B. immigrated to Israel, and resided in the town of Petah Tikva until his death. In 2007, a local school in the Israeli town of Rehovot was named after him.

Y.B. was instrumental in facilitating the immigration of the Betä Ǝsraᵓel to Israel and supported their integration into Israeli society. He, therefore, favoured changing the traditional language of prayer, Gǝᶜǝz, to Hebrew in order to come in line with all the other Jewish communities. Y.B. published Amharic translations of Jewish texts, including a book on Jewish festivals, and a Hebrew-Amharic dictionary. He also published some memoirs in Hebrew of his stay in Jerusalem in the 1920s. With ↗Murād Kāmil, Y.B. produced an Amharic translation of Castanhoso's account of Christovão da ↗Gama, using Littmann's German version.

Yonaᵓel

Däǧǧazmač Y. (ዮናኤል, in Jesuit sources Jonaêl; fl. ca. 1574–1604, d. 13 October 1604) was a military leader during the rule of aṣe ↗Śärṣa Dǝngǝl. Of noble birth, as his title abetohun indicates, he was the son of ǝte Mǝn Yǝčale (d. 25 July 1594), about whom, however, little is known (BassEt II, 112, 123).

Y. seems to have started his military career within the ranks of Śärṣa Dǝngǝl's army. In late 1579 (or possibly 1574, cf. BecRASO III, 142), he and azmač Däḫarägot (↗Darägot) led their troops against the Fälaša (↗Betä Ǝsraᵓel) of ↗Rädaᵓi (CRHist 104 [tr.]). Sometime later, Y. was made governor of ↗Sǝmen and towards 1587 he was one of the leaders of the full-fledged war against the Fälaša of ↗Gedewon and ↗Gʷäšǝn. Thanks to his military skills, Y. managed to conquer their strongholds at Wärq Amba and Šǝkäna Amba. In 1591 he participated in Śärṣa Dǝngǝl's campaign against the Ottomans in ↗Massawa and, reportedly, killed the Turkish baša ↗Kädawǝrd by stabbing him with a knife (BassEt II, 112; also BTafY 176f., 300–03). Shortly after, he led his troops against the rebel Wäldä ᶜƎzum in Tǝgray.

During the dynastic struggles at the turn of the seventeenth century, Y. played an important role, being one of the powerful lords of the kingdom. He was an ally of ras ↗Atnatewos against aṣe ↗Zädǝngǝl and formed a coalition with Atnatewos and ↗Zäśǝllase against abetohun – later aṣe – ↗Susǝnyos. He reportedly died on 13 October 1604 in the same battle in which Zädǝngǝl perished (BecRASO III, 260ff.).

Y. was married to wäyzäro Säbänä Giyorgis, a daughter of aṣe ↗Gälawdewos, with whom he fathered "Auqafo", mother of the wäyzäro of "Däbära" (PerChron 411). Another son of Y., abetohun ↗Awnabyos, was śǝyyum of ↗Wägära in 1609 and later governor of ↗Damot (PerChron 97, 146 [tr.]; BecRASO III, 337, 366).

Y. should not be confused with another military leader, blatten geta Y., a contemporary of Susǝnyos and ↗Fasilädäs.

Yonaᵓel

Blatten geta Y. (ዮናኤል, in Jesuit sources Jonaêl; fl. 1604–23, d. 1622/23) was a military leader during the rule of aṣe ↗Susǝnyos. On 14 December 1604, he was present at the first proclamation of Susǝnyos as emperor at Ḥaräsma (PerChron 47 [tr.]).

During the first decade of Susənyos's rule, Y. was one of his most important military leaders. Around 1609 he was blatten geta in Guman, Agäw land, and was commander of the Ḫarra military unit (BecRASO III, 341; PerChron 105, 112 [tr.]). In ca. 1617, together with Goǧǧam nägaš ↗Kəflo, he led an expedition into the Balya region (PerChron 119 [tr.]). Shortly after the death of əte ↗Ḥamälmal Wärq (s. EAE vol. 5) he led a devastating campaign against the ↗Betä Ǝsraᵓel in the regions between Wägära and Səmen (PerChron 120 [tr.]; BecRASO III, 349). One year later, he and ↗Mälkəᵓa Krəstos were sent to chase the rebel ↗Yolyos (PerChron 127 [tr.]). After this mission Y. was appointed governor (śəyyum) of Bägemdər (PerChron 131, 157 [tr.]).

Around February 1619, already a däǧǧazmač, Y. was one of the leaders in Susənyos's raid against king Ǝrubat of the ↗Funǧ; about the same time he was made abägaz (BecRASO III, 372; PerChron 155 [tr.]).

In 1620, Susənyos issued a decree against the observance of the ↗Sabbath, but Y. refused to proclaim it in Bägemdər. Thereafter, he waged an open rebellion against Susənyos, opposing his pro-Jesuit policies (↗Jesuits). Reportedly, he had a fortified base on an amba (near Ambassäl? cf. BTafY 396–99) with a small army and the support of the Oromo of ↗Angot (BecRASO XI, 481; VI, 358; PerChron 205). He was, however, chased from there by abetohun Fasilädäs (later aṣe ↗Fasilädäs; BassEt II, 123).

Y. was killed some two years later. Sources disagree on the causes. One source has it that he was killed by his former Oromo allies who betrayed him (BecRASO XI, 503). Another reports that he was killed by Mälkəᵓa Krəstos (PerChron 202; but ibid. 204f.). A third source has him killed by one ᶜArkä Śəllus (BegCron 45).

Yonas

Aṣe Y. (ዮናስ; fl. late 18th cent.) was one of the short-lived kings on the Solomonic throne during the ↗Zämänä mäsafənt.

Information on Y. is scarce. He was raised to the throne on 18 August 1797. He was married to ətege Aster, who died a mere three months after his coronation (BlunChr 171f. [text] = 446ff. [tr.]). He was the son of abeto Lätṣun, who was descended from aṣe Fasil, and of wäyzäro Bərč̣əqqo (ms. BritLib Or. 777, fol. 86; there are, however, different mentions of Y. being either brother or son of aṣe ↗Sälomon I, cp. BlunChr 176 [text] = 454 [tr.]). He was a rival claimant to nəguś ↗Täklä Giyorgis and a pawn in the rivalry between Täklä Giyorgis and qäññazmač Wahdu.

In August 1798 Y. took refuge in the Abun Bet quarter of ↗Gondär, seeking refuge from the approaching Täklä Giyorgis, but to no avail. Täklä Giyorgis, once again principal claimant to the throne, brought Y. and his brother Goššu to the palace in evident friendship in September 1798 (BlunChr 175f. [text] = 453f. [tr.]). Shortly after, Y. left Täklä Giyorgis and three years later he was reported to be in fetters in ↗Lasta (BlunChr 188 [text] = 471 [tr.]), as one of four ex-kings living in internal exile (CRReal 797 [text] = 870 [tr.]). During his reign he was associated with a number of minor transfers of ↗rim land (mss. BritLib Or. 799, fol. 86; Or. 776, fol. 268).

Nathaniel ↗Pearce, who claims to have attended the mourning ceremony for Y. in ↗Anṭalo, reports that Y. died impoverished in Goǧǧam, implying that he died in April–June 1813 (Pearce 1831: 124). Eduard ↗Rüppell reports, on the contrary, that Y. died in September 1832, being over 76 years old (Rüppell 1840: 127f.). According to Rüppel, Y. spent his last years as a monk in Lalibäla, and the mourning ceremony took place in Gondär (Rüppell 1840: 127f.).

Yonas of Bur

Y. (ዮናስ, ca. 1400/03–1495/98) is one of the most important personalities of the ↗Ewosṭatean monastic movement, a significant character in the political history of the Eritrean highlands in the 15th cent. and the founder of three monasteries in ↗Säraye, two of which still bear his name (↗Däbrä Dəḫuḫan, or Ǝnda Abunä Yonas Taḥtay, and ↗Däbrä Ṣəge, or Ǝnda Abunä Yonas Laᶜlay, founded as Däbrä Gäbrəᵓel), while the third, Däbrä Sahl, still active until the Italian occupation and its immediate aftermath, is no longer traceable (s. Lusini 1998:19).

According to Y.'s only partially published Gädl (s. Conti Rossini 1903, with a few selected translated passages), unusually articulated in a series of episodes and not in a continuous narrative, Y. was born as Habtä Ǝgziʾ, the son of Nəwayä Ǝgziʾ and Ḫəritä Maryam in Hagärä Mäsqäl in the district of ↗Bur (in ↗Gulo Mäk̠äda according to oral tradition). He spent his youth in the monastery of ↗Däbrä Sina in the district of Däqqi Täsfa, where he took monastic vows and received the monastic name of Y. from his uncle Danəʾel at the age of 14. Coming back from a first unsuccessful attempt at establishing a monastic community in Damot, he founded churches and monasteries in Säraye, where he died ca. 1498 after a life full of successes and religious accomplishments.

The gädl of Y. provides important information a) on the council summoned by nəburä ʾəd ↗Nob to resolve the conflict between the metropolitan and the Ewosṭateans, presided over by the abbot of ↗Däbrä Maryam Gäbrä Krəstos; b) on the settlements of troops (↗č̣äwa) to the region of Ṣəlləma, Säraye, by aṣe ↗Zärʾa Yaʿəqob; c) on the strict relationship with the contemporary ruler of Säraye, ↗Bəlen Sägädä; d) and on the confrontation with the Muslims of the Red Sea coast, with mention of ↗Massawa and the ↗Dahlak islands.

At least five manuscripts containing Y.'s gädl are known in detail, and more manuscripts certainly exist. Conti Rossini only knew of (1) ms. BritLib Orient. 698 (1715 A.D.), fols. 53r–95r, and (2) a second manuscript in the church of Baräknaha (16th cent.), of which he was able to get a recent copy. It is not clear whether he got a complete copy, or only some excerpts eventually published, plus two miracles. It is now preserved in Rome as ms. ANLin, Conti Rossini 92 (20th cent.), fols. 1r–39r, and 39r–40v (two miracles; cp. StrANL 241, no. 92). Three more manuscripts of the gädl were recorded and summarily described by an Italian expedition to the Eritrean monasteries in the mid-1990s (s. Lusini 1998:21–32, 40–48): (3) ms. MIE no. 18 from Däbrä Dəḫuḫan (17th/18th cent.), containing only the Gädlä Yonas; (4) ms. MIE no. 19 also from Däbrä Dəḫuḫan (15th/16th cent.), containing Gädlä Ewosṭatewos, Gädlä Yonas, Gädlä Dəmyanos (now published, also from this ms., cp. Tedros Abreha 2007), and Gädlä Absadi; (5) ms. MIE no. 22 (probably 19th cent.), fols. 8–93, from Däbrä Dəḫuḫan. Other manuscripts mentioned by KinBibl 99 (no. 185), reported to be kept in ↗Gundä Gunde (LusStud 119, n. 143), or even mentioned in the unpublished manuscripts inventory of Däbrä Dəḫuḫan (four manuscripts of Täʾammərä Y.) testify to the relatively wide resonance of Y.'s hagiographic tradition.

Some of the manuscripts of the gädl, and at least two separate manuscripts, transmit additional chronographic notes pertaining to the monasteries founded by Y. as well as to Y.'s life (s. Lusini 1998 passim). Ms. MIE no. 17, a Gospel book from Däbrä Dəḫuḫan (15th cent.), docs. I–II, testifies once again to the strict relationship between Y.'s communities and Bəlen Sägädä. MIE no. 19, doc. I, is an important annalistic text precisely dating various events of Y.'s life and establishing a connection with contemporary events (according to this text, Y. was born in 1402, i.e. 54 years after the coming of the metropolitan abunä ↗Sälama II in 1348 A.D.). MIE no. 22, Zenahomu läʾabäw mänäkosat gəbṣawyan (19th cent.), docs. I–V, contains in doc. I a chronology of Y.'s ecclesiastical career, according to which he was born in the 21st year of aṣe ↗Dawit II's reign (1400/01), succeeded ↗Dəmyanos as abbot of Däbrä Sina in the 7th year of reign of aṣe Zärʾä Yaʿəqob (1441), founded Däbrä Ṣəge in the 21st of the latter (1455), and Däbrä Dəḫuḫan in the 11th of ↗Ǝskəndər (1489), and died in the 4th year of reign of aṣe Naʿod (1498, 17 Mäggabit), having lived 95 years (which would, however, date his birth to 1403: in fact, as is well known, the dating of the first year of Dawit II's reign is problematic). MIE no. 23, a Gospel book (probably 18th cent.), doc. I, provides similar information to MIE no. 22, doc. I.

Ms. BritLib Orient. 698, fols. 95r–96, reports a letter of benediction to Y. "mamhər of Däbrä Sahl" from John, patriarch of Alexandria (John XI [1427–52], XII [1480–83] or XIII [1483–1524]), apparently at the request of the former's disciple P̣awlos (also mentioned in ms. MIE nos. 22, doc. I, and 23, doc. I, as a messenger to aṣe Zärʾa Yaʿəqob). The text – also in ms. MIE no. 22 (not identified by Lusini 1998:40) – is an exceptional witness to the kind of high level and direct relationships the monastery of Y. was able to entertain at the time, probably not unrelated to the difficult relationships we know existed between the Ewosṭateans and the metropolitan bishop.

Y. is locally commemorated in his monasteries on 17 Mäggabit, but is not mentioned in the Sənkəssar. The integral publication of the Gädlä Yonas still remains an important desideratum of the historical and hagiographical research on him.

Yosab I

Abunä Y. (ዮሳብ; d. 1559?) was the metropolitan (↗Pappas) of the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox (Täwaḥədo) Church from ca. 1547/48 to ca. 1559. He succeeded abunä ↗Marqos I (d. ca. 1530) after a long vacancy of the Ethiopian Episcopal throne.

Information about Y. is scarce. He must have arrived in Ethiopia in ca. 1547/48 (199 of the "Era of the Martyrs", s. CRAxum 68, 71 [text]; BecRASO X, 23ff.). Mention of his name is made in two other documents of the Mäṣḥafä ↗Aksum, one dated in 1555/56 (207 of the "Era of the Martyrs", s. CRAxum 43). However, the abridged chronicle does not mention him at all, whereas the chronicle of ↗Gälawdewos mentions him once, only stating that a blessing of the Emperor by Y. occurred in 1548 (ConzGal 38).

The Mäṣḥafä Aksum and Portuguese sources state that another Coptic bishop, Peṭros, arrived in Ethiopia in ca. 1551, and acted first as coadjutor (eppisqoppos) of Y. In the chronicle of ↗Śärṣ̌ä Dəngəl (CRHist 58 [text]) Y.'s death is dated 1571/72, which, however, seems to be a mistake, for this should refer to his successor, Peṭros (TedEthPrel 1018; for the contrary view, s. MHAlex II, 63). The first document that mentions Peṭros acting as metropolitan is dated 1559/60 (212 "Era of the Martyrs", s. CRAxum 44f.). This date can be used by default as indicating the end of Y.'s episcopacy.

Yosab II

Abunä Y. (ዮሳብ; also known as Yosab III; d. 11 September 1803, Gondär) was the 104th metropolitan (↗Pappas) of the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox (Täwaḥədo) Church, from 1770 to 1803. He was the successor of abunä ↗Yoḥannəs III. Y.'s tenure fell into the period of the ↗Zämänä mäsafənt.

Y.'s name is mentioned in several manuscripts (mss. EMML no. 779; VatLib Borg. aeth. no. 5; Bayerische Staatsbibliothek cod.aeth. 90; BN Abbadie 12). It also appears in a document about ras ↗Wäldä Śəllase of Təgray (CRAxum 82). The chronicle, published by Weld ↗Blundell (BlunChr), offers several brief accounts of Y.

Y. arrived in Ethiopia at the beginning of 1770. Refusing the proposal of ras ↗Mikaʾel Səḥul to take his seat in Təgray, he entered Gondär on 18 June 1770. From this day on, Y. was much involved in religious and political life. He took part in the ↗coronation ceremonies of various kings such as aṣe ↗Iyasu III in 1784 and aṣe ↗Bäʾədä Maryam II in 1795. In 1796 he crowned aṣe ↗Sälomon III. Y. also negotiated with nobles, such as ↗Wäldä Gäbrəʾel and ↗Täklä Giyorgis I in 1795, to preserve peace, and he is said to have saved Gondär from an attack from ↗Amäde Kolase (s. EAE vol. 5) at the end of 1799.

Y. participated actively in the movement against the influence of the Oromo in state administration. In 1792, during the reign of ↗Ḥəzqəyas, Y. demanded, with the support of the əč̣č̣äge Wäldä Iyäsus and certain notables, the spatial separation of Christians from the Islamized Oromo. This action, however, failed because of the lack of cohesion among its promoters. Although Y. maintained his position over a long period without any major problems, difficulties appeared when the Christological dispute blazed up anew. From 1792, the Yäṣägga ləǧ (↗Ṣägga) movement promoted the Christological opinion called Śost lədät through the voice of its leader, əč̣č̣äge Wäldä Yona. On the opposite side, Y. became a leader of the ↗Täwaḥədo (s. also Karra) movement, professing the ↗Hulätt lədät faith, following the intervention of the patriarch John XVIII of Alexandria (1770–97) into the Ethiopian Christological debate in a letter to the Ethiopian rulers in 1794 (Kamil 1942: 108f.). In 1801, Y. decided to excommunicate the əč̣č̣äge and to launch a general excommunication against all those who professed the Śost lədät faith. A great part of the clergy in Gondär rebelled and Y. was exiled to an island on Lake Ṭana. His seat was restored only after he decided to retract his excommunication. Y. died in Gondär and was buried in the Qəddus Gäbrəʾel church (↗Abun bet). Ras ↗Gugsa Märsa, with the help of the əč̣č̣äge Wäldä Yona, decided to seize the properties of the metropolitan. But däǧǧazmač ↗Zäwde of Goǧǧam and Wäldä Śəllase put pressure on them until they received a certain amount of gold from them which later served to obtain a new metropolitan from Egypt. Y. was succeeded by abunä ↗Qerəllos who took office in 1816.

Yosedeq Wäldä Abib

Däǧǧazmač Y. (ዮሴዴቅ ፡ ወልደ ፡ አቢብ; d. 29 July 1759) was governor of ↗Goǧǧam from 1751 until his death.

Nothing is known about Y.'s early life except that he descended from ↗Amhara, ↗Gafat and ↗Oromo notables of Goǧǧam. According to ↗Aṣmä Giyorgis, Y. was a second generation Oromo settler in Goǧǧam (BTafA 444). However, a genealogical account from the region traces his Gafat and Amhara ancestry in Ṭəlat Gən, eastern Goǧǧam, 16 generations, approximately back to the 14th cent. His father, däǧǧazmač Wäldä Abib, was also a governor of Goǧǧam (r. 1708–11, 1745–49).

Y. appears to have enjoyed considerable following in the province owing to his ancestry, but also because of popular resentment against aṣe ↗Iyasu II who demoted Y.'s father in 1749. Commanding popular support, Y. successfully defied the Emperor's appointees over Goǧǧam. Paying tribute to Y.'s power and military skills, the Emperor subsequently tried to win Y.'s submission by means of a marriage alliance and restitution of his father's office to him. Thus, Y. was designated däǧǧazmač of Goǧǧam in September 1751, and given the hand of ↗Wälättä Ǝsraʾel, the Emperor's half-sister and daughter of ↗Bərhan Mogäsa (Məntəwwab).

The princess gave birth to his son ras ↗Ḫaylu who subsequently played a prominent role in the affairs of government both in Goǧǧam and at the court in ↗Gondär.

Yosef Nəguśe

Grazmač (also aläqa) Y.N. (ዮሴፍ ፡ ንጉሤ; d. 28 June 1900, Ǝnṭoṭṭo) was one of the two secretaries of aṣe ↗Mənilək II. In his youth (ca. 1863), Y.N. converted to ↗Catholicism and studied at the French Catholic School in Massawa, where he learned French. In 1868 [1869?], having heard that the Italian Catholic missionary Guglielmo ↗Massaja had settled there, Y.N. moved to Šäwa. There, however, he considered it best to return to Ethiopian Orthodox Christianity and to enter into nəguś Mənilək's service as his private interpreter.

At the court, Y.N. made a successful career and soon became an indispensable assistant to Mənilək. While ↗Ṣäḥafe təʾəzaz ↗Gäbrä Śəllase Wäldä Arägay was in charge of home affairs and the correspondence in Amharic, Y.N., thanks to his knowledge of French, was responsible for relations with foreigners and served Mənilək as a kind of foreign secretary. In 1885, after aṣe Yoḥannəs had ordered Mənilək to expel all Italians from Šäwa, Y.N. had to deliver the message to the Italian envoy Pietro ↗Antonelli. He also served as interpreter during the visit of the Russian traveller Viktor ↗Maškov in August 1889.

In 1889 Y.N. was involved in the translation of the Amharic version of the ↗Italo–Ethiopian Treaty of Friendship and Commerce. Y.N., who did not command Italian, had to rely on the oral French translation of Antonelli (Rubenson 1965: 35). Subsequently, Italy used the Italian version of Article 17 of the treaty, which differed slightly but significantly from the Amharic version, to justify an Italian quasi-protectorate over Ethiopia. However, in 1891 Italy had to withdraw from this claim. Antonelli and Augusto ↗Salimbeni, who had tried to corrupt Y.N. in another matter before, accused him of having caused the "misunderstanding" between the two parties. Mənilək, however, maintained his trust in Y.N. who continued in his important role among the diplomatic personnel until his death caused by treatment with ↗koso.

Y.N. is not to be confused with Yosef Zägalan, another interpreter and convert to Catholicism in Mənilək's service.

Yosṭinos

Y. (ዮስጢኖስ) was a 14th–15th cent. saintly monk, commemorated in (some copies of) the ↗Sənkəssar on 18 Näḥase, the day of his death (BudSaint 1230).

The main source on Y.'s life is his brief Vita, preserved in ms. EMML no. 1480 (the original from ↗Däbrä Maryam of Qʷäḥayn, Säraye) on fols. 44r–45v (followed by three Miracles on fols. 45v–47r). Almost all other works in the manuscript are closely connected with aṣe ↗Zärʾa Yaʿəqob, and it is possible that the Gädlä abunä Yosṭinos was also composed under the direct supervision of the emperor, and thus between 1434 and 1468 (s. Getatchew Haile 1983). According to tradition Y. was one of the teachers of the emperor (KinBibl 99), and, possibly, of the contemporary painter ↗Fəre Ṣəyon (Heldman 1994: 198).

The Vita itself contains no historical or geographical information. It does mention a church dedicated to St. Mary (Betä Maryam) as the site of Y.'s activity. The assumed closeness between Y. and Zärʾa Yaʿəqob, as well as the mention of several churches and of a Betä Maryam located in the Emperor's kätäma in the same manuscript (fol. 109rv), makes it possible that the reference is to a court church (s. Getatchew Haile 1980: 210 n. 23). In this case, one could assume that the manuscript arrived in Eritrea some time after the council of ↗Däbrä Məṭmaq in 1450, at which time Däbrä Maryam of Säraye received generous grants from the Emperor himself (cp. BauEr 30f.).

Also, we know of a contemporary Ewosṭatewan monk called Y. in Däbrä Maryam of Qʷäḥayn at the beginning of the 15th cent., as in 1408/09 he authored the lengthy colophon of the monastery's Octateuch manuscript (Lusini 1996: 58 n. 15, 2004: 230 n. 2). If this Y. is identical with the protagonist of the gädl "who dwelt on the top of a mountain" (BudSaint 1230), he was most probably a native of this Eritrean province, and a follower of St. ↗Ewosṭatewos – which could be another explanation as to why a manuscript with his gädl was donated to Däbrä Maryam. The monastery seems to have preserved at least one more copy of the Vita as part of a hagiographic collection (Gädlä qəddusan, fols. 62r–65v, s. KinBibl 100). Also in Säraye, in Mədrä Fälaši, there is a monastery dedicated to Y., which is reported to preserve another copy of his Acts (KinBibl 99).

The Acts of Y. dwell extensively on his high achievements in traditional ↗education, skills in the interpretation of the scriptures and dedication to monasticism, in which he spent 95 years. He was cured of smallpox with the help of angels. The miracles describe how the intercession of the saint cured a repentant unfaithful husband and saved a region from a fire – while another man who took a new wife in the hope of having children and did not want to repent was punished with death.

Yosṭos

Aṣe Y. (ዮስጦስ, regnal name Ṣ́äḥay Sägäd; d. 19 February 1716, r. 1711–16) was a Gondärine emperor. He was the son of däǧǧazmač ↗Dəlba Iyäsus of Təgray and wäyzäro Wälättä Ḥawaryat, a granddaughter of aṣe ↗Yoḥannəs I. He had at least one brother, abetohun Qerəllos (DombrChr 97, 101 [text] = 259, 263 [tr.]).

Prior to being crowned Y. acted as a kingmaker. As ↗bäǧərond Y. was important late in the reign of aṣe ↗Iyasu I. Facing the rebellion of his son, aṣe ↗Täklä Haymanot I, Iyasu sent Y. to fetch Täklä Haymanot to him (BegCron 82f.; BruNile II, 512–14; BassÉt 56 [text] = 167 [tr.]; Bosc-Tiessé 2008: 181f.; DombrChr 78 [text] = 239 [tr.]). Y.'s return to Gondär precipitated the coup, on 8 March 1706, which deposed Iyasu and made Täklä Haymanot king, following which Y. was imprisoned. Towards the end of 1707 he escaped. On the death of Täklä Haymanot in July 1708, Y. was prominent amongst a group of officials, among them ras ↗Wäldä Giyorgis, devoted to the king, who arranged his burial (BassÉt 63 [text] = 175 [tr.]).

Y. then fetched aṣe ↗Tewoflos, a brother of Iyasu I, from ↗Wähni Amba and had him proclaimed king (BassÉt 63 [text] = 175 [tr.]; BruNile II, 532). On 3 August 1708, Y. was appointed as däǧǧazmač of ↗Səmen and Təgray (BassÉt 64 [text] = 176 [tr.]; BegCron 91), deposed on 16 November 1709, and then, on 11 July 1710, received the title of ↗ras (BassÉt 65, 67 [text] = 177, 179 [tr.]). Three months later, following the death of Tewoflos on 13 October, Y. seized the throne and took the regnal name of Ṣ́äḥay Sägäd (BassÉt 67 [text] = 180 [tr.]; BegCron 91f.).

Y.'s reign was violent. He was devoted to ↗hunting, which he did every year of his reign. Blinding was a favoured punishment for his enemies (BegCron 95f.; but s. also DombrChr 97–101[text] = 259–62 [tr.]). He visited ↗Yəbaba once and spent time in the western lowlands where he hunted as well as raided local ↗"Šanqəlla" (BassÉt 68 [text] = 181[tr.]). He visited the island monasteries and churches of Lake ↗Ṭana. He toyed with Catholic missionaries, entertaining three Capuchins, who, following his deposition, were stoned to death (BegCron 98f.; DombrChr 102f. [text] = 264f. [tr.]; BruNile II, 579f.). He built the church of Lədäta, Gondär.

On 29 January 1716, while visiting the church of Abba Ǝnṭonyos, Y. became ill. He returned to Gondär; still sick, he could not prevent the revolt of the palace guard (↗wəllağ or wäʿali), who revolted, killed a number of notables, and brought Iyasu I's son, Dawit, from Wähni Amba. Dawit was proclaimed king aṣe ↗Dawit III on 11 February, and Y. was pronounced dead. Allegedly Y. was held captive for eight more days until he died (Kropp 1981: 146), and was possibly even tortured (DombrChr 101 [text] = 263 [tr.]).

Following Dawit's accession, the new king and his court sent to Y., asking, "How did you come to rule? And, who are you, any-way?" (BegCron 97ff.). Y. is then said to have agreed that he lacked Solomonic legitimacy (↗Solomonic dynasty). Prior to the 19th cent. this question was rarely raised. Y.'s example underlines the importance of the male line in the transmission of Solomonic legitimacy. Consciousness of his illegitimacy probably fuelled his cultivation of the churches and monasteries of Lake Ṭana, who reciprocated by producing favourable accounts of his reign (Bosc-Tiessé 2008: 194f.; the chronicle published by Dombrowski, and as an appendix to Bosc-Tiessé 2008: 397–401). He was buried in the Lədäta church, which he had founded, without royal honours.

Young Ethiopians

Y.E. (also Young Abyssinians) was a collective term given, mainly by Europeans and other foreigners in the early 20th cent., to Ethiopians (including some Eritreans resident in Ethiopia) who had attended modern schools in Ethiopia or abroad. Largely French-speakers, they were mainly employed in government bureaucracy, private business, the ↗railway, and as interpreters. Regarded as "intellectuals" they were likened in foreign circles to the Young Egyptians and Young Turks. They were widely conceived as intensely patriotic, "anti-foreign", and opposed to any accommodation with the neighbouring colonial powers, as well as advocates of rapid modernization.

The term Y.E. tended to be applied (by foreigners) to three politically different categories of individuals: (1) close supporters of ras Täfäri (the future aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I), including some of his most loyal and efficient aides; (2) undeclared critics of his regime, some of whom hoped to establish a political party; (3) Catholic Y.E., who tended to form a group apart, and included Bərhanä Marqos Wäldä Ṣadəq and ↗Ayyälä Gäbrä. Though mainly employed only by foreigners the concept of youth found its way in 1935 into a short-lived patriotic group, the የኢትዮጵያ ፡ ወጣቶች ፡ ማኅበር (Yäʾityoṗya wäṭṭatočč maḫbär, 'Ethiopian Youth's Society'), established in Harär under the patronage of Ḫaylä Śəllase's son ↗Mäkʷännən, governor of Harär. Its members, as attested in a contemporary document, included däǧǧazmač ↗Gäbrä Maryam Gari, ləǧ Wärqu Gobäna, aläqa Dästa Nägäwo, and abba (Gäbrä) Hanna Ǧəmma (Campbell 2009). During the Italian occupation the Y.E. incurred the wrath of Mussolini, who ordered them to be shot: many were killed during the ↗Graziani massacre (Pankhurst 1970: 40).

Yūsuf al-Akwān (Kawnayn) ↗Barhadle Yūsuf al-Akwān

Yūsuf Asʾar Yaṯʾar

Y. was a South Arabian ruler of the first quarter of the 6th cent. (↗Arabia). His complete name is attested in two Late Sabaic ↗inscriptions, as ywsf/ʾsʾr/yṯʾr in Ja(mme) 1028.1, and as ysf/ʾsʾr/yṯʾr in Ry(ckmans) 507.3. The first name is the Biblical proper name Joseph, vocalized either Yōsēf according to Hebrew, Yūsif according to Yemeni-Arabic, or Yūsuf according to Classical Arabic. The first of the two epithets, ʾsʾr (Asʾar), could be interpreted as 'remnant', the second, yṯʾr (Yaṯʾar), as 'he will take revenge'. In Greek he bears the name Δουναάς which probably has its origin in the clan-name Ḏū-Nuʾās known from inscriptions of members of the tribe of Ġaymān, namely bnw/ḏġymn/wnʾsm, members of Ḏū-Ġaymān and Ḏū-Nuʾāsim (e.g. Ja 626.2), later bn/nwsm, Banū Nuwāsim (MS Ǧabal Tinaᶜ 3). This clan-name Ḏū Nuwās was explained in Arabic as ‘the man with curly hair’. Following Arab tradition, he adopted the name of Y. upon conversion to ↗Judaism (aṭ-Ṭabarī; al-Hamdanī; Iklīl). Before that, his name was Zurᶜa Ḏū Nuwās al-Aṣġar, combined with differing genealogies showing various ↗Ḥimyarite kings (tabābiᶜa) as his ancestors, among them the famous Abū Karib Asᶜad. In Syriac he bears the name Masrūq, possibly the Arabic equivalent of the Syriac-Aramaic passive participle srīqā, ‘worthless person’. His Ethiopic name Finəḥas (ፊንሓስ) with the variants Finaḥas (ፊናሓስ) and Finas (ፊናስ) is probably an adaptation of a disputed nickname of Y. to the Hebrew name Pinḥās known from the ↗Old Testament (Num 25); the Arabic form Finḥās is already attested as the name of Y. in the Arabic version of the Martyrium Arethae (↗Arethas). The form Yosef (ዮሴፍ) is also attested in a new Ethiopic version of the Martyrium (s. Bausi 2010), followed by the epithet zäyənəᵓᵓəs, ‘Junior’ or ‘Minor’, which certainly renders “al-Aṣġar” (‘the Younger’) in the above-mentioned names of Y. In view of the fact that the Hebrew name Yōsēf, ‘he (i.e. God) adds’, corresponds in its meaning exactly to the Sabaic name Yazᵓan, it has been argued that Y. might have been a member of the then powerful tribal confederation of the Yazᵓanids.

The Late Sabaic rock-inscription Ry 510 which is dated to the year 631 of the Ḥimyarite era (= 516 [or 521] A.D.) was still drawn up by king Maᶜdīkarib Yaᶜfur, so one may assume that Y. came to power at the beginning of the following year, after having attempted in vain to gain the kingship in the years before. Rejecting the long royal titulary used until then he named himself simply “king of all the tribes”. Immediately he launched military operations against the Ethiopians stationed in Yemen and against their allies the Christians, especially against the Chalcedonian Orthodox Christians as fellow-believers of the Byzantine emperor. During this campaign the Ethiopians in the capital of Ẓafār were killed, the coastal plain was recaptured and the port of Maddabān (al-Mandab) was blockaded in order to prevent a further landing of troops. Both in Ẓafār and in Muḫāwān (al-Muḫāᵓ) on the coast the churches were burnt down. The inhabitants of ↗Nağrān were forced to give hostages, and access to the town was cut off. The reason for these measures was less religious fanaticism than a xenophobic reaction against a possible extension of the influence of the ↗Byzantine Empire into South-West Arabia and the creation or restoration of an independent Ḥimyarite political power, respectively. These events are described in the three Late Sabaic rock-inscriptions Ry 507, 508 and Ja 1028 which were drawn up by the Yazᵓanid army commanders of king Y. in the summer of 633 of the Ḥimyarite era (518 [or 523] A.D.) after 13 months of military operations. In the autumn of the same year the besieged Nağrān was taken, many clerics and laymen were burnt in the church there and thousands of members of the Christian community died in various ways a martyr’s death, among them also Ḥāriṯ (Gr. ’Aρέθας [Aréthas], Eth. ኂሩት [Ḫirut]), the head of the municipality of Nağrān who is venerated as a saint in the Christian Orient. Reports about this persecution of the Christians of Nağrān are preserved in two Syriac writings, namely in a letter of ↗Simeon of Bēth Aršām to Simeon of Gabbūlā, and in an anonymous letter which is obviously dated to July 519. In connection with these letters are to be mentioned works of a mainly hagiographic character, such as the Greek Acts of the martyrdom of Saint Arethas and his companions in the town of Nağrān; the Ethiopic and the Arabic versions of the history of the martyrs of Nağrān; and a fragmentary Syriac work without title and author, the so-called Book of the ↗Ḥimyarites, which not only contains acts of the Ḥimyarite martyrs, but, like the Martyrium Arethae, also reports on the deeds of the Ethiopian King ↗Kaleb Əllä Aṣbəḥa in South Arabia.

The martyrdom of the Ḥimyarite Christians caused a great consternation among the Christians in the Orient and prompted an invasion of an Ethiopian army which began after endlessly delayed preparations not before the year 525. The first attempt of an Ethiopian invasion probably took place already in the year 519, but seems to have remained unsuccessful. The military expedition was led by Kaleb Əllä Aṣbəḥa himself and was supported by the Byzantine emperor Justin who put ships at the disposal of the Ethiopians so that the armed forces could cross the Red Sea. The Ethiopian troops conquered Yemen, king Y. was defeated and died, and Christianity became the dominant religion in South Arabia. An Ethiopic inscription (RIÉ no. 195) which most probably was set up in Mārib immediately after the events of the year 525 and of which three extensive fragments are preserved, mentions the deposed king of Ḥimyar. The Late Sabaic inscription CIH 621 from Ḥuṣn al-Ġurāb near the harbour of Qanaʾ/Kane, which dates from the year 640 of the Ḥimyarite era (525 [or 530] A.D.), was written by former adherents of king Y. from the Yazʾanids and other tribal groups of Yemen, among them members of the tribe of Ġaymān, and confirms that the Ethiopians crossed the sea with two expeditionary forces and killed the king of Ḥimyar.

Arab tradition reports that king Y., once he was aware of what had befallen him, drove his horse into the sea until it carried him into deep waters, and in this way lost his life. Commentators of the ↗Qurʾān have referred the trench of fire (sura 85) to an event which occurred during the persecution of the Christians of Naǧrān and have branded the Jewish king and his followers as the damned men who initiated the fire of the trench (aṣḥāb al-uḫdūd). The Persian historiographer Ḥamduʾllāh-i-Qazwīnī claims in his select history Taʾrīḫ-i-guzīda that Ḥasan-i-Ṣabbāḥ, the founder of the Assassins, was a descendant of Yūsif Ḥimyarī, the king of Yemen. Nevertheless the Yemenites honoured Y.'s memory, because he fought against the hated Ethiopians and because he was the last of the glorious kings of Ḥimyar. The final chapter of the ↗Kəbrä nägäśt describes the dawn of the last days (↗Eschatology), when the Jews rise up against the believers of Naǧrān, the King of Ethiopia crusades against Finəḥas, and Kaleb and Justin finally meet in Jerusalem.

Z

Zäʾamlakəyä

The term Z. (ዘአምላክየ, ‘of my God’) can refer to (1) a group of psalms (62/63, 91/92, 5, 64/65; the name Z. is from the incipit of Ps 62), (2) the ↗dəggʷa antiphon that accompanies each psalm of the Z. group, and (3) a type of ↗qəne, composed and sung after each of the Z. psalms by the same person who chants the psalms.

Z. qəne is the second qəne type taught in ↗qəne bet, following upon ↗gubaʾe qana. Both qəne types are performed in the ↗ʿəzəl mode after Z. psalms. The main differences are their length – gubaʾe qana has two bet and Z. has three, which, according to traditional scholars, symbolize the Trinity – and the occasions on which these ↗hymns are produced – the Z. when major Christological and Mariological feasts occur on Monday, Tuesday, or Thursday, the gubaʾe qana when the feasts occur on Wednesday, Friday, or Saturday, even in Lent. Both are composed in the ↗Səbḥatä nägh celebration on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday.

The term mändärdäräya, referring to the second bet of Z., is also used to indicate the tempo and speed of recitation of the qəne in general (DTWDic 338a; KaneDic 1754a; Godet 1983–84: 152).

In some churches, because of restrictions on the use of musical instruments (esp. ↗käbäro), the composition of qəne, including Z., is not allowed (e.g., Bäʾata Church in Gondär).

Z. (ዘበኛ) is an Amharic term in common usage throughout the 19th and 20th cent. for a guard or sentinel (GuiVoc 618). Such individuals tended to be allocated a special place in military camps (↗kätäma), usually around the quarters of the chief, his principal steward and followers (Parkyns 1875: 175). Guards armed with rifles were likewise known as Z.-↗näftäñña, i.e. scout-riflemen (AbbSéjour vol. 1, 256; GueCopMen 78, 116, 228).

Aṣe ↗Mənilək II towards the end of the 19th cent. instituted a force of Z., who, according to de Coppet, were “armed with the best rifles” (GueCopMen 78). A sketch map (ibid. Atlas no. 6) indicates that they were assigned an area immediately around that occupied by the əlfəñ, or royal abode, and the addaraš, or reception hall (↗gəbbi). This map further indicates that the guards had their tents a little beyond the palace quarters, the guards in charge of the artillery being placed a little ahead of the line of march. The camp of ras ↗Ḫaylu Täklä Haymanot of Goǧǧam was likewise guarded by Z. on the left and the right, as well as by special Z. for the horses (Griaule 1934).

The kəbur Z., or “honoured” guard (in English the ↗Imperial Bodyguard), was instituted by ras Täfäri Mäkʷännən (later aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I) in 1929 when a Belgian military mission was invited to reorganize the country’s elite soldiers. Following his coronation as aṣe Ḫaylä Śəllase in 1930 they were very renowned. A visiting British journalist, Geoffrey Harmsworth, states that, by 1935, they consisted of 6,000 “picked and trained men, equipped with the latest Mauser rifles” (Harmsworth 1935: 266, 289). They wore a khaki uniform designed by the then leading Ethiopian artist, ↗Agäññähu Ǝngəda, and caps decorated with lion’s hair, but generally went barefoot (Farago 1935: 56, 135, 143). Some were sent for further study in France at the St. Cyr Military Academy (Atnafu Makonnen 1960: 91, 93).

After Ethiopia's liberation in 1941, the Imperial Bodyguard was re-established independently of the British, who trained the rest of the army (PerGov 474, index).

Z. is the name of a town and an administrative district in the Tihāma coastal plain of the ↗Yemen. It is located ca. 25 km from the ↗Red Sea shore in an area of fertile agricultural lands irrigated by Wādī Rimaᶜ, in the north, and Wādī Z., to which it owes its name, in the south.

Z. was founded in the 9th cent. under the Ziyādī dynasty (r. 819–1021) who made it its political centre. The historical trajectory of Z. was in large part shaped by its location on the commercial route connecting ↗Egypt with ↗India, but also on the ↗pilgrimage route linking Aden and even north-east Africa, to the holy cities of ↗Mecca and Medina. As early as the 10th–11th cent. Z. was recognized as one of the leading urban centres in the Islamic world. Z. grew to be an important centre of commerce linking the western Indian Ocean with the Mediterranean, at least until the 16th cent. when it gradually lost its role as a transit emporium in the face of growingly dominant European shipping. Its success in international commerce gradually made it an important religious centre of Islamic learning and attracted scholars from across the Islamic world. Its highly reputed *madrasa*s ('[Islamic] schools') offered training in Šāfiᶜī and Ḥanafī jurisprudence among different disciplines, and radiated far and wide, including in north-east Africa.

Z.'s importance to north-east African history is reflected by tenacious cross-Red Sea trade and checkered political relations between Ethiopia, the ↗Dahlak islands and the Yemen already by the end of the first millennium A.D. Writing around 935, al-Masᶜūdī reported about a treaty concluded between al-Ḥabaša ('Abyssinia') and the Yemeni sovereign Ibrāhīm b. Ziyād (known aṣ Ṣāḥib al-Harmalay), ruler of Z., adding that the treaty opened the way to flourishing trade relations between the two Red Sea coasts. One of the most important commodities in this commerce was Ethiopian slaves (↗Slavery), shipped via the Dahlak islands to Z., where there was a large slave depot. For example, according to the Yemeni Zaydī historian ᶜUmāra al-Yamanī (b. 1121, d. 1174), in 977 the governor of Dahlak offered Abū l-Ǧayš, the ruler of Z., a tribute of 1,000 Ethiopian slaves of which 500 were female slaves specially selected for the harems of southern Arabia (Cuoq 1981:46).

Although long-standing, the presence of north-east African slaves in the Yemen and their role in its political history became ever more conspicuous and important in this period. In 1021, Naǧāḥ, a freed Ethiopian slave, was able to take power in Z. He established a dynasty, the Banū Naǧāḥ, which held power in Z. until 1159. In the course of fierce power struggles with the Ṣulayḥid dynasty, the Banū Naǧāḥ were able to capitalize on their ties to north-east Africa by taking periodic refuge in the Dahlak islands and by recruiting thousands of Ethiopian mercenaries who strengthened their position vis-à-vis their archrivals. In general and despite recurring conflict, Z. witnessed urban development and population growth under the Banū Naǧāḥ; they built mosques and other edifices, erected a wall around the town for protection, minted coins, and, according to ᶜUmāra al-Yamanī, had a particular penchant for Arabic poetry (Cuoq 1981:48f.; Chelhod 1981:59–66; ᶜUmāra al-Yamanī 1892).

Z. lived its "Golden Age" under the Rasūlid dynasty (r. 1229–1454). Its dominance as the principal gateway to the Yemen and an important commercial hub was maintained, and its central role as the foremost South Arabian religious centre of scholarship and learning was stabilized. Z.'s influence and role in diffusing Islamic religious, mystical and legal learning to Muslim polities and societies in the Horn of Africa was particularly momentous. For example, some oral traditions note that the initial diffusion of Islam in the ↗Ogaden region was the work of a certain faqīh ᶜUmar together with aw Yūsuf, who was a scholar from Z. (Gori 2003:221; 2006:201–18).

Z. was taken by the Ottomans who made it their chief South Arabian centre between 1538 and 1636. During that period dynamic commercial, political and religious interactions between the Yemen and north-east Africa persisted. As the seat of the Ottoman paša in the southern Red Sea zone, Z. also played a role in the broader political and international arena (Ottomans and Portuguese rivalries played out in Ethiopia; s. also ↗Portugal, relations to) of the so-called "religious wars" between Muslims and Christians in 16th-cent. Ethiopia (Orhonlu 1974: 14–69). The ↗Futūḥ al-Ḥabaša noted that at around 1541–42 imām ↗Aḥmad b. Ibrāhīm al-Ġāzī sent captured prisoners to the Ottoman ruler of Z., amīr Sulaymān, "who made them his slaves" (BassHist I 43–4). Among the many prisoners sent to Z. was also ↗Minas, aṣe ↗Ləbnä Dəngəl's son and two of his cousins, Laʾəkä Maryam and Amätä Maryam. A couple of years later Minas was exchanged and returned to Ethiopia in return for Aḥmad b. Ibrāhīm al-Ġāzī's own son, Muḥammad, who was captured by the Christians (Pankhurst 2002: 410; ConzGal; Cuoq 1981: 258).

The influence of Z.'s religious academies on Islamic institutions and scholars in the Horn of Africa since the 18th cent. cannot be overstated. Muslim scholars and holy men from the area travelled to Z. to acquire and advance religious education, in some cases returning to north-east Africa and diffusing the teachings of particular legal schools or mystical orders. This is how a certain muftī Dāʾūd b. Abī Bakr, who acquired his religious training in Z., introduced Šāfiᶜism to south-eastern ↗Wällo in the early 19th cent. (HusIslam 67, 82). Some Eritrean Muslim scholars were also trained in the prestigious schools of Z. This was the case of qāḍī ᶜAbdalᶜalīm Idrīs (b. 1881, d. 1957), who served as judge in the court of Asmära from the late 1930s, as well as other senior posts in Eritrean Islamic institutions. Another example is that of sayyid Ǧaᶜfar al-Nātī, who had introduced the Aḥmadīya ↗Islamic brotherhood to Massawa in the Italian colonial period and had spent a decade studying in Medina and Z. (Miran 2009: 196f.).

Zädəngəl

Aṣe Z. (ዘድንግል, regnal name Aṣnaf Sägäd II; d. 13 October 1604, Barča) was emperor of Ethiopia from 1603 to 1604. He was the son of Ləssanä Krəstos, the brother of aṣe ↗Śärṣ́ä Dəngəl (PerChron 48 [text]).

Dynastic struggles erupted following the demise of Śärṣ́ä Dəngəl. The latter had originally promised the crown to Z., but in 1596 the empress and her power-hungry sons-in-law, ras ↗Atnatewos and ↗Kəflä Waḥəd, persuaded the dying sovereign to bequeath the throne to ↗Yaᶜəqob, the monarch's seven year-old son. Soon after the decision was made, the empress had Z. seized and confined to ↗Daga Ǝsṭifanos, but he eventually managed to escape and took refuge in Goǧǧam (Páez 2008: 140, 599f.; BecRASO II, 115; III, 207ff.).

In 1603, Yaᶜəqob fell out of favour with his patrons, and ras ↗Zäśəllase made Z. emperor with the intention that he would be little more than a figurehead. However, the new sovereign turned out to be an independent-minded ruler and a capable decision maker. He appointed the influential Zäśəllase governor of ↗Dämbəya and of neighbouring ↗Wägära and arranged a marriage between the latter and his sister. Evidence of Z.'s policies has survived in the form of two extant edicts. The first is a mass levy aimed at establishing a new army directly under his own command. The second edict, which has been preserved under the slogan "Man is free, land is tributary" (Perruchon 1896: 359, 361f.), was aimed at relieving the oppression that farmers and merchants suffered at the hands of the nobility and their soldiers. While this step earned the monarch the support of the masses, it provoked jealousy and antagonism among much of the nobility. Thereafter, Z. carried out sweeping personnel changes, appointing new governors to all the ↗Amhara provinces that were of strategic importance to Dämbəya.

The emperor's zeal for reform led him to invite the Jesuit missionary Pedro ↗Páez to Qoga in order to elucidate European systems of law and government (Páez 2008: 181; BecRASO II, 176; XI, 222; ↗Jesuits). Páez accepted the invitation and arrived in the capital on 17 June 1604. During their meetings, Z. secretly confided in the Jesuit his desire to embrace the Catholic faith, but knew that the lords would prevent him from joining the Roman Church (Páez 2008: 160, 306, 310, 622; BecRASO II, 146, 375, 381; III, 245; XI, 230, 322). Shortly after, Z. declared the abolition of ↗Sabbath observance, stirring the ire of the nobility (Páez 2008: 335; BecRASO II, 421; XI, 234).

Cognizant of how unpopular his reforms had been among the nobility, Z. also asked Páez to help him obtain the support of the Portuguese (↗Portugal) in his struggle against the lords. The Jesuit drafted a letter to Pope Clement VIII and King Felipe III on the emperor's behalf explaining his interest in ↗Catholicism and his need for military assistance (Páez 2008: 623ff.; BecRASO III, 247–50; XI, 233f.).

In the meantime, Z. managed to construct his new army, but this success proved to be short-lived. Following the rainy season of 1604, Atnatewos and Zäśəllase launched an insurrection and convinced the patriarch, abunä ↗Peṭros, to cross over to their side (s. Páez 2008: 399; BecRASO II, 518). Z. was defeated in the battle of ↗Barča and killed by Zäśəllase on 13 October 1604 (PerChron vol. 1, 53; BecRASO XI, 241f.). Z.'s corpse was to remain on the battlefield for three days before a handful of peasants buried the monarch in a small church in Dämbəya. Some ten years later, aṣe ↗Susənyos brought his cousin's remains to their final resting place in Daga Ǝsṭifanos (Páez 2008: 388; BecRASO II, 502; XI, 242).

Zäge

Z. (ዘጌ) is a densely forested (junipers, sycamores, Erythrina Brucei) peninsula on the south-west shore of Lake ↗Ṭana, ca. 20 km west of Baḥər Dar. It is a site of several monastic communities (↗monasteries), male and female, some of them established by the 14th-cent. abba Yoḥannəs from Šäwa and abba ↗Bäträ Maryam. The most important monastic centre of the region in the 17th cent., as witnessed, e.g., by the Gädlä ↗Wälättä Peṭros, Z. continued to flourish in the 18th and the 19th cent. (in 1866 Rassam reported 200 communities). Z. was a preferred camp site of aṣe ↗Tewodros II which however did not save it from being plundered by his army. Until 1935 its economy was based on the cultivation of ↗coffee and ↗gešo as well as on the ↗slave trade. Presently the main occupation of the people is still fishing, coffee cultivation and, very recently, farming.

Presently, there are seven churches on Z. The foundation of Wərra (also: Ura) Kidanä Məḥrät (hereafter W.K.M.), Aswa Maryam (A.M.) and Däbrä Śəllase (D.Ś., belonging to a gädam) is ascribed to abba Yoḥannəs. Bäträ Maryam is credited with establishing Bäträ Maryam (B.M.) and Maḥəl Zäge Giyorgis (M.Z.G.). The remaining two are Fəre Maryam (F.M.) and Yəgända Täklä Haymanot (Y.T.H.). All the churches are of a circular plan (↗Church buildings) and large (20–26 m in diameter), built on a stepped plinth, with squared ↗mäqdäs, polygonal qəddəst and circular qəne maḫlet with several beams supporting a conical straw roof.

All Z. churches (with the exception of Y.T.H. which was destroyed by fire) are decorated with wall ↗paintings covering the external walls of the mäqdäs, the beams of the roof and sometimes the walls of the qəddəst. The oldest sets, dating to the 17th (A.M.) and 18th cent. (D.Ś., W.K.M.), are only partly preserved; in the churches which have new paintings the old frag-ments are fastened onto the walls of the qəddəst, qəne maḫlet, or kept in church exhibition rooms. The iconographical programmes follow the system developed for circular churches in the second half of the 18th cent. (best represented in W.K.M.), with the addition of scenes connected to the founding fathers (Yoḥannəs and Bäträ Maryam) and local dignitaries who acted as ↗donors. In some churches (e.g., D.Ś.), paintings seem to have been modelled on the second mural set of ↗Narga Śəllase. Some groups of paintings are supplied with ↗inscriptions containing the date and the name of the painter: the southern wall of mäqdäs in W.K.M. was painted in 1895 by aläqa ↗Ǝngəda; the mäqdäs in B.M. in 1937 by məsläne Ṭərunäh and mäggabi Läᶜaläm Bərhan.

Several old wooden carvings (↗Wood, s. EAE vol. 5), some of them figural, are preserved in B.M. (door plinths and panels between the beams supporting the roof around the qəne maḫlet) and W.K.M. (door plinths). According to local tradition, these are the remains of 14th-cent. churches.

The largest collection of ↗manuscripts (over 300) that supposedly contains the books from destroyed churches in the area is kept in W.K.M. In the 1970s, over 100 manuscripts belonging to Z. churches were microfilmed by the ↗Ethiopian Manuscript Microfilm Library (EMML), but they are still not catalogued: 32 in Y.T.H., 64 in M.Z.G., 23 in W.K.M. Some of them have been referred to in scholarly publications (cp. Bosc-Tiessé 2000: 250f.): the 15th-cent. illuminated ↗Senodos (B.M.; EMML no. 8128), the Epifanyos dating 1708 donated by ᶜaqqabe säᶜat Abranyos (B.M.; EMML no. 8156); the ↗Haymanotä abäw from 1674 with two later added miniatures (A.M.); the illuminated ↗Dərsanä Mikaʾel, 18th cent. (W.K.M.); the illuminated (one miniature) ↗sälam on saints Peter and Paul and other texts, 18th cent. (W.K.M.); the Vita (↗gädl) of Bäträ Maryam (M.Z.G.; EMML no. 8137); and the ↗Nägärä Maryam from the 17th cent., with 13 miniatures added later (F.M.).

The churches also possess important collections of liturgical objects: shafted and hand ↗crosses, chalices, and ↗paintings on wood, vestments (↗clothing), umbrellas (↗dəbab), and ↗crowns dating to the 17th–19th cent. Some of them are connected by the local tradition with aṣe ↗ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon (e.g., a box for a ↗tabot, a crown, an umbrella and a cross in A.M.; a crown and a painting showing Mary with Child, two equestrian saints, the donors and the Ancient of the Days in M.Z.G.). Several of these objects were displayed at the Coptic ↗art exhibition held in 1963 in Essen and 1964 in Paris where they were described in the exhibition catalogues (sometimes wrongly dated).

Zaghi, Carlo

Z. (b. 27 March 1910, Argenta [Ferrara], d. 6 February 2004, Argenta) was an Italian historian and journalist. At the age of 17, due to a conflict with a teacher, he was expelled from school and banned from joining public secondary education. Nevertheless, he managed to get a secondary degree by studying on his own. Towards 1927, he also started contributing articles to the Gazzetta Ferrarese and the Corriere Padano.

When he was 18, Z. married Pia Virgina Tosi. He went then to France and Switzerland where he was involved in archival research. In 1930 he published an appreciated study on Gustavo ↗Bianchi. In 1935, he graduated in history from the University of Bologna and two years later joined the recently created Istituto per gli Studi di Politica Internazionale of Milan and started working for the Ente Autonomo Mostra Triennale delle Terre Italiane d’Oltremare in Naples.

In 1938 Z. entered the Scuola di Storia Moderna e Contemporanea in Rome directed by Gioacchino Volpe. Imprisoned and sentenced to death as an anti-fascist activist, he was able to make a daring escape from the firing squad. For a short period he was editor of Democrazia ferrarese and Corriere del mattino (Ferrara). From 1946 to 1957, Z. was editor-in-chief of Il Giornale, a liberal-oriented daily newspaper published in Naples. Thereafter, he remained in Naples for almost 40 years. He taught at the Università Federico II of Naples and after a short period also at the University of Bari. From ca. 1970 to 1985 he was at the ↗Istituto Universitario Orientale in Naples where he taught Modern history and African history.

A precocious and prolific writer, Z. produced at least 15 important books. Skilfully edited and well researched, they cover a wide array of topics related to European history and ↗colonialism in Africa, from Europe under Napoleon to Russian contacts with Ethiopia. Of note are also Z.’s insights into Italian colonialism in the Horn of Africa, based largely on unpublished diaries, private correspondence and official state records. He edited Salimbeni’s private diary and shed light on Crispi’s policy in Ethiopia.

Zagʷe

Z. (ዛጔ or ዛጓ[ይ], Zagʷa[y]/ዛጔይ, Zagʷey, ዘውጔ, Zäwgʷe) is the name of an ↗Agäw line of Ethiopian kings (hence, possibly, their designation: from Zäʾagäw*, 'of Agäw [stock]'; but from Zäʾagʷay*, 'of the king, principal' in Agäw, for Conti Rossini 1895: 356f. and 1895–96: 152, cp. CRStor 303; folk etymology from Gəᶜəz Zäʾagʷyäyä*, 'He who pursued, put to flight', in SerHist 236 and n. 117, 239; connected with ↗Ḫasgʷa [s. EAE vol. 5]) likely to have ruled from the first half of the 12th cent. (ca. 1140?) to 1268/70. Their rule came to an end when their last representative, ↗Yətbaräk, was defeated and killed by ↗Yəkunno Amlak, a young Amhara prince claiming descent – remote though – from the legitimate royal house of ↗Aksum, i.e. the ↗Solomonic dynasty (s. Kaplan – Salamon in PICES 14).

A clan rather than a simple dynasty, the Z. came originally from the district of ↗Bugna in today's ↗Lasta (north-western ↗Wällo, ancient ↗Amhara [s. EAE vol. 5]), the core of their native dominion and then of their kingdom (s. now Derat 2009 and 2010: 157ff.). A permanent capital was sited there in the mountains, at a place called Ad(d)äfa or Adäffa, which was soon to become a rival of Aksum also as a "holy city" – a "new ↗Jerusalem" – and a pilgrimage centre in its own right (CRStor 318; Ricci 1978: 172f.). The toponym Ad(d)äf(f)a is mentioned in both Arabic and Ethiopic sources. It survives slightly to the north of present-day ↗Lalibäla (alias Roha and Wärwär), so called after the most famous Z. king (↗Lalibäla), to whose reign the construction of the ↗rock-hewn churches and buildings forming the "new Jerusalem" ended by being entirely attributed, as a result – however improbable – of the fall of Jerusalem in 1187 (TadTChurch 59 and n. 5; cp. van Donzel 1998 and Phillipson 2009a: 123f., 179ff. and 2009b: 367, as well as, now, Mercier – Lepage 2012: 267–81).

From there, ca. 200 km south-east of Aksum, the Z. administered a centralized realm corresponding to much of today's ↗Eritrea and northern and central ↗Ethiopia, extending southwards to Lasta and ↗Wag̣ as well as to ↗Damot (↗Wälläga and western ↗Šäwa), and thence westwards to ↗Bägemdər (Buxton 1970: 44). They implemented a strategy for annexing the regions beyond the ↗Märäb River, even by resettling there Agäw groups from Wällo (s. Lusini 2010: 44f.); but exerted no control east of the Šäwan plateau, i.e. in a territory increasingly occupied by such Muslim states as ↗Ifat and ↗Hadiyya. The Z.'s main outlet to the sea seems to have been ↗Zaylaᶜ, whence their state was engaged in long-distance ↗trade – although to a much lesser extent than Aksum (SerHist 263).

Unlike Aksum, the Z. kingdom was virtually unknown to the coeval Mediterranean powers. Trading arguably, in principle, with the Persian Gulf and being comparatively remote from the larger Christian and Orthodox worlds, it had nonetheless regular contact with ↗Egypt – which periodically supplied a metropolitan (↗P̣ap̣p̣as) – and Jerusalem, where the Ethiopians, by the end of the 12th cent., maintained a considerable presence (Meinardus 1970: 117). Like those cut into the rock at Lalibäla, the Z. constructions – e.g., the church of ↗Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos – were often modelled after Christian buildings in Egypt and in the Holy Land, and show traces of contemporary Islamic influence, esp. in their carving and decoration (Balicka-Witakowska 2010: 111ff., 121–25). Artistic relationships testify to close ties, and this contributes to dispel the myth of medieval Ethiopia's total isolation from the outside world.

Next to the records of aṣe Lalibäla, in charge from ca. 1185 to 1224/25 at least (for whom ↗inscriptions are also available, s. now Bosc-Tiessé 2010: 62, 64, 76f., 79–90), and his nephew and successor ↗Näʾakkʷəto Läʾab, who died ca. 1250 (Tedeschi 1996: 340), the date of the Z.'s dispossession is one of the very few surviving elements for the chronology of the dynasty as a whole. Ethiopian "official" tradition gives the Z. a total reign of over three centuries, the exact number of years varying in the sources between 330 and 373, with a preference for 333 years, 3 months and 3 days (Belaynesh Michael in DicEthBio 200f.). Thus, counting back from 1268/70, the Z.'s rise to power would have been a more or less immediate consequence of the fall of Aksum, in keeping with both the local belief dating the latter to the late 9th or mid-10th cent. and the need of bridging the chronological gap between the two events.

The entire Z. period is, however, shrouded in mystery, as still a part of the Ethiopian "Dark Ages". The evidence is all the more inadequate here when considering the Z. cultural legacy. Likewise, when compared with the Aksumite age and the first three centuries of the Solomonic "restoration", the Z. period is by far the least studied (Tekeste Negash 2006: 121ff.; cp. also Berry 1981–82). Yet, as rightly maintained by art historians and archaeologists, given the high concentration of rock-hewn churches further north, in eastern Təgray, the Z. architectural achievements, namely the town of Lalibäla and the surrounding places, prove to be a major development of the Aksumite tradition and the result of political and social stability – of more than a century at least – that was seldom equalled afterwards in Ethiopia (GerKir^{2} 61 and Buxton 1970: 45f., 108f.; cp. now Phillipson 2004: 85ff., 2009a: 183–91 and 2009b: 367f.). This framework of continuity was indeed enlivened, if not revived, by the external contacts fostered by the Z. Nor was it limited to the church architecture of Lasta and the neighbouring areas: the Ethiopian ↗manuscript tradition – likely to be then represented by such items as the much disputed Gospels of ↗Ǝnda Abba Gärima (Bausi 2010) – betrays a comparable revival of antiquity, as a consequence of a long local development on to which the suggestion was grafted of more or less contemporary elements from elsewhere (cp. Phillipson 2004: 86ff. and 2009a: 191f. with a different view).

Not belonging to the same ethnic and linguistic group as the ancient Ethiopian kings, in local documents – mainly "post-Z." hagiography and chronicles – the Z. are considered usurpers, which also accounts for the dearth of evidence concerning them. Their opposition to Amhara and Təgray in terms of Agäw- (↗Cushitic-) vs. Semitic-speaking people could hardly justify, however, the Z.'s dismissal "as an alien and impious group of adventurers" (TadTChurch 57 n. 3, 60, 72, discarded by Marrassini 1995: 4f. and n. 11). The Z. did retain their own (Agäw) language, but seem to have used it within the family context, and not "for purposes of administration" (so, instead, Tekeste Negash 2006: 130 after TadTChurch 57 and n. 3; but s. Schneider 1983: 113 and Marrassini 1995: 5 and nn. 12–14).

Hagiographies are known for as many as five kings, a queen and a prince of this family: ↗Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos, ↗Ḥarbay, Lalibäla, Näʾakkʷəto Läʾab, Yətbaräk, ↗Mäsqäl Kəbra and Bäḫaylä Mäsqäl (a son of Näʾakkʷəto Läʾab who died in infancy). Their Vitae were all written in the late 15th/early 16th cent., long after the downfall of the Z. (when their Solomonic opponents were well settled). Despite the harsh criticism they have been dealt with, these texts preserve valid, albeit scant, historical data. Moreover, they testify to a concept of ↗kingship that is quite different from the traditional Ethiopian one: inspired to peace rather than to war and hunting, with a strong opposition between (biblical) kingship and (Christian) priesthood, it involves the king's activities, albeit rare and confined to bringing prosperity to his country through such operations as ↗rainmaking – which recalls one of the most prominent aspects of "African" chiefdoms (Marrassini 1990 and 1995: 14–19).

Also significant are other sources with a marked ideological imprint such as the late 17th-cent. ↗Bəʿəlä nägäśt. This treatise, concerning the end of the Z. usurpation and the revival of the Aksumite or Davidic ↗monarchy, was conceived as a pendant to a much earlier literary work, the ↗Kəbrä nägäśt. The latter is likely to have been initially ordered by the ↗Ǝndärta ruling family, which traced its genealogy back to Aksum more easily than Yəkunno Amlak and his line. Linked thereby with regional (northern) aspirations to independence, the text was only later appropriated by the Solomonic dynasty (Chernetsov 1982: 37f.; 2000: 46–50, 54f.; cp. also Ricci 1978: 171–75). In the Kəbrä nägäśt, the Z. – "not being [of] Israel", i.e. descendants of the Queen of Sheba (↗Makədda) and King ↗Solomon through their son ↗Mənilək (I) – are said to be "transgression of the (divine) law and the commandment" (ch. 34, BezKebr 30a; Budge 1932: 42). In the colophon of the work, they are alluded to as being "not Israelites" and, therefore, "transgressors of the Law" (ch. 117 BezKebr 173b; Budge 1932: 228).

Relying on a precarious ideological position, and challenged not so much by the Ethiopian Church as by those Təgrayan élites behind the composition of the Kəbrä nägäśt with whom they must have been at odds, the Z. too boasted Israelite descent, but "of the family of Moses and Aron, on account of the coming of Moses into Abyssinia", as attested in 1208 – with some confusion, though, between ↗Nubia (s. EAE vol. 5) and Abyssinia – by the Copt Abū l-Makārim (↗Abū Ṣāliḥ). Elaborating on Moses's marriage to an "Ethiopian" woman according to Num 12:1, he also adds that she was "the king's daughter"; that the Abyssinians "possess the ↗Ark of the Covenant"; and that the kings of Ethiopia were also priests (Evetts 1895:286ff. [fols. 105b–106a]; cp. SerHist 270 and n. 35, Tekeste Negash 2006:130 and Munro-Hay 2005:74–84).

Like the Solomonic mythology, the Z. struggle to establish Israelite origins must be seen against the general background of Ethiopian ↗Judaism. It is rather tempting to argue that the commitment of the Z. to church building and their strict adherence to the Orthodox faith – with an emphasis on Sunday ("Christian ↗Sabbath"), praised by King Lalibäla in an inscription on a mänbärä ↗tabot now in the church of Däbrä Sina at his homonymous town (Gigar Tesfaye – Pirenne 1984:114–19) – were also a response to those contesting the legitimacy of their rule (Tekeste Negash 2006:130). Within the traditional framework of divine ↗kingship, both features were to trigger the rehabilitation of the dynasty through the sanctification of its members (with the exception of the first two kings, Märari and Ṭäṭädəm, possibly too close to the usurpation to be included). One of them, Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos, was portrayed as actual "priest and king" – which might have helped locate the mythical ↗Prester John in East Africa.

The process that brought about a change so supportive of the Z., long branded as usurpers, is a much debated issue. Not unparalleled in medieval European history (Marrassini 1990, 1995), it is likely to have taken place in the 15th–16th cent., when their hagiographies were written and the complex of "Däbrä Sina-Golgota-Śəllase" was possibly created at Lalibäla so as to solemnize, with the sanctification of the eponymous king, the rehabilitation of the Z. rulers that was being achieved by the Solomonic dynasty (Gervers 2003:45–48). As a result, their commemorations also entered the ↗Sənkəssar, which is a clear indication that the Z. kings – appearing since also in the visual arts – had become acceptable to both the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox [Täwaḥədo] Church and the revived Solomonic dynasty.

Neither the number nor the names of the Z. rulers can be assessed with certainty. They seem to have followed the Agäw law of inheritance, implying a certain degree of matrilinearity, with shifting of power to brothers and then to nephews of the king (Marrassini 1995:6, but s. Chernetsov 1995:107ff.). Thus, in their lists, the verb nägśä, '(he) reigned', is used for each king instead of wälädo lä-, '(he) begat' (typical of the house of David), meaning that son did not necessarily succeed the father (Belaynesh Michael in DicEthBio 200).

The Z. ↗kings lists (s. EAE vol. 5) vary in different sources as far as the number of rulers and the overall duration attributed to the dynasty are concerned. Many of the "long" lists have eleven rulers, lasting 354 years altogether: Täklä Haymanot, Ṭänṭäwədəm or Ṭäṭädəm, Gərma Śəyyum, Žan Śəyyum, Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos, Qəddus Ḥarbay, Lalibäla, Näᵓakkʷəto Läᵓab, Yətbaräk, Mäyrari, Ḥarbay (e.g., Dillmann 1853:350). Some other lists have nine kings with a total reign of "343", actually 329, years altogether: Täklä Haymanot, Žan Śəyyum, Gərma Śəyyum, Gəmp̣a Wəddəm, Yəmrəḥa or Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos, Gäbrä Maryam, Lalibäla, Näᵓakkʷəto Läᵓab, Yətbaräk (Belaynesh Michael in DicEthBio 201f.; cp. Chernetsov 1995:104ff.). The existence is known of an even longer catalogue, with 16 kings (Henze 2000:50 and n. 19, cp. SerHist 239–42). The "short" lists, obtained in Rome, before 1550, by Mariano ↗Vittori (s. EAE vol. 5) from the most learned ↗Täsfa Ṣəyon (Victorius 1552, fols. [H. i–ii] = [37v–38r], within a few Latin excerpts of the Vita of Yəmrəḥanna Krəstos, reproduced in Perruchon 1898:368f.; cp. Conti Rossini 1922:295) and then seen at Aksum, in the first half of the 17th cent., by ↗Páez (Hist. I, 5 in BecRASO II, 66) and de ↗Almeida (Hist. II, 6 in BecRASO V, 123), have five kings only, who are said to have ruled 143 years: Mär(ar)a Täklä Haymanot, Yəmraḥ, Lalibäla, Näᵓakkwəto Läᵓab, Ḥarbay (both Portuguese authors, however, add: "these and no more names are in the book, but those who know the history better say that many are missing and that the line of the Z. ruled for 340 years"). The total years of reign equal 133 in a number of other texts, including a disputed one from ↗Däbrä Libanos of Šəmäzana (↗Ham), that would lead one to fix the beginning of the dynasty at ca. 1135/37 (Conti Rossini, 1922:280f., resumed in Huntingford 1965:1 and n. 2, misunderstood by SerHist 240 n. 6; cp. Conti Rossini, 1917:707ff. and CRStor 303), i.e. much later than usually inferred from the prevailing local tradition (s. Belaynesh Michael in DicEthBio 201). Such texts are not necessarily affected by the "duplication" of Ethiopian chronology, involving the elimination of 456 years from actual history (s. Neugebauer 1989:55f., 64f.; Tekeste Nagash 2006:128).

In all of the relevant lists, the kings are mostly given 40 years of tenure, a quasi-ritual number, representing perhaps estimates based on "generations" (Neugebauer 1989: 64).

The circumstances of the Z.'s coming to power are highly unclear. The extant information about this event is mostly fabulous and incomplete, and an archaeological inquiry into the kingdom's capital, Adäfa, would greatly enhance our knowledge for that matter. Lasta, the central region of the kingdom, has not been archaeologically mapped either. The chroniclers sum up the record of such major change in one single sentence: "The reign was passed on to people who did not belong to the tribe of Israel" (BassÉt 8).

A much more detailed version, chiefly found in the Acts of ↗Iyäsus Moʾa (drafted at the earliest in the late 15th cent.), recounts with variants the ascent of (Mära) Täklä Haymanot, of the family of Ḥepaṣa or Ḥipaṣa (KurMoa 25f.). A general of ↗Dəlnaʿod, the last Aksumite ruler according to the king lists and a few legends, he married the king's daughter, Mäsobä Wärq (↗Tərdaʾ Gäbäz, s. EAE vol. 5), and then rebelled against his father-in-law, killing him in battle and assuming power with the royal name of Z. (here, properly, Zäwge).

Interestingly enough, the Acts credit Dəlnaʿod with moving the royal seat "to the east", namely to the Lake ↗Ḥayq region, 618 years after the arrival of Frumentius (abunä ↗Sälama Käśate Bərhan) in Ethiopia (KurMoa 18), i.e. in either 870/1 or 975/6 A.D., the evangelization of Aksum dating to ca. 337/8 or, according to traditional computation, 252/3 A.D. (s. TadTChurch 36 n. 3 and Neugebauer 1989: 69). Around Lake Ḥayq, Dəlnaʿod's descendants would have remained for centuries, preparing the restoration of their line, to be eventually achieved by Yəkunno Amlak.

In other sources, the last Aksumite king is called Dəgna Žan or Ḥəzba Näñ, and his spouse Tərdaʾ Gäbäz. In a tradition associated with Däbrä Libanos of Ham, Tərdaʾ Gäbäz is Ḥəzba Näñ's daughter (s. Conti Rossini 1922: 280 and Huntingford 1965: 1). A consensus formed, however, around the idea that a woman was instrumental in the transfer of power to the Z., who based their tenuous pretensions to succession on a legendary marriage to a member of the rightful dynasty.

For this clearly "unofficial" version, aimed at underlining the continuity of the Ethiopian tradition, the advent of the Z. was no break. Such a version must have been subsequently approved by the Ethiopian Church, to which liberal royal endowments had been constantly granted in return for its support, as suggested by the "feudal acts" in the Golden Gospels (↗Wängelä wärq) of Ham (CRDLib), with donations by aṣe Lalibäla that shed light on the "geography" of his kingdom, extending to the north as far as Šəmäzana (s. now Derat 2010: 34–38).

None of the available Z. hagiographies seems to be aware of the matrimonial rights claimed by the dynasty (TadTChurch 54 and n. 3), the origin of which is simply attributed, instead, to the wrath of God on an exceedingly arrogant Aksumite king (so, e.g., in the Gädl of Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos, ed. Marrassini 1995: 60, cp. the Gädl of ↗Yared, ed. Conti Rossini 1904: 26; s. SerHist 233–37 and Chernetsov 1995: 103). Again, these later "official" representations intend rather to introduce the Z. as an altogether alien family who usurped power from the rightful House of Israel.

As a matter of fact, there is no historical ground either to connect the rise of the Z. with the decline of Aksum, which in fact occurred in the second half of the 7th cent (s., e.g., Phillipson 2009b: 367f.), or to assign such decline to the 10th cent., according to the "longer chronology". Conti Rossini already was inclined to see the shortest duration of the dynasty, 133 years, as the most likely one. In this connection, he drew attention to a passage in the History of the Patriarchs of Alexandria on the strife for succession to Metropolitan ↗Mikaʾel (I) on the advent of a new (unnamed) Ethiopian king who asked by letter al-ʿĀdil ʿAlī b. as-Salār (d. April 1153), vizier of Caliph aẓ-Ẓāfir (1149–54), and Patriarch John V (1147–67) to replace Mikaʾel as "old and advanced in age". The king, though, proved to be a usurper whom the metropolitan had rebuked, possibly refusing to acknowledge him (SawHist vol. 3, part 1, 34f.). This "usurper" would have been (Mära) Täklä Haymanot, the founder of the dynasty, willing to replace a metropolitan hostile to Z.'s rise to power (CRStor 303; Godet in PICES 9, 43 and 1986–87: 39).

The struggle for the throne was indeed "a common theme in Zagʷe royal traditions" (TadTChurch 61, cp. Belaynesh Michael in DicEthBio 203); and the new king could rather be Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos, who would have ascended, therefore, sometime around 1150. According to his Gädl, he succeeded his deceased uncle Ṭänṭäwəddəm, by contending either with his own cousin (the latter's son) or better – given the Z. peculiar form of succession – with his other uncle Žan Śəyyum (s., in general, Marrassini 1995: 6f.).

Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos was actually the third Zagʷe ruler, after his grandfather Märara/Märari or Morara – one and the same with (Mära) Täklä Haymanot: a Christian throne-name? (s. Belaynesh Michael in DicEthBio 109) – and then his uncle Ṭänṭäwədəm (TadTChurch 55f. and n. 3.), i.e. “King Salomon, son of Murara, and my name is Ṭänṭäwədəm”, according to the inscription on his processional metal cross kept in the church of ʿUra/ʿOra (Betä) Mäsqäl at Qəfrəya, in ↗Gulo Mäḵäda (Chojnacki 2006: 105f., pl. xvii, fig. 38: “… the cross can be broadly ascribed to the late. 11th or early 12th century”; Derat 2010: 162f. and nn. 20–24); Ṭänṭäwədəm reigned twelve years at least, according to a land grant issued by him for the same church and preserved there in a much later copy: “… I, ḫaṣäy Ṭänṭäwədəm, and my throne name is Sälomon, and my surname [sägʷayä] Gäbrä Mädḫən, in the 12th year of my reign, on the 24th of the month of Miyazya [= 19 April], have granted by charter to it, to the [holy] place of Qəfrəya, to Betä Mäsqäl …” (fol. 4). These documents have suggested his identification with “King Sälomon [Sälomən]” appearing as donor of the “book cover [gelä, sc. -la]” in the inscription on the metal revetment of the aforesaid Golden Gospels of Ham (CRDLib 181; cp. BauEr III, 15 and n. 3, and Derat 2010: 25 and n. 33). The same throne name, Sälomon, is known, however, for nəguś ↗Yagba Ṣəyon in a document from ↗Däbrä Ḥayq Ǝsṭifanos (Taddesse Tamrat 1970: 92, s. Schneider in PICES 8, vol. 2 and Fiaccadori, in preparation). Ham or Aham is actually close to Qəfrəya, but both places lie far from Lasta, in a milieu very different ethnically and linguistically. Should King Sälomon of the Ham Gospels be one and the same with Ṭänṭäwəddəm, this would further typify the extent of the Z. rule as well as the vast geographical area around which the relevant documents are dispersed – hence the difficulty in tracing them and in the interlinked historical reconstruction (Derat 2010: 36).

The son of prince Gərwa Śəyyum (Gərma Śəyyum in other traditions) who was, like Žan Śəyyum, the son of Märara and a younger brother of Ṭänṭäwədəm, all of them coming from Bugna (Marrassini 1995: 24), Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos ascended the throne immediately before his first cousin Ḥarbay or Gäbrä Maryam (called Gäbrä Mäsqäl in the Gädl of Näʾakkʷəto Läʾab), the brother and predecessor of Lalibäla (Conti Rossini 1943: 113, cp. 106 and Tedeschi 1996: 337f.: Ḥarbay might have had three ↗names – like, presumably, Ṭänṭäwədəm in the land grant of Qəfrəya).

In the hagiographic literature, Ḥarbay and Lalibäla are the sons of Žan Śəyyum (a nobleman, but possibly not a ruler). In such other sources as two land charters from the Golden Gospels of Ham, copied in the 16th and 17th cent., respectively, Lalibäla styles himself “son of Morara (wäldä M.), son of Zanśəyyum, son of As(se)da” (CRDLib: 186; s. SergHist 266 and n. 8; TadTChurch 55f. and n. 3). In the History of the Patriarchs he features as “son of Šanūdah (ibn Š.)” (SawHist vol. 3, part 2, 115). The latter is an Arabic corruption not so much of an original *Mararah, from Eth. Märara (CRDLib: 188f.) as of *Siy(y)ūm, from Eth. (Žan) Śəyyum (Tedeschi 1996: 328 and n. 23, 342), while the sequence in the two charters could hardly be the result of a scribal alteration, since it also appears, with an intriguing variant, in the abridged version of the Life of Lalibäla that is known as Zena Lalibäla (‘Story of Lalibäla’), IES MS 298 (19th cent.), 118: “son of Morara (wäldä M.), son of Žan Śəyyum, son of Kirwar(ə)na” (after SerHist 266 and n. 9). While Kirwarna was Lalibäla’s noble mother, wäldä Morara could be here more broadly understood as “descendant of Morara”, with reference first to the king’s lineage and its founder, then to his father and mother (Belaynesh Michael in DicEthBio 120). Asda of the charters may just be another name of Kirwarna or Kerwarna (Žan Śəyyum’s maid in later legends, s. SerHist 267).

These detailed historical connections of partly new documents and traditions confirm the Z. genealogy and sequence tentatively established by Taddesse Tamrat, with seven kings (numbered according to the order of succession): Märari [1] by whom Mäsobä Wärq (?) bore Ṭänṭäwədəm [2], Gərwa Śəyyum, and Žan Śəyyum; Gərwa Śəyyum was the father of Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos [3]; the latter had in turn two sons, Ḥarbay [4] and Lalibäla [5], who were the fathers, resp., of Näʾakkʷəto Läʾab [6] and Yətbaräk [7] (TadTChurch 56f. n. 3).

In the Ethiopic chronicles and oral traditions, Yətbaräk is sometimes referred to as (Zäʾ)əlmäknun, ‘The unknown’ or ‘The hidden one’. Rather than a pseudonym bestowed by the victorious Solomonid as an act of “damnatio memoriae” or a useful escape mechanism contrived locally so as to deny that the king killed had anything to do with Lasta (TadTChurch 68 n. 1), this could be an index of the uncertainty prevailing in the sources over the end of the dynasty (Belaynesh Michael in DicEthBio 187). Yətbaräk was killed in ↗Gayənt, on the north side of ↗Bäšälo River, where he had taken shelter at the church of Qirqos, the patron saint of his dynasty (Marrassini 1994: 204 and 1995: 86 n. 106). A period of troubles, if not a minor civil war, must have ensued, a new Z. king stirring up a counter-rebellion, but being defeated. This is implied both by the mention of several rulers after Yətbaräk in some king lists (e.g., ms. BritLib Or. 821, fol. 28v) and by the story of Zena Ṗeṭros, one of the last Z. scions, who would have campaigned against Damot, being killed there by ↗Motälämi (Conti Rossini 1904: 23; cp. CRStor 317 and Belaynesh Michael in DicEthBio 216). Also, in a 1268 land grant to Däbrä Libanos of Šəmäzana a "king Dəlanda" (an Agäw name) appears with a council of six military leaders (CRDLib 193, no. 9, cp. 194f., no. 10). Whether he was a local chief and/or a Z. partisan who took advantage of the new situation (CRStor 317f.) or a Z. family member (no relationships of him to other rulers of the dynasty being, however, recorded) crowned by the Z. themselves to rally resistance against Yəkunno Amlak (TadTChurch 68 and n. 3; Belaynesh Michael in DicEthBio 48) is difficult to ascertain.

While modifying the events of the Z. overthrow, the Acts of Iyäsus Moᵓa lend much importance to this saint, who had established his monastic community at ↗Däbrä Ḥayq, and greatly supported Yəkunno Amlak in his struggle for the throne: among the privileges the king granted to Däbrä Ḥayq as a reward there would have been "one third of [the land-property of] the kingdom" (KurMoa 31, cp. already Conti Rossini 1922: 292f.).

This pivotal conjuncture and the murder of the last Z. king are still further obscured by late 16th-cent. legends that credit Iyäsus Moᵓa's purported disciple, ↗Täklä Haymanot, founder of ↗Däbrä Libanos of Šäwa, with convincing the Z. king to abdicate in favour of Yəkunno Amlak. Such legends, found in the short chronicles (BassÉt 8f.), receive their classical formulation in the Bəᶜəlä nägäśt, with "one third of the kingdom" bestowed instead on the house of Täklä Haymanot as a condition of the "pact" between him and Yəkunno Amlak (Huntingford 1965: 14f., cp. Conti Rossini 1922: 293). In other sources, the two different traditions about Iyäsus Moᵓa and Täklä Haymanot – which reflect the fluctuating fortunes of their respective monasteries over the centuries – are combined together by presenting both holy men as "restorers" of the Solomonic dynasty (e.g., DombrChr 152).

In the even more recent traditions collected by James Bruce, the king who abdicated owing to Täklä Haymanot's good offices is unnamed, and, on receiving from Yəkunno Amlak "one third of the kingdom" as a reward, the saint would have permitted that king (and his successors) to keep sovereignty over a portion of his dominion as yä-Lasta ḥaṣe, 'the king at [or in] Lasta' (BruNile vol. 2, 687f. and n. *, 691, 693).

Patrons of the arts in the service of Christianity, the Z. were unable to forge a national unity and more often squabbled over the throne even in their own domain, but did actually rule over Lasta and Wag for a long time after losing control of Ethiopia. This is mainly documented by the colophons of two mss., EMML no. 6968 (1723 A.D.) and 7219 (17th/18th cent.), as well as by the "History of Zena Gäbrəᵓel", EMML no. 7506, fols. 109v–200v (18th cent.; ed. Getatchew Haile 1985 and in PICES 9, vol. 6), and the already mentioned traditions in Bruce, who reports the irresponsible murder of the Z. king while on his return way after paying an official visit to nəguś Iyoᵓas then passing by Lasta (cp. Getatchew Haile 1985: 41f.). Locally recognized as "kings", the successors of the Z. provided in fact the governors of that province (↗Wag šum) under the imperial authority of Gondär, with which they had stormy relationships. Dwelling in the strongholds of Səkla or ↗Ǝmäkina (Lasta), they claimed descent from the Z. as well as from the Israelite Adil, brother of King Solomon, and thereby competed on the same ground with the Solomonic dynasty, from which they even seceded because of ↗Susənyos's conversion to Catholicism. Thus, their territory acquired special importance in the religious and political events of the 17th and 18th cent. – when Lasta asserted itself also as a centre of manuscript and painting production (Bosc-Tiessé 2009).

Zahn, Walter

Z. (or “Hakim Zahn”, b. ca. 1886, Berlin [?], d.[?]), a German pharmacist and entrepreneur, was the owner of the St. George pharmacy in Addis Abäba – the largest and oldest pharmacy in Ethiopia in the first half of the last century (Bairu Tafla 1981: 182; Hartlmaier 1953: 208f.). Basic biographical information is scarce. Bairu Tafla (1981: 182f.) assumes that Z. grew up in Berlin where he started to study pharmacology but interrupted his studies to become an artist at the age of 18. Five years later, he married and took up his studies again.

After completing his studies in 1913 Z. was convinced by Kunze, a German trader from Ethiopia, to open a pharmacy in Addis Abäba with him and another companion. A year later Z. left his wife and his two children behind and moved to Ethiopia (Zahn 1950: 5f.). Z. soon broke with Kunze and his companion and opened his own St. George pharmacy in the ‘Piazza’ area in the ↗Mohamedally & Company storehouse.

At the beginning Z.’s life in Ethiopia seems to have been quite difficult. However, he managed to obtain a monthly salary for doing chemical analyses for a Greek-owned alcohol factory and to purchase a medical consignment for a low price. Furthermore, he established close contacts with the Italian legation which enabled him to get medicine during ↗World War I. Since medicine was sorely needed and only very few pharmacies existed in Addis Abäba during this time, Z. made a good profit which enabled him to hire servants and to save money to send to his family (Bairu Tafla 1981: 183; Zahn 1950: 23ff.).

In 1919 Z. tried unsuccessfully to travel to Germany via Djibouti. In 1920 he used his good Italian connections and travelled via Massawa to Germany. There, he purchased complete pharmacy equipment and managed to get a French visa which enabled him to return via the easier route through Djibouti to Addis Abäba (Zahn 1950: 124ff.). Back in Ethiopia in mid-1920, he faced only a few competitors in the pharmaceutical business who soon gave up. At this point, Z.’s pharmacy became the most famous shop of its kind (Bairu Tafla 1981: 183). In the early 1920s, for a short time Z. fell in love with Henny, the daughter of Hermann ↗Götz. Probably due to this, Z. helped Götz financially in 1924 by buying Jannasch’s part of Götz’s farm in ↗Adamii Tulluu. He left the Austrian Kurt Ewert in charge of his pharmacy in Addis Abäba and moved to Adamii Tulluu. There, Z. invested in extending the stock of milk-cattle and started to plant maize, cotton and coffee. Furthermore, by providing the technical equipment, he initiated the production of canned butter. In order to make transportation to the capital easier, he built a macadam road from Adamii Tulluu to Moǧo. Due to increasing enmity between Götz and Z., they parted in 1927 after Götz had refunded Z. for his part of the farm (Bairu Tafla 1981: 172, 183; Zahn 1950: 155ff.).

Back in Addis Abäba, Z. took over the management of the pharmacy (Zahn 1950: 217). The pharmacy was closed for a short time in 1927, when Z. was accused of murdering an Ethiopian either by his medicines (Bairu Tafla 1981: 183) or by shooting (Hartlmaier 1953: 208f.). Having paid compensation to the family of the deceased and to the judge, he was released and reopened his pharmacy.

Z. also was involved in purchasing a Junker W33 airplane from Germany in 1929 by providing the necessary foreign currency to the Ethiopian government; but this action resulted in harsh critique from the German legation in Ethiopia (Bairu Tafla 1981: 140; Zahn 1950: 238ff.).

Z. lived in Ethiopia at least until the end of the Italian occupation in 1941 (Hartlmaier 1952: 188). In 1950, he published a book (cf. Zahn 1950) about his life in Ethiopia which also contains general facts and myths on Ethiopian history.

Zäᵓiyäsus

ᶜAqqabe säᶜat Z. (ዘኢየሱስ; d. 1297) was a disciple of ↗Iyäsus Moᵓa and an abbot of the monastery of ↗Däbrä Ḥayq Ǝsṭifanos(cp. ms. EMML no. 4459, fol. 198v), founded by his teacher.

Z. is mentioned in several sources, including the Acts of Iyäsus Moᵓa (KurMoa), documents in the Gospel of Iyäsus Moᵓa (ms. EMML no. 1832) and minor religious compositions.

According to the Gädlä Iyäsus Moᵓa, when aṣe ↗Yəkunno Amlak appointed Iyäsus Moᵓa as ↗ᶜaqqabe säᶜat, the latter could not take over this office, since, in his own words, he "will not leave the island" (KurMoa 31f. [text] = 26 [tr.]). He thus chose "his son" Z. and appointed him as ᶜaqqabe säᶜat of Däbrä Ḥayq (KurMoa 31 [text] = 26 [tr.]). Z. kept this position from 1292 until his death, being the first abbot of the monastery to bear this title (KurMoa 31 [text] = 26 [tr.]), previously reserved exclusively for the abbots of ↗Däbrä Libanos of Šəmäzana.

Documents preserved in the so-called Gospel of Iyäsus Moᵓa (ms. EMML no. 1832) bear witness to the valuable objects donated by Z. to Däbrä Ḥayq Ǝsṭifanos. Among them, a number of manuscripts, including a copy of the Book of Kings (↗Historical books, biblical), a ↗Psalter, and seven other books (cf. ms. EMML no. 1832, fol. 25v); at a later point (fol. 26r) it is said that Z. gave 10 books and 32 vestments (cp. Sergew Hable-Selassie 1992: 251). Yəkunno Amlak and his son aṣe ↗Yagba Ṣəyon endowed the monastery with "seventy [ecclesiastical] gowns, two golden trays, two golden chalices and thirteen trays and chalices" (Taddesse Tamrat 1970: 91; cp. also ms. EMML no. 1832, fol. 26r).

Like the other monks of Däbrä Ḥayq, Z. was close to the court and he is believed to have been on particularly intimate terms with Yəkunno Amlak (KinBibl 100, no. 189; Taddesse Tamrat 1970: 91). In a ↗mälkəᵓ dedicated to Z. (GuiSyn I, 99), he is said to be "in accord in the faith with Yəkunno Amlak". After the death of the emperor, Z. became involved in the dynastic struggle among the descendants of Yəkunno Amlak (cp. Taddesse Tamrat 1970: 93). He may have lost his life in one of these conflicts.

Z. was married and had children, as it was for other abbots of his monastery. He died with his son Buruk in 481 A.M. (1297 A.D.), probably on 17 Ḥamle (Taddesse Tamrat 1970: 93 n. 34), a date which also appears in the Gospel of Iyäsus Moᵓa, along with some notes concerning a record of land grants of Z.'s successor ᶜaqqabe säᶜat Zäkrəstos (1297–99?).

Having received special permission from Wədəm Räᵓad, Zäkrəstos transferred the relics of Z. and his son Buruk to Däbrä Ḥayq (Taddesse Tamrat 1970: 93).

Zäᵓiyäsus

Abba Z. (ዘኢየሱስ; fl. 17th cent.) known as Z. ᶜƎwwur ('Z. the Blind') was an important ecclesiastic of the ↗Qəbat current during the reigns of aṣe ↗Yoḥannəs I and aṣe ↗Iyasu I.

During the Easter period of 1678, Yoḥannəs tried to get a church council to approve his marriage with ↗Säblä Wängel, considered incestuous by the ↗Täwaḥədo monks of ↗Däbrä Libanos. It proved, however, impossible to convene such a council without Z.'s agreement and participation, and it was therefore only in October/November 1678 that Z., together with the Unionist monk Ǝdä Krəstos of ↗Mägʷina, reversed the Emperor's condemnation, with the help of an order from the patriarch of Alexandria (CrumLand 82). In exchange, Yoḥannəs granted lands to the church, ordered the segregation of Muslims and Betä Ǝsraᶜel and prohibited usury (GuiIohan 25, 36f. [tr.]; Kropp 1990: 105f.; Perruchon 1899: 174).

Z. participated in the council held during the rainy season of 1680. The Chronicle of Yoḥannəs shows him as an impartial mediator who often had the last word without clearly deciding for one side or the other (GuiIohan 49); according to the "short chronicles", however, Z. was excommunicated at the end of this council (BassÉt 140; Perruchon 1899: 175).

In any case, Z.'s fortune changed at the latest during the reign of ↗Iyasu I, who was pro-Täwaḥədo. Z. was imprisoned in Sarka (though, according to the Chronicle, without being excommunicated). In 1684, a Täwaḥədo-Qəbat council was convened, and the monks of Gažge insisted that Z. be liberated and allowed to attend (GuiIohan 81f. [tr.]). In 1685, Z. was excommunicated for not accepting the Täwaḥədo doctrine and for appealing to his followers not to attend the council (ibid. 89). In 1687 Iyasu convened a new council, and the Qəbatočč asked once again that Z. be liberated, but Z. had died in his cell before the envoys reached his prison (ibid. 110–13).

Z. thus became a symbol of the Qəbat movement and entered the Unctionists' historiography. A late version of the "short chronicles", copied for ↗Kəflä Giyorgis in Waldəbba, even portrayed him during the reign of ↗Fasilädäs (Guidi 1893: 601).

At least two writings are attributed to Z. One is a letter addressed to abunä ↗Sinoda in which the Ethiopian monk asked the Coptic prelate to respect his Alexandrian faith and not to obey aṣe Iyasu who asked him to validate the Unionist doctrine. This letter is copied in the Qəbat text known as the Mäṣḥafä məśṭir (Kindeneh Endeg 2004: 161f.). In the other document, a pamphlet called Mälʾəktä Zäʾiyäsus, Z. exhorts people exiled or imprisoned because of their faith to remain hopeful (ibid. 157, annex 9). According to these sources, Z. originated from Däblan, South Gondär.

Z. should not be confused with the contemporary monk of the same name from Däbrä Libanos who died at the hands of the Oromo and is commemorated in the ↗Sənkəssar on 24 Ḥamle (GuiSyn I, 388).

Zäkaryas

Šayḫ Z. (ዘካርያስ, Zäkkarəyas, Ar. Zakarīyāʾ b. Ǧibrīl b. Dāʾūd al-Bayyamadarī, baptized as Nəwayä Krəstos; b. ca. 1845, d. ca. 1920) was a Muslim learned man who led a ↗conversion movement from ↗Islam to ↗Christianity in ↗Lasta, ↗Wag and ↗Bägemdər (Crummey 1974; Gori 1991). In the work known as the Sylloges of šayḫ Z. he proposed a Christian interpretation of the ↗Qurʾān (Gori 1991, 2001). The Arabic Sylloges was subsequently translated into ↗Amharic by one of his disciples (Gori 2003).

The biography of Z. is only partially traceable and many aspects of the history of his followers are still completely obscure. Probably born in Nägälla in Bägemdər in a Muslim family of balärəst, he followed the traditional Islamic ↗education curriculum in Bägemdər and eventually settled in the town of Säqota in Lasta. There he taught the Qurʾān and Muslim religious sciences until, in 1892, a series of divinely inspired visions made him change his opinions about Islam (Gori 2001: 481f., 534). Z. acquired an Arabic Bible through the Swedish mission (Iwarsson 1924: 286) and started comparing it with some passages of the Qurʾān to demonstrate that the "true message" of Islam is actually in perfect harmony with Christianity. From then on, Z. taught this new theological perspective (Gori 1993).

The local Islamic notables accused Z. of causing social unrest that would ruin the Muslim community. In 1906, ↗Mənilək II summoned Z. to his court and made him defend his exegetical positions in front of a group of Islamic learned men. At the end of the discussion, on whose true results Christian and Muslim sources disagree (Gori 2012: 327–40), the Emperor acquitted Z. of all charges. He not only gave the šayḫ permission to continue teaching but also granted him significant economic and political support as well as land privileges which made Z. a well-off rural lord.

In the following years, Z. succeeded in converting an apparently high number of Muslims in Bägemdər and Lasta from Islam to Christianity. The available figures may not be completely reliable but sources speak of 7,000 to 10,000 converts (Iwarsson 1924: 288; Crummey 1972: 64). Significantly enough, Z. was baptized only in 1910 (aläqa ↗Tayyä wrote a poem to solemnize the public conversion of the šayḫ; Gori 1999). It is thus likely that, at least until this date, Z. had acted more as an internal reformer of Islam than as an open preacher of Christianity among Muslims.

Still unascertained are the relationships between the followers of Z. and the Ethiopian Orthodox Church which apparently observed the movement of the šayḫ with some suspicion (Addis Krəstiyan, 'New Christians', was the nickname given by the Orthodox Church to the followers of Z.). Moreover, even if Z. was baptized as an Orthodox, he always maintained close connections with the Protestant Missions so that it is not surprising that after his death most of his pupils moved to the Seventh-Day Adventist Church of Ethiopia (Crummey 1972: 65; ↗Protestantism).

Zäkrəstos

Z. (ዘክርስቶስ; d. 1604) was an Ethiopian monk who initiated a short-lived messianic movement from 1602–04 to ca. 1618 in the ↗Wäläqa region of the ↗Amhara province. He was born to a woman called Amätä Wängel (PerChron 199; BecRASO VI, 322; or Mär^{c}atä Wängel in Getatchew Haile 1985: 93).

First-hand accounts on Z. and his movement stem solely from his adversaries, the royal court and the ↗Jesuits. According to the chronicle of aṣe ↗Susənyos (PerChron 197f. [text]), in the reign of aṣe ↗Zädəngəl, a certain man from the ethnic unit of Šəme of Ǝnnamblit, called Z., proclaimed himself "Christ". From the circle of his supporters he chose apostles, "John the Baptist" and other figures known from the New Testament. He also ordained clergy: bishops, priests and deacons. Within two years, from 1602 to 1604, Z. won over a number of followers who supplied him and his close associates with donations.

Z.'s seat was located on an ↗amba in Wäläqa from where, in 1604, together with his adherents, he tried to repel an attack by the troops of abetohun ↗Bə^{c}əlä Krəstos. Despite fierce resistance, Z. surrendered and was taken before aṣe Zädəngəl. During a brief trial he was adjudged guilty of heresy and executed. To disprove Z.'s assurance/promise about his crucifixion and subsequent resurrection the king ordered him to be beheaded and his body to remain unburied for seven days (BecRASO II, 423; VI, 321). His apostles' lives were spared and his adherents dispersed (BecRASO II, 423; VI, 322).

Z.'s messianic ideas were expounded in the words he allegedly pronounced during his trial: he claimed to be the Christ once born to Virgin Mary in Israel and now reborn to Mär^{c}atä Wängel "in the House of the Gentiles" (Getatchew Haile 1985: 93). Interpreting the statement, Getatchew Haile argues that Z. "may have thought that if the Ethiopians really replaced the Israelites as chosen people of God, Christ should have been born of an Ethiopian virgin" (ibid. 87). It seems, however, that Z. did not intend to replace Christ but rather "complement" him.

In 1618, in the reign of aṣe Susənyos, the disciples of Z. began to preach his resurrection, appearances and ascension. The available sources contain some specifics with regard to their beliefs, way of life, social status and religious observances. However, it is not really possible to say which aspects of the teachings originated from Z. and which were developed later by his adherents. The disciples preached that Z. was a reincarnation of Christ born of Amätä Wängel (Mär^{c}atä Wängel) who came to abolish "partiality and favouritism to Israel as against the Gentiles" (PerChron 199 [text]; Getatchew Haile 1985: 89). He was God incarnated as man again in order to unite the Gentiles and the Jews (BecRASO II, 425; VI, 321). According to Pedro ↗Páez's earlier note, Z.'s disciples were at first confused whether their master was a follower of Christ or Christ himself (BecRASO II, 423). They finally claimed that, since God was omnipotent, it was possible for him to be incarnated and die twice, and Z. was the second Messiah. To Páez's remark that such belief did not conform with the Bible, they replied that Z. himself revealed it to his apostles (BecRASO II, 424f.). Apparently, for them a personal revelation was a more important source of spiritual knowledge than the written word (Cohen 2009: 72f.).

Z.'s adherents dissociated themselves from the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox (Täwaḥədo) Church (EOTC) and organized themselves on fairly stable foundations. Páez (BecRASO II, 424) and Almeida (BecRASO VI, 322) recount that the messianic ideas appealed to many monks and nuns from various places as well as peasant families who formed in Wäläqa communities resembling those of the early Christians. Men were circumcized and stayed in separate establishments from women. They erected a church beside a large monastery dedicated to Z. where ordained priests and deacons celebrated the Eucharist in remembrance of their master.

On the orders of Z., who reputedly appeared to his disciples a few times, they celebrated three ↗Sabbaths: Saturday to honour the Father, Sunday, the Son, and Monday, the Holy Spirit (PerChron 199, BecRASO II, 423). They attached great significance to them, such that during ↗Lent they consumed some food on Mondays (i.e., after the morning liturgy; but cp. Getatchew Haile 1985: 89) and ate meat on Pure Monday (BecRASO VI, 321, PerChron 199). Páez notes that the sect practised a number of "Jewish" rituals, but he does not specify whether they were alien to the EOTC (BecRASO II, 423).

The movement was finally suppressed by Susənyos. A number of Z.'s followers were arrested, interrogated and, since they did not disavow their belief, were finally beheaded. Some adherents were executed in their villages and to some the king sent liqä maʾəmməran abba Zämäläkot in order to dissuade them from their faith. However, his mission, militarily supported by däǧǧazmač Ḥafä Krəstos and ras ↗Śəᶜəlä Krəstos, failed. In two days ca. 740 people preferred to throw themselves off a cliff to being reconverted (PerChron 199f. [text]).

A somewhat different account is offered by Páez (BecRASO II, 424ff.): ras Śəᶜəlä Krəstos, being in charge of Wäläqa, delegated a noble man, Fəqurä Ǝgziʾ, a convert to ↗Catholicism, and two monks to convince the members of the sect to abandon their erroneous beliefs. Fəqurä Ǝgziʾ asked Páez to preach to Z.'s followers, and, as a result, numerous members of the sect decided to do penance and return to the EOTC. 488 remained unconvinced and threw themselves into an abyss.

The development of the Z. movement and its popularity among the peasantry may have resulted from the weakness of royal power accompanied by the social and economic crisis that beset Ethiopia at the beginning of the 17th cent. (Cohen 2009: 71). Perhaps also Jesuit missionary activity may have undermined the authority of the EOTC and provided an impetus for developing new theological ideas (Getatchew Haile 1985: 87).

Interestingly, Z. is still remembered by craftsmen's communities (balä əǧǧ) in northern Šäwa and southern Wällo. One of the stories concerning their origin ascribes to him their conversion from Judaism to Christianity. Reportedly there are some prayers dedicated to Z. and his mother (Pankhurst 1995).

Zäkrəstos

Däǧǧazmač Z. (ዘክርስቶስ; fl. 1620–54, d. 1654/55) was an Ethiopian nobleman. According to Manoel de ↗Almeida, Z. married ↗Mäläkotawit, aṣe ↗Susənyos's daughter (cf. Wion 2003: 348; BecRASO VI, 394, 425; VIII, 109) whereas the royal chronicle informs us that the latter was given by the Emperor to ↗Yolyos (PerChron 102, 130 [tr.]). Missionary sources further indicate that Wängelawit (d. 1653–54), another daughter of the Emperor, had a relationship with Z. whilst she was married to ↗Täklä Giyorgis and that in 1630 the two married (BecRASO VIII, 18, 109, 179; also Wion 2003: 348). The royal chronicle, however, is silent about this relationship (cf. also PerChron 311 [tr.]; BassÉt 1882, 136; BegChron 52; Perruchon 1897: 89). According to a genealogy from Wäläqa, Mabayyən was Z.'s son (cf. Kropp 1989, pl. 14; Wion 2003: 358). Furthermore, a Z. who appears as ↗Wald Śäᶜala's brother in genealogies may be the same person (cf. Wion 2003: 349; Kropp 1989, pl. 14).

According to Pero ↗Páez and Diego de Mattos Z. was one of the "Catholic noblemen" present at the anti-sabbath proclamation made at the royal kätäma in 1621 (BecRASO III, 384; XI, 476). However, Almeida also says that as governor of ↗Bägemdər, which he ruled from about 1621, Z. was not in favour of the ↗Jesuits' residence in Atḵäna (cf. Pennec 2003: 148; also PerChron 222 [tr.]; HuntLand 60f.; BecRASO III, 384; XI, 476).

Z. often appears associated with the title of däǧǧazmač in Susənyos's chronicle. In addition, during the Emperor's military campaign in ↗Lasta in February 1629, which Z. took part in, he was ʿabiyy ('main') ↗blatten geta (cf. PerChron 188, 223, 231f., 247 [tr.]). Z. was a close aide to both Susənyos and ↗Fasilädäs and when the latter was made Emperor, he appointed Z. ↗bitwäddäd (PerChron 247 [tr.]; on his death, cf. SixTana III, 147: ms. Ṭānāsee 136 = Dāgā 25, fols. 115v–118 in Wion 2003: 346).

Z. should not be confused with several homonymous characters mentioned in Susənyos's chronicle (PerChron 50, 97, 152, 246 [tr.]).

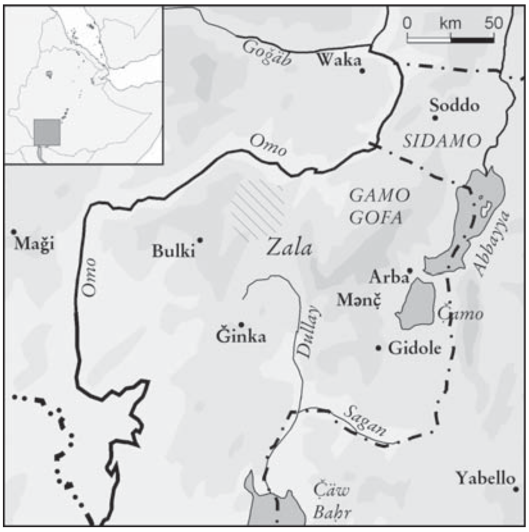
Zala

The Z. (ዛላ, sp. also "Sala") people live in the ↗Gamo area of south-western Ethiopia. Their immediate neighbours are the ↗Ubamär, the ↗Gofa, the ↗Dorze and the Ganta. The Z. speak a North ↗Ometo language of the Omotic family.



Before their forced inclusion into the Ethiopian state in 1897 by the imperial troops under fitawrari ↗Habtä Giyorgis Dinagde, the Z. formed an autonomous kingdom with a "divine king" (↗Kingship, divine), structurally similar to the ↗Gofa and ↗Wälaytta kingships, and distinct from the non-centralized Gamo "assembly societies" in their vicinity (such as Dorze, Borodda (↗Wälaytta), ↗Dita or ↗Očollo). There were occasional tensions and armed conflicts between the Z. and other Gamo political units (cf. Bureau 1994: 214). The last Z. king (kao) was Amado, who submitted to aṣe ↗Mənilək II's troops without armed resistance – unlike Gofa, Z.'s neighbour. The Z. king (from the royal Ayka clan) was also the chief religious official; he initiated the yearly agricultural cycle and was held responsible for the socio-political order. He could demand labour corvée from his subjects and also had slaves (↗Slavery). He exercised strong authority, and was assisted by deputy chiefs (bitante), some of them non-hereditary (raša). It was reported that local contenders could "buy" the latter, largely honorary, positions via gifts to the king (Schulz-Weidner 1956: 38; Id. in VSAe III, 238). The royal Z. residence was the town of Šili. In imperial times, Fino, son of Amarro, was retained as the governor ("king") of Z., residing in the new town (kätäma) of Z. (1,560 m A.S.L.), founded after 1897. The last kao was his son, Abbaynäh.

The traditional social organization of the Z. was characterized by several dozen patrilineal clans (qommo). Men could not marry within their own clan (exogamy), nor in that of their mother. Some of the clan names are also found among other Gamo groups and among the Wälaytta, suggesting trans-ethnic identities of an earlier period. Like many of their neighbours, Z. society was strongly hierarchical. There were also several subservient craft groups: the potters, blacksmiths and tanners, allegedly with their own "clans". Weavers in Z. were mostly Dorze labour migrants. Craft workers were considered endogamous and were also marked off from the other Z. by certain food taboos and were not allowed to take care of cattle. Schulz-Weidner (in VSAe III, 241) already referred to the existence of significant social tensions in Z. society, because of inequality, the authoritarian behaviour of the king, and discrimination.

Zala drummers; from VSAe III, pl. 37, 1

Most of the Z. area belongs in the ↗wäyna däga highland zone, and the people are sedentary agriculturalists, cultivating millet, ↗maize, and ↗ṭef in terraced fields as well as a variety of garden crops, including ↗ənsät, peppers, beans, taro, cabbage, ↗tobacco and ↗cotton. They traditionally did not use the plough but had hoes and digging sticks as agricultural tools. The Z. also raise livestock (sheep and cattle), and their butter was famous in the wider region. While small towns have now emerged, the Z. traditionally lived in dispersed homesteads or small hamlets (guta) across the hilly countryside.

Most Z. today are Orthodox Christians, but recently the number of Evangelicals has increased. There are also small numbers of adherents of traditional ↗religion and Muslims. The traditional sky-god of the Z. was called Ṭosi or Ṭosa, as among the Gamo and Wälaytta. The introduction of Orthodox Christianity into Z. can perhaps be dated from the 16th cent. (Schulz-Weidner in VSAe III, 242). Z. also had a number of ritual specialists that derive from local popular religion, such as rainmakers (↗Rainmaking), diviners (↗Oracles and divination) and ↗qalləčča co-existing with Christianity. There is no system of ritual dualism (the halaqa initiators vs. the eqqo sacrificers; ↗Eqo) such as that which characterized the Dita, Bonke, ↗Dokko, Dorze and other Gamo groups. Schulz-Weidner (in VSAe III, 243) mentioned the existence of a possible "stone cult" among the Z. when describing a cultic place of the indigenous religion (administered by male members of the Sutuma clan) visited by Z. for healing purposes and for making fertility offerings. It might also have been a sacrificial site of the Z. kings, but its exact status is unclear, and currently the site has declined in importance.

No separate studies are known on the Z. as such, except for the incomplete and often puzzling surveys by Schulz-Weidner (1956; in VSAe III). Neither have specific linguistic studies been made of their language or dialect. Historically, the Z. emerged as a political unit within the Gamo cultural area, and are not a self-contained "ethnic" unit. They do not present themselves as such, and in the last two Ethiopian censuses of 1994 and 2007, they are not listed as a separate category but seem to have been counted as part of the Gamo. Their area is politically organized in the Z. wäräda in Gamo Gofa Zone in the Southern Nations, Nationalities and Peoples Regional State. In 2008 the wäräda had a mixed population (not only Z.) of 73,745 people (CSA 2008:79).

The Z. (ዘላን) are first mentioned in the Chronicle of ↗^{c}Amdä Ṣəyon I that refers to nine "rulers of Z.", in the context of rulers of the Muslim army of the Kingdom of ↗Ifat located near the Awaš River (PerrAmdS 322f.; MarAmdS 105ff.). Z. was mentioned cryptically in the time of King ↗Dawit as a place taken from the Ethiopian ruler (BudHist 300). Several references exist in the Chronicle of ↗Susənyos in which the Z. and the ↗Maya were both noted as cattle-keeping groups, and the Z. location may have been near ↗Angot (PerChron 150, 210 [text]).

The best-documented era for the Z. is the 19th cent. when they are mentioned by several observers and travellers as cattle and sheep herders all around the shores of Lake ↗Ṭana, especially on the eastern side in the area known as ↗Fogära. They were described as transhumant migrants who left the shores of Lake Ṭana during the rainy season for higher land in ↗Wägära (Plowden 1868: 250). In general, they were described as Amharic-speaking and partially Christianized, though one source said they spoke their ↗"Qʷara" language among themselves (Krapf 1860: 466). By the 1840s, some Z. who could afford it had acquired horses, shields, spears and swords and were said to have "warlike ability" and to "make themselves respected in soldiery" (Bell 1846: 141; AbbSéjour vol. 3, 93).

Under aṣe ↗Tewodros II, the Z. had some of their freedoms restricted, as their cattle and other possessions were sometimes requisitioned by the king. By the 1890s, they still lived in Fogära and Wägära, but in 1902, they were listed as being south of Lake Ṭana near the mouth of the Blue Nile, and north in ↗Dämbəya, but not in Fogära (Duchesne-Fournet 1908–09).

By the 1930s, patterns of transhumance existed between Fogära and highland areas, but the people who moved were not labelled as Z. In the 1950s also, armed peasants were observed to move in "semi-nomadic (zällan) proportions at times" (Messing 1957: 119), but the peoples themselves were not labelled ethnically as Z. The word in Amharic has simply come to mean "nomad" (Leslau 1976: 179).

Z.B. (ዘለቀ ፡ ቦጋለ; b. 22 September 1934, Harär, d. 18 June 2009, Washington, DC) was a Navy commander and civil servant.

After completing his primary education in ↗Harär, Z.B. joined the Imperial Ethiopian Naval Academy. He belonged to its first intake and graduated with distinction. Z.B. then underwent advanced military training at the San Diego naval base, the United States Naval Academy, and the British Naval Academy in Dartmouth. He later attended the University of Birmingham, graduating with a post graduate diploma in Social Sciences and Arts.

Z.B. and other naval officers eventually took command of the Imperial Ethiopian ↗navy, which was until then commanded by British and Norwegian officers. Thus he became the first Ethiopian naval officer to command the HMS Ethiopia and served as Chief of Naval Operations.

In 1974, Lieutenant General ↗Aman Mikaʾel Andom appointed Z.B. administrator-in-chief of the Ethiopian Marine Department for the ports of ↗ʿAsäb and ↗Massawa. Z.B. helped develop a third port on Haleb and a new ship maintenance yard. Under his supervision the Maritime Academy provided degree and diploma-level training to students in a variety of Marine-related fields.

During his later years, Z.B. lived in Washington, DC.

Zämäča

The term Z. (ዘመቻ, Amh., Tgr., 'campaign') was used throughout Ethiopian history for different kinds of military campaigns. In the 20th cent. it also came into use in the context of political, developmental and research campaigns. Z. is also a personal name.

"Z." may derive from Gəᶜəz ዘመተ (zämätä 'go on a military campaign, plunder'; LesCDic 639). According to Conti Rossini (1912: 204) the latter may in its turn derive from Cushitic (e.g., Kəmant: ǧimät 'raid' and ǧīmī 'military expedition'). The meaning of Amh. "Z." ranges from 'campaign, military expedition, raid, foray' to, in recent times, 'fight [against disease]' as well as different kinds of revolutionary or development 'campaigns'. Derived forms are, e.g., zämäča adärrägä 'to wage campaign', azämmätä 'to lead a military expedition', zämač 'raider'; cp. also the military title ↗azmač (KaneDic 1617). The same Ethiopic root can be identified in Tgn. zämätä 'to sack, to pillage, to plunder, to loot, to raid, to campaign, to invade [etc.]', zämamätä 'to raid here and there [etc.]', and täzämtä 'sacked, pillaged, raided, ruined (harvest)', Tgr. zämta and Argobba zämmäta (KaneTDic 1966f.; LesCDic 639).

Historically, the term Z. was used for any kind of military campaign, including small scale raiding and plundering as well as invasion of new territories. In some cases one may even speak of a "Z. system", i.e. the regular raiding of neighbouring ethnic groups or territories in order to secure boundaries and collect booty (cp., e.g., ↗Gaz). Z. was also used, e.g., for the major campaigns during the southern expansion of the Šäwan kingdom and the Christian empire under kings Śahlä Śəllase and Mənilək II and his generals (↗War[s]; cp. a detailed description of the organization of Z. in Marcus 1975: 65ff.). It may additionally have the sense of "battle", as in, e.g., Yämay Č̣äw zämäča (↗May Č̣äw) or, during the Därg period, 'military operation', as in, e.g., Qäyy baḥər zämäča ('Red Sea Operation'), Yäqäyy kokäb zämäča ('Red Star Operation'), etc.

The concept of Z. was eventually widened during the Ethiopian ↗Revolution. It became the Amharic short name for the Ǝdgät bäḥəbrät yäᵓəwqätənna yäsəra zämäča ('Development through Cooperation, Enlightenment, and Work Campaign') which the Därg (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council) launched in December 1974 for four years. This campaign was aimed at bringing the achievements of the Revolution into the rural areas. It included many practical goals of a more or less civil nature but, as already indicated by the very name of Z., in many ways it resembled a broad military operation: Ca. 60,000 teachers and students, often dressed in uniforms, were sent to around 430 rural localities all over the country to enforce the revolutionary program of the Därg and to replace the feudalistic and gerontocratic (↗Gerontocracy) structures by peasant associations or urban dwellers associations. Moreover, action was taken against so-called superstition (traditional ↗religions, cp., e.g., ↗gäramanǧo) as well as revolutionary deviationism or "counter-revolution". However, an important part of the Z. was purely developmental and included a broad-scale literacy campaign and the establishment of foundations for a modern educational (↗education) and ↗health care system (Donham 1999: 29f.). It should be noted though that participation in the Z. was compulsory and refusal to participate was punished. The Z. was abandoned in July 1976 after teachers' and students' agitation for the implementation of the land reform had led to jailing, demonstrations and strike by its personnel (cp. also Shinn – Ofcansky 2004: 414).

I. Introduction

The Z.m. (ዘመነ ፡ መሳፍንት, 'Era of the Lords/Princes', 'Age of Princes' etc., with reference to Judg 21: 25 'Era of the Judges') was a period of political decentralization in Ethiopia following an era of political and cultural prosperity in the ↗Gondärine kingdom (for an overview map s. the map section in this volume). This period is conventionally often dated between 1769 (deposition of aṣe ↗Iyoᵓas by ras ↗Mikaᵓel Səḥul [səḥul Mikaᵓel]) and 1855 (coronation of ↗Tewodros II). It was marked by conflicts among regional rulers and warlords over the control of the nəguśä nägäśt (↗Nəguś) in ↗Gondär but also peaceful consolidation of wide areas as independent princedoms such as ↗Šäwa. In general, the nəguśä nägäśt had no army and had to rely on his lords for military support. In return he awarded them with titles and land rights. A shift of power among the nobility in general had a direct effect on the emperor. Now, during the Z.M., the office of nəguśä nägäśt was reduced to that of a puppet king who represented the Solomonic Christian throne of Ethiopia but was influential only in the royal city.

"Z.m." seems to be a genuine Ethiopian concept of historical periodization which was later adopted by Western scholars. The term "Z.m." was supposedly coined in the historical discourse during the reign of aṣe Tewodros. This powerful monarch, probably due to his own court propaganda, was interpreted as the ruler who brought this period of instability to an end even if some historians argue that during his reign Ethiopia plunged into even more war than before (first with his rival nəguś ↗Nəguśe Wäldä Mikaᵓel in the north), followed by a short period of peace and then the secession of virtually all Ethiopian provinces from his reign. The French traveller ↗Lejean, a visitor at Tewodros's court, discussed the Z.m. in his account of 1865. Probably the first Ethiopian written source to mention the term is ms. St. Petersburg, Ef. 30 (= Turaiev 1906: 89 no. 48) in 1902. There, the Ethiopian historiographer aläqa ↗Lämläm explains: "So had terminated the succession of Gondär kings and perished the royal power. Came the time of princes, who, however, dared not to defy the name of the kings' reign and to sit on the throne of David and to crown themselves with the royal crown. So they made weak kings and kept them in obedience" (fol. 26v; s. Turaiev 1910: 273; cp. Chernetsov 1994: 99). The Z.m. was further conceptualized in 1905 by Perini, who had been part of the Italian troops in Eritrea between 1888 and 1894. Without mentioning his sources, he provided a short chronology starting with the era of "Solomonic" puppet kings followed by the Gugsa or Wärräšek dynasty and closing with the reign of Tewodros whom he understands as king "by the grace of God". The term Z.m. is also mentioned by ↗Gäbrä Śəllase Wäldä Arägay (GueCopMen I, 204 and n. 9).

II. Historical overview

The numerous events during the Z.m. tend to be confusing and sometimes a clear chronological order cannot be achieved due to contradictory information given in the sources (cp. ms. BritLib. Orient 82, fol. 559v, cp. BlunChr 164 [text] = 437 [tr.]). The complexity of this period is additionally increased in that the conflicts over political power were partly reflected and fuelled by highly contested christological positions (↗Karra [↗Täwaḥədo], ↗Qəbat and ↗Ṣägga; s. also ↗Christology) which resulted in a disintegration of the Church at an interregional level. While the Qəbat doctrine was supported by the ruling houses of Goǧǧam (and ↗Qʷara), the Təgrayans favoured the Karra doctrine which corresponded to the christology of the ↗Coptic Church. Ṣägga was the doctrine endorsed by Šäwa. Other regions changed sides, e.g., ↗Bägemdər from Qəbat to Ṣägga. At times the Qəbat party was opposed by the "House of ↗Täklä Haymanot" (Karra and Ṣägga) while on other occasions Qəbat and Karra, both followers of the ↗Hulätt lədät, opposed the Ṣägga (or Śost lədät) party. Moreover, the political and theological lines were not always congruent.

During the rule of ətege ↗Bərhan Mogäsa (Məntəwwab) of Qʷara and her son aṣe ↗Iyasu II, both followers of the Qəbat doctrine, the centralized power structure of the Gondärine kingdom gradually weakened in favour of regional lords. Out of them, ras Mikaᵓel Səḥul of Təgray, a supporter of the Karra doctrine, emerged as the strongest power. When Iyasu II died in 1755, his mother, Bərhan Mogäsa, served as a regent for her grandson aṣe ↗Iyoᵓas who was then still a child. Consecutively a puppet of the two main parties at court, either the Qʷaräññočč, i.e. the party of Bərhan Mogäsa, or the Yäǧǧu Oromo family of his mother Wəbit, Iyoᵓas remained a weak king. In 1769, however, ras Mikaᵓel Səḥul saw in him an obstacle to his full control of power in Gondär. He ordered him to be killed (GuiIyas 251 [text] = 260 [tr.]; BruNile II, 706) and put aṣe ↗Yoḥannəs II on the throne. Bərhan Mogäsa had to withdraw from the city. Only five months later Yoḥannəs died, and his son, nəguś ↗Täklä Haymanot II was installed by Mikaᵓel Səḥul. This is generally seen as the first year of the Z.m.

Through control of the trade routes to the ↗Red Sea Mikaᵓel Səḥul had accumulated large quantity of ↗fire arms by 1769. Yet, when he was absent from Gondär, his rule was challenged by däǧǧazmač ↗Wänd Bäwäsän of Bägemdər, däǧǧazmač ↗Goššu of Goǧǧam and the Oromo däǧǧazmač Fasil "Wäräñña" of ↗Damot who were able to capture Gondär in 1770 and proclaimed aṣe Susənyos II (son of ↗Iyasu II) as a rival king. Fasil's loyalty, however, soon shifted back to Mikaʾel Səḥul's candidate Täklä Haymanot II and he deposed Susənyos (BudHist 471f.). With Mikaʾel Səḥul he marched against his former allies Wänd Bäwäsän, Goššu and ras Ayadar in the Battle of ↗Sarbakusa from May to June 1771. James ↗Bruce, who fought on Täklä Haymanot II's side, gives a thorough description of these battles (BruNile IV, 138–248). Finally, Wänd Bäwäsän emerged victorious, took control of Gondär and even managed to keep Mikaʾel Səḥul under arrest for several years. Moreover he tried to depose Täklä Haymanot II, who was only able to remain on the throne until 1777 when he retired to ↗Waldəbba and died soon after. A group of the Qʷaräññočč party around däǧǧazmač ↗Ḫaylä Mikaʾel Ǝšäte of Damot, the Oromo däǧǧazmač ↗Kənfu Addam of Mäč̣č̣a (in Goǧǧam), däǧǧazmač (later ras) ↗Ḫaylu Yosedeq of Goǧǧam and Wänd Bäwäsän placed aṣe ↗Sälomon I on the throne as successor to his brother Täklä Haymanot II. From the beginning of his rule onwards Sälomon I was challenged by nəguś ↗Täklä Giyorgis, another brother of Täklä Haymanot II and a supporter of the christological "House of Täklä Haymanot". He eventually managed to ascend the throne on 17 July 1779.

Täklä Giyorgis ruled six times between 1779 and 1800. During this period the Wärrašek of ↗Yäǧǧu, recently converted from Islam to Christianity, established their influence in Gondär. During his first reign until 1784, Täklä Giyorgis proved to be a powerful figure himself without the support of his nobles, leading a campaign against the ↗Mäč̣č̣a Oromo, collecting tribute in ↗Agäw Mədər and subduing Ḫaylu Yosedeq.

In 1784 Täklä Giyorgis made ras ↗Ali Gʷangul, a member of the Wärrašek, bälambaras of Bägemdər (BlunChr 168 [text] = 342 [tr.]). In the same year Ḫaylu Yosedeq allied with Ali Gʷangul, and they overthrew Täklä Giyorgis to install aṣe ↗Iyasu III instead. After four years Täklä Giyorgis would again overthrow him. He pardoned Ali Gʷangul and provided him with the title of däǧǧazmač of Bägemdər. With Ali's sudden death one year later, however, the situation for Täklä Giyorgis changed again. Ali was succeeded by his brother ras ↗Aligaz (Rüppell 1840, vol. 2, 177f.) whom Täklä Giyorgis had made ↗wag šum before.

Aligaz marched against Täklä Giyorgis and arrested him in 1789, and kept him in custody in ↗Ǝmäkina for nearly three years (BlunChr 147 [text] = 412f. [tr.]). Aligaz now took the role of a king-maker and installed aṣe ↗Ḥəzqəyas, son of aṣe Iyasu II (BlunChr 155 [text] = 425 [tr.]). The deposition of Täklä Giyorgis, as well as his Wärrašek descent and growing power in ↗Wag and ↗Lasta, resulted in a conflict between Aligaz and a number of regional lords, such as ras ↗Ḫaylu Wänd Bäwäsän of Lasta and ras ↗Wäldä Śəllase of Təgray. Ḫaylu became governor of Lasta in 1792 and demonstrated his power by releasing Täklä Giyorgis from exile (Rüppell 1840, vol. 2, 381; BlunChr 155 [text] = 424 [tr.]). Aligaz was defeated in battle at ↗Č̣äč̣äho by the two relatives from Lasta, ras ↗Wäldä Gäbrəʾel and ras ↗ʿAśrat which forced him to move back to Yäǧǧu (cp. GueCopMen I, 200; Rüppell 1840, vol. 2, 381f.; Wudu Tafete 1995: 111, 193; BTafA 437).

After 15 months in office Täklä Giyorgis had to face another rival king, when nəguś ↗Bäʾədä Maryam II was placed on the throne (BlunChr 162 [text] = 433 [tr.]). This was probably accomplished either by a Wärrašek group around Aligaz and Ḫaylu Yosedeq or by Wäldä Gäbrəʾel of Lasta (cp. Rüppell 1840, vol. 2, 383; Tekle-Tsadik Mekouria in PICES 8, 208). Ḫaylu Yosedeq died suddenly in July 1795 and was succeeded as ruler of ↗Goǧǧam by his son ↗Märəd Ḫaylu. In 1796 Märəd managed to lure the powerful elite and the king out of Gondär and in their absence installed Täklä Haymanot II's son ↗Sälomon II as king. In return he was awarded the title of ras, while Täklä Giyorgis retreated to ↗Təgray. Sälomon married wäyzäro Alṭaš, apparently a daughter of ras Ali Gʷangul, and former concubine of Täklä Giyorgis (BlunChr 170 [text] = 445f. [tr.]). Already in 1797, however, Sälomon was chased from the throne by ras ʿAśrat, again in favour of Täklä Giyorgis.

The following period was again very volatile, with constant shifts of power and changing coalitions among the different regional rulers. In July 1799 ras ↗Gäbre Täsfa of Səmen and ras Märəd Ḫaylu of Goǧǧam again put Sälomon II on the throne of Gondär. Thereupon they headed to ↗Wägära where Täklä Giyorgis was said to reside (BlunChr 181 [text] = 461 [tr.]). He had, however, already departed to meet ras Wäldä Śəllase in ↗Aksum but had left some of his troops behind. In the bloody battle that ensued, Wäldä Gäbrəʾel of Lasta and the Goǧǧame ruler Märəd died. Sälomon was deposed and, like ras ʿAśrat, put in irons. Hearing of this Täklä Giyorgis retired to Waldəbba.

The Wärrašek regained power in Gondär through ↗Gugsa Märsa, son of Ali Gʷangul, and his brother däǧǧazmač Alula. Gugsa Märsa had previously been appointed däǧǧazmač of ↗Fogära by ↗Amäde Kolase (s. EAE vol. 5). They proclaimed as king ↗Dəmeṭros, great-grandson of aṣe Yosṭos, who in return immediately promoted Gugsa to ras (BlunChr 182 [text] = 462 [tr.]). The strongest challenge for the Wärrašek was now Wäldä Śəllase who still supported Täklä Giyorgis. The latter ascended the throne one last time from March to May in 1800, only to be deposed again by Dəmeṭros (BlunChr 187f. [text] = 470 [tr.]).

Dəmeṭros's second reign lasted only until 1801. Ras Gugsa chose ↗Əgʷalä Ṣəyon as his successor. He was a weak and quiet king who never left Gondär. Yet he "ruled" for 17 years during which Gugsa proved to be the most powerful lord in the country. One of Gugsa's strongest opponents was the successor of ras Märəd, däǧǧazmač ↗Zäwde, who after having suppressed a revolt of the ↗Agäw, ruled over Goǧǧam, Damot and Mäč̣č̣a (Goǧǧam; BlunChr 189 [text] = 473 [tr.]).

The aged ras Aligaz died in 1803, and only some months later, abunä ↗Yosab passed away. Gugsa pillaged the property of the deceased metropolitan and, with the help of əč̣č̣äge Wäldä Yona, issued a proclamation in favour of the Śost lədät and Ṣägga doctrines. Däǧǧazmač Zäwde and ras Wäldä Śəllase were very angered by this move. Zäwde forced Gugsa to hand over all the gold he had taken from Yosab's house. Zäwde and Wäldä Śəllase both donated additional money to acquire a new metropolitan from Egypt (BlunChr 190f. [text] = 475 [tr.]).

For some years all the protagonists were involved in regional conflicts. Gugsa had collected a strong army and managed to keep Wäldä Śəllase away from Gondär. The latter had accumulated large properties in Təgray and constantly challenged Gugsa and Zäwde. The territories in-between were ruled by däǧǧazmač ↗Maru (cp. his territory of ↗Maru Qämmäs) and däǧǧazmač ↗Ḫaylä Maryam Gäbre of Səmen, who acted as a buffer, and who had both been married to daughters of Gugsa (CRNuov 360). Challenges came also from the east, where imām ↗Libän Amäde ruled over large parts of ↗Wärra Himäno. Finally in 1816 the new metropolitan, abunä ↗Qerəllos, arrived in Ethiopia. Qerəllos, who favoured the ↗Karra doctrine, had to face strong opposition, especially from əč̣č̣äge Wäldä Yona, and was unable to develop a strong position. He died of old age four months after his arrival, in May, at the residence of the Təgrayan ruler ras Wäldä Śəllase, in ↗Č̣äläqot (CerDLib III, 155f.).

Əgʷalä Ṣəyon died soon after in 1818 and Gugsa immediately installed the former's brother aṣe ↗Iyoʾas II on the throne (CRNuov 363). Däǧǧazmač ↗Säbagadis Wäldu became the strongest Təgrayan lord in 1822 having defeated däǧǧazmač Wäldä Rufaʾel, balabbat of Mäč̣č̣a (in Goǧǧam; GueCopMen I, 202; CRReal 893–96). The year before king Iyoʾas had died and, after some months, he was succeeded by his brother aṣe ↗Gigar, according to the will of Gugsa.

Gugsa died in 1825 and his position was assumed by his son ↗Yəmam. When Yəmam was out of Gondär, däǧǧazmač Ḫaylä Maryam used the opportunity to depose Gigar in favour of aṣe ↗Bäʾədä Maryam III, yet a few days later Gigar was reinstalled. Following a battle with Yəmam, Ḫaylä Maryam died in 1826, having appointed his son ↗Märso Ḫaylä Maryam as his heir (CRNuov 368ff.).

Märso was soon challenged by his paternal half-brother ↗Wəbe Ḫaylä Maryam. Wəbe managed to take all his father's territories from Märso within 1827 and thus became Yəmam's strongest adversary. Still that same year Yəmam and Wəbe allied to fight Maru, who had connected with ↗Goššu Zäwde of Goǧǧam, at the Battle of Koso Bärr. Maru was shot dead in the course of fighting and parts of his lands were awarded to ras ↗Marəyye, another son of Gugsa (CRReal 903). Maru was succeeded by däǧǧazmač ↗Kənfu Ḫaylu who ruled over the rest of Maru Qämmäs. Soon afterwards Yəmam died of cholera (CRNuov 372) and Marəyye became the guardian of the king in Gondär.

In the meantime, Säbagadis was anxious to attain, through trade with the British, as many fire-arms as possible. Wəbe wanted to ally with him in the fight against the Yäǧǧu Wärrašek. However, Säbagadis did not support Wəbe in his campaigns and, thus, the latter joined forces with Marəyye and Goššu (CRNuov 375). The two groups met in 1831 in the battle of ↗May Əslamay. Marəyye was shot dead, yet his side won the battle. Säbagadis was captured and executed in revenge for Marəyye (CRReal 909f.).

In February 1831 ras ↗Dori Gugsa succeeded his brother Marəyye. His reign was short, only three months, but effective. He appointed Wəbe governor of Təgray, deposed Gigar and replaced him with ↗Iyasu IV. Dori was afraid of a rebellion and ordered the imprisonment of Kənfu Ḫaylu and Libän Amäde (CRNuov 376f.). Yet Dori died of a sickness in the Wärrašek capital ↗Däbrä Tabor before he could accomplish more.

The vacant position of Dori was now given to ras ↗Ali Alula, grandson of Gugsa and the last of the Yäǧǧu Wärrašek dynasty to rule. Owing to his young age – he was only 12 or 13 when he was elected (Rüppell 1840, vol. 2, 59) – his mother ətege ↗Mänän Libän Amäde functioned as regent.

Aṣe Iyasu was deposed and superseded by aṣe ↗Śahlä Dəngəl, who claimed descent from aṣe ↗Fasilädäs. His nomination caused extensive doctrinal conflict. He faced strong opposition from the monks of ↗Azäzo who were followers of the Ṣägga doctrine, and he was soon deposed again by Mänän and replaced with aṣe ↗Gäbrä Krəstos in 1832 (CRReal 912) who, however, died only three months later. Śahlä Dəngəl was pardoned and reinstated, and so his rule was just as unstable. Up to 1850 he was repeatedly deposed and reinstated in alternation with aṣe ↗Yoḥannəs III.

Wəbe strengthened his position in Təgray, and for maybe the first time the whole of Təgray and the neighbouring Təgrəñña-speaking territories (Wälqayt, ᶜAgamä, Akkälä Guzay etc.) and Səmen was dominated by one single person. He had tried to obtain a new metropolitan from Alexandria after abunä Qerəllos died in 1828. Beyond that he was one of the first Ethiopian rulers who was directly challenged by the invading Egyptian forces in 1835, when Wəbe rushed to support al-makk ↗Nimr of Sandī who had moved into ↗Wälqayt (s. also ↗Nimrab). He defeated the Egyptians but they tried again to penetrate Ethiopian territory only one year later. This time they suffered a considerable defeat at the hand of Kənfu Ḫaylu around ↗Mätämma (Combe – Tamisier 1843:346; CRReal 913; Parkyns 1853, vol. 2, 356f.).

In 1838 Kənfu Ḫaylu quarrelled with his much younger half-brother Kaśa Ḫaylu (the future aṣe ↗Tewodros II), whom he exiled to Goǧǧam. Kaśa only returned upon Kənfu's sudden death. Kənfu's sons tried to inherit their father's territories but after several quarrels and a battle at Dəngəl Bärr (CRReal 914) these territories were given to Mänän.

In 1839 ↗märäd azmač ↗Śahlä Śəllase, who had successfully expanded the independent kingdom of ↗Šäwa, and had quashed the rebellion of ↗Mätäkko, felt powerful enough to proclaim himself nəguś (BTafA 535, 537, 541). However, this title was never recognized by Ali or Wəbe. The 1840s were also a time of the growing influence of European travellers and missionaries (↗Missions). Contrary to the Catholic missionaries, the Protestants were not well received by Wəbe (RubInd 75f.) and soon headed south for Šäwa, where they were warmly welcomed by Śahlä Śəllase. Among them were ↗Krapf, ↗Isenberg, ↗Beke and ↗Harris with whom a treaty of commerce and friendship was signed (↗Treaties and conventions, s. EAE vol. 5; Ullendorff – Beckingham 1964; RubInd 152–59; AWTarik 115). Wəbe actively sought cordial diplomatic contacts with Catholic kings hoping for European support in his claim for the throne (RubInd; RubActa I).

Mänän Libän Amäde, who governed Maru Qämmäs, was through this position the overlord of Kaśa Ḫaylu. In order to prevent his rebellion she married him to one of her grand-daughters, ↗Täwabäčč (CRNuov 409). Albeit with little success, he rebelled against Mänän and Ali. In order to win back his loyalty, Ali offered Kaśa the governorship of Qʷara around 1846, which Kaśa accepted. A year later, while Ali was absent, Kaśa moved against Gondär and took Mänän and aṣe Yoḥannəs III (now her husband) as prisoners (CRNuov 392). To appease Kaśa Ali offered him the title of däǧǧazmač and the governorship of Maru Qämmäs (RubTew 38). As a consequence Mänän withdrew from political life to ↗Maḫdärä Maryam (LefAbyss vol. 1, 356; AbbSéjour, vol. 1, 182ff.). In 1847 or 1848 nəguś Śahlä Śəllase of Šäwa died of an injury in his capital Däbrä Bərhan (CRNuov 394; BTafA 543; GueCopMen I, 76). He was succeeded by his son nəguś ↗Ḫaylä Mäläkot.

At the coast, the Ottoman (↗Ottoman empire) port of ↗Massawa was at times taken over by the Egyptian ruler ↗Muḥammad ᶜAlī (s. EAE vol. 5) in the 1840s. Due to the presence of a potential expansive power, the local ruler of ↗Ḥərgigo declared himself independent in 1847. In the same time, Wəbe expanded into the entire highlands of the ↗Märäb Məllaš, and even reached the coastal regions. In 1849, Wəbe's troops attacked Hərgigo and looted Catholic settlements such as ↗Əmkullu. Kaśa of Qʷara became a ↗šəfta and campaigned in the Sudan, but also in the Ethiopian regions neighbouring to his. In consequence, Ali gave Kaśa's territory ↗Dämbəya to Goššu and sent him to challenge Kaśa. The two armies met at ↗Gur Amba in November 1852 and in the ensuing battle Goššu was killed (CRNuov 404f.). In the following year Ali again sent troops to end Kaśa's growing rebellion. Kaśa was again victorious and burnt down Däbrä Tabor (CRNuov 407). Ali and Kaśa met in one last, extremely bloody battle at ↗Ayšal, out of which Kaśa emerged victorious (CRNuov 407; MonVidTheo 4 [text] = 5 [tr.]; MorTeod 158). Ali fled to Yäǧǧu, where he remained until his death in 1866.

In 1854/55 Kaśa called for a church council at ↗Amba Č̣ara, to mediate between the new metropolitan abunä ↗Sälama III, əč̣č̣äge Wäldä Maryam and other high ecclesiastics (CRNuov 409). In their presence Kaśa proclaimed himself nəguś. He offered peace to Wəbe if he was willing to submit. However, Wəbe declined the "offer". They met in battle near the Täkkäze, Wəbe was arrested and his son, däǧǧazmač ↗Ǝšätu Wəbe was killed. Wəbe's territories were merged with those of Kaśa. At ↗Ǧan Amora Kaśa proclaimed himself nəguśä nägäśt and took the regnal name Tewodros in 1855 (CRNuov 410); he celebrated his coronation in the church of Däräsge Maryam in Səmen which Wəbe had originally built for his own coronation (cp. also ↗Zander). Tewodros was challenged by two nephews of Wəbe, the rivalling nəguś Nəguśe Wäldä Mikaʾel and däǧǧazmač ↗Täsämma Wäldä Mikaʾel. They were fairly successful and temporarily even invaded Gondär. In the end nevertheless they were both defeated and executed by Tewodros. Tewodros's final dominion over the rival lords is generally seen as the end of the Z.m.

III. Historical assessment

The Z.m. was characterized by a bundle of interconnected historical tendencies: 1) a pronounced decentralization, e.g., the increase of power of regional lords; 2) religious conflicts; 3) changes in ethnic factions; 4) growing foreign interests and contacts of regional lords with different foreign powers.

1) During the Z.m. Christian Ethiopia underwent changes in the interregional balance of power from central authority to a decentralized or multi-centered political structure. The royal city of Gondär lost its pre-eminent role. The political business took place in the provinces, with the travelling lords. Regions like Goǧǧam, Təgray and Bägemdər grew in importance, as can be seen in the foundation of new towns, such as Däbrä Tabor. As a consequence the Z.m. witnessed general cultural change including a decay of the "classical" Gondärine culture, including Gəʿəz literature (in favour of ↗Amharic literature), painting, architecture etc. In accordance with the political decentralization, a change in historiography can also be detected, away from royal chronicles to general chronicles of a certain time span or on behalf of an individual lord (e.g., aläqa ↗Abägaz, Ḫaylä Mikaʾel Ǝšäte and Mikaʾel Səḥul). This tradition, however, ended with Tewodros who chose not to be a kingmaker but a king himself, despite widespread doubts about his Solomonic descent.

2) Religious conflicts went on during the Z.m. On the one hand, the conflict continued between Christian Ethiopia and Muslim powers (↗Islam). Although many had converted to Christianity, especially among the Yäǧǧu, such conversations were always suspected to be insincere, and, in fact, some reconverted just before their death.

On the other hand, the internal doctrinal conflicts within Christianity peaked during this period. In particular the metropolitans were adherents of the Karra doctrine and were fiercely attacked by the powerful *əč̣č̣äge*s who often followed the Ṣägga doctrine. In addition an increasing number of missionaries, especially from France (including Italians in French service), Britain and southern Germany started their work in the Horn of Africa.

3) Christian converts of Yäǧǧu and Wällo Oromo ethnic background became part of Gondärine society, and ↗Oromiffa became a frequently spoken language at court. During the Z.m. the most powerful group was the Wärräšek dynasty from Yäǧǧu. For nearly a century they controlled the kings in Gondär. Their nepotism provoked discontent among other groups, such as the traditional Gondärine power elites or Təgrayans who tried to challenge their power. However thanks to political marriages the networks of mutual interdependence among the different parties were strong.

4) The Z.m. coincided with the growing colonial interests of Europe, the increase in importance of the ↗Red Sea ↗trade, as well as the first phase of the expansion of ↗Egypt. The Ethiopian rulers depended on foreign supply of firearms. Some, like Wəbe, sent their own envoys and letters in Arabic to European and Egyptian rulers (RubActa I, xii; cp. Appleyard 1985, passim). During the Z.m. there were the very first negotiations between Ethiopian rulers and European powers to strengthen the presence of Europeans in the region, such as ↗Śahlä Śəllase in his treaty with the ↗United Kingdom, and Wəbe in his contacts with French representatives. This went so far that Ethiopian officials even offered territories at the coast, although not controlled by them, to the French. This remained with no effect as France did nothing to take control of them. ↗Egypt in turn, however, started to expand into Ethiopian territories only much later.

The Z.m. is often seen as a period of political chaos, instability and decay of the Christian Ethiopian ↗monarchy (s. EAE vol. 5) and the culture and society connected to it. This interpretation, however, seems to be partially a retrospective judgement reflecting a political ideology starting from aṣe Tewodros II which tends to interpret the Solomonic nəguśä nägäśt as the "natural" legitimate ruler of Ethiopia and the only possible guarantor of stability and prosperity. This historical assessment of the Z.m., however, demands some differentiation since the regional lords could partially compensate for political weakness at the centre as far as their own realms were concerned. During the Z.m. the nəguśä nägäśt lost effective power but he remained a symbol of political unity and served as a source of legitimacy. The king-makers, despite their own strength, never tried to ascend the throne themselves but always chose somebody with allegedly Solomonic descent, thus keeping alive the myth of the ↗Solomonic dynasty in Gondär. Furthermore, the diversification of power and political centres resulted in a multiplication of courtly culture which before was mainly limited to the Gondärine royal court. The growing influence of different regional/ethnic as well as foreign cultures broadened the cultural endowment of Christian Ethiopia and at the same time fuelled cultural change.

In the south and south-east of the Christian kingdom the internal struggles of the Z.m. contributed to a peaceful expansion of Islam and consolidation of independent kingdoms.

Däǧǧazmač Z. (ዘማርያም) of ↗Ǝndärta was a nobleman and warlord who rebelled together with ↗Fares of ↗Säläwa (later ras bitwäddäd under ↗Iyasu I) against aṣe ↗Yoḥannəs I. Z.'s homeland was Ad Aqet, a sub-district of Ǝndärta.

In the tenth year of his reign (1677) Yoḥannəs led a campaign against ↗Lasta and ↗Təgray whose leaders submitted to him. Fares escaped and thereafter Z. allied with him. On 13 Gənbot (18 May) 1678 they raised a new revolt in several districts of south/eastern Təgray and Lasta, including ↗Wäǧǧärat, ↗Dobaᵓa, Säläwa, ↗Säḫart and Ǝndärta. Yoḥannəs sent däǧǧazmač ↗Dəlbä Iyäsus who was able to defeat the rebels (GuiIohan 25 [text] = 26 [tr.]). Fares then sent Z. to ↗Gärᶜalta and Wəšafat where he killed 1,700 men. The following months saw constant clashes between Dəlbä Iyäsus and the rebels, without clear supremacy. In the meantime Z. and Fares promoted Maḫdäro Krəstos from ↗Wag as their candidate for the throne (GuiIohan 36 [text] = 27 [tr.]). In January 1679 Z. and Fares appealed for aid and overlordship from the governor of ↗ᶜAdal, who, however, declined the request (GuiIohan 28f. [text] = 28f. [tr.]).

In May 1679 Z. and his son, Wäldä Haymanot, abandoned Fares and the rebellion to reconcile with Yoḥannəs. Fares and Yoḥannəs also reconciled for a short time through the mediation of abba ↗Mäzraᵓətä Krəstos (GuiIohan 30f [text] = 30f. [tr.]). But when Yoḥannəs offered Z. the governorship of Təgray, an enraged Fares rebelled anew. Z. pursued Fares relentlessly across Lasta and south-eastern Təgray. Z. and his brother, Bənyam, repeatedly defeated Fares and the Lastans and finally occupied even Säläwa (GuiIohan 30f. [text] = 30 [tr.]). At last, in mid-1681, Bənyam captured Fares, who then submitted to the court (GuiIohan 31–35 [text] = 32–35 [tr.]).

Hereafter, Z. presumably continued to govern Təgray, but he is not mentioned again in the royal chronicles. His career must have ended, however, soon after the succession of Iyasu I in 1682, an act that marked the ascent of Fares at court.

Ǝč̣č̣äge Z. (ዘሚካኤል; also known as Z. II; d. 11 December 1725, Däbrä Libanos) was the 29th abbot of ↗Däbrä Libanos in Šäwa and headed the community twice, in 1696–99 and in 1711–16.

His first tenure followed the deposition of əč̣č̣äge ↗Ṣägga Krəstos and lasted from 3 October 1696 until January 1699 (GuiIyas 192f. [tr.]; BassÉt 308 [tr.]; BegCron 70 [tr.]). Z. had some political influence and played the role of protector of däǧǧazmač Giyorgis, son of ras ↗Anəsṭasyos and officer of aṣe ↗Iyasu I, who had rebelled against the Emperor in 1697 (GuiIyas 192f. [tr.]; BassÉt 308 [tr.]; BegCron 70 [tr.]; CerDLib II, 180f.). The house of the ↗əč̣č̣äge was apparently used to grant ↗asylum to Giyorgis.

Z. was elected for a second time on 18 October 1711 through the promotion of aṣe ↗Yosṭos (DombrChr 260 [tr.]; BegCron 94 [tr.]). During the time of transition from Yosṭos to his successor aṣe ↗Dawit III, in February 1716, Z. was among a group of nobles who sent a messenger to the dying monarch to question him about his reign (BassÉt 336 [tr.]; BegCron 97; DombrChr 263 [tr.]). Only two months later on 12 April Z. was deposed (DombrChr 265 [tr.]; BegCron 99 [tr.]; BassÉt 338 [tr.]).

Z. died in Däbrä Libanos and was buried at Čalma, in ↗Dämbəya (BegCron 115 [tr.]; DombrChr 283 [tr.]; CerDLib III, 145). This is an uncommon place for the burial of an əč̣č̣äge who were usually buried at ↗Azäzo. This may mean that Z. was somehow considered different from other əč̣č̣äges, or that he became unpopular during his second tenure.

Z. is one of the four *əč̣č̣äge*s who are not mentioned in the list of the abbots of Däbrä Libanos published by Cerulli (CerDLib). No obvious reasons are given to explain this omission and Cerulli notes that the writer had consciously omitted him (CerDLib III, 145). Z. may have been a person of political or religious controversy and may not have been recognized as an official representative of the community. The religious context of his time was quite turbulent, which is mirrored by the rapid succession of the *əč̣č̣äge*s after the death of əč̣č̣äge ↗Qalä ᶜAwadi, in September 1686: Yoḥannəs III, Säfani Krəstos, Ṣägga Krəstos, Z., Agnaṭəyos and Wäldä Ḥawaryat (CerDLib II, 180f., III, 170; DombrChr 306 [tr.]).

Z. should not be confused with another əč̣č̣äge of the same name, Z. (I), whose tenure converged with that of əč̣č̣äge Zäwängel in 1623 (FotiCr 117; CerDLib II, 160).

Zämikaʾel Arägawi

Abba Z.A. (ዘሚካኤል ፡ አረጋዊ; also known as Arägawi) is the most famous of the ↗Nine Saints, who reached Ethiopia during "the second Christianization", in the late 5th/early 6th cent. He is commemorated in the Sənkəssar on 14 Ṭəqəmt.

The main source of his life is his 16th-cent. Vita (Gädlä Arägawi). According to this text, Z.A. was the second-born son of a noble Christian family in ↗"Rom". His parents, Yəsḥaq and Ǝdna, gave him the name Gäbrä Amlak and his brother was named Tewodros. At an early age Z.A. studied the holy books and Ǝdna called him Abdal Masiḥ, i.e. the Arabic Servant of Christ, ʿAbdalmasīḥ of which Gäbrä Krəstos is the "Ethiopianized" form. His parents wanted him to marry into the royal family, but he refused and took refuge in the Egyptian desert of Thebes, with abba ↗Pachomius. As a 14 year-old boy, he received the ↗askema and the monastic name of Zämikaʾel from Pachomius. In later life, Ǝdna followed him to Thebes and to Ethiopia, became a nun, and later established a nunnery in Təgray, in a place called Bäʾatä Ləm, near ↗Däbrä Damo.

Z.A.'s reputation rose and he attracted some other "members" of the future Nine Saints, who also took up the monastic habit under Pachomius. After some years the group returned to "Rom". In a vision the archangel Michael showed Aksum to Z.A. and he decided to move there with the group of the Nine Saints. They arrived in Ethiopia in the 5th year of king ↗Ǝllä ʿAmida. Soon Z.A. was highly respected and was given the name Aragäwi, i.e. 'the Senior'.

The Nine Saints spent several years in Aksum, living in the royal palace, but in the 6th year of King ↗Tazena they decided to part company. After an adventurous journey and performing several miracles, Z.A., his mother Ǝdna and his disciple Matyas reached the foot of Däbrä Damo. The steep rock face of the mountain prevented him from reaching the top, which saddened him and he started to pray. A large snake (60 cubits long), of which he was forewarned by St. Michael, appeared in the sky and tried to dissuade Z.A. from living in such a desolate place, but the monk ordered the snake to lower its tail and used it to climb the mountain. In the beginning Z.A. lived in a cave, praying, fasting and performing miracles. When king ↗Gäbrä Mäsqäl succeeded his father ↗Kaleb on the throne, he ordered a church to be built in Z.A.'s honour. The construction of the church, endowed with precious vestments, golden crosses and holy books, was completed in the second year of his reign and consecrated by the metropolitan.

Z.A. converted numerous people to Christianity and even to monasticism; the monks in his church totalled six thousand. At the end of his days, Jesus Christ appeared to him in a vision and gave him the ↗kidan. Soon after, his disciple and successor Matyas came into Z.A.'s cell but did not find his body.

The relationship with Pachomius, far from being of historical value (the two protagonists did not live in the same period), must be interpreted as a hagiographical requirement to claim renowned spiritual descent for Z.A. According to his Vita, the proposed lineage goes on after Z.A.'s death and is represented by abba Matyas, abba Yosef, abba ↗Mädḫäninä Ǝgziʾ, abba ↗Yoḥanni, to ↗Iyäsus Moʾa and ↗Täklä Haymanot (Guidi 1896: 85f.; Van den Oudenrijn 1939: 66; Brita 2010: 86–92).

A tradition handed down in the Vita mentions Z.A., instead of abba Ṗänṭälewon, as the protector saint of the ↗Nağrān military expedition, but the account of this war is vague and mixed up with the story of the rebellion of the people of ↗Bur against Kaleb (narrated, in a similar way, in the Vita of the ↗Ṣadəqan, too). The Vita of Z.A. shows connections to the Mäṣḥafä ↗məśṭir, in the sections concerning the arrival of the Nine Saints in Ethiopia and the general list of miracles. It also shows similarity in some biographical data with the legend of Saint Alexis, whose Arabic name is ᶜAbdal-masīḥ (↗Gäbrä Krəstos; Brita 2010: 43–46, 75ff.).

The authorship of Z.A.'s Vita is attributed in the incipit to St. ↗Yared, who is also mentioned in the text, but also to Z.A.'s disciples, on the basis of an account made to them by abba Matyas, at the end.

The Vita of Z.A. was published by ↗Guidi 1895 on the basis of four manuscripts (one of which – ms. Mus. Borg. L. V 12 [GréTisVat II, 828] – is lost today; Guidi 1896: 55). In 1939 it was translated into French by Van den Oudenrijn. In his introduction he points out that in the days of Guidi's edition, another manuscript of the text was known, yet ignored by the author (cf. Van den Oudenrijn 1939: 34). Since then the number of known manuscripts transmitting the Vita has increased immensely. Of the Nine Saints' hagiographies, the Gädlä Arägawi is the text with the most extensive manuscript tradition (s. a preliminary list in Brita 2010: 231f.). Among other sources known there are his miracles in the manuscripts EMML nos. 3729, 3736, 3931, a collection of miracles in the manuscript EMML no. 633 and several ↗sälam, ↗mälkəʾ and other hymns dedicated to him (s. list in Brita 2010: 232ff.).

Land grants to Däbrä Damo made by Gäbra Mäsqäl are attested in the Mäṣḥafä ↗Aksum (CRAxum I, 19f. no. 4 [text] = II, 21f. no. 3 [tr.]) and in the Vita of Z.A. (Guidi 1896: 83f.; Van den Oudenrijn 1939: 64), while a land grant to Däbrä Damo by aṣe Yoḥannəs IV is attested in ms. ANLin, CR 44 (CrumLand 211). Since Z.A.'s name is omitted in the list of names in the edited version of the Homily of ↗Gärima, Conti Rossini conjectured there was hostility between the clergy of Däbrä Mädära monastery founded by Gärima, and the clergy of Däbrä Damo. This may have been caused by land grants from Gäbrä Mäsqäl to Däbrä Damo (for a study on this complicated case s. Conti Rossini 1939: 155f.; Brita 2010: 25–29).

Z.A. is mentioned in the monastic genealogies of the line of Iyäsus Moʾa and Täklä Haymanot. In local iconography Z.A. is often depicted climbing the amba of Däbrä Damo on the snake's tail. Up to the present day the only means of access to the monastery is to climb the sheer wall of the cliff with the help of a rope, symbolizing the tail of the snake.

Zämikaʾelites

Z. (or Mikaʾelites) were scholars who challenged many aspects of the theology taught by aṣe ↗Zärʾa

Yaʿəqob (1436–68), and, therefore, were declared heretics. Known by name from the writings of their detractor, aṣe Zärʾa Yaʿəqob, are Zämikaʾel, Gämalyal, ʿAṣqa, Fəre Maḫbär and Giyorgis (Wendt in PICES 1, 141f.; CRRicBerhan II, 126–30, 143 [text] = 72ff., 81 [tr.]). The Gädlä Elyas Gädamawi (Getatchew Haile 2011) indicates that these scholars were from the region of ↗Tägulät and that Gämalyal was blind.

There is no evidence that the Z. and their disciples had constituted a community or acted in unison, such as the "Ǝsṭifanosites" (↗Stephanites) and ↗Ewosṭateans. Nevertheless, Western scholars, especially Enrico ↗Cerulli, group them under the name Z., an appellation derived from the name of one of them, Zämikaʾel (ዘሚካኤል), the theologian repeatedly referred to by Zärʾa Yaʿəqob whenever he refuted their theological views.

None of their works has been discovered, even though through the treaties of Zärʾa Yaʿəqob we know that the Z. "have written homilies on Christianity and Eucharistic prayers or anaphoras, ignoring the ones that are from the ↗Senodos (the Anaphora of the Apostles) and Kidan zäʾəgziʾənä Iyäsus Krəstos (↗Testamentum Domini)" (cp. CRRicBerhan II, 40f. [text] = 24 [tr.]).

The issues of discord between the Z. and the established Church of the time, as represented by Zärʾa Yaʿəqob, were the image of God, the concept of the unity and ↗Trinity of God, millenarian theology (↗Eschatology), the canonical scriptures of the Church (↗Bible: Bible canon), and the place of ↗Mary in Christian worship (↗Mariology). Zärʾa Yaʿəqob taught that God has an image that looks like the image of man. The Z. rejected this view, quoting Jn 1:18, "No one has ever seen God". They said, "God has no form like the form of man. God did not create in his image and likeness the form of Adam's body which is palpable and visible. The image of God and his likeness are an invisible spirit which was breathed upon Adam's face" (cp. CRRicBerhan II, 126–30 [text] = 72ff. [tr.]; cp. Getatchew Haile 1983:149 [text] = 159 [tr.]). The emperor accused Zämikaʾel of composing the trisagion chant, "Holy, holy, holy God who is not likened to the image of creatures", to be chanted "in his church by his followers" (CRRicBerhan II, 126 [text] = 72 [tr.]).

The Emperor's strongest evidence in support of his view, that God has a human image was Gen 1:27 "God created man in his own image" and the incarnation of the Word of God, or the Son, in the image of man.

The local literature preserves two understandings of the concept or theology of the unity and trinity of God. One, to which the Z. adhere, perceives God as one sun—the disc representing God the Father, the light God the Son, and the heat God the Holy Spirit (CRRicBerhan II, 143f. [text] = 81f. [tr.]). Zärʾa Yaʿəqob saw ↗Judaism in this; that is, one person of one God with several attributes that are not equal to the body. He (and apparently the Church of the time) maintained, quoting the Church Fathers, that God's trinity should be compared to three equal suns, and his unity to their united light (ibid. 144 [text] = 82 [tr.]). God's oneness is, he insisted, in his divinity. For the Z., to depict God with three suns was abominable, as it meant three Gods.

The Z. equally rejected the teaching that, before the end of the world, Christ and his righteous will reign one-thousand years, enjoying a "banquet on Mount ↗Zion" (ምሳሕ ፡ በደብረ ፡ ጽዮን, məsaḥ bädäbrä Ṣəyon). In the words of the Emperor, Gämalyal, "with that friend of his, Zämikaʾel", says, አልቦ ፡ ደብረ ፡ ጽዮን (albo däbrä Ṣəyon) or "There is no Mount Zion" (Getatchew Haile 1991:4 [text] = 4 [tr.]). The Emperor wrote extensively on this issue (s., e.g., Wendt 1963:137–44 and Täʾammərä Maryam 1967/68:132–36).

Among the scriptures the Z. rejected were the books of ↗Enoch, ↗Jubilees, ↗Maccabees and the Testamentum Domini (Wendt 1964, I, 107–13 [text]; Getatchew Haile 1982:193f. [text] = 217f. [tr.]). The Emperor believed that they rejected these books because they speak openly about the personhood of the Trinity.

Zärʾa Yaʿəqob's order that his subjects worship the Blessed Virgin Mary had put him in an irreconcilable conflict with many teachers, including the Z. They defied his order to put the miracles of Mary (↗Täʾammərä Maryam) on the level of the canonical scriptures and to observe the many feast days he instituted in her honour. Possibly as a reaction to what seems to be an unreasonable command, Gämalyal reportedly called the Virgin Mary "the tabernacle of Moloch […] and her Son, God the Word, Gog" (Getatchew Haile 1991:3, 38, 82 [text] = 2, 30, 65 [tr.]). There is a thinly veiled Nestorian heresy in their teaching, if Gämalyal had, indeed, composed also the ↗qəne, "'Fire was solidified in living blood; wind was fused with earth', likening the wonderful incarnation of Divinity […] with the conception of Solomon through the intercourse of David with Bathsheba" (ibid.: 4, 39, 83 [text] = 3, 31, 66 [tr.]). This is clearly applying Wis 7:1–6 to the Incarnation of the Word or the birth of Christ.

The most important writing ascribed to the Z. is the ↗Fəkkare mäläkot (s. EAE vol. 5) composed in the early 17th cent. and transmitted through the codex unicus ms. BN Éth. 119 (ZotBNat 141) fols. 1r–25r. Cerulli (1958) published the manuscript which also contains three other texts ascribed to the Z.: the ሐመረ ፡ ነፍስ (Ḥamärä näfs, 'The ship of the soul', fols. 25ra–36ra; Cerulli 1958: 153–89 [text] = 191–213 [tr.]); the መርስ ፡ አሚን (Märs amin, 'The safe haven' or the 'The haven of the faith', [as proposed by Piovanelli 2004: 196]; fols. 36r–48vb; Cerulli 1958: 233–69 [text] = 271–314 [tr.]); and the ፀወነ ፡ ነፍስ (Ṣ́äwänä näfs, 'Refuge of the soul', fols. 49r–58vb; Cerulli 1960: 103–17 [text] = 119–35 [tr.]; Leslau 1964: 451–64 [text] = 465-84 [tr.]; Ludolf 1691: 494–507).

Žämmädu Maryam

Ž.M. (ዠመዱ ፡ ማርያም, also Ğämmadu Maryam) is a church and a monastery situated on an escarpment (2,345 m A.S.L.) in eastern ↗Lasta, between Däse and Allamaṭa (Kobbo wäräda, 031 qäbäle). According to tradition, it was founded by the local saint Bärtälomewos during the reign of aṣe ↗Yəkunno Amlak. The ↗tabots are dedicated to St. ↗Mary, abba Bärtälomewos and abba Yoḥannəs. Z.M. may be identical with the monastic community described by ↗Alvares as "Acate" (BeckHuntAlvar 201f.) and mentioned by ↗Zorzi as Gumat (s. Conti Rossini 1943: 167).

The church is built in a cave (4.5–6 m high) which was closed by a high wooden wall, decorated with painted carvings. Sometime in the 1950s the wall was replaced by a bamboo fence and recently by a brightly painted stone wall. At its western end a small fragment of the old wooden panels is preserved.

The oriented church (9.9 x 7.5 x 5.5 m) rests on a plinth and is constructed of reddish, dressed stones, partly of different size, broken below window level by a wooden course. Another one runs around the top of the building. The church has three naves of equal width. The central one, higher than the aisles and barrel-vaulted, extends towards the east and the west, which gives the church the shape of a Latin cross. The eastern arm of the cross houses a domed sanctuary, the western a flat-roofed vestibule. The roof of the central nave and the dome are wooden and plastered white, the latter recently covered by a textile.

The church has three entrances leading to the central nave and the two aisles, respectively. The doors have massive wooden frames with corner transversal binders and double lintels which are decorated with simple whitewashed carvings. Each aisle has three windows: two on the long wall and one on the short, eastern side; the central nave has two windows on the long walls and one cruciform window at the eastern end. In the vestibule, there is one triple window above the door and one in the south and north sides. The sanctuary is illuminated by six windows arranged on two levels in the eastern, southern and northern walls; the upper level windows are small and cross-shaped. All windows, except for the cruciform ones, are covered with carved grills of varying designs.

The interior of the church is only known from a few, unclear photographs. Two wooden pillars with bracket capitals divide the space and support the lintel beams which run around the nave. Above, there is a frieze of wooden panels. The wooden vaulted ceiling of the central nave has a centrally located tie beam with two bosses below a carved wooden arch. All ceilings are coffered and painted with geometrical motifs. Similar decoration covers the capitals, lintel beams and the frames of the wooden panels. On the vaulted ceiling, ↗angels are depicted, some frontally, some in pairs and armed with swords; the wooden panels of the frieze bear effigies of saints and monks rendered in half figure, each holding a cross or a scroll. Among them is also an ↗equestrian saint riding a white mount. On stylistic grounds the ↗paintings can be dated to the end of the 15th or to the beginning of the 16th cent. ↗Spencer also reported the presence of a 15th-cent. painting of Mary with Child flanked by two archangels over the mänbärä tabot.

Paintings on canvas in the so-called Second Gondärine style decorate the external, southern and eastern walls of the sanctuary and of the southern aisle. Murals on the southern wall, between the windows, show St. ↗George the dragon killer, Mary nursing Jesus and a ↗donor, the ↗Crucifixion and Entombment or Lamentation, above the windows Christ nailed to the cross and his Mocking; the cherubs appear on the frieze below the edge of the roof and around the windows, framed with floral and geometrical ornamentation; at the east end of the south aisle, Christ with the apostles and a standing donor, Job (?), St. Alexis, and Jesus's miracles including the healing of a paralytic; on the frieze below the roof, the martyrs or the righteous; on the south wall of the sanctuary, a large representation of the ↗Trinity with a donor. The windows of the same wall have floral ornamentation. The string course running around the church is painted with geometrical motifs. Two paintings were added on each side of the lower window on the eastern wall of the sanctuary sometime after the 1950s: The Virgin and Child, and St. George. All outside paintings are covered by textiles hanging from the top of the wall to the ground.

The architecture and the paintings of the interior suggest the 15th cent. as the construction date.

The church building is treated as a sanctuary and accessible only to the clergy; the ceremonies take place in the cave or outside the wall which closes the cave. The dwellings for the monks and nuns surround the church and some hermits live at the top of the escarpment.

Ž.M. is a pilgrimage site, famous for the miraculous Marian icon known as the Śəᶜəl gəbṣawit (‘Egyptian Picture’), painted, according to a legend, by St. Luke himself. This 17th-cent. triptych of a Levantine school shows, on its central panel, the Virgin breastfeeding the Child, flanked by two angels; on the wings (probably a later addition), St. Peter and St. John the Baptist. It is displayed for public veneration together with the prayer stick of abba Bärtälomewos and the throne of aṣe ↗Fasilädäs at the feasts of ↗Lədäta (1 Gənbot), Däbrä Məṭmaq (21 Gənbot) and abba Bärtälomewos (4 Ṭəqəmt).

The monastery reportedly possesses a good collection of manuscripts, but only a few have been seen, including two early copies of the ↗Gädlä sämaᶜətat. A shafted, pear-formed ↗cross dating to the 12th or 13th cent. is kept in the church.

Ž.Ž. (ዣን ፡ ዥግ) was a Muslim governor (↗Gärad) of ↗Bale at the time of aṣe ↗Bäˀədä Maryam I in the 15th cent.

Shortly after the death of aṣe ↗Zärˀa Yaᶜəqob in 1468, sulṭān Muḥammad b. Aḥmad Badlāy of ↗ᶜAdal sent a peace proposal to Bäˀədä Maryam promising to pay an annual tribute if Abyssinian troops would stop making incursions into Muslim territory. However, when Muḥammad died, the ᶜAdalites apparently resumed hostilities for Bäˀədä Maryam, after celebrating ↗Ṭəmqät (of 1472[?]), despatched an important military force against ↗Dobaˀa (in ↗Wäǧǧärat) but they were defeated and many perished. The Emperor severely punished the survivors for having engaged in battle without waiting for him to participate. After that he sent Ž.Ž., gärad of Bale, with a number of soldiers to the land of Gam, where Ž.Ž. was killed. Waiting anxiously for his return, Bäˀədä Maryam sent explorers to find out about his whereabouts. When he heard that Ž.Ž. had died, the Emperor retired from Dobaˀa and went to Hayä in ↗Təgray, where he stayed during Lent.

Zander, Eduard

Z. (b. 22 October 1813, Anhalt-Dessau, Germany, d. 25 September 1868, Ǝmkullu), bearer of the “Anhalt Medal for Art and Science” in Gold (1858), was an outstanding German traveller, ar-

Historical photograph of a lost portrait of Eduard Zander from Dessau; private collection of the Hall family chitect, arts- and craftsman in 19th-cent. Ethiopia. His talent as a painter was widely known and many of his sketches were used by contemporary travellers to illustrate their narratives, but few originals have survived.

Z. was the third son of the farmer Johann Gottfried Zander (b. 19 March 1790) and Maria Sophia Zander, née Schlemmer (b. 28 August 1785). After completing his military service as artillerist he went to Munich at the end of 1834 where he enrolled in the Academy of Arts in 1835 to study painting. There he became acquainted with the natural scientist Johannes Rudolph Roth (1815–58), honorary member of the Bavarian Royal Academy of Science, who had travelled to ↗Šäwa on behalf of the Expedition of William Cornwallis ↗Harris in 1840. In those days Roth had contact with the famous botanist Georg Wilhelm ↗Schimper from Mannheim. Reports about Schimper stimulated Z. to plan a journey to Ethiopia himself in order to meet the natural scientist in person. He left the Academy without graduation in 1836 but only on 30 May 1847 did he manage to start his journey. Via Trieste, Alexandria, Cairo, Suez and Jeddah he reached Massawa on 12 September 1847 from where he proceeded to the Ethiopian highlands. His meeting with Schimper in December 1847 marked the beginning of a fruitful cooperation and life-long friendship.

Their first common expedition to the ↗Märäb valley took place in January 1848. Over the following period Schimper trained Z. in collecting and preparing plants and insects which were sent to Roth – Z. gradually became Schimper's scientific factotum.

In the service of däǧǧazmač ↗Wəbe Ḫaylä Maryam, Schimper and Z. built a palace and a church known as ↗Däräsge Maryam. During this time the two collaborated with ↗Schweinfurth in Berlin for the famous Flora of Ethiopia. In this time Z. produced a wide collection of pen-and-ink landscape drawings of ↗Səmen, the most complete collection of Z.'s works which has survived in one piece. The leather-bound sketchbook, now preserved in London and recently edited and published, was the basis for Sophie Veitch's book Views in Central Abyssinia (1868).

After the battle of ↗Däräsge, where Z. commanded Wəbe's artillery, ras Kaśa Ḫaylu was crowned nəguśä nägäśt ↗Tewodros II. While Schimper lost his governor-post in Ǝntič̣č̣o, Z. won the new emperor's confidence, and served as military, medical and technical advisor, first in ↗Gorgora (1856/57), later in the workshops of ↗Gafat near Däbrä Tabor (1863) and finally in the fortress of ↗Mäqdäla (1867), where he was detained with other European hostages of Tewodros. He was freed by the ↗Napier Expedition (1867/68) but died shortly after.

He left behind his daughters Katherina (Amh.: ↗Wälättä Iyäsus) who in 1863 married Moritz Hall in Gondär, Maria Sophia (b. 1854) who later married a merchant called Bərru in Massawa, and Theresa (b. 15. June 1866) the later wife of the Italian architect and traveller Giacomo ↗Naretti. Z.'s son Kaśa (b. 1863) served as interpreter for the Eritrean Government in 1905.

Zanğ

Z. (Arab. زنج, also Zinğ; singulative nisba Zanğī; pl. Zunūğ) is a collective name used in Arabic to indicate blacks in general and particularly those living on the coast of East Africa southwards of ↗Mogadishu (bilād az-Zanğ 'the land of the Z.'). Etymologically, the word Z. is considered to be of Persian origin (Middle Persian zangīg 'negro', New persian zangī '[person] of rusty colour', s. Shapira 2002: 117f. and n. 6), but this derivation is far from being unanimously accepted (Tolmacheva 1986 gives a critical list of other hypotheses).

Z. is commonly related to the ancient Greek toponym Azanía. However, no direct linguistic relation between the two terms can be proven. Desanges (1978: 73 n. 209, 162) quite convincingly proposes a derivation of Azanía from Gr. áza, 'drought, dryness', and underlines the connection between the African Azanía and the Azanía region in Arcadia, which was also considered to be extremely dry and sun-burnt (other proposed etymologies in Hilton 1992, 1993; Huntingford 1980: 62; Dihle 1978: 564 n. 61). Azanía and Z. are, thus, comparable only from a geographical point of view.

In classical sources, the oldest mention of Azanía seems to be in a quotation of Diodoros of Samos (1st cent. B.C.) to be found in a passage of Marinos of Tyre (fl. ca. 100 A.D.) preserved in the Geography of ↗Ptolemy (I, 7, 6: "[while] those who set sail from Arabia to Azanía direct their boat towards the South and the star Canopus"). The Greek geographer confirms in other passages (I, 9, 1; I, 17, 6) the existence of commercial ties linking Azanía to Armata (Cape Guardafui) and the Arabian Peninsula. ↗Pliny the Elder in his Naturalis Historia, mentions the "Oceanus Azanius" (VI, 108) and the "Azanium mare" (VI, 153, 172). The Roman naturalist contradictorily locates this sea both north of ↗Adulis and around Soqoṭra (Dihle 1976: 562f.; Desanges 1999: 341ff.; for a complete discussion of the problems posed by these three passages s. Desanges 2008: 75ff.). In the Periplus of the Erythrean Sea (chs. 15, 16) Azanía is the name of the territories between Opne (Cape Guardafui) and Rhapta (today Mnyuzi, Fiaccadori 1992: 77ff.) which exactly corresponds – geographically – to the medieval Arabic bilād az-Zanǧ.

There could be a direct link between Z. and the "Zangenae" people mentioned by Pliny on the basis of the work of Juba II (Nat. Hist. I, 176) as a subgroup of the Troglodytae. Later, Ptolemy (I, 17, 8) mentions south of Opne a "Zíngis promontory" which is the head of a gulf where the land of Azanía begins (one more clear geographical connection between Z. and Azanía). In the Christian Topography of Cosmas Indicopleustes (II, 29f., 50), a place called Zíngion is mentioned: it is located "beyond the country of incense called Barbaria" at the confluence of the Red Sea and the [Indian] Ocean.

In Arabic literature Azanía is not attested at all, while the Z. are mentioned for the first time by the poet Ǧarīr (d. 728/29) in his Dīwān (ed. 1986: 65, 360; for other early attestations of the word s. Rizvi 1967 and Tolmacheva 1986: 105). The famous scholar al-Ǧāḥiẓ (d. 861) in his short treatise exalting the good qualities of the blacks uses the word Z. interchangeably with Sūdān and Ḥabaš (↗Abyssinia, ↗Habāš). From 869 to 883, the Z. were the protagonists of an uprising in Baṣra. The most widely accepted assumption is that the rebels were black slaves from the East African coast (but for a different view s. Talhami 1977; ↗Slavery).

In geographical literature, the Z. are first recorded by al-Ḫwārazmī (d. ca. 850) in his Arabic rearrangement of the Geography of Ptolemy (1926: 99), where he speaks of the "island of the anthropophagous Z." not mentioned in the Greek original (s. also Trimingham 1975: 119 and n. 10). Ibn Ḫurradāḏbih (fl. 850) briefly notes (1889:170 [text]; 132 [Fr. tr.]) that "whoever goes to the land of the Z. catches scabies". Some years later, both al-Iṣṭaḫrī (fl. 950) and ↗Ibn Ḥawqal (d. after 988) locate the Z. in front of Aden and India on the Ocean, and refer to the possible existence of white Z. living in the cold regions of their lands, mentioning that wood was traded from bilād az-Zanǧ to Sīrāf in Persia (de Goeje 1870: 11; Kramers 1938–39: 59).

In the vast Arabic geographical literature, information about Z. can be found from almost every important author (e.g., al-Mas^{c}ūdī, ↗al-Idrīsī). The major medieval Arabic sources about Z. are translated and analysed by Devic (1883); Kubbel' – Matveev (1960) and Miquel (1975: 167–73).

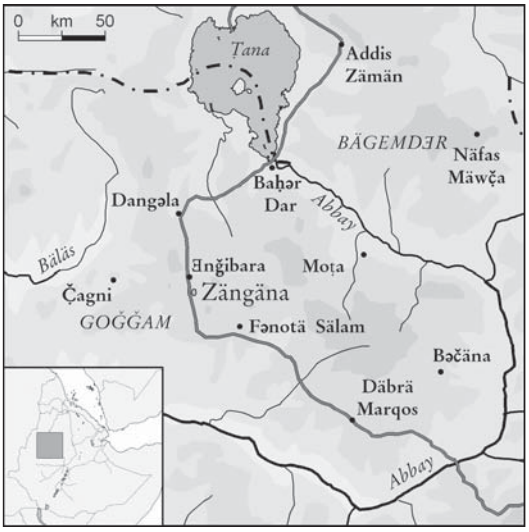
Zängäna

Z. (Amh. ዘንገና, Agäw: Zingini, 10°54' N, 36°57' E; 2,514 m A.S.L.) is a highland plateau crater lake in the ↗Abbay basin in the former sub-province of ↗Agäw Mədər, Goǧǧam, in today's Banǧa wäräda of Agäw-Awi Zone, Amhara Region. It is located between the towns of Kässa and Ǝnǧibara, in the direct vicinity of Čäwsa town, about 200 m off the Addis Abäba–Baḥər Dar road.



Z. is a closed circular lake (hence locally known as Z. Kəbäb, 'circular Z.') with a ridge of unconsolidated ash sediments. The shore of the lake and its surrounding area is dominated by Cupressus lusitanica flora managed by the Agricultural Bureau at Ǝnǧibara. There is shallow algal growth and the water is of good quality.

With a depth of 148 m, Lake Z. is the second deepest crater-lake in Ethiopia after Lake ↗Šala. The lake covers 0.5 km^2 of area and has a volume of ca. 39,000,000 m^3, with 1,300 mm evaporation loss per annum.

Z. has an important place in the oral tradition of the local ↗Agäw people particularly in their creation myth.

Z. increasingly attracts tourists who appreciate the beauty of the lake and its natural surroundings.

Žanhoy

Ž. (Amh. ዣንሆይ, also ጃንሆይ ǧanhoy) is a title of address for the ↗aṣe. Etymologically it can be explained as the juxtaposition of the substantive ጃን, ǧan, or ዣን, žan, 'elephant', a loanword from ↗Agäw (s. below), by extension also meaning 'large, vaste, big', and the Amh. vocative marker ሆይ, hoy, with the resulting meaning of 'O Majesty', then lexicalized as a substantive. The form has also passed into ↗Gurage as ǧanḫ^{w}e, 'majesty', a term of address for the deity ↗Waq (Leslau 1979: 64, 453).

The first element is also present in royal personal names since or immediately before the ↗Zagʷe period at the latest, cp., e.g., ድግናዠን ↗Dəgnažan; ግድዓ ፡ ዠን Gədᶜa Žan (cp. BassÉt 98, 226, n. 57; DombrChr 34 [text] = 151 [tr.]); ጃን ፡ ሥዩም Ğan Śəyyum (Zanśəyyum, var. Zänśəyyum, in CRDLib 186, 189, docs. nos. 6a, 7a, a member of the Zagʷe dynasty, probably the uncle of aṣe ↗Yəmrəḥannä Krəstos and father of aṣe ↗Lalibäla, s. TadTChurch 55, n. 3, and 61); ዠን ፡ ከለለ Žan Källälä (a queen in ↗Täklä Ḥawaryat's Vita); ዠን ፡ መንገሣ Žan Mängäśa (one of aṣe ↗ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon's wives, s. MarAmdS 54f., also for ዠን ፡ ሞገሳ Žan Mogäsa); ዠን ፡ አስግድ Žan Asgəd (probably the successor of ↗Yagba Ṣəyon and the predecessor of ↗Wədəm Räᶜad, s. GuiSLett 99); and in titles, e.g., from the Mäṣḥafä Aksum (s. CRAxum passim; Bausi 2006: 146f.; also Guidi 1940: 181), žan däräba (var. žandäräba), žan ḥaṣäna (or zan ḥaṣäna, zänḥaṣäna), žan mäᵓasäre, žan ṣəge (also a proper name), žan ṣərar or žan ṣərar gʷeta (var. geta), žan täkäl, probably also zän Bäläw, as well as ዛን ፡ ባርያ Zan Barya (a proper name), it is also found as a second onomastic element in ግርማ ፡ ዠን Gərma Žan; ብሉል ፡ ዠን Bəlul Žan (var. Bəlulzan, Bəlulazan); in other texts, e.g., እንግዳ ፡ ዠን Ǝngəda Žan (Conti Rossini 1921–23: 56), እንግዳዠን (CRHist 75 [text] = 87 [tr.]); ዠን ፡ አስፍሐ Žan Asfəḥ (CRStor 262).

The connection between the element žan, ğan and Ethiopian kingship (divine ↗kingship; ↗monarchy, s. EAE vol. 5) is clear and agreed (beginning with Ludolf 1691: 4, n. s., who reluctantly admits: "ዠን ፡ autem Regem Amharicè significat", 'yet ዠን ፡ means king in Amharic') and žan was considered a royal title or, better, a royal appellative. This may have played some role in the transfer to Ethiopia of the legend of ↗Prester John. This was done on the simple basis of the assonance with the various vernacular forms for "John" (Ital. "Gianni", French "Jean", etc.), as noted early on by Páez, Almeida etc. (cp. BecRASO II, 72; V, 5; CRStor 333).

The derivation from däyyani and the resulting posited connection with daňňa, 'judge', proposed earlier by Halévy (1874: 138ff.; also GuiVoc 637; hesitantly accepted by Praetorius 1878: 85f., 93, §§ 59a, 65a) has no solid linguistic foundation, and had already been rejected by d'Abbadie (1882), who favoured an alternative etymology from the term for 'elephant', also present in Amh. as ዝሆን zəhon. Haberland in turn rejected this proposal as popular etymology, while himself regarding ğan as derived from Cushitic dān, don or donzo (the latter appellative also listed for "Gongani & Enareenses" by LudHist book II, ch. 18, § 20), but with the meaning of 'lord, judge, elder', hereby approaching the etymology formerly proposed by Halévy (HabKön 130f.). Mittwoch (1911) attempted to affirm the etymology from the term for 'elephant' on the basis of an Abyssinian tradition, written down in Amharic by aläqa ↗Tayyä Gäbrä Maryam. According to this tradition, aṣe ↗Śärṣä Dəngəl, while leading an expedition in ↗Dämbəya, heard the cry "ğanhoy, ğanhoy" during the night, which, as the inhabitants explained, was used to drive away the elephants lest they destroy the crops. The aṣege was favourably impressed by the event and in the place of his former appellation, መለክ ፡ ደንዞ (mäläk dänzo), adopted the new one of ğanhoy: whoever addressed him in this way would immediately acquire the right to appeal to him for justice. A similar practice was earlier related by Lobo (1971: 692), quoting the appellation "Jan Coy", i.e. 'My king', because "Jan val tanto come Rey, Coy, Meu", 'Jan means King, Coy means My', as well as by Almeida (BecRASO V, 5). Ludolf had also already reported (LudHist book II, ch. 18, § 17ff., cp. Lobo 1670: 42ff.) that it was customary among the people of Amhara and Šäwa to appeal to the king by calling him ዠን ፡ ኰይ ፡ ዠን ፡ ኰይ, Žan ḵoy, žan ḵoy!, 'My king, my king!', or even ብሉል ፡ ኰይ ፡ ዠን ፡ ኰይ ፡ ብሉል ፡ ኰይ, Bəlul ḵoy, žan ḵoy, bəlul ḵoy!, 'My pupil, my king, my pupil!', while other people would use corresponding expressions in other languages. He also gives an account of ብሉል ፡ ዠን Bəlul Žan – actually a proper name used by ↗Ṣägga Zäᵓab, which was also reported by Damião de Góis (Goes 1540: 90, s. Uhlig – Bühring 1994: 146, 273). He also mentioned the appellation ዠን ፡ ዕንቈ Žan ᶜƎnqʷ, transcr. by him as "Ioannes Encoe", and translated as "Ioanes Preciosus", 'Precious John', which involves a misinterpretation of Ž. (s. above) — as well as providing the musical notation for the appellation (Ludolf 1691: 222, 262f., nos. lxiif.).

The etymological connection of Ž. (definitely not a Gəᶜəz term, contrary to EAE vol. 4, 213) with 'elephant' (already proposed by Almeida, BecRASO V, 5, "Jan na lingua antiga de Ethiopia dizem que significa elefante") is to be accepted, both on linguistic grounds, given the perfect correspondence between ʒan-a* in some of the Agäw languages with Amh. žan (cp. Appleyard 2006: 60f.), and in view of the Ethiopian kingship, where the ↗elephant, together with the ↗lion, comes to play the role of the main symbol of royal power, strength, majesty, and invincibility (cp. Caquot 1957: 211f.). The derived notion of 'king', and not the primitive one of 'elephant', is probably present in names such as ↗Dämbäzan (EAE vol. 5; both a place and a personal name, cp. KolTrad III, 57, 59). The Amh. term zəhon 'elephant' is also a Cushitic loanword, yet of a different provenance, which is difficult to determine in detail (cp. Appleyard 2006: 61). Ž. remains one of the few loanwords from Cushitic which have affected the delicate institutional sphere of Christian kingship. The term was in use in the 20th cent. (e.g., s. Ḫaylä Maryam Särabyon 1913), yet is not formally listed among the royal titles ratified in the last decades of aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I's reign (s. MahZekr).

Zännäb

Aläqa, also däbtära, Z. (ዘነብ; b. ca. 1825, Yəfat, d. October 1876, Šäwa) was a secretary of aṣe ↗Tewodros II, and a missionary and writer.

Z. first appears in historical records as a young monk in Tewodros's camp at ↗Mäqdäla, entrusted with writing the Emperor's first chronicle. His authorship (previously questioned, s. MorTeod: "attributed to") is confirmed by Martin ↗Flad, who brought the manuscript of the chronicle to Europe (Flad 1922: 105). Z.'s successor as chief scribe was aläqa (later ṣäḥafe təʾəzaz) ↗Ǝngəda.

Under the influence of the missionaries from ↗St. Chrischona-Pilgermission (esp. ↗Kienzlen and Johannes ↗Mayer), Z. converted to ↗Protestantism in 1858, without, however, leaving the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox (Täwaḥədo) Church (Flad 1968: 32). This was in the line of the mission, which hoped for a reformist movement within the Church. The mission's first indigenous "Evangelist", Z. taught Christian doctrine to the soldiers of Mäqdäla (Flad 1922: 105; 1968: 32; CrumMis 133). He learnt English from Flad in order to be able to compare the Amharic and English versions of the Bible (Flad 1922: 105), and probably taught Oromiffaa to Kienzlen and Mayer. Two of his letters written together with his "brother" called "Mäsqäl" are known from 1861 (ed. by Smidt in VarAeth; Mäsqäl was probably a priest, who had converted with him, not a real brother as Strebel 2000: 138 interprets it). In these letters they both praise the missionary activities (cp. further letters written by Z., RubActa III).

In April 1868, at the end of the ↗Napier campaign, Z. followed the liberated captives to the coast. He was initially appointed tutor (together with Flad) to Tewodros's son, ↗ʿAlämayyähu (Smidt 2001); the task was later transferred to ↗Speedy. Z. stayed in Massawa, where, hosted by ↗Munzinger, he worked on an Oromo Bible translation (in fidäl). In September 1868 he sent his version of the Four Gospels to ↗Krapf in Kornthal, Germany (Rassam 1868:192; Pankhurst 1976:203f.; Smidt in PICES 14). In March 1869, Z. joined the Bible reading circle organized by the missionaries ↗Bender and Mayer in ʿAdwa (Chrischona-Blättchen 1869). He continued working on his Bible translation, assisted by two Oromo from Nonnoo, Waaree, a court eunuch from Mäqdäla (s. Mittheilungen, Nr. 6, Dezember 1870, 23f.) and Gäbrä Mikaʾel (Sixty-Seventh Report of the British and Foreign Bible Society, 1871; most probably one of the Oromo mentioned [under his Oromo name] as co-translators in Krapf et al. 1876; cp. wrong identification by ArEvang 446ff.). In June 1870 Z. sent his (now lost) final manuscript of the N.T. to Krapf, who had just finalized his and ↗Ruufoo's Oromo translation of the N.T., in Latin letters, and had even printed a part of it earlier that year. Krapf used Z.'s manuscript to slightly correct his version and re-transcribe the text into fidäl. In 1875 Mt and Mk were printed, and, in 1876, the complete N.T. Mk was later re-transliterated into Latin letters by an Oromo group in South Africa and printed in 1893 (Darlow – Moule 1903:469).

In Təgray, Z., with Waaree and Gäbrä Mikaʾel, distributed Amharic Bibles, held regular masses and continued Oromiffaa studies. In March 1872, Z., Bender and Mayer travelled together to Šäwa where Mayer was allowed to start an Oromo mission (Mittheilungen Nr. 6, Dezember 1872, 25; Smidt 2008). It is not known if Z. evangelized among the Oromo of Šäwa; he died before he could complete an Oromiffaa translation of the O.T. (Smidt in PICES 14).

Z. is primarily remembered for his contribution to the development of modern ↗Amharic literature. His works mark the beginning of a new linguistic era, the (also politically significant) shift from the domination of Gəʿəz to the popular Amharic, following the Protestant idea that religious (and other) texts should be written in the language the people most easily understand. Z.'s chronicle of Tewodros's reign (publ. in 1902 by ↗Littmann, ZanLitTheod; tr. into Italian in 1942 by ↗Moreno, MorTeod) was the first to be compiled entirely in Amharic. Though sympathetic towards Tewodros, the text not only documents great deeds but also the extreme excesses of the ruler, without any self-censorship, "stressing that it was God who had 'raised up' Tewodros to punish and to put an end to all the sin and evil practised in the country before" (RubTew 13). Its language reaches a high level of literary, "almost poetic", elegance (BZHist 35; Bahru Zewde in StudAeth 309).

Z.'s collection of proverbs and aphorisms, Mäṣḥafä ↗ č̣äwata mänfäsawi wäsəgawi (an original manuscript is kept at the Museum für Völkerkunde Hamburg; s. SixDeu 333; MorTeod 147), compiled in 1864/65 and published in 1924, is considered the earliest work of secular Amharic literature.

The Victoria and Albert Museum, London, keeps Z.'s Oromo–Amharic word list. A collection of letters from Z. to ↗Mənilək II is mentioned by Haile Gabriel Dagne (1967: 251).

Zännäbä Wärq Ḫaylä Śəllase

Ləʾəlt Z. (ዘነበ ፡ ወርቅ ፡ ኀይለ ፡ ሥላሴ, baptismal name: Hirut Śəllase; b. 25 July 1917, Addis Abäba [?], d. 25 March 1933, Mäqälä) was the fourth child of aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I, and his third child by his wife ətege ↗Mänän Asfaw, after ↗Tänaññä Wärq and the heir to the throne ↗Asfa Wäsän. She was believed to be the Emperor’s favourite child.

In 1932, for political reasons, Z. was married to däǧǧazmač ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase Gugsa from Təgray, the son of ras ↗Gugsa Arʾaya and grandson of aṣe ↗Yoḥannəs IV. In the same year she moved to ↗Mäqälä to live with her husband. She died soon afterwards, during pregnancy, following a bout of influenza.

Her husband, who was believed to mistreat Z., did not allow Italian doctors, hired by Gugsa Arʾaya, to treat her. Moreover, even after the Emperor sent his personal physician, ↗Zervos, to treat Z., she did not recover.

Z.’s body was taken to Addis Abäba by plane and not allowed to be buried by the family of her husband, an act which offended Ḫaylä Śəllase Gugsa.

The death of Z. had a great impact on Ḫaylä Śəllase, who, as a consequence, introduced a new law which changed and restricted the custom of mourning (↗Täzkar).

Zanutto, Silvio

Z. (b. 1870, Venice, d. 8 June 1946, Rome) was an Italian bibliographer. In 1892–94, whilst serving as a military officer, he studied Oriental languages in Florence, following courses in Arabic, Chinese and Japanese at the renowned Regio Istituto di Studi Superiori (cp. Marrassini 2007). He also pursued the study of Russian, Hungarian and Georgian. Z. entered the service of the Ministry of Finances in 1894. In 1912 he was called to join the staff of the newly instituted Ministero delle Colonie as director of the library, a post that he carried up to his retirement in 1944.

Z. was extremely active in compiling bibliographies both on colonial matters and of a purely scholarly character. His two bibliographies dedicated to Ethiopia remain an outstanding scientific contribution to ↗Ethiopian Studies (s. Simon 1933; Cohen 1933): a general one of an introductory character resumes the work of Fumagalli (Zanutto ^{2}1936 [1st ed. 1926]); and a specific contribution is dedicated to a survey of the Ethiopic manuscripts in the world (ZanBibl), with detailed information on many little known public and private collections, for some of which his contribution has not yet been wholly superseded by the most recent “catalogue of catalogues” by Beylot – Rodinson (1995). A third contribution dedicated to Ethiopian linguistics was finished and prepared for print, but could not be published (s. Rossi 1946: 56). From the mid-30s to the early ’40s Z. was closely engaged in the compilation of colonial bibliographies. The indexing and systematization of Z.’s huge bibliographical output still awaits due attention.

Zaphiropoulos, Photios

Z. (also known as Zaphiro, b. 10 January 1879, Constantinople, d. 29 August 1933, Dərrä Dawa) was a translator and a zoologist, who served as a diplomat for the British Residency in Ethiopia between 1905–33.

As a child he attended Greek schools in Cairo, was later employed at an uncle's store and became a pharmacy apprentice in a hospital. Sometime around the turn of the century he went to ↗Harär where he opened a pharmacy and offered rudimentary medical service.

He learned Amharic, Oromiffaa and other local languages. In 1902 he organized a two-year expedition for John ↗Harrington, in which animals were collected in the south of the country for the British Zoo. Z. also worked as a taxidermist travelling throughout southern Ethiopia, preparing insects, reptiles and birds for exhibition in the British Museum (Natsoulas 1994–95: 637; Procopiou 1930: 87; Chenevix-Trench 1965: 48f.).

In 1905 he entered the British service in which he remained until his death in 1933. The British, concerned over further Ethiopian advancement to the south, appointed Z. border inspector for the boundary of the East African Protectorate (EAP) with Ethiopia, due to his knowledge of the region and the people. His duties were to monitor the border, establish good relations with the local peoples, repulse Təgray elephant hunters (↗Elephants) who were encroaching into the EAP, to stop the arms trade and, in general, to stimulate local trade. The border line, which was referred to as the Maud line, ran for 400 miles from Kismayu (↗Kismaago) n the east to Lakes Stephanie and Rudolf in the west, and was patrolled by Z. with the help of 30 to 60 ↗askaris and ca. 60 Ethiopian soldiers (Foreign Office 371/2; Foreign Office 491/10; Natsoulas 1994-95: 637–40; Chevenix-Trench 1965: 50; ↗Boundaries, ↗Treaties s. EAE vol. 5).

In the following year Z. became a member of an Anglo-Ethiopia boundary commission which was to fix the border permanently. He was on the commission until 1911 when he was appointed first interpreter with the title of Abyssinian secretary in the British Residency in Addis Abäba. In 1915 he was appointed a vice-consul and spent six months on Lake ↗Ṭana, involved in the Nile water negotiations. In the same year he was appointed to the Order of St. Michael and St. George. In 1918, Z. was seconded to General Ronald Storrs' staff in Jerusalem with the position of Oriental secretary. He returned to his duties in Addis Abäba in 1919, and also became a commercial adviser for British companies. In 1921 the new British Resident Minister promoted Z. to first secretary in the British residency in Addis Abäba and put him in permanent diplomatic service. By the early 1930s his health started to deteriorate and he passed

Zärᵓa Abrəham

Abba Z.A. (ዘርአ ፡ አብርሃም; fl. 15th cent.) was a saintly monk of the spiritual line of abba ↗Anorewos "the Elder" of Wägäg.

The main source of information on Z.A. is his short Vita (↗Gädl), known from a 19th-cent. copy prepared for Antoine d'↗Abbadie (BN d'Abbadie 161, CRAbb 228–48 no. 63). The manuscript also includes an Amharic explication on ↗Henok (pp. 1–220), the Acts of Z.A.'s contemporary ↗Fəre Mikaᵓel of Wäräb (pp. 221–27) and a lengthy Arabic text (a hagiography of šayḫ ↗Ḥusayn, pp. 1–94 from right to left).

According to his Acts, Z.A. was born to Amməḫa Ṣəyon and Wälättä Ṣəyon. His father was the head of the royal army, and Z.A. was raised to be a soldier and assumed his father's position after the latter's death. He married twice, but both his wives died while pregnant. He left his military role and became a warrior for God; a great ascetic living in the wilderness among ↗demons and wild animals. He also had a vision of St. ↗Anthony. He became a disciple of Zälibanos of Däbrä Yälmetän (KinBibl no. 193); however, he eventually travelled to Wäräb and the monastery of Däbrä Ṣəgaga, the site of the grave of Anorewos "the Elder". Upon his departure, he took leave of his mother (who had become a nun and apparently resided nearby), saying that she would only see him again in spirit and in heaven.

Much of the text is composed of miracles or accounts of his extreme asceticism, which ran the complete gamut of such practices. Z.A. dressed in harsh garments which wore away his flesh, bowed incessantly, refused to eat prepared food, assumed the form of a human cross mimicking the passion of the Lord etc. He also copied the crown of thorns worn by Jesus. He had a vision of Anorewos and Frumentius (↗Sälama Käśate Bərhan), who commanded him to spread Christianity in ↗Damot. The importance of his connection to Däbrä Ṣəgaga and a passage in his Acts which condemn the ↗Stephanites would appear to place him among the royal loyalist monks of his period. He died on 18 Säne.

Gädlä Zärᵓa Abrəham appears similar in style to Gädlä Fəre Mikaᵓel, including the idea of a spiritual relationship with abba Anorewos.

Zärᵓa Buruk

Abunä Z.B. (ዘርአ ፡ ቡሩክ, also Zärᵓabruk and variants, baptismal name Ṣägga Krəstos [?]; b. ca. 1630–40, d. 18 January 1700 [?]) was a saintly figure from ↗Goğğam, a contemporary of aṣe ↗Yoḥannəs I and aṣe ↗Iyasu I.

The main source of information on his life is a collection of miracles (↗Täᵓammər), edited by Jäger (1912) and translated by Ricci (1979) after the manuscripts

Berlin, Staatsbibliothek, Hs. orient. quart 1015 (1705/06 A.D., Goğğam; HamSixBerl 251f., no. 135, 26 miracles and a ↗mälkəᵓ to Z.B.); Rome, ANLin, Conti Rossini 83 (20th cent., copy from a manuscript kept at Zärᵓa Buruk church, Gəš Abbay; StrANLin 210–16, 30 miracles including a Dərsanä Mikaᵓel, and two miracles of Mary); ANLin, Conti Rossini 115 (1900/01, copy for Conti Rossini from a manuscript kept at Ǝnda Śəllase, Bur; ibid. 284–88, 24 miracles).

To this list, one should add the following recently discovered witnesses:

ms. Schøyen 2074 (after 1732, 42 and 6 miracles and other texts); ms. ZA-002 from Zärᵓa Buruk, Ḥawzen (18th cent., 42 miracles [including a Dərsanä Mikaᵓel] and other texts); ms. NSM-015 from Däbrä Sälam Mikaᵓel in Nəḥbi (ᶜAddigrat, 1928/29, 23 miracles); ms. AM-009 from Asir Mätira (1935/36, 23 miracles); photoset Ceccarini 10, Comboni house (mid-19th cent., 35 miracles); and a manuscript seen by Kinefe-Rigb Zelleke in Waldəbba (KinBibl 101).

Most manuscripts contain a more or less extensive hagiographic dossier: apart from the Miracles (in some copies referred to as the Contendings, ↗Gädl), they may include one or more ↗mälkəᵓ, ↗sälam, ↗qəne and liturgical compositions devoted to the Saint. Furthermore, both a short and a long redaction appear to exist (Nosnitsin – Sokolinskaia, in preparation).

Some hymns to Z.B. appear to have been inserted into other collections or texts. Very widespread is the sälam on Z.B.'s love for the Saviour of the World, containing a story against ↗tobacco (based on one of the miracles, s. Ricci 1979: 55f.; s. Nosnitsin – Sokolinskaia, in preparation for the list of manuscripts; cp. also Bosc-Tiessé 2010, n. 42 and esp. n. 52).

Additionally, Kinefe-Rigb Zelleke (KinBibl 101) lists manuscripts of the Gädlä Zärᵓa Buruk kept at Aṣbi Śəllase and ᶜAndido Gäbrəᵓel, Təgray. It is not clear how these texts relate to each other, or whether the Z.B. of these hagiographies ("native of Eritrea") is the same as the one venerated in Goǧǧam (s. Ricci 1979: 5ff.). According to some oral traditions (märigeta Mälaku Fälläqä, s. Heyer 1998: 201f. and AmhChurchD vol. 4, 153f.; other copies of texts on him are kept in Däbrä Bizän), a Gädlä Zärᵓa Buruk is kept in [Ǝnda] Zärᵓa Buruk in ↗Šire, Təgray.

In the Miracles, Z.B.'s parents were Dämä Krəstos and Maryam Mogäśa. According to local oral traditions, he was born in Densa. The child, who became blind at the age of seven, grew up to be very pious. After a period of spiritual wanderings, Z.B. settled in Ṣima (south of Lake ↗Ṭana). The centre of his activity was, reportedly, the area of the sources of the Blue Nile (↗Abbay). He was also active in the entire region of ↗Ǝnfraz, especially on the Lake Ṭana island of Məṣraḥa.

Towards the end of his life, Z.B. appears to have been deeply involved in the Christological controversies of his time. For disagreeing with the king, he was condemned, and subsequently imprisoned, for five years (possibly at ↗Azäzo, according to the reading of ms. Conti Rossini 83). Z.B. was released to attend, together with other exiled "heretics", a royal church council (possibly that of ↗Yəbaba convened by Iyasu, in accordance with the reading suggested by Ricci, but cp. Nosnitsin – Sokolinskaia, in preparation). Z.B. was allowed to return to his community, and died soon after, on 12 Ṭərr.

During his wanderings, Z.B. is said to have enjoyed the company of saints and prophets in the heavenly ↗Jerusalem and to have had the power to intercede on behalf of those condemned to the fires of Hell, including abba ↗Absadi, a disciple of ↗Ewosṭatewos. His hagiographer viewed Z.B. as being the greatest of all saints including both Ewosṭatewos and Täklä Haymanot (to whom Z.B.'s spiritual genealogy is traced, via Gerəlos, or Gərlos, a disciple of ↗Yafqərännä Ǝgziᵓ).

Z.B. does not figure in the texts of historiographical genres of the time. His life shows some parallels to that of the contemporary əččäge ↗Ṣägga Krəstos (!) and to such Qəbat "martyrs" as abba ↗Zäᵓiyäsus ("ᶜəwwur"). In some, possibly earlier, compositions (e.g., the Səbḥatä fəqur in the Ḥawzen ms.), Z.B. and Ṣägga Krəstos are two different characters, the teacher and the disciple.

The centre of veneration of Z.B. is the church dedicated to him (formerly: to St. Michael) at Gəš Abbay. It is still frequently referred to as Mikaᵓel Zärᵓa Buruk. A water source at that site is believed to have ↗healing powers (↗Ṣäbäl) due to the blessing of Z.B. (in accordance with his ↗kidan), who is considered a patron of healers. He is commemorated monthly on the day of his death (cp. Mercier after Ricci 1980-81: 71; Fritsch 2001), but does not appear in the ↗Sənkəssar.

In Wällo, a ↗spirit locally known as Ṭadqu is identified by tradition with Z.B. (and the possessed demand that the Gädlä Zärᵓa Buruk be read to them; Mercier in EtRicci 235f.).

[Ǝnda] Zärᵓa Buruk in ↗Šire was, according to märigeta Mälaku, founded in the 14th cent. by a Z.B. from Egypt (Heyer 1998: 201f.). Half a century earlier, however, Ellero had been told that its founder was a 15th-cent. Z.B. from Šäwa (EllLusAnt 23f.).

The church of Ǝnda Zärᵓa Buruk is located in Təgray, ca. 10 km east of Aksum. One of the tabots of the May Anbäsa monastery in East Təgray is also consecrated to Z.B.; it possibly originates from an old cave church located on the slope beneath the monastery.

The rock-hewn church Zärᵓa Abruk in ↗Gärᶜalta (Plant 1985: 65) considerably predates the life of Z.B.; if the dedication is also of an earlier date, this may be another indication to two Z.B. (Fiaccadori 1989: 152).

The known hagiographies from Təgray only speak of Z.B. of Goǧǧam. The veneration of the "southern" Z.B. in Təgray was also noted by Parkyns in the 19th cent. (1966:321ff.: the cult of Z.B. among the group he calls "Fellaty"). It seems possible that different origins are ascribed to Z.B. only by relatively recent oral traditions.

Aṣe Z.Y. (ዘርአ ፡ ያዕቆብ, throne name Qʷäsṭänṭinos; b. 1399, Fäṭägar (Ṭəlq), d. 1468, Däbrä Bərhan; r. 1434–68) was the outstanding ruler of the early Solomonic period (1270–1527). His attempts to provide a firm basis for both Church and State were unmatched by either his predecessors or successors (cp. TadTChurch 302).

Sources on the reign of Z.Y. are numerous, various and partly produced under the supervision of the Emperor himself. Z.Y. was not only a patron of literature, he had large numbers of books composed, translated and copied probably in a scriptorium in his court. This scriptorium was composed by such members of the high clergy as Zäkarəyas, the qäsis ḥaṣay of Z.Y. (EMML V, 323 [ms. no. 1835]; Getatchew Haile 1992: 59) or Yosṭinos of Däbrä Maryam, belonging to the court clergy (Getatchew Haile 1981: 311, 323; Lusini 1996: VI [tr.]). The texts elaborated in the royal court were then sent to the churches of the kingdom (and to more remote places) to be read during specific feasts (Derat 2005). One of the most famous manuscripts linked to the scriptorium of Z.Y. and sent to the church of ↗Däbrä Maryam in Qʷäḥayn is EMML no. 1480, gathering a large part of the texts produced under the supervision of the Emperor (texts edited by Getatchew Haile).

The work known as the chronicle of Z.Y. actually combines two independent works, with one taking a far less critical tone than the other (Kropp 1983–1984: 58f.; Derat 2004: 212f.). Both works were produced by Z.Y.'s contemporaries but without royal control. The later version appears to date to the beginning of the 16th cent., approximately 40 years after Z.Y. death. These texts reflect the reforms undertaken by Z.Y., the organization of the kingdom, the royal foundations, the authoritarian nature of Z.Y. who put to death several of his children whom he suspected of plotting against him. The chronicle of Z.Y. marks the inauguration of a new tradition of indigenous Ethiopian ↗historiography.

II. Biography

Z.Y. was born in 1399 in ↗Fäṭägar, as the youngest son of aṣe ↗Dawit II and his Queen Ǝgziʾ Kəbra. According to a story included in the ↗Täʾammərä Maryam, he was born safely through the intervention of the Virgin ↗Mary. He is said to have joined the monastery of ↗Däbrä Abbay and later resided on a mountain (↗Amba) where he was imprisoned (Taddesse Tamrat in PICES 4, vol. 1, 516f.). Some scholars identify this mountain with the royal prison of ↗Amba Gəšän (Getatchew Haile 1982: 24f.).

Z.Y. was the fourth of Dawit's sons to become emperor and his ascension took place only after several years of chaos following the death of his brother ↗Yəsḥaq and the short reigns of another brother Ḥəzbä Nañ (↗Täklä Maryam) as well as three of his nephews. In the first years of his reign he faced a conspiracy of the highest dignitaries of the kingdom, among whom bitwäddäd Isayəyyas and his wife Šiḥ Mängäśa (who may be identified with one of the daughters of Z.Y.). These opponents had a strong regional base in Təgray (Derat 2004: 221). Bitwäddäd Isayəyyas was dismissed and replaced by a certain ↗ʿAmdä Mäsqäl who then was also dismissed and replaced by Z.Y.'s daughter Bərhan Zämäda (Getatchew Haile 1991: 53–63; PerrZarY 4–12). For this reason Z.Y. travelled to ↗Aksum in 1437 in order to re-establish his authority in Təgray. He was crowned in Aksum on 21 Ṭərr, most probably of the year 1439, after the arrival in Ethiopia of the two metropolitans ↗Gäbrəʾel and Mikaʾel (CRAxum 67f. [text] = 81f. [tr.]; KolTrad III, A31). For this ceremony, Z.Y. established new regulations based on "the rites followed by his ancestors", the Śərʿatä qʷərḥat also known as the Ḥəggä qʷərḥat (↗coronations; PerrZarY 49ff., 83; DillZarY 18ff.; Sciarrino 1994: 150ff.).

Many events marked the reign of Z.Y. Among them one can evoke his victory over ↗Aḥmad Badlāy of ↗Ifat in 1445, the council of ↗Däbrä Məṭmaq in 1450, or the establishment of a permanent capital for the last 14 years of his reign in ↗Däbrä Bərhan. According to the chroniclers, Z.Y. died in Däbrä Bərhan. Being sick, knowing that he would die, he appointed his son ↗Bäʾədä Maryam as his successor.

III. Internal politics

Administrative reforms

In general Z.Y. is known for his efforts in producing regulations for the Christian kingdom. In addition to the Śərʿatä qʷərḥat, he established the regulations for the yearly banquet of Mäskäräm (↗Śərʿatä gəbər) which specified the obligations of the different members of the court in bringing food (Kropp 1988; Derat 2002b) or the regulations for the moving of the court, the Śərʿatä gʷəzo (PerrZarY 44f.; Deresse Ayenachew 2009: 230ff.).

Religious reforms

Z.Y. also undertook many religious reforms. On ascending the throne he quickly made his sympathies for the ↗Ewosṭateans and their two-↗Sabbath position clear. In 1442, while the de jure leaders of the Church, the Egyptian bishops Gäbrəʾel and Mikaʾel, were still supporting the Alexandrian teachings, Z.Y. sent to the Ethiopian community of ↗Jerusalem a copy of the ↗Senodos for the use on the days of the first Sabbath and Sunday (Ludolf 1691: 303). In 1450 at the council at Däbrä Məṭmaq at which he personally presided, the observance of the Saturday Sabbath was declared mandatory for all Christians. He marked the event by giving generous land grants to the Ewosṭateans, but at the same time appeased their rivals, the followers of abunä ↗Täklä Haymanot, by showing them a similar generosity and renaming the monastery of Däbrä ʿAsbo with the more prestigious name of ↗Däbrä Libanos. The two bishops Gäbrəʾel and Mikaʾel had no other choice than to agree with observing the two Sabbaths. They wrote a letter inviting the Christians to observe them and this letter was copied in the Mäṣḥafä ↗bərhan sent to the churches of the kingdom (Getatchew Haile 1981).

In contrast to his conciliatory attitude towards the Ewosṭateans, Z.Y. had violent clashes with the ↗Zämikaʾelites and ↗Ǝsṭifanos and his followers (↗Stephanites). In their first meeting Z.Y. was outraged by Ǝsṭifanos's audacity and refusal to pass judgment in civil matters. He had him flogged. At their second meeting in January 1444, faced by Ǝsṭifanos's refusal to accept his innovations regarding the Cross and the cult of ↗Mary, and perhaps more than anything else his refusal to bow before the Emperor, Z.Y. had him tortured and imprisoned (cp. Piovanelli 1995: 207–13). When Ǝsṭifanos died in prison, Z.Y. ignored the request of his disciples that he be buried in Təgray and had his corpse placed near a Muslim grave in Ṣakara in ↗Däwaro and burnt in public. The Stephanites followed their leader and also refused to prostrate in front of images of Mary. All those who refused the enhanced veneration of Mary in the way Z.Y. demanded it were called ṣärä Maryam (lit. 'Enemy of Mary') or ↗Ayhud.

Visual images played a key role in Z.Y.'s religious programme. While his father Dawit is credited with acquiring a ↗relic of the True Cross (↗Mäsqäl: Legend of the Finding of the Holy Cross), it was Z.Y. who fully developed the devotion to the Cross in ritual and art. The custom of displaying a cross on royal dwellings was initiated during his reign as did the use of a particular type of processional cross with knotted ribbon finals which was combined with an icon (usually the Virgin and Child). The presentation of the cross was not limited to formal works of art. During his reign the sign of the Cross (as well as declarations of faith) were tattooed on believers' hands and foreheads (PerrZarY 6), and affixed to Christians' clothes, weapons and ploughs. It was also during his reign that Marian icons gained dramatically in popularity with the works of the monk-painter ↗Fəre Ṣəyon being perhaps the most important examples (Heldman 1994).

Calendar reforms

Calendaric reform was yet another part of Z.Y.'s programme of religious reform (↗Calendar). Although it has been suggested that Z.Y.'s aforementioned support of the two-Sabbath position was "a sensible political decision" (TadTChurch 226) in light of the comparative strengths of the rival parties within the Church, this was only part of the story. It also fits with a more general policy through which he embedded the Christian ↗feasts and fasts (↗fasting) in the rhythm of the believers' daily lives. He is credited with the introduction of no less than 32 (most sources say 33) Marian feasts. The celebration of the feast of St. Michael on the 12th of each month is also an example of his reforms as was a monthly commemoration of the birth of Christ, which also marked Z.Y.'s own victory over Aḥmad Badlāy (Cerulli 1933; Derat 2002a).

Contribution to literature

Works which Z.Y. composed, co-composed or commissioned from scholars at the court, dealt with the controversies of the time including the Saturday-Sabbath issue, the theology of the ↗Trinity, the number of canonical scriptures (↗Bible: biblical canon), the veneration of the Virgin Mary, icons and the Cross. They included, e.g., the ↗Ǝgziʾabəḥer nägśä, the ↗Səbḥatä fəqur, the Mäṣḥafä ↗bərhan, the Mäṣḥafä ↗milad, the Mäṣḥafä ↗śəllase, the Mäṣḥafä ↗baḥrəy, the ↗Täʿaqəbo məśṭir, the ↗Ṭomarä təsbəʾət, the Kəhdätä säyṭan and the Dərsanä mäläʾəkt. Some new miracles of Mary were also added to the compilation translated during his father's reign (Täʾammərä Maryam), e.g., those dedicated to the victory of Z.Y. against Aḥmad Badlāy in Gomit (Cerulli 1933: 80–99). Most of these works are highly polemical in character and focus on refuting the views of Z.Y.'s opponents. They also give a good idea of the ↗kingship ideology of Z.Y., his version of the events concerning his reign and his opponents.

Relation to magic practice

Special note should be made in this context of Z.Y.'s efforts to eradicate "magical" practices from the church (↗magic). Feeling personally threatened by magicians, priests had to sprinkle holy water (↗Ṣäbäl) at his court night and day while reciting prayers (PerrZarY 40f.). In his fight to abolish magic practice Z.Y. did not even spare his own family, from his chronicle we know that his sons Tewodros, Gälawdewos, ʿAmdä Ṣəyon, Zärʾa Abrəham, and his daughters Aṣnaf Sämra and Dəl Sämra were severely punished for idolatry (PerrZarY 5, 98, 202). Passages from the Mäṣḥafä baḥrəy, are often seen as an example for Z.Y.'s fight against magic practice, also in many other texts such evidence can be found.

Church constructions

Z.Y. also made the royal presence and that of the Church felt on the landscape. He established his court in Däbrä Bərhan, building a royal church and a palace, ca. 1456 in the wake of a miraculous event, perhaps the appearance of Halley's Comet, breaking with the custom of his predecessors who had a mobile court (↗kätäma). He spent the last 14 years of his reign in this locality, where in later years the church of Betä Qirqos was also founded (PerZarY 72ff.). He also established other royal churches in the kingdom (a total of seven) among which Däbrä Məṭmaq and ↗Däbrä Nägʷädgʷad had a specific role. It was in Däbrä Məṭmaq, built in commemoration of the destruction of the Egyptian monastery of Məṭmaq, where Z.Y. summoned the council on the observance of the Sabbath. Däbrä Nägʷädgʷad was conceived as the future necropolis of the Emperor where he had his father and mother buried (PerrZarY 83–87). After his victory over Aḥmad Badlāy, he donated trophies to the church. He himself was buried at the site but later transferred by ↗Naᶜod to the monastery of Däbrä ↗Daga Ǝsṭifanos at Lake ↗Ṭana (DerDom 284–313).

IV. Foreign relations

In addition to his concentration on the internal problems of Ethiopia, Z.Y. also engaged aggressively in the defence of Ethiopia's borders. Throughout much of his reign he focused on the ↗Walašmaᶜ sultanate of Ifat. In August 1443 the leader Aḥmad Badlāy along with his brother ↗Ḫayraddīn (s. EAE vol. 5) staged a successful incursion into Šäwa. Two years later they repeated their victory in Däwaro. However, on 25/26 December 1445, they were defeated by Z.Y. in a decisive battle at Gomit (↗Egubba; PerrZarY 64, 88). Not only did Z.Y. personally kill the Ifat ruler but he also cut his body into pieces and distributed it throughout his kingdom.

Z.Y. also entertained foreign relations with ↗Barsbāy, ruler of Egypt, whom he requested to treat his Christian inhabitants respectfully. Yet this might have had the contrary effect for in 1440 Z.Y. received a letter from the Coptic patriarch John XI, informing him of the destruction of the monastery of Məṭmaq (PerrZarY 55ff.). Z.Y. also dispatched Pietro ↗Rombulo (s. EAE vol. 5) with two Ethiopians as envoys to Europe. They visited Pope Nicholas V in Rome and participated in king ↗Alfonso V's triumphal entry into Naples 1450. They argued about sending military aid and craftsmen to Ethiopia (Ryder 1990: 282; De Witte 1956).

V. Family and descent

The details regarding the wives and descendants of Z.Y. are complex and the textual evidence appears at times to be contradictory. While in part this is clearly due to differing transcriptions and perhaps the identification of individuals by several ↗names (royal, baptismal, pseudonym), it also reflects in some measure the tremendous tensions which existed at court during his reign. Z.Y. married three wives: ↗Ǝleni, Fəre Maryam and ↗Ṣəyon Mogäsa. Perhaps the best known member of his family was his "queen of the right" Ǝleni (Admas Mogäsa or Žan Zela; PerrZayY 16, 59), the daughter of the ruler (↗gärad) of Hadiyya. According to some scholars, she became one of the queens of aṣe ↗Bäʾədä Maryam, as "queen of the right" (PerrZarY 125) and continued until her death ca. 1522 to be the most influential female figure in Ethiopia for over half a century. She entertained relations with the Portuguese (↗Portugal, relations with), and is even said to have authored a number of religious scriptures. For some other scholars, the longevity of this queen is suspicious and they consider there were two different queens named Ǝleni (Kropp 1988: 3 n. 9; DerDom 269).

The "queen of the left" Žan Ḫayla (Christian name Fəre Maryam; PerrZarY 55, 85) gave birth to two daughters, Mädḫən Zämäda and Bərhan Zämäda, who acquired the prestigious title of ↗bitwäddäd, the latter after her husband ᶜAmdä Mäsqäl (renamed ᶜAmdä Säyṭan) fell foul of her by committing adultery and was exiled by her father (PerrZarY 9ff.). Their third daughter, Ṣäbälä Maryam, governed over Bägemdər (PerrZarY 13, 55, 95). Yet another daughter of Z.Y., Šiḥ Mängäśa, may have been involved in anti-royal conspiracies with her husband, Isayəyyas (Getatchew Haile 1991: 53 n. 103). Other children of Z.Y. about whom less is known even by his chroniclers are his sons ᶜAmdä Maryam, Zärʾa Abrəham, Bäträ Ṣəyon and his daughters Dəl Sämra, Rom Gänäyäla, Sofya and Adäl Mängəśa (PerrZarY 5, 13f., 95; cp. genealogic table in BassHist I, 211).

The last queen of Z.Y., known as his youngest wife, was Ṣəyon Mogäsa, also known as Žan Källäla (PerrZarY 106; ms. BritLib Or. 481 fol. 154; Taddesse Tamrat in PICES 1). She is said to have been the mother of Bäʾədä Maryam, who succeeded his father Z.Y. in 1468. Similarly, Bäʾədä Maryam may be the same person as Gälawdewos or Bäträ Gela Maryam, since they are also said to have rebelled against their father. In any event it appears that Bäʾədä Maryam's mother fell out of favour with Z.Y. and did not live to see her son's rise to power. He was, moreover, imprisoned for commemorating her death.

It is interesting to note in this context that ↗Betä Ǝsraʾel traditions claim that one of the sons of Z.Y. rebelled against his father, became a "Jew" and eventually joined the Betä Ǝsraʾel as a monk (PerrZarY 96f.). Groups in southern Ethiopia, like the "Žärä" among the ↗Səlṭi and the ↗Gurage, also claim legendary descent from Z.Y. (s. Bustorf 2006).

Zärᵓay

Käntiba Z. (ዘርኣይ; d. mid-1820s) was a ruler of ↗Ḥamasen (in today's zoba Maᵓkäl, Eritrea) for over four decades. He descended from the ↗Hazzäga branch (the so-called Minabä Zärᵓay) of the ᶜAd Däggiyat dynasty, which belonged to the ↗Däqqi Täššəm sub-group. Z. was the son of Gäbrat, the seventh descendant of the homonymous Zärᵓay, founder of the Hazzäga branch, after whom Z. was named (↗Genealogy; cp. also Conti Rossini 1942: 183).

Z.'s reign is notable as it marks a long period of relative peace, after which the conflict with the younger, competing branch of ↗Ṣäᶜazzäga (the so-called Täkkälä ᶜAggäba) was revived. In the late 18th cent., Z. managed to take over power from the well-established lineage of däǧǧač Hab Śəllus (Habtä Sullus) and his son Gäbrä K̠rəstos (s. also ↗Ḥəggi Hab Səllus Gärä K̠əstos) of the house of Ṣäᶜazzäga (namely from baḥri nägaśi ↗Sälomon Täsfa Ṣəyon and his son baḥri nägaśi ↗Bok̠ru Sälomon, who had become vassals of ↗Təgray). After the reduction of the influence of Hab Śəllus' lineage, Z. controlled most of Ḥamasen and much of the surrounding ↗käbäsa (the highlands, i.e. ↗Märäb Məllaš), and assumed the traditional title of ↗käntiba, with which he seems to have symbolically underlined lordship in his own right. The general political situation in the Christian highlands made the development of such local autonomies possible (↗Zämänä mäsafənt).

Z. is said to have wished that his young and energetic grandson, Gäbray Habtä Ṣəyon, should become his successor. Instead, it was his official heir and son aytä Sälomon of Hazzäga, although regarded as not sufficiently strong, who followed Z. in his office, while Gäbray inherited much of Z.'s wealth. The lordship over Ḥamasen was then soon taken over by Sälomon's wife, later widow, əmmäbet ↗Ǝllen as regent (during much of her reign again as a vassal of the strongly reemerging Təgray). This finally culminated in the renewed feud between Hazzäga and Ṣäᶜazzäga under the leadership of their son raᵓəsi ↗Wäldä Mikaᵓel Sälomon.

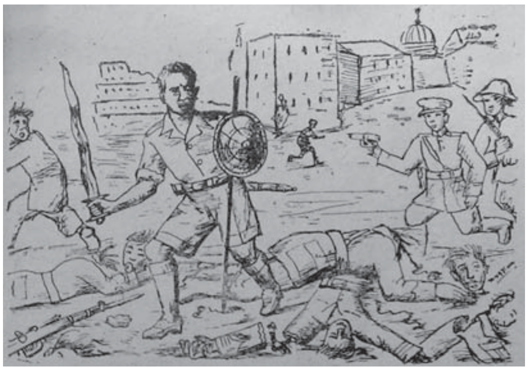
Zärᶜay Därräs

Z.D. (ዘርዓይ ፡ ደረስ; b. 1916, Hazzäga, d. July 1945, Rome) was an Eritrean public servant. While working at the Asmära Post Office, he was recruited as an interpreter for the Ethiopian nobility confined in Rome. Z.D. became famous for an act of defiance during an official parade celebrating the second anniversary of the proclamation of the Italian Empire.

On 13 June 1938 Z.D. was parading dressed as an Ethiopian soldier along with colonial troops and Fascist guards when he found himself in front of the monument to the Italian battalion fallen at ↗Dogᶜali in 1887, located in Rome in the gardens adjacent to Piazza Esedra (today Piazza della Repubblica). Z.D.'s rage was supposedly triggered by either Fascist oratory or the sight of the Lion of Judah (↗Lions), which had been looted from Addis Abäba and relocated at the base of the Dogᶜali memorial on the previous 12 May.



Zärᶜay Därräs illustrated for a popular Amharic historical novel; from Antänäh ᶜAlämu n.d.: 37

Z.D. was reported to have abandoned the parade and approached the steps of the memorial to pray. After having been interrupted by an Italian officer Z.D. execrated the Italian government and shouted pro-Ethiopian and pro-↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I slogans and then directed his rage against the officers who attempted to restrain him. Z.D.'s intentions following his harangue are dubious as accounts report that he either attempted to flee the scene or attack the Fascist crowd without concern for his own life. The injuries supposedly resulting from Z.D.'s actions are also unclear: accounts range from the small injury inflicted on a passerby to the killing of as many as five officers and Blackshirts. However, the most gruesome versions appear inconsistent with Z.D.'s imprisonment, a relatively mild sentence in pre-war Fascist Italy.

There are different and contradicting accounts of the episode; it remains unclear to this day whether Z.D.'s actions represented a spontaneous outburst of anger and patriotism or if they were part of a plot orchestrated by sections of the Ethiopian nobility confined in Rome. By 1938 the Italian government had indeed started a repatriation scheme in an attempt to incorporate more Ethiopian nobles within the colonial administration in order to improve an unstable situation. Z.D.'s actions may have been a way for some nobles to remind the Fascist government that they had no intention to surrender to any colonial order. The repatriation policy seems to have been accelerated after Z.D.'s actions, which appeared to have frustrated ↗Mussolini himself and to have ensued in additional restrictions for Ethiopians sojourning in Rome.

Z.D.'s rebellious act seems to have ended with the actions of two officers who reportedly shot him not far from the Dog^{c}ali monument. Other accounts described Z.D. being run over by either a police motorcycle or a passer-by on a bicycle. Wounded, Z.D. was taken to the hospital and managed to survive the episode. He died in captivity.

Zarema Giyorgis

Z.G. (ዛሬማ ፡ ጊዮርጊስ) is a church dedicated to St. ↗George located at the settlement of Zärema, ca. 15 km east of the town of Aṣbi and ca. 20 km east of Wəqro on the Mäqälä–^{c}Addigrat road, in the Aṣbidära district of Təgray. It represents a notable example of free-standing ecclesiastical architecture of northern Ethiopia, similar to the churches of the monastery of ↗Däbrä Damo. It was first noted and described by Lepage (1973; s. also Plant 1985: 120ff.).

In an area noted for ↗rock-hewn and semi-rock-hewn churches, Z.G. is a constructed church, somewhat similar to the neighbouring churches of Däbrä Sälam, Agobo Čerqos and Ṣäba Anya Čerqos, although the latter are built in close relation to a rock overhang. The church itself was enclosed within a later, roughly-built stone thatched building (now rebuilt) and has since been seriously damaged through indiscriminate local "building" work since it was first described by Lepage (1973).

The building is entered through a modern built narthex or pronaos. The door, notable for an Aksumite-style surround (cf. Däbrä Damo), leads into an unusual semi-circular lobby. The main building is orientated along an east-west nave, with flanking aisles and flanking subsidiary rooms (the main church body itself measures approximately 10 x 10 m, excluding pronaos complex) and was previously roughly cruciform in plan. Taking into account the apparent remnants of an apse at the western end of the church, Lepage argues that the church shows strong similarities to the familiar square-cruciform "domed" churches so redolent of Caucasian (especially Armenian) tradition or indeed might be regarded as a "royal" or "funerary" church. Sadly the transepts have been destroyed since 1973, making the overall plan more linear. Another noteworthy feature is the structural use of metal plates to join the horizontal wooden beams of the walls to the door and window frames (Phillipson 2009 points out that these are also known from ↗Yəmräḥannä Krəstos, Lalibäla). "Monkey heads", or transverse wooden ties, are not utilized here.

Particular interest attaches to the wooden embellishments; chamfered stone columns support wooden capitals that themselves support unusual wooden roof trusses. These capitals as well as the carved wooden sanctuary arch are decorated with cross and foliage motifs. A wooden chancel screen separates the western bay and apse of the nave. Both the wooden embellishments (particularly the roof trusses) and the free-standing building are notable exceptions to the prevailing style of local ecclesiastical architecture.

Plant (1985) suggests that the church itself may date from a period between ↗Däbrä Damo and the later rock-hewn examples in the immediate locality. Lepage was able to radiocarbon date a piece of structural wood from the church to 200–560 A.D., +/- 200. Lepage further narrowed down the date on stylistic grounds: the wood ornamentation appears to show affinities with 6th–8th cent. Mediterranean and Coptic motifs, whilst traces of Islamic-inspired decoration (which he hypothesizes first appeared in Ethiopia from the 11th cent.) are not present. As such, a conservative estimate of a 9th or 10th cent. date (supported broadly by Phillipson) for this highly important church may not be unreasonable, but given the unfortunate circumstances surrounding its recent remodelling we can only despair at the loss of the valuable archaeological and art-historical evidence which might help elucidate further its chronology.

The church preserves an 18th-cent. triptych on wood in the Second Gondär style (↗Painting), with Trinity and Mary with Child with two angels on the central panel; the side panels show Passion scenes as well as such saints as St. George (left), Gäbrä Mänfäs Qəddus, Täklä Haymanot and probably Ewosṭatewos (right).

Zäśəllase

Z. (ዘሥላሴ, also Zammo; b. Darẖa [Wäläqa?], d. 24 June 1608) was a nobleman in the early 17th cent. His father came from Wäräb and his mother from G^{w}änan (PerChron 86). As far as Z.'s region of birth, Darẖa, is concerned there are a number of sites with the same name: in the south of Šäwa, in ↗Wäläqa, in Bägemdər and between Däwaro and Bale (PerChron 13, 50, 201, 213, 246f. [tr.]; TadTChurch 188 n. 3). Preference could be given to Wäläqa, where Z. escaped when he was defeated by aṣe ↗Susənyos (PerChron 88 [tr.]).

Z. married one or even two daughters of ↗Śärṣ̌ä Dəngəl and ↗Maryam Śəna (BegCron 40; FotiCr 109). He was also actively involved in the succession disputes that ensued in the early 17th cent. According to Susənyos's chronicle Z. was foretold that after killing two kings, aṣe ↗Zädəngəl and aṣe ↗Ya^{c}əqob, he was to commit a third regicide (PerChron 88 [tr.]).

After Zädəngəl's death (13 October 1604), ras ↗Atnatewos replied favourably to Susənyos's call but with one reserve: he required the agreement of the q^{w}ərban (↗Eucharist) and Z. by reason of a pact made with them. The q^{w}ərban refused the proclamation of Susənyos as Emperor and began a war against the latter (PerChron 43, 47ff. [tr.]). Then, during a brief meeting with Maryam Śəna in Wədo, Z. offered to choose a heir from "those of Israel" who "have grown upon the amba", or to let Susənyos reign (PerChron 53f. [tr.]). The second solution being accepted, it only remained for Z. to attempt to back up Ya^{c}əqob's return. According to the Jesuit Pedro ↗Páez, Z. proposed this solution moved by a will to thwart "the total fall of the empire". Páez, when he came to ↗Guba^{ɔ}e to meet Maryam Śəna, was welcomed by Z., which can be taken as evidence that Z. was attempting to take power into his hands (BecRASO XI, 71, 73). He succeeded for a short period. Susənyos's chronicle mentions that aṣe Ya^{c}əqob made him ↗bitwäddäd (PerChron 86ff.

Z. went to war against Susənyos but was defeated. He suffered a first defeat on 14 February 1606. In early 1607, when he became persona non grata with Yaᶜəqob, he finally made peace with Susənyos. Susənyos, after having defeated Yaᶜəqob in March 1607, banished Z. from his court at the very time he rounded on him (PerChron 62f., 66, 79 [tr.]). Z. ultimately died when he was going from Wäläqa to Goǧǧam killed by the local inhabitants (BecRASO III, 395f.; also Bruce 1813: 287ff.).

Bruce portrayed Z. as a ↗Gurage of low birth (Bruce 1813: 288; also Perruchon 1896: 362) but also as esteemed by the soldiers for his behaviour and his bravery in the battlefield (Bruce 1813: 262, 288; also BecRASO XI, 64). However, he also is seen in historical literature as a traitor, unruly and rebellious (Bruce 1813: 262, 267f., 270, 288; cf. also BecRASO VI, 92).

Zäträ Wängel

Z.W. (ዘትረ ፡ ወንጌል, also known as Bäträ Wängel; fl. end of 16th cent.) was the 17th head (↗əčč̣äge) of the monastery of ↗Däbrä Libanos of Šäwa, successor of Yoḥannəs (II) Mäṭhər.

Information about Z.W. is scarce. His name is mentioned in rhyming lists of the abbots of Däbrä Libanos between the tenure of Yoḥannəs (II) Mäṭhər and ↗Abrəham (CerDLib II, 155f.). The text, known as the Zena Däbrä Libanos ('Story of Däbrä Libanos') clearly dates Z.W.'s tenure to the time of the reign of ↗Śärṣ̌ä Dəngəl (DerDom 342f.). The only mention of Z.W. in a text of historiographical genre is in the "short chronicle" from Däbrä Bərhan of Gondär (CerDLib II, 154; FotiCr 115f., 120f.). There, the relocation of the Däbrä Libanos community from Šäwa to the region of Lake ↗Ṭana is attributed to Z.W. This relocation followed the shift of the political centre in the same direction and meant that the community avoided isolation as well as the threat of the ↗Oromo ↗migration. In this text, Z.W. asks aṣe ↗Susənyos to re-establish the alliance between the monastic community and the royal power that existed at the time of ↗Täklä Haymanot and ↗Yəkunno Amlak. The chronicle also mentions that Z.W. was buried in the church of ↗Atronsä Maryam and was succeeded by Abrəham. The reference to Susənyos seems, however, to be a mistake of the scribe (s. CerDLib II, 154). It is improbable that Z.W.'s tenure took place during the reign of Susənyos because, in the chronicles of Śärṣ̌ä Dəngəl and Susənyos, the tenure of his successor, Abrəham, is mentioned as taking place between 1591 and 1607 (CRHist 140f.; PerChron 13 [text]).

Zäwäldä Maryam

Əčč̣äge Z.M. (ዘወልደ ፡ ማርያም; fl. ca. 1705–28) was a monk of the monastery of ↗Mägʷina, in northern Gondär, and ↗əčč̣äge of ↗Däbrä Libanos between July 1725 and October 1728 (DombrChr 306; CerDLLib III, 151).

In 1706, Z.M. succeeded Ədä Krəstos (d. 1694) as head of Mägʷina (DombrChr 307), becoming very powerful in the first three decades of the 18th cent. He led Mägʷina, which was an important stronghold of the "Unionist" movement (↗Täwaḥədo), at a time of great instability, caused by the doctrinal controversies between the ↗Qəbat party and the Täwaḥədo supporters. In this climate, several church councils were convened, among which the one by aṣe ↗Iyasu I in 1705 in Gondär, was abandoned due to "domestic hostility" (Conti Rossini 1893: 815, 817) among the monks of Däbrä Libanos. Because of this animosity, some of the monks went into exile at Mägʷina (Conti Rossini 1893: 815, 817; BegCron 80f.).

In 1706, aṣe ↗Täklä Haymanot sent his maternal uncles and a small army to his father and predecessor Iyasu I, in order to force him to retire to ↗Wähni Amba and prevent him from being restored to the throne. According to the "short chronicle" transmitted in ms. Ṭanasee no. 106 (HamTana II, 153ff.), Z.M. was part of this expedition (DombrChr 240f.).

From 1708 onwards, the theological dispute in the Ethiopian church was resolved in favour of the "Unctionist" faction (Qəbat), which enjoyed royal support during the reign of aṣe ↗Tewoflos. On 8 April 1721, ras bitwäddäd Giyorgis made a proclamation validating the "Unctionist" doctrine in the name of metropolitan ↗Krəstodolu III, causing an immediate reaction by several members of the opposition. The day after, Z.M., together with other monks, went to the metropolitan to protest and to ask for an explanation (BassÉt 341; DombrChr 268). Interpreting the words of the metropolitan in their favour, they praised the Lord and celebrated "their victory" with a triumphant procession in the streets (BassÉt 341; DombrChr 268). However, the echoes of these celebrations aroused the anger of the king ↗Dawit III who, infuriated, gave his Oromo ↗Gawe guards the command to kill the partisans of the Täwaḥədo party gathered in the house of the əč̣č̣äge. The soldiers plundered the residence, massacred some monks of "Mägʷina, Azäzo and all monasteries" and tore the clothes of others, such as Z.M. (BassÉt 342; DombrChr 268, n. 880).

On 3 July 1725 Z.M. was appointed as the 34th əč̣č̣äge of Däbrä Libanos (CerDLib III, 151f.; BegCron 114; BassÉt 356; DombrChr 281). During his tenure, he came to an agreement with Krəstodolu: in 1726 the name of the Metropolitan, which had been excluded from the liturgy of the "Unionist" monasteries after the theological dispute with them, was reinstated (CerDLib III, 151f.; DombrChr 281).

On 13 October 1728 Z.M. was deposed (BassÉt 362; BegCron 119; DombrChr 287). His later fate remains unknown.

Zäwde

Däğğazmač Z. (ዘውዴ, also Zäwde Səlṭan, in some documents Zäwde Tullu [s. RubActa I, no. 31], nicknamed Kästi Zäwde [Girma Getahun 1991: 87]; d. 1809, Č̣äqlä Wänz) was a late 18th–early 19th cent. ruler of ↗Goğğam.

Z. grew up in the house of ras ↗Ḫaylu Yosedeq of Goğğam along with Ḫaylu's son and Z.'s future rival, ↗Märəd Ḫaylu (Täklä Iyäsus n.d., fol. 49v). His parents are unknown, but he traced his descent to däğğazmač ↗Tulluu, the Oromo governor of ↗Damot during the reign of Iyasu I (BlunChr 189 [text] = 473 [tr.]). In the genealogy provided by the so-called "Chronicle of Goğğam" (ed. Girma Getahun 1991, ch. 22B), he is presented as the descendant of aṣe ↗Zädəngəl (via Halibä Dəngəl, Tewoflos, Sälamawit, Dämä Krəstos, Afä Dəngəl, Targañ and Sälamawit). For his assistance in defeating Ḫaylu's enemy, däğğazmač Aklog, Z. was appointed to rule Damot and given Ḫaylu's daughter, Dənqənäš Ḫaylu, in marriage.

Following Ḫaylu's death in July 1795, Z. was unable to challenge Märəd's succession. Märəd died four years later, and Z., drawing on his links to the Oromo, successfully challenged Märəd's son ↗Gʷalu for dominance south of the ↗Abbay (Täklä Iyäsus n.d., fol. 53 = Girma Getahun 1991, ch. 22A). In 1799, Z. was formally appointed by the nominal emperor, ↗Täklä Giyorgis, as ruler of Goğğam, an appointment which was opposed, unsuccessfully, by ↗Fasil, another son of ras Ḫaylu.

Z. carried out a number of campaigns in ↗Agäw Mədər. In 1803, following the death of abunä ↗Yosab [II], ras ↗Gugsa Märsa plundered his property. Z. emerged as a champion of the church, prevailing on Gugsa to restore some of this plunder in the interests of obtaining a successor to Yosab (BlunChr 192 [text] = 479 [tr.]; CRReal 15 [text] = 874 [tr.]). In 1805, in an act of defiance towards Gugsa, he crossed the Abbay to raid Bägemdər. However, his enemies were gaining on him. Gʷalu invaded Goğğam and besieged Z. at his fortified place near Dämbäč̣a (BlunChr 194 [text] = 480 [tr.]; CRReal 20 [text] = 879 [tr.]; Girma Getahun 1991, ch. 22A). Gʷalu forced Z. to give up his wife, Dənqənäš, who absconded to ↗Däbrä Tabor. In September 1808, Z. invaded Bägemdər as far as Gondär, where he attempted to appoint, yet again, Täklä Giyorgis to the throne (BlunChr 196 [text] = 483 [tr.]). He failed, and in 1809 he was defeated by the troops of ras Gugsa, captured and rusticated to the Lake Ṭana island of Č̣äqlä Wänz, where he died.

Z.'s widow Dənqənäš blamed her unfaithfulness (with Gʷalu's officer Kʷəlalit) for Z.'s death and retired to the monastery of ↗Maḫbärä Śəllase; she later died on a pilgrimage to ↗Jerusalem (Girma Getahun 1991, ch. 22B).

Z.'s son ↗Goššu Zäwde reclaimed Goğğam from Gugsa, even if temporarily, in the 1820s.

Zäwde Gäbrä Śəllase

Däğğazmač Z. (ዘውዴ ፡ ገብረ ፡ ሥላሴ; b. 12 October 1926, Ǧaldu-Mäçç̣a, d. 15 December 2008, Addis Abäba) was an Ethiopian politician, diplomat and scholar. Born into a noble family, he was the son of däğğazmač ↗Gäbrä Śəllase Barya Gabər, governor of central Təgray, and of Princess Wälättä Ǝsraʾel Śəyyum. He was the great-great grandson of aṣe ↗Yoḥannəs IV on his mother's side. His mother was divorced while she was still very young and eventually married Crown Prince ↗Asfa Wäsän Ḫaylä Śəllase. Thus, Z. was also closely related to aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I.

Z. received his primary education in Addis Abäba under a tutor and went to school in Jerusalem and Cairo, where he joined his mother in exile during the Italian occupation of Ethiopia. After the liberation in 1941, his grandfather, ras ↗Śəyyum Mängäša, appointed the 14-year-old Z. ↗däğğazmač. Two years later he made him governor of ↗Šire; Z. also owned several ↗gʷəlt in different areas in Təgray, and as heir to his father, in Aksum and Addis Abäba. Uninterested in his post in Šire, Z. soon enrolled at the Ḫaylä Śəllase I Secondary School in Addis Abäba. In 1948 he joined the University of Exeter, England, where he studied English literature. He later undertook graduate studies in philosophy, political science and economics at Oxford University.

Z. held many senior positions in the government of Ḫaylä Śəllase: Minister of Public Works, Transport and Civil Aviation (1955–58), Mayor (↗Käntiba) of Addis Abäba (1958–60), Ambassador to ↗Somalia (1960), Minister of Justice (1961–63). Because of Z.'s liberal views during the trial of General ↗Mängəśtu Nəway (↗Coup d'état 1960 in EAE vol. 2, 1081f.), however, he fell out of favour with Ḫaylä Śəllase. In 1963 he begged for an imperial dispensation to be relieved of his political appointments and returned to Oxford. He remained as senior member of the St. Anthony's College until he obtained a Ph.D. on Ethiopian political history during the reigns of Yoḥannəs IV and Mənilək II (1971).

Later he reconciled with the regime. From 1971 to 1974, he was Ethiopian Ambassador and Permanent Representative to the ↗United Nations. In 1974 he became Minister of Interior and Minister of Foreign Affairs, and, during the Revolution (↗Revolution of 1974), Deputy Prime Minister of Ethiopia (regarded by some as the "Red Prince", due to his sympathies for social reform). He was also part in the commission drafting the new constitution (↗Constitutions) of Ethiopia in 1974 when this work was halted by the seizure of power by the Därg (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council). Z. was in New York at a United Nations conference when 61 ex-officials of the Imperial government were executed. He condemned the act, resigned from his post as Deputy Prime Minister, and remained in exile for the next 17 years, working as an advocate for Ethiopian refu-

Zäwde Gäbrä Śəllase talking to a hermit nun (former domestic of his family) on the compound of his father in Ǝnda Śəllase; photo 2005, courtesy of Wolbert Smidt gees and being active in the Ethiopian Orthodox Church. He eventually became vice-president of the United Nations Economic and Social Council, and subsequently worked for several years as advisor to the secretariat of the United Nations.

Z. returned to Ethiopia after the fall of the Därg and continued to live in Addis Abäba, where he showed loyalty to the new government. He officially donated his archives and library (previously taken away by the Därg) to the National Archives of Ethiopia, while trying to get back some of his confiscated ground in Addis Abäba, albeit unsuccessfully. Together with some prominent Ethiopians, he tried to mediate between Ethiopia and Eritrea in 1998, as well as during the national crisis that followed the disputed parliamentary election of 2005.

Z. held several academic positions: visiting lecturer at the University of California in 1965; Fellow of the United Nations Training and Research (UNITAR) in 1975; and, between 1975–76, Fellow of the Woodrow Wilson Centre for Scholars, Smithsonian Institute. He published on a variety of historical and contemporary topics. His most prominent work remains a monograph on Yoḥannəs IV's rule (ZewYohan). In addition to his role as an internationally recognized scholar, attending many international conferences, he was also regarded as an original informant of highest value both among local traditional scholars and internationally active researchers, being acquainted with both international and local archives (including private family collections), with the extreme complexities of prosopography, and with the rich Təgrayan oral traditions, especially genealogies.

Z. was survived by his wife, wäyzäro ʿAläm Ṣ́äḥay Arʾaya and their two daughters, Rəbqa ("Rebecca") and Elsabet ("Elizabeth"). His only son, Ezana, died in an accident in New York.

Zäwditu

Nəgəśtä nägäśtat Z. (ዘውዲቱ፡, baptismal name Askalä Maryam; b. 29 April 1876, Ǝnnäwari, d. 2 April 1930, Addis Abäba) was the Empress of Ethiopia from 1916 to 1930.

Z. was the third and youngest child of aṣe ↗Mənilək II by one of his consorts, wäyzäro Abčäw (Abəčče) from Wällo. As a child, Z. stayed at her father's court under the care of ↗Bafäna, and then his next wife, ↗Ṭaytu.

In 1882, the 6-year-old Z. was married to the 13-year-old ras ↗Arʾaya Śəllase, son of aṣe ↗Yoḥannəs IV. One may speculate that Mənilək, who had submitted to Yoḥannəs four years earlier, was thus hoping to ensure the Emperor's friendship – or even get a grandson who would then inherit the imperial throne. On the other hand, it may have been the initiative of Yoḥannəs, who wanted control over Šäwa. Indeed, the governorship of ↗Wällo was subsequently transferred from Mənilək to Arᵓaya Śəllase. Arᵓaya Śəllase died in 1888, and in 1889 Z. returned to her father's court. In 1891, she was married to wag šum Gʷangul Zägäyye, but the marriage did not last. Z. had an affair, out of which a daughter was born (who died in 1895). In 1897 Z. married däǧǧazmač Wəbe Aṭnaf Sägäd from Mäčč̣a (in Goǧǧam), whom she divorced in 1899. Finally, in 1900, at the suggestion of Ṭaytu, Z. married the Empress's nephew, ras ↗Gugsa Wäle, and moved with him to ↗Däbrä Tabor. It is possible that by this marriage Ṭaytu hoped to consolidate the influence of northern landlords (↗Yäǧǧu) in the imperial court; she may have also seen Gugsa as a possible successor to Mənilək. When Mənilək's health declined by 1907/08, Z. returned to Addis Abäba and, together with Ṭaytu, nursed her father. She was strongly influenced by her stepmother.

On the death of Mənilək in 1913, ləǧ ↗Iyasu put Z. under house arrest in Fale, where her husband had been confined ever since Ṭaytu was forced from power in 1910. Following the overthrow of Iyasu in the course of the ↗Coup d'état 1916 (s. EAE vol. 2, 1081f.), Z. was asked to ascend the throne. The condition was, however, that she separated from her husband, and thus Z. and Gugsa divorced in 1916. Z. ascended to the imperial throne on 2 October 1916 and was crowned nəgəśtä nägäśtat in the Gännätä Ṣəge Giyorgis cathedral on 11 February 1917.

Z. had not claimed the power herself; she is reported to have maintained respect for ləǧ Iyasu, as well as a sense of guilt for having supported an action violating her father's will. She was chosen as Empress as a result of the complicated political situation in the country. Before ascending the throne, Z. had never participated in state politics, neither had she taken part in the struggle for power which preceded her coronation. Having deposed ləǧ Iyasu, the Šäwan party did not have a candidate for the throne who would, at the same time, be a legitimate ruler and who would represent interests of the ruling party. As a daughter of Mənilək, Z. could be recognized by the Šäwans. As a former daughter-in-law of Yoḥannəs IV, with lands she had received through her marriage (all the lands she had crossed when travelling to ↗Boru Meda), she had connections to the northern nobility. Deeply religious, she had the strong support of the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox (Täwaḥədo) Church. The interests of the Šäwans had to be guarded by their leader, fitawrari ↗Habtä Giyorgis. The ruling triumvirate was completed by Täfäri Mäkʷännən (future ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I) as heir to the throne with the title of ↗ras – who was not perceived as a threat to the new power.

Unlike the other members of the triumvirate, Z. had had no experience in politics or administration (Habtä Giyorgis was the most experienced politician, but the young Täfäri had already governed provinces, including ↗Harär, ↗Sälale and ↗Sidamo) and thus seemed easy to influence by both the other parties. Rather than being a merely nominal ruler, Z. had a say in state matters as a true sovereign, and her approval was necessary to proceed with any decisions concerning the ruling of the country. Whilst representing the conservative forces, and thus the camp of Habtä Giyorgis and the metropolitan abunä ↗Matewos, Z. consented to support many of ras Täfäri's modernization efforts. This included Ethiopia's application to join the ↗League of Nations and the ban on the ↗slave trade – even though she owned slaves herself. She gave Täfäri permission to travel to Europe in 1924; she also influenced the plans to build a Lake ↗Ṭana dam, which was never implemented. Z.'s rule can be perceived as a period of power transfer that made Täfäri's rise possible. She supported the heir to the throne during the events of 1918, dismissing some of his antagonists and thus increasing his power.

Z. was believed to be deeply religious, shy, but also stubborn. She was supposed to be more involved in the affairs of the Church than in the secular world. Following the tradition of Ethiopian rulers, she was involved in the construction of several churches, including the ↗Qəddəst Śəllase cathedral in Addis Abäba.

In the following years, the balance of power gradually shifted in favour of Täfäri, who consequently removed his opponents and Z.'s associates from power. Thus, in 1925 her close friend and relative, Ṣäḥayäwärq Darge (daughter of ↗Darge Śahlä Śəllase) was put in prison. In 1926, both Habtä Giyorgis and Matewos died, and Täfäri was left dominating the political scene, with only Z. between him and the throne. The situation was eventually decided in 1928, when Z. was defeated in an armed clash with Täfäri. The mutiny was headed by the commander of the palace guards ↗Abba Wəqaw Bərru. The "conservative" camp was defeated, Abba Wəqaw imprisoned, and the same year Z. crowned Täfäri as ↗nəguś. It has been rumoured that she may have also been behind two further insurrections led by däǧǧazmač ↗Amäde Libän "Abba Waṭäw" and by däǧǧazmač ↗Balča Śafo, both defeated by Täfäri.

For the last two years of her life, Z. was deprived of any political power, even if she still presided formally over the ↗Crown Council. She died of diabetes and, eventually, paratyphoid fever aggravated by a combination of bathing in water she believed to have healing powers (↗Ṣäbäl) and strict fasting. She died two days after her ex-husband, Gugsa Wäle, had been defeated by Täfäri at Ančəm in Wadla. On 8 April 1930, Z. was buried in Mənilək's mausoleum (in the church of Bäᵓata [lä-Maryam]), next to her father and her stepmother, Ṭaytu. On 2 November 1930, Täfäri was crowned nəguśä nägäśt.

The hospital established in Fəlwəha in 1934 bears Z.'s name.

Zāwiya

The term Z. (Arab. lit. 'corner, nook in a wall', pl. zawāyā; most probably a loanword from Aramaic zāwītā [Fraenkel 1886: 11, 168], ḫāneqāh and tekke being its Oriental Arabic, Persian and Turkish synonyms) is used especially in North Africa to indicate a building or centre where adepts of an ↗Islamic brotherhood (ṭarīqa) meet to pray, perform the communal ceremonies of their group (↗ḏikr, ḥaḍra, ↗mawlid) and be educated by their master (↗šayḫ).

Almost invariably, a Z. hosts the tomb of a ṣūfī saint (↗walī) or is built next to his shrine. Most of the time, a descendant of the holy man (↗Holy men) is the guardian and the head of the Z. Especially in rural areas, a Z. can include several buildings to accommodate and feed the members of the ṭarīqa who come and stay to be instructed by the šayḫ as well as the pilgrims visiting the walī's shrine. Z. may thus assume the dimensions of a large compound including libraries and schoolrooms, dormitories, kitchens, ↗mosques, repositories and granaries. A cemetery often grows around a Z. Religiously influential Z. may accumulate economic power, gathering ↗waqf, donations and offerings from the devotees to whom they offer asylum, spiritual instruction and moral guidance. Also politically, Z. may exert a strong influence as the šayḫ of the Z., considered a holy man endowed with baraka or blessing power, can act as a mediator in conflicts among the faithful and between the rulers and their subjects. The protection of the trade routes and the prevention of strife and robberies are also among the tasks accomplished by Z. heads.

In Ethiopia, the term Z. is commonly used to indicate a building and an institution with all the above mentioned characteristics. In ↗Harär, however, Z. also means the "boarding room in the mosque for the guardian" (Leslau 1963: 168).

Historically, it seems that Z. did not appear in Ethiopia before the 14th cent. Al-ᶜUmarī (UmMasGaud 3) affirms that Ethiopian Muslims at his time did not have any Z. Starting from the 15th cent., the establishment of the Islamic brotherhoods in the country (in particular of the Qādirīya) fostered the birth and spread of Z. especially in rural areas where they played a crucial role in the islamization process (HusIslam 71, 92).

Nowadays, Z. are well rooted in all Muslim regions of Ethiopia. Important Z. are, for example, ↗Annaa (s. EAE vol. 5) and ↗Šonke in Wällo as well as ↗Abret (s. EAE vol. 5) and ↗Qatbäre in Gurage. Such Z. as ↗Šayḫ Ḥusayn in Bale and ↗Yaʾa in Beni Šangul have become important destinations of ↗pilgrimage. In some cases (e.g., in Čali and ↗Ṭəru Sina in Wällo), Z. developed in a way that may resemble that of Christian retreats and monasteries (Abbink 2008). Generally speaking, however, Z. contribute decisively to the education of the Muslim intellectual elite and to the strengthening of Islamic practice among the common faithful (Hussein Ahmed 1988).

Zay

Z. (Z^{w}ay, Laqi) is a South ↗Ethio-Semitic language of the East ↗Gurage subgroup spoken on the islands of Lake ↗Z^{w}ay and its shores by less than 15,000 people. The entire Z. community is multilingual with ↗Oromiffa and/or ↗Amharic so that Z. must be considered an endangered language (cf. Gardner – Siebert 1994). Intense contact with Oromo has enhanced dialectal variation (Meyer 2006b) and strongly influenced Z. phonology and lexicon (Meyer in PICES 15).

Z. has five cardinal vowels i, e, ä~a, u, o and an epenthetic ə; length is phonemic. In word final position, long vowels are shortened and short vowels are not pronounced, e.g., näqäl-ä-ā (take:PV-s3sm-o3sf) > [näqälä] 'he took her' vs. näqäl-ä (take:PV-s3sm) > [näqäl] 'he took' (cf. Meyer 2006a: 103f.). The Z. consonantal system is similar to other Ethio-Semitic languages except that the implosive alveolar ɗ was adopted as a marginal phoneme, as in ɗēnä 'lunch' (< Or.). Z. possesses the non-segmental features ^{w} ([+round]) indicating plural and ^{y} ([+front]) indicating feminine gender on verbs. These features assimilate to the central vowels ā or ä~a and affect the pronunciation of epenthetic vowels (ibid.: 49ff.): qānn-^{w} (stop:IMP-PL) > [qōnun] or qānn-^{y} (stop:IMP-F) > [qēniɲ] 'Stop (2p/2sf)!'.

Common nouns are neutral in number; pl. can be marked by the suffixes -čä, -CāCu (C = last consonant of the noun) or -CāCčä: gār > gārčä 'house(s)'; ʾaftu > ʾaftātu 'girl(s)'; ʾuŋf > ʾuŋfāfčä 'bird(s)' (Meyer 2005: 226ff.). Ethnonyms and the nouns säb 'man, person' and sēt 'woman' mark the singulative with -itti or -iččä for fem. or masc. entities, respectively: zāy 'Zay people' > zāyiččä 'a male Zay' or zāyitti 'a female Zay'. The natural gender distinction is restricted to human nouns whereby fem. is the marked form. It is expressed by verbal agreement and with the suffix -tā (usually followed by the definite marker -y~-i) attached to modifiers: (ibid.: 224): ṭīt-tā-y ʾalmāz (small-F-DEF Almaz) 'the small Almaz' vs. ṭīt-i māmmō (small-DEF Mammo) 'the small Mammo'. Proper nouns, most kinship terms and some pronouns (e.g. personal pronouns ʾēyä 'I', ʾīɲɲä 'we', ʾatä 'you (sm)', ʾači/ʾaš 'you (sf)', ʾatum 'you (pl; for 3rd pers. s. below)', demonstrative pronouns ʾihīy~yihīy~yīy 'this', yāhāy~yāy 'that'), use the suffixes -n(ä) and -t(ä) to mark accusative and assertive focus, respectively. All other nouns mark accusative by -ä and assertive focus by -n: ʾut-nä-tä qäčī (he-ACC-FOC kill:PV:3sm:DCM) 'he killed him' or gār-ä-n-ni bärär-uhu (house-ACC-FOC-his run:PV-1s:DCM) 'I ran to his house' (Meyer 2006a: 116).

Other functions of nouns are marked by the prefixes bä- (locative, instrumental, malefactive), lä- (ablative, addressee, beneficiary), tä- (comitative), yä- (genitive) and the suffix -hum (similative). Relational nouns, like wusṭ 'inside', wɔsṭ 'down', etc., can further specify these functions, as in bä-gār där (LOC-house top) 'on top of a house' (ibid.: 120f.).

Tri- and biconsonantal simplex verbs distinguish five conjugational types depending on the lexicalized vowel following the first consonant: type A (no vowel), type B (ī/e), type C (ā), type D (ū/ō) and type F (o/u~ʷ) (Meyer 2005: 103ff., 2006a: 112ff.). The vowel pairs refer to indicative vs. imperative/jussive bases, as in ğīğ 'he arrived' vs. ğeğ 'arrive (2sm)!' Quadriconsonantal verbs follow either type A or C with the lexicalized vowel following the second consonant: bəräzäz 'he dreamt' (type A) and dəbaläq 'he mixed' (type C). Several stems can be derived from a simplex by prefixes (medio-passive: näqäl 'take' > tä-näqäl 'be taken', indirect causative: at-nīqäl 'order to take' [with change to type B], direct causative: färäs 'be destroyed' > ᵓa-färäs 'destroy'), or by partial reduplication of consonants and insertion of the vowel ā (frequentative: ᵓanṭäb 'wash' > ᵓənṭāṭäb 'wash several items') or combinations of these (reciprocal fāč̣ 'look for' > tä-fāfāč̣ 'look for each other'; Meyer 2005: 194ff.). Z. has phrasal verbs which consist of an invariable meaning carrying element and an inflected auxiliary, such as sir bāl 'be straight' vs. sir abäɲ 'make straight'. Phrasal verbs with the auxiliaries hān 'become' and sān 'make' incorporate loanwords from Oromo (Meyer in PICES 15, 816f.): ᵓār hān 'be angry' (< Or. aar-) or bädās sān 'decorate' (< Or. badhaas-). There are three verbal bases: perfective, imperfective and jussive/imperative. An affirmative imperfective verb in main clauses is always followed by an auxiliary and the declarative marker (Meyer 2006a: 149ff.).

The basic word order is Subject-Object-Verb; relative clauses, genitives and adjectives precede their head. Declarative clauses in Z. consist of a focus marker attached to the most prominent constituent and the clause-final declarative marker: ᵓut-tä wɔṭi säro (he-FOC sauce prepare: PV:3sm:DCM) 'HE prepared sauce'. Non-verbal clauses in the present tense do not employ a copula but only focus and declarative markers (Meyer in PICES 14). The declarative marker has the allomorph -u after a consonant or the central vowels with which it assimilates yielding -o/-ō.

With all other vowels the declarative marker is represented by vowel lengthening. Yes/no-questions may optionally contain a focus marker but lack the declarative marker while questions with interrogative pronouns (such as mən 'what', mā(n) 'who', mäči 'when', ᵓaɲi 'where', məst 'how much', etc.) usually lack either of the two: šäfäṭ näqälän? (canoe take:PV-3sm-FOC) 'Did he take the canoe?' vs. mən näqäl? 'What did he take?' The declarative marker (but not the focus marker) occurs in negated clauses in the indicative and in the affirmative jussive (but not in the imperative; Meyer 2005: 305ff.; 2006a: 122ff., 137ff.).

The elementary wordlist is: had 'one', hōyt 'two', šešt 'three', ğirä 'fire', mäy 'water', ᵓarīt 'sun', ṭərqä 'moon', däm 'blood', ᵓarämät 'tongue', sən 'tooth'. The personal pronouns for the third persons are: ᵓut 'he', ᵓit 'she' and ᵓinom(mu) 'they'.

Leslau (in PICES 1) is the first linguistic study of Z. which was later elaborated in Leslau (in EtRicci) and Leslau (1999), which also includes some texts. Meyer (2005) is a comprehensive grammar of Z. with original texts. The Z. wordlist in Leslau (1979) was supplemented by additional data in Wedekind – Wedekind (1994). For a summary of studies on Z. grammar s. Meyer (2005: 22f., s. also ↗Gurage).

Zay ethnography

The ethnic group of Z. (ዛይ, xenonym Laaqi, 'paddler', from Orom. laaquu, 'to row'; Arsi: Adare [Braukämper 2002:65], or "Zway" [in Leslau's publications]) live on the five islands of Lake ↗Z^{w}ay and its shores, mainly in Boç̣essa to the south, Gona to the north, and Maqdälla and Herero Mendiyu to the east. Z. speakers also live in the nearby towns of ↗Adamii Tulluu, Z^{w}ay and Mäqi (↗Dämbäl Mäqi); a small diaspora of Z. resides in ↗Asälla (cf. Meyer 2005:16). The number of Zay speakers is not certain; estimates range from 4,880 (Wedekind – Wedekind 2002) to 14,000 (Meyer 2005:15). The Z. are mainly followers of the Ethiopian Orthodox faith, which they consider an important feature of their ethnic identity. The etymology of "Zway/Zay" remains unclear but folk-etymologies connect it to the Psalms of David 118/119 or to the first occupation of the islands by Christian migrants (Meyer 2001:318f.).

According to oral tradition, the Z. did not have a common mythical forefather but evolved due to several migrations to Lake Z^{w}ay (cf. Meyer 2001; Henze 1973:78ff.). The first migration to Lake Z^{w}ay purportedly took place during the reign of queen Gudit (↗Ǝsato) in the 10th cent. when priests from Aksum hid the ↗tabot of Ṣəyon Maryam (↗Aksum Ṣəyon) and other church properties from destruction on the island of ↗Tulluu Guddoo. In the 14th and 15th cent. aṣe ↗^{c}Amdä Ṣəyon and later aṣe ↗Zär^{ɔ}a Ya^{c}əqob subjugated ↗Wäǧ, i.e. the region around Lake Z^{w}ay, which was inhabited by the Aräñ, Obborubär and Zäfit. Some of them sought shelter on the three south-western islands of the lake (Tuma Nadamo 1982:1ff.; TadTChurch 189; Meyer 2001:322f.). Another migration took place at the beginning of the 16th cent. when Christians from ↗Mänz under the leadership of a certain Aṣqu (also Aṭqu or Ǝnqu) Śəllase sought refuge on the islands from the war against imām ↗Aḥmad b. Ibrāhīm al-Ġāzī. These refugees founded the village of Amharayge on the western summit of Tulluu Guddoo and took over the leadership of the islands (Tuma Nadamo 1982:5ff.; Meyer 2001:324). The ↗Oromo migrations after the defeat of Aḥmad b. Ibrāhīm probably forced Muslim ↗Səlṭi, who lived around Lake Z^{w}ay, to flee. Some of them are said to have sought shelter at Tulluu Guddoo where they settled at Gumarge, which was also situated on the western summit of Tulluu Guddoo (Tuma Nadamo 1982:11). The children of these people are said to have converted to Christianity.

The wars of Aḥmad b. Ibrāhīm and ↗Nūr b. Muǧāhid in the 16th cent. and the following Oromo migrations cut off the connection between the Z. and the Christian empire. Ordained priests and deacons reached the islands only sporadically. Nevertheless, the Z. took care of the churches and celebrated the church festivals (Henze 1989:34f.; Tesfaye 1988:14f.). Before the Oromo migrations, the Z. lived on the islands as well as on its shores. After several conflicts with the ↗Arsi Oromo, the Z. were forced to retreat to the islands (Tuma Nadamo 1982:26ff.; Meyer 2001:326).

The Z. had trade relation with the ↗Waaṭa Oromo (cf. Dabala Goshu – Meyer 2004), who settled near River Katar. According to Tuma Nadamo (1982:26ff.) the Z. also exchanged goods with the Kəstane (↗Soddo), Səlṭi and ↗Libido in the 19th cent. Friendly contacts between the Z. and the Christian Ǧille Oromo, who lived immediately to the north of Lake Z^{w}ay, led to intermarriage and alliances against the non-Christian Arsi living in the south-east of Lake Z^{w}ay.

Before ↗Mənilək's conquest in the 19th cent. the Z. were governed by a centralized political institution consisting of ten members. The leader had the title abeto (cp. ↗Abetohun) and lived in Tulluu Guddoo, which was the most inhabited island at the time. He was assisted by two ↗daññа, usually his relatives, who represented the abeto on the islands of ↗Gälila and ↗Däbrä Sina, and Ṣädeča and Fundurro. The seven remaining members were elected representatives from each of the five islands, i.e. three from

Group of Zay men on their boats; from VSAe II, pl. 83, 1

Tulluu Guddoo and one from each of the remaining islands (cf. VSAe II, 659f.; Tuma Nadamo 1982: 15ff.).

Mənilək conquered the Lake Z^{w}ay region in 1893. The leader of the Z. at that time, abeto Alibo Ləbse, complied with Mənilək without resistance. Therefore, he was appointed ↗balambaras of the Lake and its shores. As a consequence, the former administration of the Z. ceased to exist. Mənilək II and ↗Zäwditu donated land on the shores to the Z. where living conditions were more pleasant. Since then many Z. left the islands (VSAe II, 669; Henze 1989: 35). The last inhabitants left Gälila and Däbrä Sina for Boç̣essa in 1971. Only at the end of the 1990s did a few families resettle on Gälila (Meyer 2001). In 1971 all the inhabitants of the village of Gumarge resettled at Gona (Henze 1989: 35). However, the remaining settlers on Tulluu Guddoo, Ṣädeča and Fundurro still practice subsistence agriculture and fishing.

Before the 20th cent. ↗fish (s. also ill.) was limited to home consumption and fishing equipment was not sophisticated. Intensive agriculture, partly on terraces, and weaving were the main sources of livelihood (Tesfaye Edetto 1988: 18ff.; Henze 1973: 80f.; Kuls 1958: 129ff.). The cotton clothes of the Z. in mixed white, red and black colours were sold far beyond Lake Z^{w}ay. Fishing increased after the subjugation of the Z. because they had to pay their annual taxes in dried fish to the royal court until 1935 (Tesfaye Edetto 1988: 10, 23). Commerce in fish emerged in the 1940s and drastically increased in the 1970s due to the establishment of fishing co-operatives and improved fishing equipment and led to a dominant role for fishing (ibid.: 32ff.).

Zäyəʾəze

Z. (ዘይእዜ, 'of now') is a type of ↗qəne employed in the offices of ↗Mäwäddəs, ↗Aryam, ↗Wazema and ↗Səbḥatä nägh.

Z. proper, also räğğəm ('long') Z., has five rhyming lines (bet). It is always introduced by the singing of the Nunc dimittis (Lk 2: 29–32) and sung in the ↗gəʿəz mode. The short three-bet Z. (aç̣ç̣ər Z.), sung after Ps 50/51 in the ↗araray mode, is better known as ↗śahləkä.

The long Z. is used if the Nunc dimittis and the yətbaräk element of the ↗Dəgg^{w}a are sung in the gəʿəz mode. If the Nunc dimittis is sung in araray, it is followed by the long ↗wazema qəne in the same mode; if the Nunc dimittis is sung in ↗^{c}əzəl, it is followed by the ↗śəllase qəne. When Z. is composed during Səbḥatä nägh, it has a ↗məlṭan.

Tradition interprets Z. as a symbol of the end of the long time that Simon the Prophet longed to see with his eyes the coming of Messiah, the occasion for him to sing the Nunc dimittis.

Zayla^{c}

The port of Z. (Arab. الزيلع al-Zayla^{c}, Som. Seyla^{c}, ^{c}Afar Dēla^{c}, 11°21' N., 43°29' E) is situated on the northern Somali coast. It has been often identified (Tomaschek 1896, col. 2263; Huntingford 1980: 90) with the toponym Aualítēs of Classical geographical literature (↗Pliny the Elder IV, 174: sinus Aualitu; ↗Ptolemy IV, 7, 10: en tō Aualitē kólpō, Aualítēs empórion; IV, 7, 27 and 39: o Aualítēs kólpos; ↗Periplus Maris Erythraei 7: Aualítēs) which was also directly connected with the Somali name of the town Awdal (Har. Aftal; Or. Aftali; the form Awtal is mentioned in ad-Dimašqī: Cerulli 1935: 340f.). Casson (1989: 115ff.) has, however, convincingly demonstrated that this thesis is hardly tenable. The Periplus three times clearly locates Aualítēs on – and not beyond – ↗Bāb al-Mandab, precisely where the strait is at its narrowest. This makes it more likely that Aualítēs is the ancestor of ↗^{c}Asab (Stückelberger – Grasshof 2006: 459) or – as a further possibility – identical with the place name Deíre (mentioned by Strabo XVI, 769; Casson 1989: 117).

Arabic geographical literature provides a relatively conspicuous amount of information about Z. (PankHist I, 54–58) which is however often disappointingly brief or purely anecdotal (in the style of adab and ^{c}ağāʾib literature).

Z. is first mentioned by the Kitāb al-buldān of al-↗Ya^{c}qūbī (d. 897) who laconically locates it in front of Bāb al-Mandab (Juynboll 1861: 105; de Goeje 1892: 319; Wiet 1937: 159).

Al-Hamdānī (d. 946) in his Ṣifat ğazīrat al-^{c}arab (1983: 93) briefly mentions Z. as an island with a huge market of Ethiopian goats: there the goat skins are sold and the sloughs are thrown into the sea. Al-Iṣṭaḫrī (d. 952) writes in his Kitāb al-masālik wal-mamālik that the port (farḍa) of Z. is controlled by the Christian Ḥabaša whose land is part of the dār al-silm and not of the dār al-ḥarb (de Goeje 1870: 36). Al-Mas^{c}ūdī (d. 956) in his Murūğ aḏ-ḏahab (Barbier de Meynard – Pavet de Courteille 1864: 34) says that Z. – like ↗Dahlak and Nāṣi^{c} [i.e. ↗Bādi^{c}] – hosts some Muslims who pay tribute to the Christian Ethiopians. The Kitāb ṣūrat al-arḍ of ↗Ibn Ḥawqal (d. 977) confirms that Z. is an Ethiopian port used to travel to the Ḥiğāz and the ↗Yemen (Kramers 1937–38: 56) while Abū Zayd as-Sīrāfī (d. 979) in his Silsilat at-tawārīḫ (Kubbel' – Matveev 1960: 93, 95) affirms that in Z. amber and tortoise shells are available. The export of amber from Z. is confirmed by al-Muqaddasī (d. ca. 1000) in the Aḥsan at-taqāsīm (de Goeje 1877: 101f.) while al-Bīrūnī (d. 1050–51) mentions Z. in his Qānūn al-mas^{c}ūdī fī l-hayʾa wan-nuğūm as a place where pearls are fished (Kubbel' – Matveev 1965: 122, 126).

In the 12th cent., the commercial importance of Z. as the main outlet for the precious goods coming from the Ethiopian hinterland apparently grew: al-↗Idrīsī (d. 1165) dealt at some length with Z. (called by him Zāliġ) which he describes as a small but densely populated town whose port was the landing place of most of the trading ships of the Red Sea (Baḥr Qulzum). Slaves, silver and – in smaller quantities – gold were the main exports of Z. (Idrīsī 1970: 44).

The first characterization of Z. as a fully independent Islamic town can be found in the Tuḥfāt al-albāb of Abū Ḥāmid al-Ġarnāṭī al-Andalusī (d. 1169): the author affirms that the inhabitants of Z. are pious Muslims who "fast, pray and perform the ḥağğ every year on foot" (Ferrand 1928: 44 [Arab.] = 249 [Fr.]). Ibn Sa^{c}īd al-Maġribī (d. 1286) confirms that the inhabitants of Z. are Muslims who often go on pilgrimage to ↗Mecca and travel to Aden and Zabīd (Matveev – Kubbel' – Tolmacheva 2002: 114 [Arab.] = 148 [Russian]). Aš-Šīrāzī (d. 1311) says in a passage of his at-

Tuḥfa aš-Šāhiya fī ^{c}ilm al-hay^{ɔ}a that Z. is one of the lands of the Muslims of al-Ḥabaša (ibid.: 184 [Arab.] = 189 [Rus.]).

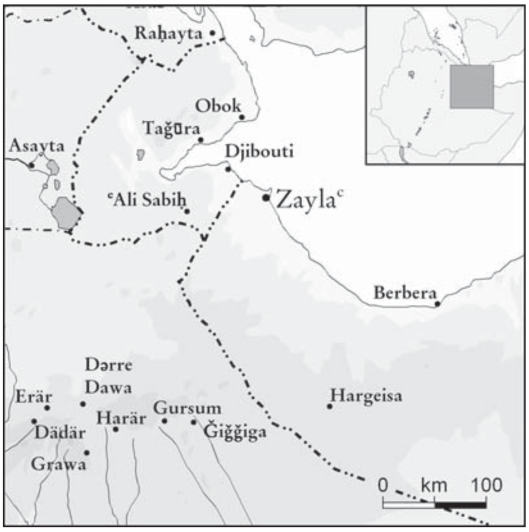
It may thus be surmised that, in the second half of the 12th cent., Z. was independent from Christian Ethiopia, completely islamized and economically prosperous and thus started playing a decisive role in the spread of Islam into the Ethiopian hinterland and along the northern Somali coast (Gori 2006: 26–30). On the administration of Z. in this period of its history, some information can be gained from a passage of the Annals of Mufaḍḍal b. Abī l-Faḍā^{ɔ}il (completed in 1359; it is not clear in which year the narrated facts took place). The Coptic chronicler says that Z. was inhabited by seven Muslim tribes whose leaders ruled the town. The sulṭān of Yemen tried to extend his influence to Z. and donated stones and other supplies and tools to build a ǧāmi^{c} mosque where his name could be called during the Friday sermon (as a token of recognition of his sovereignty). The people of Z. threw all the materials into the sea refusing the offer of the Yemeni ruler who in retaliation blocked Z.'s ships in Aden (Cerulli 1943: 279f.).

In 1329–30 Z. was visited by the Moroccan traveller ↗Ibn Baṭṭūṭa (d. 1368–69) who contradictorily describes it as a town of the "Šāfi^{c}ī Barbara" but inhabited by a majority of Blacks of "rāfiḍī" faith (i.e. Shiites). Ibn Baṭṭūṭa could not spend the night in Z. – which he calls "a big city and a huge market" – because of the stench of the fish and the blood of the camels slaughtered in the narrow streets which made the town too smelly and dirty for him (Defremery – Sanguinetti 1853–58: 179f.).

Al-↗^{c}Umarī (d. 1349) underlines that Z. is the port of ↗Ifāt from where the Muslim kingdom of Ethiopia trades with the wider world (UmMasSezg 18; UmMasGaud 5).

In 1415 king ↗Yəsḥaq (or according to other sources in 1413 king ↗Dawit II) conquered Z., killed ↗Sa^{c}daddīn ruler of Ifat and forced his sons to flee to the Yemen (Cerulli 1931: 46f., nn. 1, 3, 8). After this heavy military blow, Z. seems to have recovered at least part of its previous splendour.

In 1517 Z. was attacked but not conquered by Lapo Soares. ↗Ləbnä Dəngəl tried to convince the Portuguese to continue to occupy Z. but to no avail. During the ǧihād of imām ↗Aḥmad b. Ibrāhīm al-Ġāzī, Z. was probably the main gate through which men and arms arrived in Ethiopia from the Yemen to strengthen the Muslim troops (PankHist I, 60–63).



In the confused period which followed the end of the rule of amīr ↗Nūr and paved the way to the emergence of the imamate of Awsa, Z. and its governors (aftal gärad) were directly entangled in the struggles between different Muslim warlords who often used the port town as a military stronghold to support their political ambitions (Cerulli 1931: 70–87). Between 1572 and 1577, during the governorship of gärad Lādo, Z. was provided with a wall: the building site was directed by an Arab engineer (ibid. 89). The wall however, was apparently not sufficient to protect the town from being plundered by Somali nomads stirred up by the Sim gärad ^{c}Umardīn who was fighting against the imām of Awsa (ibid. 72f.).

Evliya Çelebi mentions Z. in his Seyâhatnâme (1673) but it is doubtful whether the Turkish traveller really visited the town and his description of the area is to be taken cautiously (Bombaci 1943: 260f., 271f.). However, in the 17th cent., Z. maintained its decisive role in maritime trade between the Ethiopian hinterland, the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean and did not lose it until the rise of the rival port of ↗Berbera in British Somaliland (PankHist I, 63f.).

The nisba Zayla^{c}ī (pl. Zayāli^{c}a) is sometimes used in Arabic sources as a general term referring to the Muslims of – or originating from – the African Coast of the Gulf of Aden (e.g., in Ibn Baṭṭūṭa, Defremery – Sanguinetti 1853–58, vol. 1, 204): some families of Zayla^{c}ī descent are very renowned in the Yemen where they form learned and sacred lineages (Gori 1998).

Zaylaᶜ in the 19th and 20th centuries

In the middle of the 19th cent., Z. was the extreme limit of the grazing area shared by ↗ᶜIssa and ↗Gadabuursi; the latter being established along a line joining Z., Silil, and ᶜAbdulqādir. The main permanent well is at Toqošši, to the north of the town in the dry-bed river tog (Arab. wādī) Beya ᶜAday. To its east, the barren coastal plain of Griyad (Griyad ooman 'Griyad of the Thirst') is situated. Z. is a multicultural town including ᶜAfar (Russel 1883:193; Burton 1856, ch. 3). The language in Z. (zaylaᶜī) was an Arabic dialect with a partly Somali and ᶜAfar lexicon. This original urban culture (Som. seylaawiya, Lewis 1961:20), before being destroyed by the development of Djibouti, included specific features such as dances or nuptial songs (ᶜAfar kallayl). The now common Somali dress (diriᶜ) is said to be originally Z.-style.

An historical link (s. the common devotion to the Harär saint [Ibrāhīm] Maḥammad "Darbēn" [also Zarbay], Ibrāhīm Abū Zaḥarbuy, buried in Z.) explains that Z. and ↗Taǧūra were nicknamed in ᶜAfar saqal kee maqanxa 'elder and younger', being considered as closely related as elder and younger brothers as far as population and trade were concerned. On various occasions (in 1864 during the conflict between Z. and Mūḫa [Mokha]; after the sacking of Taǧūra by ↗Awsa in 1866), the population of each town took refuge in the town of the other. Z. and its immediate hinterland are called Awdal in Somali (first mentioned in Burton 1856, ch. 3) and Aftál(i) in ᶜAfar and Harari. Dēlaᶜta designates the southern ᶜAfar ↗Debné tribe (MorDicAfar 137). For the Taǧūra inhabitants, Dēláᶜtu is the south-east wind blowing "from Z.". On his way to Aden, when Rochet d'Héricourt reached Z. coming from Taǧūra (21 April 1840), the town was more populated than Taǧūra (Rochet d'Héricourt 1841; Aubert-Roche 1843). It consisted of a garrison of about 50 "Turks" equipped with four cannons. From the interior, in particular from ↗Harär, caravans bring various goods as coffee, skins and slaves which are exported to the Arabian Peninsula. The description provided by Richard Burton (1854, ch. 1 n. 28) shows a town "about the size of Suez, built for 3,000 or 4,000 inhabitants, and containing a dozen large whitewashed stone houses, and more than 200 ᶜarīš” (Arab. ‘thatched houses’). There were about 1,500 permanent residents and a large floating population. The town had no harbour so that a vessel of 250 tons could not approach within a mile of the landing-place. For this reason, ↗Berbera, as Combes (Rochet d’Héricourt 1841) forecasted, acquired a growing importance. Combes states also that the slave trade was more important in Taǧūra than in Z. (for a comparative analysis, cf. Austen 1979).

There are six ↗mosques in Z. showing its religious importance and its role in the diffusion of Islam in the past. In 1880, Alfred Bardey only noted two white houses and some huts (Bardey 1981: 67). These variations in size may have been the result of the frequent burnings which damaged Z. as well as Taǧūra.

Administrative status, political leadership and decline

Before the transfer of sovereignty of the ↗Red Sea ports to the ḫidīw by the Turks (1866), Z. was a ‘port of call’ (bandar). Its local dawla (Arab., Somali dawlad, ᶜAfar dōlat, ‘local administration and its chief’) paid tribute to Muḫa. In 1867 the governor of the ↗Sudan, after visiting Red Sea ports up to the ↗Bāb al-Mandab affirmed the rights of the Egyptian ḫidīw over Z. and Taǧūra, a claim that the British India Office constantly denied. Z. was directly under the authority of the šarīf of Mūḫa, who was responsible to the paša of al-Ḫudaydah, who again depended on the kaymakamat [qāᶜim maqām] of the Ḥiǧāz (↗Arabia).

For centuries, and until the middle of the 19th cent., Z. was farmed out to sāda (sg. sayyid) Arab families of the town claiming a ↗Qurayš origin. The farm was made for auction every year. It reached 3,000 Maria Theresa thalers in 1861. In 1840 the benefits of the farm were in the hands of an Arab, sayyid Muḥammad al-Barr. Lewis (1965: 33) indicates that Šarmaᵓarke b. ᶜAlī b. Ṣāliḥ, a rich Somali merchant of Habar Yūnis descent, obtained this office “about 1840” (in 1848, according to Burton 1854, ch. 3). It may also have happened in 1841, after another Somali, Hakāb b. Ġālib b. Ismāᶜīl had tried to take power in Z. (Cruttenden to Haynes, India Office Records, 7 April 1852).

The growing rivalry between the ↗United Kingdom, already in Aden since 1839, and ↗France in search of new supports for its colonial expansion increased the on-going local rivalries. France favoured an ᶜAfar merchant established in Z., ↗Abū Bakr b. Arbāhim b. Šeḥem, which led to a change in the ruling of Z. The precise date when Abū Bakr replaced Šarmaᵓarke is still unclear. Burton who sojourned in Z. from 31 October to 27 November 1854 does not mention Šarmaᵓarke, nor does Brigadier Coghlan who arrived in Z. some weeks later. It may be assumed that it was only in June 1855 that Abū Bakr gained power over Šarmaᵓarke, after the latter had been removed being accused of looting and having organized the blockade of Z. In 1857, when Great Britain occupied the Island of Perim, Abū Bakr was put into custody in Aden and Šarmaᵓarke reinstalled at Z. After being set free in February 1858, thanks to the French consul in Aden, Henri Lambert, Abū Bakr succeeded Šarmaᵓarke in 1861. After the coming of Admiral Fleuriot de Langle he investigated the circumstances of the death of Henri Lambert on the Island of Musḥa (4 June 1859), a crime in which Šarmaᵓarke was involved. Fleuriot de Langle confirmed Abū Bakr “Paša” as “émir de Zeyla”. Monge, a French translator at the French embassy in Cairo was appointed as "agent consulaire" in Z. where he arrived on the 27 October 1864. He had to leave quickly for Aden after mentioning new a dispute with Mūḫa which resulted in the flight to Tağūra of a part of the frightened population of Z. (Monge to the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs, 24 February 1865).

In August 1875, in the name of the ḫidīw ↗Ismāᶜīl, Raᶜūf (Rawf) bāšа took control of the northern Somali coast and from Z. launched his military expedition against Harär which he took on 8 October 1875. For this, he gained support both of Abū Bakr and of Rōble b. Fāraḥ "Guntiweyne", the ↗ugaas of the ᶜIssa. The Egyptian occupation of the coast lasted ten years until the coming of Major Hunter who landed in Z. in February 1884, inaugurating the British presence until 1960. The following years (1884–88) were a period of intense rivalry between France and Great Britain in Z.

On 25 March 1885, the French consul Joseph Henry came to Z. to sign a treaty of friendship with the ugaas of the Gadabuursi. The very next day, 19 ᶜIssa chiefs, coming from Z., signed a similar treaty in ↗Obock with the French Governor Léonce ↗Lagarde. On 28 August 1885, a "Traité de Protectorat de la France sur la ville de Zeylah et son territoire" was also signed between Joseph Henry "consul de France à Harrar, Zeylah et dépendances" and Abū Bakr "émir de Zeylah". These treaties prepared the peaceful creation of the market of Djibouti (inaugurated on 6 March 1888 with Burḥan bey, Abū Bakr's son, as its head), and four years later the official transfer of the capital of the French colony from Obock.

Before attracting population from the far hinterland, the first African population of Djibouti consisted of inhabitants of Z. (Somali reer Seylaᶜ) and of other Somali from the near hinterland (ᶜIssa, Gadabuursi, ↗Isaaq). As an example, one may mention Geelle b. Aḥmed b. ᶜUmar, nicknamed Geelle "Battal" (ᶜIise, Mammaasan, reer ᶜAwl), originating from Z., who signed the 1917 agreement with the French, and whose relative Hassan Gouled Aptidon (Ḥasan b. Guuleed b. Abtidoon, b. in Gaarisa, Somaliland 1916; d. in Djibouti 2006) became the first President of the Republic of Djibouti (1977).

The frontiers between the new British Protectorate and what was to become the Côte française des Somalis (1896) were established in 1888 and Z., henceforth was part of ↗British Somaliland. This did not inaugurate a new period of prosperity for Z., which on the contrary began to decline. The caravan route to Harär was ruined by the creation of the ↗railway line from Djibouti to Addis Abäba (1897–1917). The first (and only) elementary school was established in 1903 (Lewis 1965: 103). Threatened by the Dervish uprising (1899–1920), the Catholic "Mission Somalie" established in Z. had to leave in 1910 for French Somaliland. In the new Somali Republic (1960), Z. remained a remote and half ruined town. Under Siyad Barre's regime Z. was part of the 'Northern Province' (Gobolka Woqooyi) before being renamed Awdal at the end of the 1980s, a denomination which lasts as the name of a province in the new, self-declared but not yet recognized state of Somaliland.

Zäyoḥannəs

Z. (ዘዮሐንስ) was a 14th-cent. saintly monk who is credited with the foundation of the monastery of ↗Kəbran. He was a contemporary of aṣe ↗ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon and/or aṣe ↗Säyfä Arᶜad.

The main source on Z.'s life is his hagiographic dossier, which includes the Vita (↗gädl), five miracles (↗täʾammər) and a ↗mälkəʾ-hymn (ed., tr. Schneider 1972). This seems to have been written at the end of the 15th or in the first half of the 16th cent. (Cerulli in Schneider 1972: IX [tr.]).

According to his Vita, Z. was born on 13 Ḫədar in ↗Märḥabete, Šäwa, where he completed his traditional church ↗education; he also acquired the skills needed in monastic daily life from a priest (ibid. 7f. [text, tr.]). In a vision, he received the monastic habit (qobᶜ and ↗askema) from St. John and the prophet Elijah. When he was 25 years old, Z.'s parents tried to marry him off but he refused. After their death, Z. was wandering from place to place when the Virgin Mary appeared to him and sent him to Däbrä Libanos. After seven years as a servant, Z. received the monastic habit from əč̣č̣äge Həzqəyas, the third abbot of the monastery. After 25 years in Däbrä Libanos, Z. followed the order of Jesus who in a vision sent him to Təgray and ↗Jerusalem where he worked many miracles (Schneider 1972: 11 [text, tr.]). On his return, Z. went to ↗Dära in Bägemdər. He subsequently went to the Lake ↗Ṭana area and founded the first monastic community on the island of Kəbran. Z.'s Vita mentions his miraculous killing of a snake in Kəbran which provoked the anger of the ↗Agäw chief Ǧan Čuḥay (possibly the same as Žan Ḳəmər, with whom also ↗Yafqərännä Ǝgziʾ struggled?) who captured and tortured him until ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon released him from captivity. Z. remained abbot of Kəbran for 25 years; he spent the last ten years of his life as a hermit. He received the ↗kidan on 10 Ḫamle and died on 24 Ḫamle – the day on which his täzkar is still yearly celebrated – at the age of 105.

A land grant by ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon to Z., mentioned in the Vita, is included in the "Golden Gospel" (↗Wängelä wärq) of Kəbran (ms. Ṭānāsee 1, fol. 3vb; s. HamTana I, 88; cp. Schneider 17 [text] = 17 [tr.]).

Z. is also mentioned in the "short chronicles" among those who followed əč̣č̣äge ↗Filəppos (s. EAE vol. 5) of ↗Däbrä Libanos into exile and were encouraged by him to choose the monastic life (BassÉt 324 [text] = 94 [tr.]; BegCron 8). As Filəppos is not mentioned in the Vita it is possible that the affiliation of Kəbran to Däbrä Libanos happened after the compilation of the saint's hagiographic dossier.

The events described in the Vita and the "short chronicles" should be seen as common themes of Ethiopian ↗hagiography, rather than historical facts. The references to aṣe ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon, Filəppos and Həzqəyas show a "serious inconsistency" (cp. Taddesse Tamrat 1972: 144). Dating Z.'s life to the reign of aṣe Säyfä Arᶜad seems more reliable (ibid.).

According to tradition, the church dedicated to the Archangel Gabriel (Kəbran Gäbrəʾel), where Z. is believed to have been buried, was built in the time of ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon. Z.'s tomb is located in the eastern part of the church (s. HamTana I, 51; but cp. ChTana 153, where the tomb is described on the southern side). Aṣe ↗Täklä Haymanot I is buried in the same church (HamTana I, 51; cp. BassÉt 377 [text] = 328 [tr.]).

Zayse and Zargulla

Zayse and Zargulla language

Zs. and Zg. are regarded as two dialects of the same language (hereafter: Zargulla-Zayse, Zg.-Zs.). They are classified under the East ↗Ometo branch of ↗Omotic. The dialectal variation between them includes lexical differences such as Zg. zumá vs. Zs. bocé 'mountain', Zg. haáʾe vs. Zs. baadé 'mouth', Zg. kiine vs. Zs. ʾatté 'back', Zg. ʾóoʦo vs. Zs. káɓɓe 'work [noun]'. In grammar, the differences include: plural-marking by -ir in Zs. as in tolkó 'hyena' vs. tolkír 'hyenas' and by -edé/-ede in Zg., e.g., ṣéga 'goat' vs. ṣegedé. In Zg. definiteness is marked by suffixes (s. below) whereas in Zs. it is marked by pro-clitic pronouns ʾe (masc. sg.), ʾi (fem. sg.) and ʾu (pl.), e.g., gárma 'a lion' vs. ʾe-gárma 'the lion'. In the present entry, most examples are from Zg. Data on Zs. are from Hayward (1990; 1999).

The consonant segments of Zg.-Zs. are: stops (p), b, t, d, k, g; affricates ʦ, č, ǧ; implosives ɓ, ɗ; ejectives č̣, ṣ, tṣ, q; fricatives (ɸ), s, z, š, ž, h; nasals m, n; liquids l, r and glides w, y. ž is widely used word-initially whereas the affricates č, ǧ and ʦ are restricted in this position. p and ɸ are alternatively used in word-initial and medial positions. Zg.-Zs. have five vowels (i, e, a, o, u). Vowel-length (e.g. kóora 'saddle' vs. kóra 'glue') and consonant-gemination (móɗe 'thought' vs. móɗɗo 'stout') are contrastive. Syllable types include: CVV, CV, CVC and CVVC, e.g.: kée.la 'terrace', kes 'go out', bíic 'urine' respectively. Evidence for CVCC and CVVCC come only from numerals which have lost final vowels, e.g. námˀ 'two', ˀoídd 'four'. Otherwise consonant clusters and geminates are split into two syllables, e.g.: tal.ˀé 'loan'. Contrast in tone is attested in some words (e.g., keeʦé 'a house' vs. kéeʦe 'to bid prices'); however, Zg.-Zs. are analysed as tone-accent languages because of the predictable distribution and restrictions on high tone in multisyllabic words.

Basic form of nouns and adjectives may end in e, o or a, as in gozé 'calabash', bázo 'God' and káʦa 'food'. There are also consonant-final nominals e.g., çíw (place name), míis 'cow', ˀagéʦ 'wind', dúṭṣ 'sound of footsteps', géešš 'clean', dóç̌ 'dumbness' and ç̌úč 'saliva' as well as some numerals (s. below). Distinctions are made for gender (masc./fem.), number (sg./pl.), definiteness and several cases. Two or three of these nominal categories may be expressed by a single, non-segmentable morpheme. E.g., definiteness, sg. and fem. are indicated by -(a)tt-, e.g. doró 'a sheep', dor-att-ó 'the sheep [fem.]' and doró-z-a 'the sheep [masc.]'. Plural is marked by -ede or -edé, e.g., miis 'a cow' vs. miis-edé 'cows'. Definite plural is marked by -unṣ, e.g. miis-ed-únṣ-ó 'the cows'. Case distinctions include: 1) Nom[inative] -í for def. masc./fem. sg. and indefinite pl., e.g. ṣéga 'a goat' vs. ṣégaz-í 'the goat [masc. Nom.]', ṣéggó-y 'the goat [fem., Nom.]' and ṣeedé-y 'goats [pl., Nom.]'; 2) Acc[usative] -á for def. masc. sg., e.g. ṣégaz-á 'the goat [masc., Acc.]; -ó for def. fem. sg. and def. pl., e.g. ṣégg-ó 'the goat [fem., Acc.], ṣeedúnṣ-ó 'the goats [def., pl., Acc.]; 3) fem. Gen[itive] is marked by -i, e.g. ṣegg-í ˀité 'the goat's [fem.] hide'. Other case markers include dative -(í)s as in ṣegg-ís 'for the goat [fem.]', ablative -(í)kopé, e.g. ṣeggíkopé 'from the goat'.

Most verbs in Zg. have just one verb-root form (e.g. 1d below). For a few verbs however, there are up to four slightly different verb roots (1a–c). The distribution of the root variants is associated with tense-aspect and mood.

	Root-1: imperative/ optatitve	Root-2: infinitive	Root-3: present, past. future	Root-4: perfect/ converb
(1a)	qápp-	qáp-	qáf-	qákk-	'scatter'
	dápp-	dáp-	dáf-	dákk-	'release'
(1b)	ˀepp-	ˀep-	ˀekk-		'take'
	demm-	dem-	deng-		'find'
(1c)	yew-	yeétt-	yeéd-		'come'
	míy-	muútt-	muúd-		'eat'
(1d)	ˀúš(š)-				'drink'
	ˀing-				'give'

There are productive verb extensions including causative and passive, marked by -(u)ss-/-(u)ʦ- and -(u)tt-, respectively, e.g., bónčo 'to respect'; caus. bonč-us-á 'make somebody respected!' and pass. bonč-útt-a 'be respected!'. A four-way tense distinction is made: present/habitual marked by -íne, past (-ínne), future (-éne) and the progressive characterized by -aá after the verb root/stem plus the same suffix (-éne) as the future tense.

yewe 'to come':	present/ habitual	past	future	progressive

Subject agreement (cf. highlighted morphemes) is marked on affirmative indicative verbs only when these are in focus. The -á- preceding the focus marker -tte is a lexically determined stem formative; in some verbs -ó- is used instead.

Negation is marked differently in different tenses and moods. In the indicative past, it is marked by the independent negative verb baáˀa whereas in the non-past, -aáˀa is directly affixed to the verb root: tá ˀooʦí baáˀa 'I did not work' vs. tá ʾooʦ-aáʾa ‘I do not work’. Subject-agreement is not marked in the indicative negative verb. In the interrogative, negation is marked by suffixes b- (past) and -íkk (non-past):

hame ‘to go’

Negative Interrogative, Past		Negative Interrogative, Non-past:
hang-í b-ánna	‘Didn’t I go?’	ham-íkk-ánna	‘Won’t/Don’t I go?’
hang-í b-ay(e)	‘Didn’t you go?’	ham-íkk-ay(e)	‘Won’t/Don’t you go?’

hang-í b-áwo	‘Didn’t they go?’	ham-íkk-áwo	‘Won’t/Don’t they go?’

Negation is marked by the inflecting verb dokk-/díkk- in the imperative/optative:

Affirmative Imperative/Optative:		Negative Imperative/Optative:
ʾepp-aná	‘Let me take’	ham-í díkk-ánna	‘Let me not go’
ʾepp-á	‘take! (2sg.)’	ham-í dókk-o	‘Don’t go!’

ʾepp-uússo /ʾeppá-wo/ʾepp-ó	‘Let them take’	ham-í díkk-uússo	‘Let them not go’

The basic pronouns are typical of a *Ta-/Ne-*language:

	Nominative/subject	Accusative/object	Possessive
1sg.	táni/tái	táná/taa	tá
2sg.	néní/néí	néná/nee	né
3masc.sg.	ʾésí	ʾésá	ʾé
3fem.sg.	ʾísí	ʾísó	ʾí
1pl.excl.	níní	níná/nii	ní
1pl.incl.	núní/núí	núná/nuu	nú
2pl.	wútúni	wútúna/hútúna	wú/hú
3pl.	ʾúsúni	ʾúsúna	ʾú

Dative, instrumental and ablative can be derived by adding the respective morphemes to the (short) object pronouns. Zg.-Zs. make inclusive/exclusive distinction in the 1st pers. pl.

Basic numerals are: bizzó ‘1’, námʾ ‘2’, háidʦ ‘3’, ʾoidd ‘4’, ʾišícc ‘5’, ʾizíp ‘6’, laáp ‘7’, lakkúče ‘8’, tansíne ‘9’, támm ‘10’. ṣeét ‘100’ and šíya ‘1000’ are the only simple higher numerals. Others are compounds with or without the linking u or coordinator -nne ‘and’; the quantified noun may occur in sg. or pl., e.g., laáp támm maššedé ‘70 knives’, namʾú támma(-nne) námʾ golodó ‘22 sickles’

Demonstratives include ha (proximal), se, hi (distal), yeékk ‘that down there’, woókk ‘that up there’. These could be used pronominally, e.g., ha-í ʾadátta ‘this (masc./fem.) is tall’. Interrogative pronominals comprise: ʾaálumma ‘what’, ʾána ‘where (directional)’, ʾánna ‘where (locative)’, ʾánden ‘when’, ʾáns’ún ‘how many’, ʾánapes ‘from where’, ʾaálass or ʾaála ʾute ‘why’, ʾoóde ‘who’ and waánisi ‘how’. In sentences subject-agreement markers are added to these words instead of the verb: e.g. ʾánna-s ʾaíkínne ‘where did he catch (it)?’; ʾánna-iš ʾaíkínne ‘where did she catch (it)?’.

The remaining words of the Herman Bell list are: budó ‘fire’, waaʦé ‘water’, ʾawá ‘sun’, ʾagúnna ‘moon/month’, suuʦ ‘blood’, ʾinṣíre ‘tongue’, ʾaccé ‘tooth’.

The basic word order in clauses is Subject-Object-Verb. Modifiers precede the head. Example of modified clauses:

šaató-z-í	yeekk-eés	maák’k’o-kko	ʾeerésmaaʦ	ʾíng-á-tte-n-éne
child-M:DEF-NOM	cry-REL	happen-CND	little milk	give-SFV-FOC-2SG-FUT

‘If the child cries, you will give him some milk’

Zayse and Zargulla ethnography

The Zs. and Zg. seem to be two territorial sections of the same stock of people; at least they speak the same language (↗Zayse) in two dialectical varieties. While the Zs. people call themselves by this name, the Zg. call themselves “Gamo” (but linguistically differ from the ↗Gamo groups of Borodda, Quča, Dita, and ↗Dorze). The Zs. and Zg. belong to the East ↗Ometo-speaking groups in Southern Ethiopia. In the 2007 census the Zs. counted 17,884 people (CSA 2008: 85), while the Zg. were no longer listed as a separate section. In the previous 1994 census they were said to count 390 (CSA 1998: 67), an incorrect figure due to language confusion (s. language article) and differences in self-identification, and perhaps politics, listing the Zs. as ↗Gamo.

The Zs. and Zg. settlement area lies to the west of Lake ↗Č̣amo (1,108 m A.S.L.) up to the north-western foothills of the ↗Gardula mountain range and areas north of it. It consists of highland and lowland zones. Their neighbours are the ↗Mosiye, ↗Maale and various Gamo groups. They themselves claim an identity different from the surrounding peoples in this predominantly Gamo area. They see their origins in the Gamo highlands. In their origin myths the Zs. and Zg. are said to have descended from a union of the sun and a local woman (impregnated by the sun’s rays), who gave birth to seven sons at Kolé, a still venerated historical place currently in Bonké wäräda in Gamo (Abaynäh Unašo 2007: 11; cf. Freeman 2006: 88; Azeb Amha, field data, 2005). The two brothers were the ancestors of seven peoples: the Zs., Zg., ↗Koorete, Ganta, Balta (Abaynäh Unašo, ibid. instead mentions the Mälé), and the people who stayed in Kolé. Both Zs. and Zg. now call the other (northern) Gamo groups “Đač̣e” (↗Dač̣e) and refer to themselves as “Gamo” (Freeman 2006: 85).

The Zg. main villages are Đímalle (a local market) and Kettelé. The Zg. lowlands border those of Maale. In Zs. there are about 25 villages, the main ones being Elgo, Balabat, Wäzäqa and Dämbila. The main markets for Zs. are at Gumayde and Banno villages. They also visit and trade in the regional market town and Zone capital of Arba Mənč̣. The town of Geresse (Bonké wäräda capital) is the administrative centre of Zg., Ganta, Mäle and Gamo groups.

The traditional Zs. and Zg. socio-political order was marked by three layers of authority: the kati (‘king’), the appointed maga chiefs, and the sorof (‘sub-chiefs’), the latter elected by the local people (cf. Freeman 2006: 89). The kati had the function of a rain maker (↗Rainmaking) and expected to guarantee the social order and the fertility of crops, plants, livestock and people. He was assisted by an independent advisor, the haylé maga (Abayneh Unašo 2007: 65). The Zg. kati still exists, although undermined ideologically and materially (land issues) by encroaching Pentecostal beliefs which deny traditional ruler ideologies any legitimacy and denounce them often as the “devil’s work”, to be discarded. The kati is also recognized by the Zs. The Zs. and Zg. also have their own calendar, based on the moon cycle (ibid. 58f.).

Prior to 1897, when they submitted to the imperial Ethiopian forces, the Zs. and Zg. were an independent political unit, and warriors had a high status. While the Zg., living in a more remote area than the Zs., managed to retain their kingship until today, the Zs. could only keep theirs up to the early years of the Därg (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council), when their kati was persecuted and humiliated. Currently the Zg. are administratively part of Bonké wäräda, since March 2011 in the new Sägän Areas Peoples Zone, and the Zs. are part of ↗Đíraašša wäräda in the Gamo Gofa Zone of the Southern Nations, Nationalities, and Peoples Regional State.

The Zs. and Zg. are predominantly cultivators, producing ṭef, maize and sorghum, and raising livestock, especially cattle (mostly in the lowlands) for milk and cheese production. In the home gardens, ənsät and other crops such as cabbage, beans, and spice plants are cultivated. Honey production, notably by Zg., is still limited but known for its good quality. In the dry season some fishing is done by Zs. on the nearby Lake Č̣amo. Three craft worker groups live among them: weavers, potters and tanners, but no blacksmiths. Zs. and Zg. largely live on subsistence economy, but important cash crops are cotton, ṭef, and coffee. A problem specific to the Zs. area is water scarcity. Some Zg. have farms in the lowlands, although the area is mostly used for cattle herding. Traditional technology is the hoe; in the lower areas the plough is used by those who can afford it (oxen).

The Zs. and Zg. have a patrilineal clan system. The Zs. have about 17 clans (cf. Abayneh Unašo 2007: 10). There is a complex personal naming system called daasa (ibid. 68), apparently meant to express lineage solidarity and ritual duties with the family. Traces of this kind of system are also found among other Gamo groups. Traditionally there is an intricate status-based burial system, with different rituals for various social categories (ibid. 74). One other unique Zs. custom was that of the "age celebration" (detse kets) – a rite of passage of male adolescents held every three years by young men approaching adult (marriageable) age during which they passed through Zs. villages while singing songs called kéma, i.e. songs sung only on that occasion. The young men were then recognized by the kati as having reached this stage and received a collective name (similar to that of an age or generation group; ↗age group systems). Subsequently the young men would perform some labour services for the kati (ibid. 79).

The Zs. and Zg. are a strongly cohesive group, as expressed in a relatively high intra-group marriage rate (most Zs. men marry Zs. wives, although there is some inter-marriage with Mosiye/Busa, and other Gamo groups), and there is little permanent out-migration, although more and more young people leave the area for educational reasons. Among Zs. and Zg. group solidarity is expressed through the concept of tokuma, i.e. mutual identification and reciprocity, as expressed in collective labour and cooperation, e.g., in ventures outside the Zs. and Zg. area.

Religious allegiance of the Zs. and Zg. is mixed, with a significant section still practising traditional ↗religion, next to Christianity (Orthodox and Evangelical) and with some Muslims among the Zs. There are some old Orthodox churches in Zg., e.g., the Gäbrəʾel church in Đimalle and the Maryam church in Geresse. As in many areas of southern Ethiopia, the growth of Evangelical-Pentecostal beliefs has meant an assault on traditional Zs. and Zg. values and on their historical conceptions and has divided society.

No separate historical or social studies exist on the Zs. and Zg. as an "ethnic group" (except the interesting survey of Abayneh Unašo 2007, a member of the Zs. community), although their language, notably Zg., has been described in various publications.

Zəkr

Z. (Gəʿəz ዝክር, 'commemoration, remembrance, memory', also ዝክረ ፡ ቅዱሳን, zəkrä qəddusan 'commemoration of the saints'; related to Arab. ↗ḏikr) is a commemorative feast for a ↗saint or archangel (↗Angels). On a day dedicated to the saint or archangel, Ethiopian Orthodox Christians individually or collectively organize a 'feast' (ድግስ, dəggəs) honouring his life and deeds. In a monastic context the term ↗täzkar is used sometimes to refer to a Z.

The ritual of Z. aims at establishing or strengthening relations of patronage between the faithful and the saint. This "contract" is signed after a devotee has made a vow (↗Səlät) binding him or her to the saint. The organization of the banquet is understood to be the fulfilment of the vow. Each initiator of a Z. may have his own personal reasons for organizing it; be it an expression of gratitude for an alleged action of the saint, or to encourage the saint to protect the believer during his life. Performed also as an eschatological act, the Z. is believed to encourage the saint to protect the soul of the believer after his death and to intercede in his favour on Judgment Day.

A Z. can be set up monthly or yearly. After celebrating the liturgy (↗qəddase) in the church dedicated to the saint, the initiator of the Z. feast may invite to his house members of his family, friends and neighbours, and his 'spiritual father' (yänəssəha abbat), usually a priest from his parish. The confessor will perform the ceremony as zəkr qes ('priest of the Z.'). At home, after the recitation of the Lord's Prayer and the Hail Mary, the priest blesses the drinks, usually ↗ṭälla or ↗ṭäǧǧ, and the ↗food, which will be eaten during the feast and placed in a basket (mäsob), which, on this occasion, is called ṣəwwa ('chalice'). Then, the priest divides ənǧära (s. ↗Bread) into pieces (mäkfält or qiṭṭa), to be distributed among all participants. At the end of the feast, the priest, standing in front of all participants similarly standing, reminds them of the great events in the saint's life by quoting the ↗*mälkə*ʾ, the ↗dərsan or the ↗täʾammər dedicated to him and thanks the initiator of the feast in the name of the saint and the Church. The ceremony ends with the recitation of the Lord's Prayer and the Prayer of Absolution. The remains of the feast are distributed among the participants and are also given to the parish church for the poor and the other priests, or directly distributed to the poor in front of the house.

The form of the ceremony is the same if the Z. is organized collectively. Usually, a collective Z. is organized by an association (↗maḫbär, or yäṣəwwa maḫbär) which gathers its members monthly for the celebration.

Zema

Z. (Gəᶜəz ዜማ) is a generic term used to designate the extensive heritage of the liturgical ↗music of the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox (Täwaḥədo) Church. Traditionally, it is contrasted with zäfän, secular music (cp. ↗Songs).

According to tradition, Z. was discovered and established by the 6th-cent. saint ↗Yared, who was inspired by the Holy Spirit.

The entire liturgy is sung, in unison, with the exception of the Scriptures, which are read. The songs are organized in one of the three musical modes: ↗gəᶜəz, ↗ᶜəzəl and ↗araray.

In monasteries, the liturgical chant is practiced daily. Elsewhere, Z. is used during mass (↗Qəddase), evening services (↗Wazema), Sunday office (↗Mäwäddəs), monthly (wär bäᶜal) and annual (kəbra bäᶜal) celebrations, ↗Kəśtät and ↗Aryam offices (celebrations for the Virgin and Saints), matins (↗Səbḥatä nägh), celebrations for Lent time (Ṣom), rogations (↗Məhəlla), funerals and all Wednesdays and Fridays of the year.

Liturgical texts can be chanted without instruments (↗Qum zema) or be accompanied by instruments and gestures (↗Aqqʷaqʷam). Mäzämmməran (singers) – all male – are professional, paid by the Church and trained during many years by masters (märigeta) in liturgical chant schools (↗Zema bet). They serve in a space reserved for them within the church, the qəne maḫlet (↗Church buildings). The songs are performed by one or two choirs, sometimes with soloists. They use certain melodic and rhythmic formulae (səräyu). The instruments used in certain celebrations are sistra (↗Ṣänaṣəl), membranophones with two membranes (↗Käbäro) and prayer sticks (↗Mäqqʷamiya). The mäzämmməran can perform two types of movements: they shift their prayer sticks in codified motions or they dance.

There are numerous types of Z. songs (e.g., ↗sälam, abun; cp. ↗Hymns). While all of them can be executed in qum zema, only ca. 60 can be executed in the aqqʷaqʷam performance mode. Most of the songs are contained in five main books of chant, which provide, above the lines of text, a musical notation (↗Mələkkət): the ↗Dəggʷa, the ↗Ṣomä dəggʷa, the ↗Zəmmare, the ↗Mäwaśəᶜət and the ↗Məᶜəraf.

Chanting is also a feature of the ↗qəne, which are improvised on fixed melodic and rhythmic patterns.

There are several Z. schools, but the betäləḥem zema is the most widely used.

Zema bet

Z.b. (ዜማ ፡ ቤት, lit. 'house of ↗zema [chant]') is a part of the system of traditional church ↗education. It is accessible to students who have completed the ↗nəbab bet and, as a rule, the ↗qəddase bet. Its graduates become cantors of ↗Ethiopian Orthodox (Täwaḥədo) Church.

In the Z.b., the following major discipline blocks are taught: (1) the ↗Dəgg^{w}a, (2) the ↗Zəmmare/↗Mäwaśə^{c}ət, (3) ↗Mäzgäbä qəddase/↗Sä^{c}atat (not required for those who want to be ordained deacon and priest) and (4) ↗Aqq^{w}aq^{w}am.

Prominent Z.b. are at ↗Däbrä Abbay (Təgray), Sälälkula (Wällo) and ↗Gonǧ Tewodros (Goǧǧam).

Zəmmame

Z. (Amh. ዝማሜ, lit. 'swinging') is one of the modes of performance of ↗aqq^{w}aq^{w}am liturgical chant and dance. The other performance modes, all differing in musical, structural, gestural and functional traits, are qum ṣänaṣəl, märägd, ṣəf^{c}at, əngurgurro, ammälaläs, wäräb, and šäbšäbo. The main difference is the use of instruments. In Z., ↗mäqq^{w}amiya is the only instrument used, while in märägd and wäräb the cantors also employ ↗ṣänaṣəl and ↗käbäro, and in šäbšäbo and ṣəf^{c}at the hands are also clapped.

Like all aqq^{w}aq^{w}am performances, Z. is used during Sunday, monthly and annual celebrations. For each type of song, cantors offer different performances of the same text, Z. being the first mode. Pieces are always sung in unison by one or two male choir(s).

Performing Z., each cantor holds the mäqq^{w}amiya vertically in his right hand, lifts it up off the ground (anśa, 'lift!') and moves it from right to left, up and down and backwards and forwards, in a fixed gesture. Moreover, cantors can draw semicircles to the top with their sticks (wäzwuz, 'shake!'), move the prayer stick's bottom end backwards or forwards (nəza, 'spread!'), move the stick's top end forwards or make it draw a circle (məzäz, 'unroll!'). When the stick's end is on the ground, cantors can lean the mäqq^{w}amiya to right or left. It is only in Z. that the cantors can hit the ground (məta, 'hit!') with their sticks simultaneously at specific moments during the chant. However, there is no regular beat, and the chanting is slow. Recurrent musical formulae confer a melodic and rhythmic identity on Z. (e.g. tərkəza, 'a stand').

Z. performances may differ from school to school and from region to region. For example, in the Täkle zema bet in the south of ↗Gondär Z. is characterized by more and longer melisms, and by more frequent and wider movements than in other schools. In the tačč bet and lay bet schools, cantors may hit the ground at different moments in the chant.

Zəmmare

Z. (ዝማሬ, from ዘመረ, zämmärä, 'sing, praise', s. GuiVoc 609; LesDic 639 – a meaning very close to qäddäsä, s. KWKDic 424b; Ləssänä Wärq 1997: 52) is one of the five books of liturgical chant (↗Zema) used in the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox (Täwaḥədo) Church (Amməstu ṣäwatəwä zemawočč). The other four books are the ↗Dəgg^{w}a, the ↗Ṣomä dəgg^{w}a, the ↗Mäwasə^{c}ət and the ↗Mə^{c}əraf. The Z. ↗hymns are sung in one of the three modes, ↗gə^{c}əz, ↗^{c}əzəl and ↗araray, depending on the mode in which the ↗Qəddase is sung.

The Z. hymns are dedicated to the Holy ↗Eucharist. As with other chants, tradition ascribes the composition of the Z. to St. ↗Yared, who in this case is believed to have created these hymns of thanksgiving thinking of what happened during the Last Supper (Mt 26:26-31). There are two main parts, Z. proper and አኰቴት (akk^{w}ätet, 'thanksgiving').

The first part (Z.) contains three groups of hymns, corresponding to the three days Jesus spent in the tomb: (1) ኅብስት (ḫəbəst, 'bread'), (2) ጽዋዕ (ṣəwa^{c}, 'chalice'), sometimes also called ደም (däm, 'blood'), and (3) መንፈስ (mänfäs, 'spirit'). The first group deals with the Eucharist (the blood of Christ), with the consecration of bread in the liturgy and with the fruit of the communion. It has 219 gə^{c}əz, 132 ^{c}əzəl and 23 araray elements and always begins with እስመ ፡ ለዓለም ፡ ምሕረቱ (əsmä läᶜaläm məḥrätu, ‘for His mercy is everlasting’, Ps 99/100:5). The second group has 225 gəᶜəz, 48 ᶜəzəl and 10 araray elements; it is opened by እስመ ፡ አልቦ ፡ ነገር ፡ ዘይሰአኖ ፡ ለእግዚአብሔር (əsmä albo nägär zäyəssäᵓano läᵓəgziᵓabəḥer, ‘because nothing is impossible to the Lord’; the words of the Angel to Mary, Lk 1:37). The third group always starts with Halleluja and contains 45 ᶜəzəl and 10 araray elements. This part of Z. is sung by the ↗däbtära in the Qəne maḫlet (↗Church building).

The portions of the second part (Akkʷätet, with a separate section for Məśṭir, ‘sacrament’), which deals with thanking God for what he has done for the people, are chosen in accordance with the liturgical feast of the day. There are 74 gəᶜəz and 53 ᶜəzəl elements in the Akkʷätet and 204 gəᶜəz and 53 ᶜəzəl in the Məśṭir. They used to be performed by the main celebrant at the qəddəst; in contemporary practice the hymns are sung by the main celebrant from the mäqdäs (↗Church building), and the same hymns are performed by the cantors (mäzämməran) in the Qəne maḫlet, accompanied by musical instruments and dance (↗Aqqʷaqʷam). Akkʷätet is sung after the ድርገት (dərgät, conjunction or union, KWKDic 424b; Ləssanä Wärq 1997:54), at the moment of consuming the ተረፈ ፡ መሥዋዕት (täräfä mäśwaᶜət, the leftover of the body and blood of Christ distributed to the celebrants), while the cantors sing the ↗ᶜ*Əṭanä mogär qəne*. The reminder in the Mäṣḥafä ↗Qəddase (ካህን ፡ ይበል ፡ ዝማሬ, kahən yəbäl Z., ‘let the priest [celebrant] say the Z.’) certainly refers to the main celebrant’s portion of Z.

In present use, Z. must be performed only if the qəne ↗Kəbr yəᵓəti and Əṭanä mogär are composed during the Qəddase, otherwise there is no obligation to sing any Z. On Good Friday, the Qəddase is not celebrated, but the performance of the Kəbr yəᵓəti, Əṭanä mogär and of Z. is prescribed (Ləssanä Wärq 1997:59).

In the traditional ↗education system, Z. is studied for at least two years (HabTent 278f.). The monastery of ↗Zuramba in Gayənt, where, according to tradition, Yared composed the hymns, is an important place of learning Z.

Z.A. (ዜና ፡ አይሁድ, ‘The History of the Jews’) is the title of the Ethiopic translation, via Arabic, of a Hebrew work known as Sēfer Yosippon (‘Book of Yosippon’), or Sēfer [Yosef] Ben Goryon (GrafLit vol. 1, 221ff.).

Yosippon (hereafter Y.; frequently referred to as Pseudo-Josephus) was composed in Southern Italy in 953, which date, confirmed by historical analysis of the contents, is provided by only one Hebrew manuscript (Flusser 1987:390). It is basically an adaptation of the Jewish Antiquities by the 1st-cent. historian Flavius Josephus (Yoseph Ben Mattithyahu), supplemented by some other sources. Because of a mistake in one of Y.’s sources, it was attributed to Joseph Ben Gorion (Eth. ዮሴፍ ፡ ወልደ ፡ ኮርዮን, Yosef Wäldä Koryon), another Jewish commander in the first Jewish–Roman war.

Y. interweaves the history of the Jews with that of Rome. The Diamerismos (i.e., an account of the Division of the earth between the sons of Noah), truncated to the descendants of Japheth, is followed by the legendary story of Ṣepho (Eth. Safwa), son of Eliphaz (Gen 36:11), who became the king of the Kittim (Eth. Käytäm), i.e., Romans, whereupon the author passes to the history of the Jews, from the return from the Babylonian exile, through the restoration of the Jewish Temple, the deeds of ↗Alexander the Great, the ↗Maccabean kingdom, until the Roman–Jewish war and the destruction of the Temple, ending with the fall of Masada, just as Josephus’ Jewish War does.

Since Y. provided an account of Jewish history during the Second Temple period, not covered by the Hebrew Bible, it became very popular among the Jews, as both the early printed editions (in the 1470s in Mantua, one of the first Hebrew books ever to be printed) and translations into various languages testify. The latter were provided for both Jewish (1546 Yiddish, Ladino) and non-Jewish readers (1541 Latin, 1558 English, later other vernaculars).

In the 11th cent., Y. was translated into Arabic by Zakarīyā b. Saᶜīd, a Yemeni Jew (according to the testimony of Ibn Ḥazm, an Arab scholar of Andalusia, d. 1063). Several Arabic recensions exist; the known manuscripts are not earlier than the 12th cent. There are two uncritical editions (s. ed. Kamil 1937: xii, and a resumé in Wellhausen 1898).

The Arabic Y. circulated among the Jewish communities all over the Near East, but soon crossed religious borders and was read by both Muslims and Christians. ↗Ibn Ḫaldūn (d. 1406) excerpted much of it into the second volume of his Kitāb al-ᶜIbar, that was devoted to non-Muslim peoples, including biblical history (Fischel 1954).

Y. attained particular popularity among the Copts. Accoding to the Nomocanon by aṣ-Ṣafī Abū l-Faḍāᵓil (ca. 1238) and The Lamp in the Darkness, a comprehensive Coptic Church encyclopaedia by Šams ar-Riᵓāsa Abū l-Barakāt (d. 1324), the Yūsuf b. Kuryūn belonged to the Biblical canon of the ↗Coptic Church. It is indeed transmitted in many manuscripts which contain biblical books. However, it is never quoted in the official lists of the canonical books of the Coptic Church.

Y.'s prominent status was most probably the reason why it was translated into Ethiopic, ca. 1300, as Z.A. The oldest witnesses belong to the 16th cent. (Kamil 1937: xiif.). The works by Coptic historiographers, such as Ǧirǧis b. al-ᶜAmīd and Abū Šākir b. Abī l-Karam Buṭrus b. ar-Rāhib, drawing extensively on Y., were also translated into Ethiopic (s. ↗Giyorgis Wäldä Amid, ↗Abušakər).

According to Kamil (1937: xviii), Z.A. presents a literal translation of the Arabic Vorlage. It has some changes compared with the Hebrew text: many toponyms and ethnonyms that occur in the initial part (the Διαμεϱισμὸς τῆς γῆς), e.g., Danes, Croatians, Lechites (i.e. Poles), are not to be found in the Ethiopic text. They must have been omitted as incomprehensible, probably already in the Arabic Vorlage.

Z.A. possibly served as one of the sources for the Ethiopic book of ↗Maccabees, whose place it takes, in fact, in the list of canonical books in the ↗Fətḥa nägäśt, where it appears as መጽሐፈ ፡ ዮሴፍ ፡ ወልደ ፡ ኮርዮን (Mäṣḥafä Yosef Wäldä Koryon, 'Book of Joseph ben Gorion') and is supplied with an explanation "which is (another) Book of Maccabees", and in some biblical canons of the ↗Senodos. Whilst the original inclusion may reflect the fact that both legal codes are translations from the Copto-Arabic tradition, it definitely reflects the place the Z.A. had in the perception of the canon (↗Bible: biblical canon; Cowley 1974). This place is confirmed by the canon listings of the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox (Täwaḥədo) Church (EOTC), where Mäṣḥafä Yosef Wäldä Koryon appears as the final book of the ↗Old Testament (s. Patriarchate of the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church 1996: 43; Habtä Maryam 1970/71: 44). Z.A. is, however, never included in larger Ethiopic Biblical manuscripts and no EOTC printed edition is available.

According to the information provided to Antoine d'↗Abbadie, the ↗Betä Ǝsraᵓel do not accept Z.A. as biblical (Simon 1940: 386).

Zena Marqos

Z.M. (ዜና ፡ ማርቆስ) was a 14th-cent. Ethiopian saintly monk from Šäwa (↗Morät). He is locally commemorated on 3 Taḫśaś, the day of his death; however, there is no commemoration note for him in any published Sənkəssar.

The main source for Z.M.'s life is his Vita (↗Gädl). At least two recensions are known, the long recension (s., e.g., ms. EMML no. 3987 and the manuscript used for his summary by Cerulli [1962], both from mid-19th cent.) and the short version with less biographical detail (e.g., ms. EMML no. 3901, 19th cent.). In manuscripts, the Acts are often followed by one or more sets of miracles (↗Täʾammər; s., e.g., ms. EMML no. 3987, with three collections, the first, according to the colophon, written down three years after the saint's death; 19th-cent. EMML no. 4740). Several mälkəʾ- and sälam-hymns in honour of Z.M. are also known; they can be transmitted with the hagiographic dossier (as in mss. NL 207, 18th cent.; mss. EMML nos. 2139, 3548, 3901, 3987, 4740), be included with other hymns (e.g., early 19th-cent. ms. EMML no. 2139) or be copied separately (e.g., late 18th-cent. ms. Rylands Eth. 37). The hagiographic dossiers are often completed by the monastic genealogy of Z.M. (e.g., ms. EMML no. 3987). Cerulli dated the Vita to the second half of the 16th cent. at the earliest (Cerulli 1962: 201–05), however, no pre-18th cent. copy seems to survive.

More details on Z.M. are contained in the Acts of ↗Qäwəsṭos. However, the earliest reference to Z.M. apparently originates from the hagiographic tradition of St. ↗Täklä Haymanot (Nosnitsin 2007: 162).

According to his gädl, Z.M. was born to Zärʾa Yoḥannəs, a brother of Ṣägga Zäʾab who was the father of Täklä Haymanot, and Maryam Zämäda, a sister of abba ↗Qäwəsṭos (the family connection between Z.M. and Täklä Haymanot is also mentioned in the Acts of the latter saint, s. Budge 1906:81). Among the miracles surrounding his birth and childhood are the announcement of the former to the parents by St. Mark and the journey of the new-born to the Evangelist's tomb in Egypt in the company of the archangels Raphael and Uriel. During the ceremony of ↗baptism (40 days after birth), the baby Z.M. fell on the ground but miraculously remained standing, while the baptismal waters boiled over and developed ↗healing powers. At the age of one, Z.M., who was alone in church at that moment, was raptured by an angel to heaven, where he received the blessing of the 24 Heavenly Priests and the Virgin ↗Mary.

At the age of eight, Z.M. was ordained deacon by the metropolitan abunä ↗Qerəllos. When on their way back from the ordination Z.M. and his father were attacked by robbers, the walking staffs of Z.M. and Zärʾa Yoḥannəs transformed themselves into a snake and a dragon, which immediately devoured the aggressors.

Z.M. married Maryam Kəbra, but soon dissolved the union; Maryam Kəbra spent the rest of her life in the monastery of Däbrä Mammas.

Archangel Gabriel took Z.M. to the land of Hagärä Məḫur (↗Muḫər), whose inhabitants venerated a tree inhabited by a spirit called Makos. Z.M.'s sign of the cross felled the tree, and the "pagans" were ready for ↗conversion. Thus, after he was ordained priest by the Alexandrine patriarch Benjamin II (1312–39), Z.M. returned to Muḫər and baptized its inhabitants. (He is still remembered locally as the founder of the monastery of ↗Muḫər Iyäsus.) Z.M. went on to convert the ↗Gurage to Christianity, where he destroyed the local idol called Gärdan.

Upon the death of his parents, Z.M. went to Wägäda (probably ↗Wägda), where he met his cousin Täklä Haymanot; together the two saints proselytized in Morät, where Z.M. founded the monastery of ↗Däbrä Bəśrat (Däbrä Zena Marqos, also Nazret), supposedly on the spot where his birth had been announced to his parents.

Z.M. is said to have subsequently evangelized ↗ʿAdal, ↗Goǧǧam, and other "pagan" areas. He visited the churches of ↗Aksum Ṣəyon and ↗Lalibäla and met such saints as ↗Samuʾel of Wäldəbba, ↗Ewosṭatewos, ↗Gäbrä Mänfäs Qəddus and ↗Iyäsus Moʾa. The Acts of Z.M. also mention his meeting with the late 14th-cent. aṣe ↗Nəwayä Maryam.

According to the Gädlä Qäwəsṭos, the late 13th-cent. aṣe ↗Yəkunno Amlak appointed the son of Qäwəsṭos's sister, i.e. Z.M., head over the kingdom's governors for as long as Yəkunno Amlak reigned. At the age of 35, Z.M. received the monastic habit (*qob*ᶜ) from his cousin Täklä Haymanot in ↗Däbrä Libanos of Šäwa. Qäwəsṭos then sent him to evangelize in ↗Ǝndägäbṭän and Muḫər. Soon after Yəkunno Amlak's death, Qäwəsṭos's mother fell ill and died. Z.M. was beside Qäwəsṭos in administering her the final ↗unction and in translating her body to Däbrä Libanos, where they had her buried, by əčč̣äge ↗Filəppos, next to Täklä Haymanot.

Z.M. had several disciples who continued his cause. Gäbrä Märᶜawi, whom Z.M. met when visiting Gäbrä Mänfäs Qəddus at ↗Zəqʷala, was sent to evangelize Ṣəbaya. Another disciple, Yosef, evangelized ↗Wäläqa during the reigns of Nəwayä Maryam and Dawit II. Śämrä Ab assisted Z.M. in particular in his missionary activities in ᶜAdal.

Zena Maryam

Z.M. (ዜና ፡ ማርያም) was a 14th-cent. Ethiopian nun venerated as the patron saint of the ↗Ǝnfraz region.

The main source of Z.M.'s life is her Vita (↗Gädl); the best known version was translated by Cerulli (1946); a different version was used by Kefyalew Merahi (2001: 85–91), yet there is no critical edition.

According to her Vita, Z.M. was born in Libo to Gäbrä Krəstos and Amätä Maryam. She had four brothers (three in Kefyalew Merahi 2001: 85). According to the version translated by Cerulli, Z.M. was about to be married but, after her mother's death, Z.M. decided to become nun; the endowment had to be paid back to her fiancé. According to the version used by Kefyalew Merahi (2001), she was already married and ran away, together with a younger brother, after her mother's demise. The death of her brother at the teeth of wild animals was the reason for her becoming a nun.

She subsequently was taken by abba Gäbrä Mikaᵓel to a cave known as Waśśa Ǝndrəyas (or Mäqabər Ǝndrəyas, i.e. 'cave/grave of Ǝndrəyas') where she remained as a hermit for 25 years. She is said to have spent the whole time standing (similar to ↗Täklä Haymanot, who is famous for standing on one leg).

From Waša Ǝndrəyas, Z.M. went to the monastery of Gʷəgʷəben at Lake ↗Ṭana (ChTana 171: Gugube). There she had a vision in which she travelled on a cloud to the monastery of ↗Ṭana Qirqos, otherwise forbidden to women (Cerulli 1946: 121, 126). In Gʷəgʷəben she also met her future disciple Ṣäbälä Maryam, who initially was considered too young to take the monastic vows. However, due to Z.M.'s intervention, the abbot of the monastery gave Ṣäbälä Maryam the monastic habit (qämis, *qob*ᶜ and ↗askema).

Until her death Z.M. followed strict ascetic principles and lived in a cave, later called Waśśa Zena Maryam (20 km from the town Addis Zämän; s. Kefyalew Merahi 2001: 90). She is said to have eaten only herbs, uncooked grain and, every Friday, ↗koso. She refused salt, honey, butter or milk products in general. Her Vita comprehensively mentions her ↗menstruation. Z.M. blamed God for not stopping the monthly bleeding in spite of her prayers but received the answer that this was a law already imposed on Eve. After Z.M. asked for forgiveness, God stopped the blood flow (as happened to other female saints, e.g., ↗Wälättä Peṭros).

Z.M. died on 23 Näḥase and was buried in her cave. It is said that miracles happened at her tomb, such as curing of sterility and eye diseases as well as head and stomach illnesses.

In her ↗kidan the salvation of the souls is promised to those who pray in her name, make intercessions, commemorate her and give three litres of ↗ṭef as ↗alms in her name.

Z.M. belongs to the category of "cave saints". She should be seen as an archetype for the ideal of a harsh asceticism for nuns, similar to ↗Krəstos

Śämra. She is considered a saint due to her radical life style dedicated to God and for her miracles. Her Vita is an important source for the early life of female hermits, albeit her life is not mentioned in any printed ↗Sənkəssar. She is locally commemorated on 23 Näḥase.

Zenahu lägalla

Z.l. (ዜናሁ ፡ ለጋላ, "The History of the Galla") is a succinct, highly informative historiographic text on the ↗Oromo. The authorship of this study is ascribed to the monk abba ↗Baḥrəy on the basis of internal evidence. The study ends with ይቤ ፡ ባሕርይ (Yəbe Baḥrəy, '[Thus] says Baḥrəy'; cp. Guidi 1907:232; Getaččäw Ḫayle 2002). The writer must also have been the author of the ↗Mäzmurä Krəstos, who describes himself as "the youngest of the clergy of the monastery of Däbrä Maryam" who composed the latter text during the time of aṣe ↗Śärṣ́ä Dəngəl (cp. ms. BritLib Or. 534, fol. 137r [WrBriMus 84]). Even though the author mentions the king in the Z.l. only by his title, ḥaṣege (↗aṣe), the monarch was undoubtedly Śärṣ́ä Dəngəl. There are speculations that Baḥrəy also authored the chronicle of Śärṣ́ä Dəngəl (s. Chernetsov in PICES 8).

The Z.l. is known only from two complete manuscripts (BritLib Or. 534 and Wien, Kaiserlich-Königliche Hofbibliothek XXI, Aeth. 4), and two fragments (Berlin, Staatsbibliothek Preußischer Kulturbesitz orient. fol. 4096 and orient. quart. 996). In the text Baḥrəy states that "when this book was written it was the seventh year of the government of Mulᵓata, son of Bifole", which led Beckingham and Huntingford to date the Z.l. to 1593 (cp. BeckHuntAlm 125). The whole period covered in the Z.l. is roughly the years 1523-93 (s. Chernetsov in PICES 8, 133). An editio princeps and translation was performed by A.W. ↗Schleicher (s. EAE, vol. 5) on the basis of the London manuscript. However, Schleicher's understanding of the matter was poor which can be seen in the low quality of his translation. Later works followed by Guidi (1907; in GuiIohan), a translation into English by Beckingham and Huntingford (BeckHuntAlm), as well as a translation into Amharic and English, combined with a general study on the subject by Getatchew Haile (Getaččäw Ḫayle 2002).

Baḥrəy described the ↗gadaa system as follows: "They have neither king nor master like other peoples; rather, they obey a luba for eight years. And after eight years another luba is appointed, and the first is relieved [...] The meaning of luba is 'those who are circumcised at the same time'" (Getaččäw Ḫayle 2002:200, section 4; GuiIohan 198 [tr.]). Baḥrəy describes each of the five *luba*s – sometimes of both branches of the Oromo, the Bärtuma (↗Baarentuu) and the ↗Boorana – that constituted the full cycle of 40 years and its exploits.

Baḥrəy was inspired to study the Oromo by his curiosity and his regret and anger at the idea that relatively few "heathens" could conquer a relatively vast number of Christians: "The erudite make an extensive inquiry, asking, 'How is it that the Galla defeat us, although we are many and many are our arms?'" (Getaččäw Ḫayle 2002:209 section 19; GuiIohan 204 [tr.]). His analytical answer to his question is a scathing criticism of Ethiopian Christian society. He divides that society into ten parties to show that only one part, the army, fights, while every Oromo "is trained in warfare, from the small to the big. For this reason they destroy us and kill us" (Getaččäw Ḫayle 2002:210 section 19; GuiIohan 206 [tr.]). Baḥrəy concludes that because of the small size of the armed forces, “our country is destroyed” (ibid.).

Abba Baḥrəy’s Z.l. has no equal in its scope and the quality of its scholarly research and analysis. It has, therefore, become the foundation of studies on the Oromo for subsequent researchers, such as ↗Almeida (BeckHuntAlm 133–39), ↗Täklä Śəllase Ṭinno (PerChron), Antonio ↗Cecchi (CecZeila), ↗Aṣmä Giyorgis (BTafA 137–45) and Haberland (VSAe II). However, with the emerging of Oromo nationalism the Z.l. has also been viewed as a base of misconceptions of the Oromo.

Zəqʷala

Mount Z. (ዝቋላ, Orom.: Tulluu Ç̣uqqaalaa, 8.32' N, 38.52' E; 2,989 m A.S.L.) is an extinct volcano and religious site located ca. 40 km southwest of Bišoftuu (↗Däbrä Zäyt) in the former ↗Yärär-Kärräyyu wäräda of Šäwa province. Today, the area belongs to the Libän-Zəqʷala wäräda (Orom.: Liiban Ç̣uqqaalaa), Məsraq Šäwa zone, Oromiyaa Regional State. Z. is not to be confused with a wärädä by the same name in the northern Amhara region.

The base of the Z. mountain is 12 km wide. It rises to ca. 1,100 m above the surrounding area, the bottom of the ↗Rift Valley. Its slopes are formed by thick trachyte lava without pyroclastic rocks. The caldera is 2 km wide and 300 m deep; at its bottom there is an elliptical lake (ca. 1 km in diameter). The caldera and the caldera rim are densely forested. Ca. 290 different species of plants (of which ten are cultivated) grow on the mountain. It is also home to many wild animal species, including klipspringers, gureza monkeys, leopards, antelopes etc.

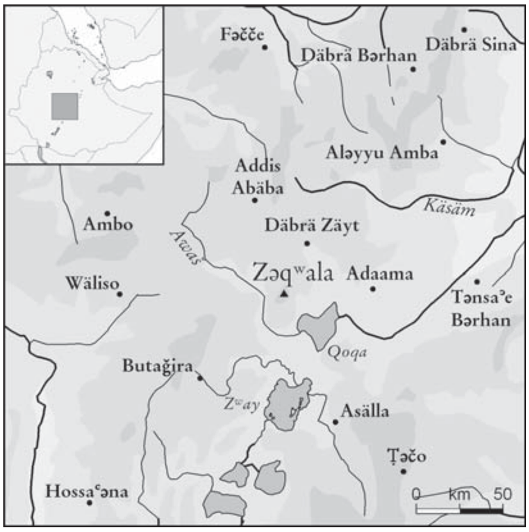
Today, the slopes of the mountain and the surrounding area are mainly inhabited by the Ǧillee sub-branch of the ↗Tuulama Oromo (Abu clan, VSAe II, 524).

Mount Z. is one of the most important religious sites in southern-central Ethiopia. The lake and the caldera area are considered sacred by Ethiopian Orthodox Christians as well as by adherents of the traditional ↗Oromo religion (s. also ↗Waaqa).

Churches, monasteries and sacred sites

Early reference to Z., its lake and monastery can be found in ↗Fra Mauro’s map of 1460 (“Mons Xiquala”), where the mountain is depicted in its typical cone-shaped form (CrawItin fig. 4). In itineraries of early European travellers (CrawItin 80f., 86), Z. appears to be close to ↗Bärara and ↗Yärär, two centres of royal power in the old ↗Šäwa. Further historical information about Z., however, is very meagre (but it does appear as “Žəqala” in the Śərʿatä mängəśt, s. Varenbergh 1915–16: 15; Guidi 1922: 76).



The significance of Z. is linked with its being the main site of one of the major Ethiopian saints, abunä ↗Gäbrä Mänfäs Qəddus, popularly called Abbo (the second sanctuary of the Saint is ↗Mədrä Käbd [s. EAE vol. 5], the area adjacent to Z.).

According to the tradition recounted in the Acts of Gäbrä Mänfäs Qəddus, the Saint arrived there from Mədrä Käbd, and spent many years at Z. working miracles. The story may be a remote echo of the early evangelization of the formerly predominantly Muslim area of Šäwa, in the late 13th-early 14th cent. (cp. Cerulli 1946: 41 and n. 3; Marrassini 2003: XXXI [tr.]). However, the account of the foundation of the monastery at Z. (today known as Z. Abbo or [Däbrä] Käʷakəbt, said to have been originally called Däbrä Tabor, cp. Marrassini 2003: 114f. [tr.]) seems to be independent from the written sources. According to oral tradition, the monastery was founded by Gäbrä Mänfäs Qəddus; at the same time it claims that the churches of Z. were built by King Gäbrä Mäsqäl and St. ↗Yared and, later, by King ↗Ǝndrəyas, who indeed ruled briefly in the first half of the 15th cent. (AmhChurchD vol. 4, 232). Another tradition dates the foundation of the monastery by Gäbrä Mänfäs Qəddus to 1175, to the reign of aṣe ↗Lalibäla (Persoon 2003: 197). According to the Acts, the Saint's body was transported to ↗Jerusalem; the oral tradition says that one of his ribs "fell down" and was buried under the present church building.

The ancient churches of Z. were supposedly destroyed during the ǧihād of imām Aḥmad b. Ibrāhīm al Ġāzī in 1531. The ↗Futūḥ al-Ḥabaša mentions Z. as an area of the ↗Maya ethnic group and the base of wazīr ᶜAddole (ᶜAdlī). It claims that the inhabitants of the Z. area under their leader Täsfu were converted to Islam by imām Aḥmad's commander farašaham Dīn (BassHist II, 113, 213f., 359, 363). Remains of foundations on the lake shore may indicate pre-ǧihād church buildings (Meinardus 1964: 41; Kriss – Kriss-Heinrich 1975: 20). Later, oral tradition relates that Z. served as a refuge for Christians, namely ↗Amhara and ↗Gurage, during the following period of ↗Oromo migrations into the area (VSAe II, 528); subsequently, Z. was completely cut off from the Christian regions (also during the time when the veneration of abunä Gäbrä Mänfäs Qəddus was flourishing in the ↗Gondärine Kingdom) and Christianity probably vanished from Mount Z.

Like other ancient centres of Christianity in the region (cp., e.g., ↗Bərbər Maryam), in the 19th cent. Z. gained importance for the Šäwan polity of re-establishing Christian supremacy over southern Ethiopia. According to oral tradition, the first new church on Mount Z. was built by the order of nəguś ↗Śahlä Śəllase of Šäwa, the monastery being re-established by abba Gäbrä Ḥəywät. Śahlä Śəllase endowed the monastery with land estates again. In 1912 aṣe ↗Mənilək II built the present church (architect was the Italian Castagna, Guida 426; Pankhurst 1991a) at the same place and endowed it with further lands (Meinardus 1964: 41f.; Kriss – Kriss-Heinrich 1975: 20; Hiruy Simie online); a group of peasants was settled near the mountain, to serve the monastery. In the case of ras Zäwde, Mənilək also used Z. as a place of banishment (GueCopMen, 313 n. 5).

In 1937 the Italian airforce, by the orders of viceroy ↗Graziani, bombed Mount Z., destroying buildings, and killing part of the monastic and lay community (cp. also ↗Graziani massacre). Later the Italians rebuilt the monastery but interfered with its inner affairs; the new viceroy Amedeo di ↗Savoia appointed mämhər Ṣəge its new head in 1938, and the Šäwan bishop abunä Matewos as "Prior of Z." in 1940 (Shenk 1972: 125, 130f.). A recent tradition claims that abunä Gäbrä Mänfäs Qəddus had miraculously appeared during the bombardment and diverted the bombs (Hiruy Simie online).

Shortly after World War II, David Buxton was unable to observe any monastic life at Z. (Buxton 1967: 54ff.). However, the monastic community was quickly revived and continued to hold a prominent position among Ethiopian monasteries, as is indicated, e.g., by the fact that its head, mämhər Zaffärä Bərhan, was a member of the Holy Synod in 1948, during the negotiations with the ↗Coptic Church regarding the granting of autocephaly to the Ethiopian Orthodox Church (Meinardus 1964: 42, n. 1).

During the reign of aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I, the monastery flourished. A second church dedicated to Kidanä Məḥrät was built on top of the mountain (Lindahl, ms.). In 1964, when the Emperor visited Z. during an annual feast of Gäbrä Mänfäs Qəddus, the monastic community counted ca. 100 nuns and 180 monks; ↗hermits-baḥtawi and ↗səwwuran also lived on the slopes of Z., which, with the area around the crater lake, was considered "virgin land" exempt from cultivation (Meinardus 1964: 41f., 47; AmhChurchD vol. 4, 232).

A new church building with a cupola was erected in 1971 (Kriss – Kriss-Heinrich 1975: 23). After the ↗Revolution of 1974 the monastery lost its land estates and suffered from impoverishment and tense relations with the local farmers association; however, it was able to become self-subsistent and reasserted itself towards the end of the Därg period (Persoon 2003: 198–201).

Today, the population of the monastery is roughly 300 monks and 100 nuns (both numbers including novices). There are also some hermits-baḥtawi living in caves or huts at some distance from the monastery. Peasants, shepherds and servants of the monastery living on the mountain are estimated today at ca. 500–800. The monastics practice agriculture, keep bees and breed cattle on the mountain top. Ca. 30 of them practise agriculture in Mofär Bet (or Gäbäre Bet) at the foot of the mountain. Both monks and nuns have their own bakery. Churches at the foot of the mountain linked to the Z. churches are, e.g., Gidda Giyorgis and Wämbärä Maryam (oral informants; cp. Meinardus 1964: 42).

Apart from the churches, the major sacred site on Mount Z. is the crater-lake which is sometimes called after St. Mary and is also linked to abunä Gäbrä Mänfäs Qəddus. In accordance with his Vita, the Saint himself is said to have caused the emergence of the lake by his prayers. He then spent many years in contemplation in the lake in an upside down position, and drowned evil spirits in its waters (BudSaint 767; Meinardus 1964:36; Kriss – Kriss-Heinrich 1975:23). Moreover, both the Orthodox Christians as well as adherents of the Oromo religion believe that the water of the lake has the power to heal any kind of sickness, especially ↗leprosy (↗Ṣäbäl). On 5 Mäggabit (s. below) and ↗Ṭəmqät a procession with the Z. ↗*tabot*s circumambulates the lake, its waters are blessed and people make ablution in it (Meinardus 1964:40; Kriss – Kriss-Heinrich 1975:21, 23f.).

Several peculiar rocks located at different spots around the lake are considered "sacred places" of which only some can be mentioned here (s. also Meinardus 1964:42–46): (1) ᶜArb Rob (Amh. 'Friday–Wednesday' [the fasting days]) is a rock of ca. 4 m. It is said that a person managing to get on top of it is considered sinless, and only those observing the proper fasting are able to do this. (2) Aṭṭabqiññ (lit. 'squeeze me', 'narrow passage') is the name of two huge rocks naturally connected to each other, creating a very low and narrow kind of arch. The legend states that only a sinless person can pass through this hole, otherwise the stones will move towards each other, thus killing the sinner or holding him until he receives remission (oral informants 2010; Kriss – Kriss-Heinrich 1975:25). (3) Abbo wämbär (Amh. 'throne of Abbo') is a chair-shaped rock where Gäbrä Mänfäs Qəddus used to sit (oral informants). (4) In former days, on Ṭəmqät, a tabot used to be brought to the church of Gidda Giyorgis at the foot of the mountain and then was returned again. Half-way between the two churches it was placed on a special stone (Abbo maräfiya, Amh. 'resting-place of Abbo'). (5) Another rock, Đagaa ↗Muudaa (Orom. 'rock of blessing') or səᶜəlät dəngay (Amh. 'stone of vow'), is mainly visited by women who seek help against infertility.

Festivals

The particular feasts held at Z. monastery are:
(1) 29 Taḫśaś, the birthday of Gäbrä Mänfäs Qəddus, coinciding with Christ's birthday (↗Lədät, cp. Meinardus 1964:34). On this feast, with ca. 1,000-2,000 participants, the tabot is taken out of the church and presented; the people gather around the church from 6 to 9 a.m. during the liturgy, then a sermon, Bible reading and praising are carried out.

(2) On 5 Mäggabit, the death day of Gäbrä Mänfäs Qəddus (↗Täzkar), the tabot and an icon of the Saint are taken out of the church at 9 a.m. and proceeds in an anti-clockwise direction around the lake till 12 p.m. when it returns to the church. From 12 p.m. to 1 p.m. there is a sermon, from 1 to 3 p.m. the liturgy (↗Qəddase).

(3) On 5 Ṭəqəmt the Christians celebrate God's ↗kidan given to the Saint (s. above; cp. Kriss – Kriss-Heinrich 1975:12 [after Bezold 1916:72]; Marrassini 2003:xxv, 81ff. [tr.]). On this day, large numbers of pilgrims climb the mountain for the church celebration, which is similar to that of 5 Mäggabit. The tabot and the icon of Gäbrä Mänfäs Qəddus are taken out of the church at 9 a.m. and proceed in a complete anti-clockwise circle around the lake (Böll 1991:16). The pilgrims carry offerings like candles, incense, coffee and butter (Pankhurst 1991:7). Monks sell the ferns, grass, and pieces of the scrub referred to as "the beard of Abbo" to the pilgrims. It is said that these herbs are a potent medicine against headache and intestinal parasites (Mirgissa Kaba 1991:4).

On the occasion of the feast, women may also perform dalagaa, a particular Oromo song and dance. Pilgrims may place grass at the foot of a rock, called sida, smear butter on it and pour coffee over it. Zar ceremonies (↗Possession cults) may take place as well. Some pilgrims may sing also songs referring to šayḫ ↗Ḥusayn (Pankhurst 1991a:7f.; Getie Gelaye 1991:11f.).

(4) A week after ↗Mäsqäl adherents of the Oromo traditional ↗religion celebrate their annual Irreečaa festival which marks the end of the rainy season and the beginning of spring (also birra, Orom. 'spring'). This festival is dedicated to prayers for peace, well-being and fertility, as well as to the fulfilment of vows, and to expressing thankfulness towards Waaqa and the ayyaana spirits. Until the ↗gadaa system was abolished, rites of passage were performed during Irreečaa.

The Irreečaa of Z. is opened under a ↗sycamore tree on the shore of Lake ↗Hoora Arsadi in Bišoftuu (↗Däbrä Zäyt). The celebrants form a huge procession to climb up Mount Z. During Irreečaa celebrants offer strings of small beads to the ayyaana dwelling in certain ↗trees (Meinardus 1964:46). They bring bundles of fresh grass mixed with yellow flowers to the lake to dip them into the water and sprinkle on to their bodies. Irreečaa is closed under a big old fig tree on the shore of the crater-lake. Fresh grass is also brought to the foot of the tree, incense is burnt, butter is smeared on to its trunk, perfume is sprinkled and libations of local hard liquor are made. People sing and dance, pray, say blessings, share festive meals, and ↗ṭälla and hold coffee ceremonies.

Today, under the influence of Oromo nationalism, the Irreečaa festival at Bišoftuu-Z. is enjoying a revival as the most important national festival. In a simplified interpretation it is understood as an Oromo "Thanksgiving".

Zervos, Iakovos

Z. (b. 2 July 1883, Kephalonia, Greece, d. 10 June 1956, Addis Abäba) was a long-time friend, doctor and adviser to ras Täfäri Makʷännən (later aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I). He received medical training at the University of Athens and upon graduation migrated to Egypt where he was employed at the Greek Hospital in Alexandria. In 1909 he travelled to ↗Dərre Dawa where he established a medical practice. Three years later, however, ↗Greece became involved in the Balkan Wars (1912–13), and Z. enlisted in his homeland's medical services. Returning to Ethiopia in 1914, he made the acquaintance of ras Täfäri whom he treated after a serious boating accident on Lake Alämayya. As a result of this incident, Z. became the future Emperor's life-long friend, physician and counsellor (L'Ethiopie Contemporaine, November 1956, 12; HSLife I, 43).

Z. was an enigmatic figure about whom very little has been written and only superficial information offered. His political activities and involvement in high state affairs seem to be only rumours. He instigated ras Täfäri's participation in the 1916-Coup against ləğ ↗Iyasu; he organized, arranged and accompanied ras Täfäri on his 1924 trip to Europe (Procopiou 1924: 27). He went on a clandestine mission to Italy immediately before the outbreak of war in an effort to forestall the invasion; he attempted to sell the Royal stocks in the Franco-Ethiopian Chemin de Fer (↗Railways) before it was seized by the Italians. However most of the preceding has not been substantiated. Z.'s prestige and influence was evidenced by Ḫaylä Śəllase bestowing upon him the title ↗bitwäddäd and awarding him the Gold Cross of the Order of Mənilək II (L'Ethiopie Contemporaine, Dec., 1952, 29), one of the few, if not the only European to receive such an honour. Z. was also instrumental in the establishment of the Greek communal organization, school, and church and also for a period was Consul General of Greece (ibid.). He was active in other private and public pursuits. For example, he was awarded a gold concession in 1928 in ↗Wälläga and in the 1930s was a member of Addis Abäba's first Sanitation Commission (Natsoulas 1977: 160–64).

Z. had accompanied Ḫaylä Śəllase into exile and returned with him after the Liberation in 1941. Until his death, he remained a close friend and confidant of the Emperor. Z. is buried in the Greek cemetery outside Addis Abäba in a large mausoleum that dominates the entire site.

Zibeth

Z. (Amh. ዝባድ, zəbad [from Arab. zabād], Orom. xirinyii, Käfa yéroo) is the secretion ("musk") of male civet cats (Civettictis civetta), carnivorous animals found extensively in sub-Saharan Africa. Despite its wide distribution, the habit of domesticating civet cats ("civiculture") is conducted only in Ethiopia. Civiculture is practiced mainly in the southern and south-western part of the country, where broadleaf forests are distributed in temperate humid and cool climate areas. Today, about 95 % of the total amount of Z. is produced in the ↗Ǧimma and ↗Limmu areas while 5 % is produced in ↗Käfa (Fasil Täklä 1995).

Oral Islamic tradition from Agaro, Ǧimma, relates the origin of civiculture to the legend of Sulayman (or King ↗Solomon of ancient Israel), known for his ability to communicate with animals. Accordingly, in ancient times, wild civet cats used to come to Sulayman to have their glands wiped of Z. every nine days. Annoyed at seeing people argue over the Z., however, Sulayman set the civet cats free and told them not to present their precious Z. but to let people fetch it for themselves (Ishihara 2003).

In the 12th cent., al-Idrīsī refers to civiculture conducted in Ethiopia (ed. Sezgin 1995: 144). In the same period, Ethiopian Z. traded by Arabs may have reached China via Qalḥāt, as indicated by Zhao Rugua (ed. Hirth – Rockwell 1911: 234). In the 16th cent. Bermudez reports that the ↗Gurage paid tribute to their king in "amber", i.e. Z. (1875: 102). Almeida, in the early 17th cent., mentions wild civet cats and Z. musk used by the Ethiopians to scent their clothes (BeckHuntAlm 52).

Poncet reports on civiculture conducted among the Muslims in ↗Ǝnfraz, north-west Ethiopia at the beginning of the 18th cent. (Poncet 1709: 81). In the 18th to the 19th cent., Muslim traders migrated to south-western Ethiopia and introduced civiculture. The descendants of Muslim traders settled in the region, collectively called näggade (or naggado in Käfa language) exclusively possessed the technical knowledge of civiculture. This is explained in a legend regarding sayyid Naṣrallāh (supposedly identical with gärad ↗ᶜAbdannāṣir), a Muslim holy man venerated among the ↗Limmu Oromo, ↗Qabeena and Səlṭe (↗Səlṭi). According to the legend, when sayyid Naṣrallāh had his eye cured of infection by anointing Z., he blessed not only his descendants but the entire näggade to conduct civiculture (Ishihara 2003).

Wild civet cats are captured alive with traps using nets, cages or ropes set in the forest at midnight. Civet cat farmers often depend on the ↗Waata or ↗Manǧo for setting the traps. Trappers only capture mature male civet cats and release female and immature ones (Ishihara 2003; cp. also Bieber 1920: 336, 349).

After being caught, the wild civet cats are kept under quarantine, and are fed raw eggs, raw butter and milk. This food serves as purgative for cleansing the bowels. If the civet cats defecate, they are judged fit for domestication.

Domesticated civet cats are kept singly in cages which are laid on wooden trestles, about one meter in height. This is necessary for keeping the cages clean of excrement and to protect them from insects. The daily food for civet cats is loose maize porridge which is believed to give the Z. a highly valued pale colour. After the removal of the Z., pieces of boiled meat and its broth are often added to the porridge. It is believed that the more meat is fed, the more Z. is yielded. Civet cats are regarded as nervous animals and the amount of Z. fluctuates according to such factors as room temperature, food and noise. It is also considered important to keep the farm physically clean (Ishihara 2003; cp. also Bieber 1920: 350).

The secretion of the Z. is accumulated in the pouch until it is removed artificially. The removal of the extracted Z. is usually done with an interval of between seven and twelve days. The removal is usually conducted by three persons. The first person holds on to a stick vertically inserted through the bars of the cage and encourages the civet cat to grab on to it with its teeth. The second stands at the rear end of the cage and seizes hold of the hind legs and pulls them back so that the gland is in reach. Then the third person presses underneath the gland and turns the pouch inside out. The pouch is gently scraped of Z. with a spoon made of cattle horn, and after that, a special ointment made from beeswax and butter is applied to the pouch to add moisture to it. The Z. removed from the civet cat is accumulated in containers made from cattle horn (which were traded as far as to India, s. BruNile vol. 4, 568; Bieber 1920: 452). The weight unit used for the Z. is wäqet, similar to that used to weigh gold (↗Measurement, s. EAE vol. 5). One cat may need a year to fill a horn (Bieber 1920: 351).

Farmers either sell the Z. to brokers, in many cases Muslim näggade, who sell it to exporters. After the exporters have accumulated a certain amount of Z., they blend the various lots collected from different areas to achieve a uniform grade. After this homogenization, they take 20 g from the whole amount for quality testing, conducted at the Quality Standardization Authority of Ethiopia. The Z. is evaluated according to the amount of civetone contained. Z. above grade 2, i.e. Z. containing over 40 % of civetone is regarded to have sufficient quality for export. After the quality testing, the Z. is put into a standardized plastic container, each containing 5 kg, which is again placed inside a metallic container, sealed in order to preserve quality. Nearly 100 % of the Z. yielded in Ethiopia is exported to European and Asian countries (Ishihara 2003).

Zintgraff, Alfred Otto

Z. (b. 3 May 1878, Düsseldorf, d. 1944, Heidelberg) was a publicist, German diplomat in Ethiopia and advisor to aṣe ↗Mənilək II.

Z. was the son of the colonial officer and explorer in Cameroon Eugen Zintgraff (according to some: his brother). From his childhood onwards he was well acquainted with the colonial project. After studying law in Bonn and Leipzig, and obtaining a Ph.D., Z. became first a "Referendar" at the German Consulate in Zanzibar (1902/03), then a diplomatic representative of ↗Germany in British East Africa, with seat in Mombasa, then again in Zanzibar (in 1906 making a field trip to Entebbe in the service of the German colonial administration). In 1907 Vice-consul Z. was transferred to the newly founded German Legation in Addis Abäba, and actively built up cordial relations between the Legation and aṣe Mənilək II. After the first German envoy, Coates, had left in late 1907, Z. became the chargé d'affaires and thus the highest representative of Germany.

In Z.'s time, the German community in Addis Abäba was growing quickly, consisting among others of workers and specialists for whom there was a high demand in the expanding capital. After Alfred ↗Ilg had to leave his post in 1906, Mənilək, who still needed a foreign advisor from a country with no colonial interests in the region, asked Z. in February 1908 to communicate this wish to the German government. When the German authorities hesitated to link themselves too closely with the ruler by sending an advisor, Mənilək asked Z. to take over the position. Z. quit his post and became Ethiopian State Councillor in late 1908, with a focus on juridical and administrative issues. Z., however, quickly faced opposition by influential courtiers, who feared the planned reforms, and Z. faced a situation in which there was little information and weak practical support while meetings with Mənilək became rare due to the latter's deteriorating health. Responding to a request by Mənilək, Z. helped in the appointment of further German personnel for the palace, such as a private teacher for ləǧ ↗Iyasu, the philologist Pinnow, and a personal medical doctor for Mənilək, Dr. Max Steinkühler.

Steinkühler's presence at the court, however, quickly developed into an affair of state. Mənilək suffered a stroke after which his wife, ↗Ṭaytu, took over his care and his health deteriorated further. When the chemical analysis of his urine by Steinkühler revealed the presence of potassium cyanide (perhaps as part of a traditional medical treatment), Steinkühler demanded exclusive control over all meals, indirectly blaming Ṭaytu for poisoning her husband (reported in detail in Zintgraff 1926). In the following internal struggle Steinkühler was dismissed, and Z. had to face a critical assembly of high dignitaries, with the effect that he lost access to Mənilək and was finally sacked following an intervention by Ṭaytu. Z. returned to Germany in 1909. In 1926 he published a novel, in which he described the last years of Mənilək.

Z. moved to German East-Africa (i.e. Tanganyika) in 1911 becoming the editor of the weekly Deutsch-Ostafrikanische Zeitung in Dar es Salaam and founding a publishing house (dismantled during World War I, in 1916, after the British occupation). Afterwards he became the Press Officer of the Imperial Colonial Authority, Berlin. In 1921 he moved to Heidelberg. After the loss of the colonies, Z. actively promoted the renewal of the colonial presence of Germany in Africa, also maintaining his interest in a German alliance with independent Ethiopia. He published numerous texts mainly on African topics (e.g., foreword to Sander 1929).

Like many other activists from colonial circles, Z. joined the Nazi Party, and after the proclamation of the "Third Reich" became Director of the Department for Foreign Studies and Exchange Services at Heidelberg University, with the title of Honorary Professor of Mandate and Colonial Politics as of 10 October 1933 (Vézina 1982: 81). Later he also became University Senator, and Deputy Director of the Institute for Interpreting (Degener 1935: 1788). As a curator of the influential J. u. E. von Portheim Foundation (hired in 1924 by its founder Victor Mordechai Goldschmidt) he organized exhibitions of African cultural objects (based on the Goldschmidt collection and enriched by his own family collections) and promoted the idea of Germany as a "friend" of Africans, neglecting the atrocities of colonialism (including those of his own father). The collection of the Ethnographic Museum Heidelberg is based on his concepts (Schlichtenberger 1998).

Zion

The concept of Z. (Amh. ጽዮን, Ṣəyon) is one of the most complex and multi-levelled in Ethiopian Orthodox Christian thought. It condenses multiple meanings and expresses ideas connected with natural, architectural and celestial space, human and divine existence and sacred time (↗Time and space). Thus, Z. refers to an ever expanding series of locations in the Holy Land from Mount Z. to the Temple; to the city of ↗Jerusalem as a whole (and its heavenly counterpart); all of Judea and the entire land and people of ↗Israel. It is used to refer to the royal city of ↗Aksum, its church, ↗Aksum Ṣəyon, which is believed to hold the original ↗tabot of Z. Furthermore, it refers to every ordinary tabot in the Orthodox churches of the country. Based on the symbolism of the Church as a "womb", Z. often refers to the Blessed Virgin ↗Mary.

The Ethiopian Orthodox Christian concept of Z. is based on the multiple meanings of the term in the ↗Old Testament. Scholars do not agree as to the original meaning of the Hebrew term Ṣiyyōn. While it is first used in the Bible for the Jebusite fortress, following its capture by King David, it becomes identified with the "City of David" and the "City of God". When King ↗Solomon built the Temple in Jerusalem, Z. expanded in meaning to include the Temple and the area surrounding it (Ps 20:3; Joel 4:17, 21). Z. was eventually used as a name for the city of Jerusalem (Is 2:3, 33:4; Joel 3:5) and the land of Judea (Is 10:24, 51:11), the people of Judea (Is 51:16) and the people of Israel as a whole (Jer 31:12; Zech 9:13). Z. is also used figuratively for Israel as the people of God (Is 60:14).

↗New Testament references to Z., where it is given the Christian meaning of God's spiritual kingdom, the heavenly Jerusalem (Heb 12:22; Rev 14:1) are far more rare. Peter refers to Christ as the cornerstone of Z.: "See, I lay a stone in Z., a chosen and precious cornerstone, and the one who trusts in Him will never be put to shame" (1 Pet 2:6).

All these meanings are, of course, included in the Ethiopic Bible. However, Ethiopian tradition draws upon and expands upon these Biblical themes. Most importantly, the concept of Z. in Ethiopia can be said to be linked to Ethiopia's ↗Solomonic dynasty and the tradition that Aksum replaced Jerusalem. According to the ↗Kəbrä nägäśt, the Queen of Sheba (↗Makədda) travelled from her capital city named Däbrä Makədda (upon which Z. was set, Beylot 2008:294f.) to visit King Solomon. After being tricked into having sexual relations with him, she returned home where she gave birth to ↗Mənilək I, who in turn travelled to Jerusalem to visit his father. When Mənilək I prepared to return home, priests among the Israelites sent to accompany him, secretly stole the ↗Ark of the Covenant (also known as The Ark of Z. or simply Z.), it was deposited in Aksum, which thus became the new Z./Jerusalem.

While such traditions seek to date the identification of Aksum with Z. to pre-Christian times, the historical evidence is difficult to substantiate. It is not known precisely when Aksum became associated with Z. or Mary of Z. The church of Aksum Ṣəyon (Maryam Ṣəyon) has a long legendary history and there is an abundance of archaeological evidence concerning the history and development of the church at the site. However, the existence of an ancient church dedication to Maryam Ṣəyon cannot be proven, and is not confirmed in Aksumite documentation. The Liber Axumae, which dates from medieval time seems to mark the period of the flourishing of Z. traditions in connection with the city and the church. The claim that the church of Maryam Ṣəyon held the original Ark of the Covenant is certainly no later than the 16th cent. and probably some centuries earlier.

The identification of Aksum with Z. is the most discussed aspect of the meaning of Z. in the Ethiopian Orthodox church. The association of Z. with the female figure of St. Mary as Mother of God who bore Christ is also the subject of rich symbolism. Mary is identified with the Temple of the Old Testament, where God was present. Just as God dwelled within the sanctuary of the Temple, he dwelt in the womb of the Blessed Virgin. Through the Covenant of Mercy (↗Kidanä məḥrät) Mary symbolizes the new relationship between God and humanity and the new Church of the N.T. in as much as Z. is the Church and the dwelling of God. St. Mary is thus the image of the Church, of Z. and of Jerusalem (cf. Ps 131/32:13; Is 2:3 cf. GrohHymn 199ff.). Thus, the Mälkəʾa Ṣəyon ('Image of Z.') is a Marian hymn which is recited on the Feast of Mary which falls on 21 Ḫədar (Raineri 1989:107). Mary is also compared with the Tent (of the Tabernacle), in which the Tablets of Law were preserved.

Since every Ethiopian ↗church building follows a threefold division which recalls the Temple of Jerusalem, the symbol of Z. is also expressed in church architecture. Within the church, the central inner sanctuary, ↗mäqdäs, symbolizes the heavenly mother as the tradition interprets it as "the body of St. Mary". From the 16th cent. onwards a pair of curtains has been hung to conceal it on the outside of the two main doors in the western wall of the mäqdäs and these are referred to as Anqäṣä Ṣəyon ('Gate of Z.').

Within Ethiopian Orthodox theology ↗Däbrä Ṣəyon ('Mount Z.') refers not only to the sacred sphere and the Virgin Mary, but also by association to the end of time. According to the Däbrä Ṣəyon doctrine Christ will judge the whole world on Mount Z. The heavenly Jerusalem will descend there with a millennial banquet for the righteous (YaqMist I, 204 [tr.]; Wendt 1963: 37–44).

Several rulers of the early Solomonic period including aṣe ↗Yagba Ṣəyon and aṣe ↗ʿAmdä Ṣəyon I included the name of Z. in their ↗names as did ↗Ṣəyon Mogäsa.

Although the ↗Betä Ǝsraʾel have shared the attachment of their Christian neighbours to Z., at least since the 19th cent. this has been expressed not exclusively or even primarily in an attachment to Z. in Ethiopia, but as a desire to "return" to the land of Israel. In the mid-19th cent. a Betä Ǝsraʾel monk, abba Mäḥari, led a group which sought to recreate the biblical exodus crossing the Red Sea and arriving in the Holy Land. Throughout the 20th cent. various outside Jewish leaders have encouraged the Betä Ǝsraʾel to leave Ethiopia to join their brethren in other lands, and particularly post-1948 in Israel. Although not originally supported by Israel or Zionist organizations this dream of a return to Z. became an important part of Betä Ǝsraʾel rhetoric and was eventually fulfilled by dramatic airlifts from the Sudan in 1983-84 and from Addis Abäba in 1991.

The concept of Ethiopia being Z. is also a central idea in the theology of the ↗Rastafarians. To them it is a divinely chosen place; eventually they will be brought out of Babylon (Jamaica) and to Z. (Ethiopia).

Ziq

Z. (ዚቅ) in a broad sense is a collection of verses from hymns such as ↗mälkəʾ, ↗nägś, ↗maḫletä ṣəge, ↗säqoqawä dəngəl, followed by two verses called ↗məlṭan and Z., respectively. Z. is performed in dancing and accompanied by musical instruments (↗aqqʷaqʷam).

Z. is frequently called zəqqətäñña ('the lesser'), to underline its subordinate role to mälkəʾ as well as to other elements of the Liturgy of the Hours (↗Maḫlet) of which Z. has become part. Their sources are psalms (↗Psalter) and liturgical chants of the ↗Dəggʷa, ↗Zəmmare, ↗Mäwaśəʿət and various offices.

The etymology of the term Z. is not clear. Some traditional scholars connect it to zännäqä ('combine, insert', cp. THMDic 1032b). Others derive it from muziqa ('music') or mozzäqä ('play a musical instrument', s. KaneDic 311a), an obvious folk etymology which reveals, however, the perception of Z. as defining the musical quality of the service.

Internal evidence corroborates the belief that the genre of Z. emerged relatively recently. It was elaborated by the traditional scholars of aqqʷaqʷam during the ↗Gondärine kingdom period (according to the local tradition, during the time of ↗Iyasu I), and spread from Gondär to other centres of traditional ↗education. According to one tradition, Z. as the element of the liturgy was introduced to mark the triumphant entrance of the emperor to assist the service. Another tradition claims that Z. was chanted in order to fill the time till the emperor comes, in order to give him the opportunity to participate in the main part of the morning liturgy. In many editions, the collection of Z. is still supplied with the subtitle ዚቅ ፡ ዘአስተጋብእዎ ፡ ሊቃውንተ ፡ ጎንደር (Ziq zäʾastägabʾəwwo liqawəntä Gondär, 'Z. collected by the scholars of Gondär').

The Z. collection varied from school to school, and became fixed as መጽሐፈ ፡ ዚቅ (Mäṣḥafä ziq, 'the Book of Z.') only in the second half of the 20th cent. when it was included into the Ammǝstu ṣäwatǝwä zemawočč (1967/68 A.D.), a collection of all chants (↗Zema) necessary for the celebration of the Liturgy of the Hours, the Eucharist and the Divine Liturgy (↗Qǝddase). The Mäṣḥafä ziq was compiled by the famous 20th-cent. traditional scholar of zema, mämhǝr Kǝfle Wäldä Ṣadǝq, nicknamed "Kǝfle Še" (probably referring to his Šäwan origin). He entitled his work Abba Ǧale, an allusion to the Gondärine church of Däbrä Ḫǝruyan Abba Ǧale Täklä Haymanot, or Addäbabay Täklä Haymanot where Kǝfle taught for many years. The notation (↗Mǝlǝkkǝt) was provided by Kǝfle's disciple mäggabe aʾǝlaf Henok Wäldä Mikaʾel (d. 2004).

Zir Ganela

Z.G. (ዚር ፡ ጋኔላ; fl. 14th–early 15th cent.), is the secular name of the patroness of the de luxe illuminated ↗manuscript of the Four ↗Gospels (New York, The Morgan Library [formerly Pierpont Morgan Library], M.828), which was commissioned for an unnamed monastery where Z.G. was abbess (Heldman 1972; Brown 2006, cat. no. 40). The manuscript is dated "53rd year of Mercy" (1400/01 A.D.). Z.G. is known solely from the colophon (fols. 205v–06va) at the end of the manuscript (cp. Grébaut 1928: 142–44, the numbering system of the folia used by Grébaut differs from the present scheme). The colophon, written in the third person and evidently composed by the scribe (name erased) of the Gospel text, includes a brief summary of Z.G.'s religious vocation as well as a reference to her prior secular life.

Z.G. "rejected the fleeting world and became a nun" and "the mother of many nuns", i.e. she was an abbess. And she was "the daughter of monks", which suggests that her community of nuns was associated with a well-established monastic community that was not adverse to receiving a gift of a Gospel book illuminated with an extensive multiple frontispiece of full-page miniatures. She was "the supporter of saints" and provider of residence to strangers and travellers as well as food and drink to the starving and the thirsty. Such activities suggest that the religious establishment with which she was associated could afford such benefactions.

Z.G. entered monastic life at middle age, as she had two sons, Bädlä ʿAfänä and Tänśǝʾa Krǝstos, both of whom were deacons, and two daughters, Fälasit and Zän Ṣǝläla. The colophon presents the profile of an abbess from the ruling class, as was the common pattern of male monastic leadership (KapMon 45).

Grébaut proposed (1928: 141f.) that Z.G. should be identified with the unnamed daughter of ↗Säyfä Arʿad (and granddaughter of ↗ʿAmdä Ṣǝyon) who became a nun under the name of "Bärbara", at the monastery of ↗Aron at Däbrä Daret in Bägemdǝr (Turaiev 1905: 123, 137f.). This identification is unlikely – the name "Bärbara" is written with four characters of the Ethiopian syllabary, while the space of Z.G.'s erased baptismal name in the colophon takes up the space of six or seven characters. However, among the eponyms in the dating of the colophon (fol. 205vb, lines 3–7) is the contemporary governor of ↗Bägemdǝr, Dǝl Mängǝśa, daughter of aṣe ↗Dawit; which suggests a personal connection between Z.G. and Dǝl Mängǝśa (Kropp 2006).

The full-page miniatures (↗Painting: miniature) with scenes from the life of Christ in Z.G.'s Gospel book follow a distinctive prototype shared with two other Gospel manuscripts of approximately the same date, the ↗Kǝbran Gospels (AfrZion 178f., cat. no. 69), the Gospel book of the Metropolitan Museum of New York (s. Evans 2004, cat. no. 267). These three Gospel books are not closely related stylistically, and where they were produced has not been determined.

Zoli, Corrado

Z. (b. 1877, Palermo, d. 1951, Rome) was a journalist, traveller and colonial administrator. In 1914, he took part in a military expedition to the Libyan region of Fezzan as a correspondent for the Italian newspaper Secolo. In 1920 Z. was involved as Sottosegretario agli Affari Esteri (Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs) in the short-lived government of the Italian Regency of Carnaro.

Z. became formally involved with Italian colonialism towards 1925, when the British government transferred the administration of Jubaland to Italy (↗Italian Somaliland). Z. was then appointed Alto Commissario per l'Oltregiuba (High Commissioner for Trans-Juba), from 16 July 1924 to 31 December 1926. He had prepared for the worst, expecting insurrections and resistance to the Italian presence, yet the transition from British to Italian rule was peaceful. He kept his post as High Commissioner until 1 July 1926 when Oltregiuba was annexed to Italian Somaliland as the Juba region.

Returning to Rome, Z. served in the Ministry of Colonies as general secretary until his appointment as Governor of Eritrea in June 1928. His tenure, however, proved short-lived and was characterized by recurrent criticism. In October 1928 the Ministry of Foreign Affairs criticized Z. for maintaining a hard-line in relation to boundary incidents with Ethiopia. In December of the same year Z. ordered the occupation of part of Dankalia (↗Dänkäl) attracting the anger of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, which was then striving to maintain a policy of collaboration. Z. supported an aggressive form of colonialism, championed by the establishment of the Ministry of Colonies, but at odds with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs' policy of slow and inexpensive peaceful penetration. Despite his expansionist views being consistent with those of the Fascist officials on the rise in Rome, he soon faced growing criticism for the economic mismanagement of the colony.

In December 1929 Z. occupied the ↗Ḥaniš Islands in the Red Sea. His critics, among whom the Ministro delle Colonie (Minister of the Colonies) Emilio ↗De Bono, blamed him for being more concerned with political strategies and military undertakings than with the well-being of the colony, which was growing unruly. Z. had also approved a number of measures aimed at stricter racial separation as well as a policy of continuous land expropriation in the highlands. Both policies contributed to the progressive alienation of the colonized population and the eventual removal of Z. On 16 July 1930, he was replaced by Riccardo Astuto dei Duchi di Lucchesi as Governor.

Back in Italy, Z. continued to publish works on Ethiopia and to collaborate with several newspapers.

Zorzi, Alessandro

Z. (also Giorgi, b. before 1470, d. after 1538) was an Italian traveller and cartographer, probably a native of Venice, where he certainly grew up and was active for a long time. He is known only from a series of autographic writings, including both manuscript sheets and annotated printed pages, with letters, descriptions and maps, preserved in Florence (Biblioteca nazionale centrale, mss. Magl. III 80, 81, 83, 84, now Banco rari 236, in very poor condition; Magl. III 82 is lost). These form a miscellaneous work, known as "Codice Alberico", which touches upon Asia, Ethiopia, the ↗Red Sea, ↗Arabia, Persia (↗Iran) and even the New World. A further autograph of similar content is kept in Ferrara (Biblioteca comunale Ariostea, ms. cl. II 10). Most of these materials were probably meant for a new edition of the famous geographical work by Fracanzano da Montalboddo, Paesi nuovamente retrovati (1st ed. Vicentia 1507), but it can be excluded that Z. ever took part in its preparation (Almagià 1936).

Z.'s own mention (ms. Magl. III 84, fol. 29) bears witness to his activity in 1470, which seems to have lasted until 1538. Handwritten notes by the most erudite Venetian doge Marco Foscarini, whose Della letteratura veneziana includes a brief mention of Z. (Foscarini 1752: 315 n. 269; Id. 1854: 336 n. 1), are the only evidence for Z.'s death in 1560 – which seems to be too late a date. More reliably, Foscarini says that "he travelled for about 20 years visiting Cyprus (twice), Alexandria, England, Spain and Flanders", and "made notes about customs and antiquities and made drawings of the more interesting ones" (CrawItin 24). Probably a man of considerable learning, with a keen interest in the geographical discoveries of his time, he also seems to have been involved in practical matters, succeeding his brother Domenico in the command of a galley in 1528.

From 1470 at least, Z. took notes concerning Ethiopia, as is apparent in his last notebooks (ms. Magl. III 84, fols. 25–58v), which provide geographical information and describe routes to (from either ↗Jerusalem or Alexandria), from, and within that country. To this effect, Z. resorted to Italian and especially Ethiopian monks and pilgrims who visited Venice from the beginning of the 16th cent., thereby fleeing from the Turks (↗Ottoman empire) and proceeding on to their pilgrimage to the major European sanctuaries (s. Fiaccadori 2009: 39). Z.'s "Ethiopian itineraries" were first made known by Marcellino da Civezza (1879: 217–22), then published by Mannoni (1932), Conti Rossini (1943: 175–99) and eventually by Crawford (as CrawItin 107–93), whose readings, though, are not always reliable (s. Fiaccadori 1992: 440, 443). According to the synopsis in CrawItin xiif., the contents can be summarized as follows: 1) fols. 25–28 and 2) fol. 28v*bis*, on the journey from Cairo to North Africa and Abyssinia, and on the course of the ↗Nile, with information received by Z. in written form from Brother Nicola da Oliveto, then residing at San Michele di Murano, where ↗Fra Mauro's Mappamondo had been drawn and was kept; 3) fols. 29–32, on the sources of the Nile, an account said to have been given to Z. in 1470 by an Italian friar who came from Ethiopia, but entirely based on Fra Mauro's map or, possibly, on his preparatory notes for it (Cattaneo 2003 and 2010: 64f. and n. 112, yet mistaking the Italian friar for Brother Nicola); 4) fols. 33–34v, itinerary I, journey from ↗Aksum to Cairo; 5) fols. 35–38, itinerary II, journey from "Barara" (↗Bärara) to Jerusalem made in 1517 by brother Zorgi and narrated to Z. at Venice in 1519; 6) fols. 38v–40v, itinerary III, journey from Bärara, ↗Sawākin and Cairo made about 1518 by brother Raphael and recounted to Z. at Venice in 1522; 7) fols. 41–44, itinerary IV, journey from "Besegai, Ugie and Barara" to Jerusalem made by brother Thomas of "Ganget" and told to Z. at Venice on 7 April 1523; 8) fols. 44–49v, information from Brother Thomas of Ganget and from his companion Antonio (probably the namesake of itinerary V), about various provinces; 9) fols. 49v–53, itineraries V and VI, from brother Antonio of "Urvuar", who went to ↗India and ↗Portugal, tell of Indian trade by way of "Zelo" (↗Zaylaᶜ); 10) fols. 55–58v, itineraries VII and VIII, from another brother Thomas, of "Barara", 4 May 1524, on the branches of the Nile and Southern Ethiopia, also with a hint concerning Andrea ↗Corsali, "a Florentine who is going to print Chaldaean books in the said country" (CrawItin 190f., cp. 23).

Like Francisco ↗Alvares's work, Z.'s itineraries yield a detailed picture of Ethiopia before it was overrun by the armies of ↗Aḥmad b. Ibrāhīm al-Ġāzī ("Grañ") and by the ↗Oromo in the 16th cent., and greatly contribute to a direct knowledge both of local history and geography and of the European – chiefly, but not only, Venetian – interest in and communications with the by then no longer fabulous country of ↗Prester John.

Zoskales

Z. (Gr. Ζωσκάλης, Zōskálēs) was a king whose rule extended to the African shore of the ↗Red Sea towards the middle of the 1st-cent. A.D. He is mentioned only in the Greek ↗Periplus of the Eritrean Sea. According to this text, after passing ↗Adulis, "lying in a deep bay that runs southwards", and the "several small sandy islands" nearby, "called Alaláiou", i.e. the ↗Dahlak, comes "another very deep bay […] some 800 stadies from there, at the mouth of which on the right is a great sandbank, and deeply buried in it is found the obsidian stone, a local produce in that spot alone": Z. "reigns (basiléuei)" precisely in "these parts, from [the country of] the Moschophágoi to the other Barbaria", i.e. from the Eritrean ↗Saḥel, in the orbit of Adulis, down to present-day ↗Somalia (s. Fiaccadori 2004: 105); he is "a miserly man always striving for more, but otherwise upright, and skilled in Greek literacy" (§4f., ed. Frisk 1927: 2 = Casson 1989: 52; Bucharin 2007: 31 [§2]). This passage might conceal an allusion to heavy customs duties levied by Z. (Charlesworth 1926: 64; TadTChurch 22 and n. 2). Z. appears to have been an important supplier of "↗ivory, tortoise shell and rhinoceros horn", mostly from the interior regions, to ↗Egypt and the Roman empire. His kingdom provided a market for various imports, among them, clothing, glass, brass, copper, iron, as well as axes, adzes, knives, drinking vessels, Roman money ("for the resident foreigners"), wine and olive oil. A few of these items were specially meant "for the king [tô dè basileî]", i.e. for Z.: "silverware and goldware fashioned in the local manner; cloaks of cloth [imatíōn abóllai] and and heavy garments [gaunakaí] with no adornment, these things being modest in price" (§6, ed. Frisk 1927: 2f. = Casson 1989: 52, 54; Bucharin 2007: 31 [§2]). In such a businesslike text as the Periplus, the almost gratuitous remark concerning his knowledge of Greek – then the lingua franca of the Red Sea – points perhaps "to something more than a bald commercial connection" (Sutton 1989: 4, cp. Fiaccadori 2004: 136 and Bowersock 2013: 26f., 31f., 45). This is also true of his courtiers, many of whom were probably themselves Greeks or Helenized Egyptians (TadTChurch 21f.).

Z. is more often deemed to have been a king, in fact the earliest known, of Aksum (so, e.g., CRStor 119; Irvine in DicEthBio 217; TadTChurch 18, 21; MHAksum 17, 69, 75, 247; Sutton 1989: 5; Pedroni 1997: 93 n. 15, 99; Seland 2010: 34–39, 46), for ho Axōmítēs, 'the Aksumite (territory)', is styled as mētrópolis immediately prior to the passages above in the same text (§4 ed. Frisk 1927: 1 = Casson 1989: 50; Bucharin 2007: 31 [§2]). However, he was more likely a local ruler exercising power over a good stretch of the African coast and the area of the "Adulites", mentioned in classical sources since the 1st cent. A.D. as distinguished from the "Aksumites" themselves (Fiaccadori 2004: 128 and 137 ; cp. Bowersock 2013: 26 and 33, unduly inclined to extend Z.'s authority to "the Axumite territory" and beyond). This area, in which the inland city of Adulis was found, was then the centre of a special "realm", still described as comparatively autonomous from Aksum, with a governor (árchōn) of its own, by ↗Cosmas Indicopleustes, some five centuries later. With reference to Adulis, he informs on the interlinked but separate harbour and customs installments out to sea at nearby ↗Gäbäza(s) (Topogr. Christ. II, 54ff., ed. Wolska-Conus 1968: 364–68). In keeping with the site's earlier history (s. now Manzo 2012), this accords with Adulis' character and function of "port of trade" (empórion nómimon in the Periplus, §4, ed. Frisk 1927: 1f. = Casson 1989: 50, 52; Bucharin 2007: 30 [§1]), i.e. the sole port and the only entry to a great continental empire with a further inland capital city and king's residence (mētrópolis, s. Fiaccadori 2004: 112, 118ff.).

In no way, but by forcing the evidence, can the (2nd/3rd-century?) king of the ↗Monumentum Adulitanum be considered a "predecessor" of Z. as a ruler "of Adulis and the adjoining territories" (so, instead, Lusini 2009: 71f.; cp. already Id. 2004: 75f. and n. 47). Much later, however, a possible "successor" to Z. is a ngš ('king', actually a kinglet) of GBZ (*_Gäbäza_) called SBL, known in an early-4th-cent. Ps.-Sabaic inscription from Aksum, where he features "with his people" as accepting the authority of nəguś ↗Ousanas I (DAE IV, no. 8 = RIÉ no. 186.10f., on which s. Fiaccadori 2004: 137; cp. Fauvelle-Aymar 2009: 146f.).

Z's name, associated by several authors (but s. HuntGeogr 39) with that of Zä-Ḥaq(ə)le or Zä-Ḥaq(ə)li of the traditional Ethiopian "↗king lists (s. EAE vol. 5)" (CRList 290, list C, no. 35, cp. Godet 1986–87: 28), should rather be traced to Eth. zä- and säqäla, '(royal) tent, camp', a word of likely Cushitic origin (Marrassini 2003: 151; Fiaccadori 2004: 118).

Gianfranco Fiaccadori

Zotenberg, Hermann (Théodore)

Z. (b. 26 January 1834, Prausnitz [Prusice], Silesia, today Poland, d. 1 July 1909, Juan-les-Pins, France) was a librarian and scholar. Born to Jewish parents, Mesulem Zotenberg and Frédérique Langer, he received his secondary education in Breslau. In 1855, he joined the university of this town but was expelled in 1857, reportedly because he did not attend courses.

Z. arrived in France in 1858 and for eight years attended the seminars at the École des Langues Orientales (↗Institut National des Langues et Civilisations Orientales) and the Collège de France. On 11 February 1859, already as doctor, he was admitted into the Société Asiatique, of which he was to become an active member. In 1866, he participated in the foundation of the Revue critique d'histoire et de littérature and was for a short time its director.

In 1863, Z. began a career as a librarian at the ↗Bibliothèque Nationale. He worked first in the catalogue section and, from December 1864, at the department of Oriental manuscripts, as the assistant of Salomon Munk. On 1 November 1875 he was appointed librarian and later conservator. In ca. 1891, Z. was also a corresponding member of the Academy of Sciences of Russia (historical and philological division).

Dissatisfied with his position as the deputy of the conservator of manuscripts, in 1895 Z. left the Bibliothèque Nationale and resigned from the Société Asiatique, being replaced by Octave

Houdas. Thereafter, he retired to live in the south of France, severing any ties with his friends and colleagues until his death. He sold a large part of his library to the Picard bookstore and gave some books and manuscripts to the library of the University of Strasburg, where his friend Theodor ↗Nöldeke was professor.

Z. is prominent for the diversity and depth of his works. An erudite Orientalist, he made frequent trips to European libraries to research in their collections and he compiled catalogues of manuscripts and texts in several languages, including Hebrew, Arabic, Coptic, Syriac (Zotenberg [1874]), Pali, Burmese, Thai and even Chinese. He also published several articles and excerpts from manuscripts, such as on "Barlaam and Josaphat" (1864; ↗Bärälam wäyəwasəf). His activities as translator were also remarkable. His translation of the Persian version of aṭ-↗Ṭabarī's chronicle in four volumes (Paris 1867–74) and edition of the Arabic text of aṯ-Ṯaᶜālibī, History of the Persian Kings (aṯ-Ṯaᶜālibī 1900) remain reference works. Z. was also one of the first scholars to critically analyse the "One thousand and one nights" (Zotenberg 1888).

In the field of ↗Ethiopian Studies, Z. wrote an essay on "Making the history of the Ethiopian language and literature", which earned him the Bordin Prize in 1861. In addition, he compiled a Catalogue des manuscrits éthiopiens (ZotBNat), edited the Chronicle of ↗John of Nikiu (1879–83) and published a document on the ↗Betä Ǝsraᵓel (1867).

Zoz Amba

The site of Z.A. (ዞዝ ፡ አምባ; 12° 23' 34'' N, 38° 09' 51.9'' E, 2,040 m A.S.L.), located ca. 52 km south-east of ↗Ǝbbənät in North Gondär (East Bäläsa wäräda, Zoz qäbäle), is known for its ↗rock-hewn church dedicated to St. ↗George (other dedications: ↗Kidanä məḥrät, ↗Samuᵓel of Däbrä Wägäg, St. Michael). According to tradition, Z.A. was founded by abba ↗Absadi of Azäzo and served as the dwelling place of abba Samuᵓel of Däbrä Wägäg.

The semi-monolithic church is cut into the south face of the ↗amba. It is attached top and bottom to the mother rock, with all sides detached. The south façade is a continuation of the cliff face (10.5 m long x 6.3 m wide x 3.5–5.5 m high, in a cavity of 16.6 x 9 m x 7.3 m). All façades are divided horizontally by two string courses into three levels and vertically by a varying number of pilasters (six on the southern, four on the eastern and western façades); the northern exterior wall is additionally stepped outwards in the central sections and around the door. In the upper level of the southern, eastern and western façades, each unit generated by horizontal and vertical divisions contains a window with an ogee arch. On the southern façade, small, square windows are cut into the lower parts of the first, third and fourth units of the middle level, while four recessed windows – three to the east, with a central, open-work pattée cross, and one to the west – have four corner binders. The southern portal occupies the lowest level of the second unit. On the western façade, a recessed central portal is flanked by two windows with centrally placed cross-shaped open "tracery". Door and windows here, too, have significant corner binders. The portal's lintel, like that of the window to the south, is decorated with elaborate crosses in relief; that of the blind window to the north, with floral motifs. Cross-shaped windows are located in each of the lower divisions of the eastern facade. Windows on the northern façade are blind, except for a cross-shaped opening east of the north portal. The north portal is triple framed and protrudes from a rectangular "buttress" which fills the two lower architectural rows. A small doorway in the south-west corner of the western ambulatory provides access to a grotto, which in turn leads through another doorway to the cliff face. This opening, positioned above a pathway, may originally have served as the entrance to the church. There is a natural well behind a brick wall in the north-west corner of the site. A stone-built betä ləḥem (↗Church buildings) stands opposite the east façade.

Inside, there is a narrow "vestibule", a central barrel-vaulted nave with two flat-ceilinged aisles consisting of three bays, and a sanctuary (↗mäqdäs) flanked by side rooms. The bays are separated by pairs of arch-bearing pillars with bracket capitals. A small south-western side room of 1.4 m² has been hewn in the west end of the aisle, while the north-west corner remains unexcavated. The north and south portals open into the first bay. There are blind arches in the north and south walls above windows and doors. A floriated cross is chiselled on the western side of the northern pillar separating bays two and three. The side rooms are linked by open doorways to both the sanctuary and the aisles.

Before the entrance to the mäqdäs there is a large wooden mänbärä ↗tabot; another, metal one stands beside it to the north. Two wooden portable altars (each 90 cm high and measuring 52 x 51 cm diagonally across the top) – bearing dedicatory inscriptions to St. Gabriel and St. Mary, respectively – are housed outside the mäqdäs. They are decorated with carved geometrical patterns and arches in relief. They were probably consecrated tabotat (Fritsch 2009: 460f., 480f.; Fritsch – Gervers 2007: 14). A small square opening occupies the fourth side. A third such altar has been reported (Lepage – Mercier 2002: 153).

The church bears a number of similarities to Betä Libanos of the ↗Lalibäla complex, which occupies a similar position in the rock face and where the north-western corner of the monument was never excavated. The open nature of the mäqdäs at Z.A. suggests a date preceding that of Betä Libanos, where doorways between side rooms and aisles are blind (Fritsch – Gervers 2007: 14). Further chronological indications of an earlier date for Z.A. are provided by the portable wooden altars, whose presence indicates that the doorless side rooms probably served from the 13th cent. as extensions of the mäqdäs, following a trend established in Coptic Egypt (ibid.; Fritsch 2009: 454, 493f.).

Two fragments of paintings on cloth are affixed to the northern pilaster standing between the vestibule and the nave: a mounted St. George dating to the 17th cent., and a sketchy equestrian saint accompanied by a figure ploughing with oxen. A recent Crucifixion scene is attached to the northern wall of the second bay. Another such painting depicts saints Absadi and Samuʾel, among others, while a recent work of the Virgin Mary and Child hangs from the curtain rod between the first and second bays. The church possesses several ↗crosses, among them the 15th-cent. circular shafted cross and another one a gift of ras ↗Gugsa, as well as a collection of manuscripts which includes Gädlä Kiros and Gädlä Absadi; some loose leaves of an unknown text were reported and photographed by Otto Jäger.

Zula

Z. (ዙላ, Sāho: Zolá; 15° 15' N, 39° 40') is one of the old historical villages on the ↗Red Sea coast of Eritrea. It is located on the coastal plain of the Gulf of Z. (also Z. Bay; Bay of Adulis, also known as Annesley Bay [cp. SalTrav map], or Gulf of ↗Iʈāfálo) about 50 km south of the port of ↗Massawa, on the northern edge of the Ḥaddas River. The Gulf of Z. is famous because of its antique port of ↗Adulis. The ruins of Adulis are found north of the Ḥaddas, the village Z. to the south.

The coast of Z. is the traditional grazing area of the ↗Asaorta (Morin 1999: 88; PollEr 269–71) as well as the ↗Minifire. The first immigrants from the Arabian Peninsula settled in Z. and Iʈāfálo before they migrated to the highland plateaus of ↗Eritrea and ↗Təgray. Archaeological research shows Z.'s importance as an outlet for ↗trade between the Arab peninsula and the Eritrean and Ethiopian hinterland via ↗Akkälä Guzay since at least the third cent. B.C. The oral tradition of the ↗Sāho still refers to the importance of this ancient site (KilHDic 42f.).

The Sāho called the area of Z. ᶜado láy ('clear water'), which is related to "Azuli" (Tgr.) and to the port's name "Adulis", used by the Greeks, Roman-Egyptians, and Byzantines (ᶜUṯmān Ṣāliḥ Sabī 1974: 41f.). Today several villages in the Southern Region near ↗ᶜAddi Q̲äyyəḥ still use the name ᶜAdo Lāy. This also appears in the name of one of Massawa's ancient ruling families, the ᶜAdūlāy, tracing their place of origin to Z. (Miran 2009: 124).

During both the domination of the Turks (↗Ottoman Empire; cp. also ↗Ḥabeš eyaleti) and under the Egyptian ḫidīw ↗Ismāᶜīl, the area of Z. remained under the centralized authority of ᶜad šayḫ Muḥammad Zabībī of the Bet Ḥalīfa.

In 1859 däǧǧazmač ↗Nəguśe Wäldä Mikaʾel offered Z. and the coast to the French without having factual authority over it. Thereafter France claimed authority over Z. without ever having established a post there (RubActa II, 89).

Port of Zula in 1867/68, established by the Napier Expedition; from The London Illustrated News, 21 March 1868

On 20 May 1866 the Ottoman Empire left the port of Massawa to the Egyptians, who then occupied the port of Z. (cp. MunStud 172) in order to prevent the import of arms to Ethiopia (cp. also ↗Egyptian-Ethiopian war; PankEcon 16). The British in their confrontation with aṣe ↗Tewodros II (↗Napier expedition) used Z. as the main station for logistical supply on their way into the Ethiopian highlands (PankEcon 287). The Italians occupied Z. in 1887 (cp. ↗Massawa Governorate) using the region as a springboard for further inland encroachment (Italian ↗colonialism). The affiliation of many of the Asaorta, Đasamó and Dabrimēla with the Ḫatmīya led to their refusal to join the ↗Mahdists (Morin 1999: 84); furthermore raids from the highlands and Massawa made the Asaorta, as well as other Sāho groups such as the Idda, Ṭarūᶜá and Gaᶜasó look for protection from the Italians.

After the death of Muḥammad Zabībī in 1902 and following protracted tensions, the clans living in Z. split, despite their common Sāho ancestry. Each clan established its own chief. The most important clan of Z. is the Bet Šek Maḥmūd. During the Italian administration its head was šayḫ Muḥammad Ḥamīd Muḥammad Yaḥyā, and later šayḫ Maḥmūd Ḥamīd. In addition to the Bet Šek Maḥmūd, Z., which is divided into Big Z. and ᶜAfta, is inhabited by the Bet Qadi, Bet Ḫalīfa, and the Bet Tawkal (MuhTarih 320f; Ciruzzi et al 2002: 202–09). They claim distant origin in the Arabian Peninsula and see themselves vested with varying degrees of religious status. Until today Bet Ḫalīfa has continuously provided religious teachers and šayḫs in the area and is known as a branch of the Malḥīná miᶜimbará clans (the seven holy clans) of the Sāho. However, the Bet Tawkal and Bet Qadi affiliated themselves with ↗Tǝgre-speaking groups in the Sämhar region.

Zuramba

The monastery of Z. (ዙራምባ, also Zur Abba, Zor Amba; 2,855 m A.S.L.) is located on an ↗amba in the South Gondär zone, in the district of ↗Gayǝnt, ca. 20 km to the west of Näfas Mäwč̣a and 57 km east of Däbrä Tabor, close to the village of Sälli. The amba is only accessible from the east, other slopes being vertical drops (AmhChurchD vol. 4, 208).

According to tradition, the monastery was founded during the reign of the Aksumite king aṣe ↗Gäbrä Mäsqäl by abunä ↗Zämikaʾel Arägawi, who was ordered in a vision to found a church on a mountain similar to that of ↗Däbrä Damo. The tradition explains the etymology of the name by tracing it back to the advice the Saint received from an angel (or St. ↗Yared) on how to reach the mountain top: ዙር ፡ አባ ፡ መንገለ ፡ ምሥራቅ (Zur abba mängälä mǝśraq, 'Abba, go round to the east') or ዙር ፡ አምባ (Zur amba, 'go round the amba-mountain'). A different tradition tells that Z. was founded by Gäbrä Mäsqäl, Zämikaʾel Arägawi and Yared following the establishment of the monastery of ↗Ṭana Qirqos. Another version claims that the monastery was founded by St. Yared who had already stayed and taught there for three years before Zämikaʾel Arägawi joined him as his student (Siraq Asnaqe 1994). In his time at Z., Yared is believed to have composed ↗zəmmare and ↗mäwaśəʾət, two of his five liturgical chants. Z. has still the most important ↗zema bet, and priests wishing to teach zəmmare and mäwaśəʾət must complete their traditional zema ↗education at Z. (AmhChurchD vol. 4, 208).

Legends report that during the war with imām ↗Aḥmad b. Ibrāhīm al-Ġāzī some buildings at Z. were destroyed. The monks offered gifts to the imām in order to restore peace. Under aṣe ↗Śärṣa Dəngəl the monastery was rebuilt, allegedly after the plea of the abbot of Däbrä Damo, abba Ləbbawi Krəstos, who personally supervised the renovation (Siraq Asnaqe 1994: 20).

The monastery received considerable attention from Ethiopian rulers, obtaining land and financial support from aṣe ↗Zärʾa Yaʿəqob, Śärṣa Dəngəl and ↗Iyasu I (CrumLand 87). Iyasu even gave lands as far away as Fenṭaro and Dəbba, on the shore of Lake Ṭana, to Z. (ibid. 83). In 1857, when aṣe ↗Tewodros marched to Koreb to capture the rebel ↗Amäde Bäšir, he used Z. as his camp, twice that year.

The main church of Z. monastery is Zur Abba Arägawi Ṣərḥa Aryam; its ↗tabot is dedicated to the Virgin Mary. The present church building with its well-preserved inner roof can be dated to the 17th cent., but some elements in the central part may date back to the 16th cent. The walls of the ↗mäqdäs are decorated with ↗paintings on canvas in the style of the Second Gondärine School, executed in several phases during the 18th cent. They display the pictorial programme typical of this period, with many scenes strongly influenced by European (Jesuit) models (Marx in PICES 14, 215; Mercier 2004: 46). The paintings may have been originally ordered by aṣe ↗Bäkaffa who is represented on the western wall close to the Virgin and Child. One of the painters, known as Häzgel, is known to have also illuminated the 18th-cent. manuscripts BritLib Orient. 790 and 791 (Mercier 2004: 46). Inside the sanctuary, behind the mänbärä tabot, there is a 16th-cent. painting showing Mary flanked by two archangels and St. ↗George of Lydda and St. Basilides (↗Equestrian saints).

The church preserves a fine collection of ↗manuscripts, among them a richly decorated ↗Gädlä sämaʿətat, a ↗Śənä fəṭrät and two illuminated copies of the ↗Täʾammərä Maryam, one dating to the 17th cent. (s. ill. EAE vol. 4, 795ab), the other, most probably locally illustrated between the 19th and 20th cent. The manuscripts of the Tarikä nägäśt ('History of the Kings') and the monastery's "Golden Gospel" (↗Wängelä wärq) preserve several of the land grants donated to Z. (s. CrumLand 37, 58).

Zʷay

Z. (ዝዋይ) is (1) the name of the northernmost lake of the ↗Rift Valley and (2) a town on its south-western shores on the main road from ↗Addis Abäba to ↗Šašämänne (for location s. map for Zay).

Zʷay town

Z. town (7°56' N, 38°43' E, 1,643 m A.S.L.) is a multi-ethnic urban settlement in today's Oromiyaa Regional State (Adamii Tulluu-Ǧido Kombolča wäräda; ↗Adamii Tulluu s. EAE vol. 5) with a population of 43,610 in 2007 (CSA 2007). Amhara, Oromo, Gurage and Səlṭe are the predominant ethnic groups among the population (Meyer – Richter 2003: 119).

The town of Z. was founded at the end of the 1950s by a certain däǧǧazmač Wärqu [Ǝnqu] Śəllase (Meyer 2001: 318). Previously, the area around the town was a marginal market place where ↗Oromo, ↗Səlṭi, Kəstane (↗Soddo) and ↗Zay exchanged woven textiles and finger millet beer for butter, milk, crops, cattle and cotton (cf. VSAe II, 661). Formerly the place was known by its Oromo designation Baatu ('campaign') or Hoora Dambal ('Lake Dämbäl'), or as Haǧǧitti, i.e. the name of an old woman who is said to have once lived there.

During the reign of aṣe Ḫaylä Śəllase I the church of Kidanä Məḥrät was built at Z. (Meyer 2001: 318). In 1962 Z. became the wäräda centre of the ↗Hayqočč-Butaǧira awraǧǧa (Braukämper 1980: 369). The establishment of administrative offices in Z. resulted in a rapid growth of small-scale industries, such as bakeries, hotels, restaurants, fuel stations, garages, etc. In addition, a government high-school and several non-government schools (e.g., the Salesian Centre Don Bosco in 1986), a health post and an orphanage were established. Z. town hosts a state prison and a caustic soda factory. After the administrative re-organization in 1991 Z. lost its administrative status but continues to grow. The economy of the town is characterized by fishing and horticulture. Recently, four flower farms and two horticulture farms were established in the vicinity of Z.

Lake Zʷay

The freshwater Lake Z. (Orom. Laaqii Dambal or ↗Dämbäl Mäqi) is 25 km long, 20 km wide and has a maximum depth of 4 metres. The surface area of the lake is approximately 434 km^2 (MesfAtlas^2 78). The River ↗Mäqi from the Gurage highlands and the River Katar from the Arsi plateau feed the lake and form large deltas covered with ↗papyrus (s. EAE vol. 5) and ambač (Aeschynomene elaphroxylon). The River ↗Bulbula in the south of the lake drains water towards Lake ↗Abyata (Henze 1973: 76f.). Lake Z. is known for its large population of birds and ↗hippopotamuses. Since the end of the 1950s Lake Z. supports a steadily growing commercial fishing industry. The fish potential of the lake is gradually declining due to overfishing. The most common fish is Tilapia Nilotica but there are also Barbus and catfish species (Tesfaye Edetto 1988:17ff.). While Tilapia Nilotica and Barbus are endemic to the lake, catfish was recently brought from Lake ↗Abbayya.

Lake Z. and its five islands are of volcanic origin, as indicated by tuff stone and hot springs on the islands (VSAe II, 648). The south-western islands ↗Däbrä Sina (Amh. also Dəngəl Maryam) and ↗Gälila (Amh. also Täklä Haymanot) are very close to Z. town. Uninhabited from 1972 onwards (Henze 1989:35; Tesfaye 1988:7), since the end of 1990s Gälila now hosts three families. Tulluu Guddoo (Orom. 'big mountain'; Amh. Ṣəyon Maryam) is the largest of the south-eastern islands, which is characterized by two distinctive summits of more than 600 m in height, linked by a broad valley (cf. Henze 1973:76). Today, approximately 1,200 people live in the three major settlements, Durmäğa, Obborubär and Mäsno, around the eastern summit called Wäyzäro (cf. Henze 1989:36; Meyer 2001:319ff.; but cp. Wedekind – Wedekind 1994 for a much lower estimation of population). Islamge, the western summit, with its former village Gumarge has been uninhabited since the 1970s (VSAe II, 659f.; Henze 1989:35). Ṣädeča (also Ṭädeča, from Orom. dhaddacha, 'acacia'; Zay: Aysut; Amh. Abräham), situated to the north of Tulluu Guddoo, is smaller in size but hosts approximately 2,000 people due to a more fertile soil. The smallest of the south-eastern islands is ↗Funduro (from Orom. fula dura, 'in front of'; Zay: Famat; Amh.: Getäsämani or Arba^{c}ətu Ǝnsəsa) with less than 150 people. The Oromo names for the south-eastern islands were already used at the beginning of the 20th cent. (cf. Cohen 1931:78ff.). Every island has a church with its own tabot which also serves as a name for the island (s. above, Henze 1973:78f.; Meyer 2001:319ff.).

Abärra Ğämbäre

A.Ğ. (አበራ ፡ ጀምበሬ, b. 2 September 1928, Adaᵓa, d. 23 March 2004, Stockholm) was a high-ranking public servant, author and scholar of law and legal history.

As a child, A.Ğ. received a basic traditional education from his maternal grandfather, a ↗däbtära, and at various churches in Addis Abäba. During the Italian occupation he was selected to join the Opera Nazionale Balilla (a Fascist youth organization) but his mother Mäᶜaza Baḥru hid him, fearing that he would be taken away to Italy. In 1941, his father Ğämbäre Nurəlləññ, a civil servant who had divorced from his mother, was assigned to Ğimma where A.Ğ. joined the Miyazya 27 School. Starting from the following year, he attended Täfäri Mäkʷännən School in Addis Abäba. He completed secondary level at the age of 19 and continued his education by attending diverse evening classes for many years. In 1962 he obtained a B.A. degree in public administration, and in 1967 a Bachelor of Laws, both from Haile Selassie I University.

A.Ğ.'s first job in 1947 was as junior clerk in the archives section of aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I's private secretariat. In June 1949 A.Ğ. became Executive Secretary of the revived Ethiopia Boy Scout Association and under him many new Boy Scout and Girl Guide troops were formed within a short period. In January 1954 A.Ğ. was appointed Secretary General of the head office of the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox (Täwaḥədo) Church. He then also served as Director of the ↗Red Cross Society. Thanks to his excellent performance the Emperor appointed him deputy administrator of the Haile Selassie I Foundation.

After ten years service as Secretary General of the Council of Ministers' Secretariat, A.Ğ. was appointed Minister of State in charge of legal and parliamentary affairs, in the Prime Minister's Office. This position, which he held until 1974, led to his eight-year imprisonment by the Därg (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council) which A.Ğ. faithfully documented in his book Agony in the Grand Palace, 1974–1982 (2002).

After his release in 1982, he was re-employed in government service as advisor to the Minister of Law and Justice and member of the national šängo (↗Parliament). He also resumed his social commitment to organizations, such as the Red Cross and the Rotary Club.

A.Ğ. began researching on Ethiopian legal history and from 1984 taught at ↗Addis Ababa University. Supported by scholarships at the African Studies Centre in Leiden and Erasmus University of Rotterdam he obtained a Ph.D. in Law in 1998 (publ. 2000). He was extraordinarily productive as an author of scholarly, literary and biographical works (s. bibliography in Abbink 2004).

A.Ğ. died while he was undergoing medical treatment in Sweden. His funeral at ↗Qəddəst Śəllase Cathedral of Addis Abäba was attended by several thousand people.

Abärra Kaśa Ḫaylu

Däǧǧazmač A. (አበራ ፡ ካሣ ፡ ኀይሉ; b. 1896/97, Fəčče, d. 21 December 1936, Fəčče) was an Ethiopian patriot (↗Resistance). He was the son of ras ↗Kaśa Ḫaylu, the older brother of ↗Asfa Wäsän Kaśa Ḫaylu and the son-in-law of ras ↗Śəyyum Mängäša, to whose daughter, ↗Käbbädäčč Śəyyum, he was married.

In 1936 A. participated in the battles of ↗May Č̣äw and ↗Tämben (↗Italian War 1935–36), where, despite his young age, he earned fame as a vigorous leader (MockWar 156). Upon the defeat of the Ethiopian troops, A. went with his brother Asfa Wäsän to organize guerrilla resistance in northern Šäwa; A. went to the area of ↗Sälale, where he had been governor, and his brother to ↗Bägemdər.

Abärra Kaśa Ḫaylu during a visit in Europe; photo ca. 1924, from the private collection of Asfa-Wossen Asserate

On 29 July 1936 the two brothers were the leaders of the patriots who attempted to attack the Italian forces in ↗Addis Abäba. Since the plan did not materialize due to logistic difficulties and poor communication among the patriotic leaders, the two retreated to Sälale where they joined forces.

The Italians consecutively tried to convince the two brothers to surrender peacefully. Rumours started spreading that they had surrendered to the Italians, which was aimed at weakening the other fighters’ moral. Through the intervention of ras ↗Mäsfən Sələši, their cousin, A. abandoned plans to surrender and kept his position in Sälale. Yet, after an exchange of letters between A. and General Tracchia (Salome Gebre-Egziabeher in PICES 3, 301), the two brothers finally submitted themselves to General ↗Graziani after being reassured by the Italians that their lives, as well as those of their followers, would be spared after peaceful submission. This proved to be a fatal mistake. After A. and Asfa Wäsän surrendered on 12 December 1936, they were subsequently killed by the Italians and their bodies publicly displayed in their hometown ↗Fəčče.

A.’s wife Käbbädäčč continued the resistance in the area in the spirit of her husband. She rose to prominence leading an armed militia of her own (Seltene Seyoum 1994: 53), between 1937–38, before she fled with her children to Jerusalem via Sudan.

Abba Yoḥanni

A.Y. (አባ ፡ ዮሐኒ, also Däbrä ᶜAśa, coordinates may be 13°41'30"N, 38°56'35"E) is a monastic site and a ↗rock-hewn church in Qʷälla ↗Tämben, Təgray, near the ᶜAbiy ᶜAddi–ᶜAdwa road (for location s. ᶜAddäqäḥarsi P̣äraqliṭos, EAE vol. 5). According to a local tradition, the monastic community was founded by the hermit abba ↗Yoḥanni in the time of the 15th-cent.

aṣe ↗Yəsḥaq; the place had, however, been known long before for "hermits who dwelled there as numerous as the fish" (Lepage – Mercier 2005: 164) – an association which supposedly gave the massif out of which it is hewn the name Däbrä ᶜAśa ('Mountain of Fish'). The Acts of Yoḥanni (who, if he is to be identified with the metropolitan Yoḥannəs, lived in the 14th cent.), too, mention the earlier presence of hermits on the site. The first mention of A.Y. is in the Life of the mid-14th-cent. saint ↗Aron of Däbrä Daret (ed. Turaiev 1905: 133). The monastic community is still active; ca. 20 monks and hermits live in the caves and huts in the vicinity of the monastery.

The variegated sandstone, three-aisled hall church has four bays and exhibits all the characteristics of 15th-cent. rock-cut architecture: high, flat ceilings with cupolas throughout (height: 6.5–8.6 m, some with a central boss ending in a relief cross), tall and slender cruciform pillars connected by arches, negligible capitals, an open, full-width sanctuary with a flat east wall and three monolithic altars (the central one being over 2.5 m high), and no chancel step. The interior measures ca. 16 x 11 m. Entrance is through a tunnel which descends into the north side of the second bay. A rock fall largely demolished the central and south sections of the westernmost bay, necessitating the construction in the 1950s of a plastered stone wall as the west façade (Gerster 1970: 870). It is pierced by two portals which give onto a ledge, and three small windows. Bay two is narrow compared to the rest. Parts of it are now sectioned off on the east side by heavy cotton curtains, suggesting that bay three had a liturgical affiliation with the sanctuary. The remains of a later, stone-constructed oven stand at the south end of this curtain wall between a pilaster and the south wall of bay three. Niches, large and small, are hewn out of the walls. The quality of the workmanship of the pillars improves from west to east. Six haloed figures, probably apostles, in low relief and linked by a sinusoidal line, decorate the space between the arch and cupola on the east side of the nave and north aisle of the second bay. Small, non-functional, painted wooden bracket "capitals" are attached at a height to some of the pillars. Holes in the cliff face to the north and south of the church indicate hermit dwellings.

The ↗ᶜəqa bet, constructed of stone, stands against the cliff on the north side.

There are at least three sets of wall ↗paintings in the church. The earliest, possibly dating from the 15th cent., has almost entirely disappeared. Some traces are visible under the second set which may be dated to the early 17th cent. They are partly preserved on three pillars and on the north wall of the first bay which was reworked when the western part of the church collapsed, and represent: martyrdom of Jacob (Intercisus, or the Apostle), the Archangel Raphael (accompanied by a ↗sälam), the saints: ↗Kiros (s. ill. in EAE vol. 3), Yoḥanni, ↗Täklä Haymanot and ↗Ewosṭatewos, Samuʾel (of Waldəbba?), ↗Gäbrä Mänfäs Qəddus, Abaydo (disciple of Yoḥanni), and 13 figures, labeled in the inscription as the 12 Apostles. Another inscription mentions the painter of this set, Giyorgis. The Crucifixion and the Anastasis on the western side of the central monolithic mänbärä ↗tabot are executed in the same style. The third set, painted in the late second ↗Gondärine style of paintings, represents the ↗Trinity, St. ↗George, St. ↗Mary with Child, Täklä Haymanot, Gäbrä Mänfäs Qəddus and abba Yoḥanni with wings (an attribute recalling an event told in his Vita, s. ed. Basset 1885: 448).

On the north side of the southern altar a schematically treated figure said to be St. ↗Anthony is dated by Mercier to the 15th cent. (Lepage – Mercier 2005: 164ff.). A similar figure on the south side of the north altar is too worn to be recognizable. The north altar, currently in use, is surmounted by a relatively recent wooden cabinet and bears a large incised X-shaped cross on the west side.

The remnants of two tablet-woven, three-panel, brown cotton ↗mägaräğa (probably 19th cent.), decorated with motifs based on the cross, are integrated with plain weave of similar hues and suspended across the north aisle and nave between the second and third bays. The widest remaining fragment is 39 cm in width, the longest, 2.9 m long; originally, they would have measured up to 5 m in length and hung across the full width of the church, as at ↗Wäqen Gäbrəʾel today.

Gerster (GerKir^{2} 150) mentions a collection of crosses preserved in the church, among others three shafted ↗crosses, the oldest being of "Lalibäla" type.

ᶜAbdallāh b. Muḥammad b. Yūsuf al-Hararī

Šayḫ ᶜA. (ᶜAbdallāh al-Hararī; b. 1910 [?], Harär, d. September 2008, Beirut) was a prominent Muslim leader in Ethiopia and beyond, a religious scholar and the founder of the international Association of Islamic Charitable Projects, also known under the designation al-Aḥbāš.

He received an Islamic education in different parts of Ethiopia and grew to be a firm believer in Islamic-Christian co-existence. Between 1941 and 1948 he became involved in the struggle over the leadership of ↗Harär's Islamic community which revolved around two issues: (1) in 1941 a group of Harari-Islamic nationalists re-established a local modern school in the spirit of Wāhhabī fundamentalism. A few months later, the Ethiopian authorities closed the school and sent those involved either to prison or into exile. (2) Between 1946 and 1948 the same Islamic nationalist circles in Harär collaborated with the Somali nationalist movement which planned to secede Harär from Ethiopia and annex it to Somalia. Also this plan was baffled by the Ethiopian authorities and its leaders were punished. In both cases, the defeated group accused šayḫ ᶜA. of being instrumental in helping the Ethiopian establishment. Šayḫ ᶜA. and his followers continue to deny any anti-Islamic collaboration, pointing to the fact that in 1948 ᶜA. himself was suspected by the Ethiopian imperial regime, jailed for a time, and then forced to leave the country.

After leaving Ethiopia, šayḫ ᶜA. spent some time in Mecca and, in late 1948, in Jerusalem from where he moved to Damascus. In 1950 he moved to Beirut where he resided until his death. In 1983 he inherited the leadership of a local Islamic association and gradually turned it into an international movement called Association of Islamic Charitable Projects. By that time he had gained fame as a thinker, author – he had published some 20 books –, a muftī, and a preacher. His main message remained the one that he had brought from Ethiopia and was centrally relevant to the Lebanon, that of Islamic-Christian co-existence. He soon won the indirect support of the Lebanese Christian establishment and various Islamic publics as well as the support of the Syrian government. The Association flourished in the Lebanon. It has issued a monthly, Manār al-Hudā, since 1992, and has had its own radio station, Nidāʾ al-maᶜrifa, since 1998. Its members are very active on the internet and have websites that spread the word of šayḫ ᶜA. and his polemics with their rivals. Its messages, always based on moderate interpretations of Sunnī Islam, often provoked its rivals among local fundamentalists and the global Wāhhabī circles.

The worldwide Lebanese diaspora helped the Association of Islamic Charitable Projects to become a transnational association in the 1980s. Its main centre in Europe is in Germany, and active branches spread throughout most of Western Europe. The association also has branches in Indonesia, Malaysia, India, Pakistan, Tajikistan, Syria, Jordan, Egypt, Canada, Switzerland, France, Ukraine, The Netherlands, Sweden, Australia, and the USA. They are also active in Africa, notably in Nigeria and Ghana, where they try to create a bridge between local Muslims and those of the Middle Eastern core. By the end of the 1990s, the Association of Islamic Charitable Projects had become one of the best organized transnational Islamic associations in non-Islamic countries, claiming nearly a quarter of a million members. The movement is composed of Muslims from various other ethnic and linguistic backgrounds. The number of Ethiopian members is not known, but there are not many. For his followers ᶜA. is one of the greatest-ever scholars of Islam, and they refer to him with such titles as al-imām al-muḥaddiṯ, or muḥaddiṯ al-ᶜaṣr, namely the leader of ḥadiṯ scholarship and the ḥadiṯ scholar of our time. ᶜA. himself took pride in his all-Islamic and allegedly Arab background but at the same time, he also took full pride in his Ethiopian identity. He returned to Ethiopia three times, in 1969, 1995, and 2003. It is also apparent that his many followers identify him with what Ethiopia symbolizes for the more moderate Muslims, an Islam, capable of co-existing with the Christian "other".

Lieutenant-General ᶜA.A. (ዐቢይ ፡ አበበ; also ዐብይ ፡ አበበ, ᶜAbəyy Abbäbä); b. 21 July 1916 Addis Abäba; d. 23 November 1974 Addis Abäba) was a high ranking politician and official serving in various positions in the government of aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I.

ᶜA.A. was the son of liqä mäkʷas Abbäbä Aṭnaf Sägäd, who died in the battle of ↗Sägäle, and wäyzäro Bərqənäš Bäšah. He attended the ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I Secondary School and later trained at ↗Holäta Military Academy.

ᶜA.A. took part in the Battle of ↗May Č̣äw and was active in the ↗resistance movement against the Italian occupation until the Emperor called upon him to join him in exile. He thus left Ethiopia for Sudan and proceeded to Britain in June 1938.

On 26 April 1942 ᶜA.A. married the daughter of the Emperor, ↗Ṣ́äḥay Ḫaylä Śəllase, who died shortly after. ᶜA.A. was then married Amaräčč Näsibu, the daughter of däǧǧazmač ↗Näsibu ᶜA.A. served as a second lieutenant until 1941 and then as chamberlain of the Emperor until 1941, when he became governor-general of ↗Wälläga, 1942–43. He then served as commander of the 1st Army in 1943, Minister of War from 1943 to 1946, Acting Minister of War and Commander of the 1st Army from 1946 to 1948, Vice-Minister of War from 1948 to 1949, Acting Minister of War from 1949 to 1952 and Minister of War from 1952 to 1955.

When ᶜA.A.'s supporter ṣäḥafe təᵓəzaz ↗Wäldä Giyorgis Wäldä Yoḥannəs fell from grace in April 1955, because of his too modernist leanings, ᶜA.A. was sent as ambassador to France. From 1957 to 1959 he was Minister of Justice and from 1959 acted as the last ↗əndärase in Eritrea until Eritrean autonomy was abolished in 1962.

In December 1960 ᶜA.A. played a decisive role in restoring the authority of Ḫaylä Śəllase I during the ↗Coup d'état of 1960 (s. EAE vol. 2, 1081f.). Responding to the underlying causes of the failed coup attempt, ᶜA.A. together with ↗ᶜAśratä Kaśa, Märᶜəd Mängäša, ↗Täᵓammərat Yəggäzu and ↗Gərmaččäw Täklä Ḥawaryat formed a group, later known as the "Stolypinists", and worked out an aide-mémoire for Ḫaylä Śəllase, advocating reforms. It called, among other things, for the election of the Prime Minister by the ↗parliament, a comprehensive ↗land reform and extensive autonomy of the provinces. As a result, ᶜA.A. was sidelined by Ḫaylä Śəllase and made President of the Senate, a largely ceremonial post, which he held from 1963 to March 1974.

ᶜA.A. was then made Minister of Defence between March and 28 July 1974, although, prior to this, he had been designated Prime Minister by the Emperor. Shortly after, he was arrested in his residence and, together with other officials, shot by members of the Därg (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council) on 23 November 1974.

Abraha François

Abba A. (አብራሃ; b. 2 April 1918, Asmära, d. 26 March 2000, Rome) was a Catholic bishop. His father was blatta François Hasän, a descendant of a noble Sudanese family, and his mother, Śəllas Abba Simbo from Käfa, was a former slave rescued by the Italians in ᶜAsäb.

A. was orphaned at the age of two, when his parents died of an epidemic of anthrax (1919–20). In 1931, he entered the seminary in ↗Kärän and in the following year he was sent for further education to the ↗Vatican. On 28 May 1941 he earned a doctorate in philosophy with a dissertation entitled Anthropologia Agostiniana and five years later he received a doctorate in Theology from Pontifical Urbaniana University. A. attended courses in medicine and studied sacred music with the aim of applying the European notation system to Gəᶜəz hymnody. On 2 March 1944 he was ordained priest and, on 27 March 1946, on completion of his studies, he left the Collegio Etiopico (↗Santo Stefano dei Mori).

Upon his return home, A. was appointed teacher at the Seminary, first in Addis Abäba, then back in Rome along with a group of Ethiopian seminarians. Following bishop ↗Yaᶜəqob Gäbrä Iyäsus's turbulent replacement from the Exarchate of Asmära on 14 February 1956, A. was nominated Vicar Delegate. On 8 October 1961, he was consecrated bishop and first Eparch of Asmära, at Kidanä Məḥrät Cathedral by bishops ↗Ḫaylä Maryam Kahsay and ᶜAśratä Maryam Yämərru (Mojoli 1973: 78, 177).

Well travelled and with a keen interest in African countries, A. knew perfectly Italian, English, French, as well as Gəᶜəz and Latin. Alongside his pastoral duties, he was a permanent member of the staff at the Theological Institute in Asmära where he taught Philosophy and Theology for more than 20 years. He was also dedicated to ↗education and under his tenure around 70 elementary schools were opened in various places in Eritrea.

A. was a fervent champion of the Oriental identity of the Ethiopian Church and especially of the Gəᶜəz Rite and promoted inter-religious dialogue. He participated in the Second Vatican Council (1962–65). Politically engaged, he denounced the massacres and abuses against un-armed civilians committed by the Ethiopian army. He openly protested after the assassination of 120 innocent civilians who had taken refuge in the mosque of Bəskədira on 30 November 1970, and the following day of 714 people massacred in ᶜOna. A. resigned from his office on 17 July 1984. He died in Rome after a long illness and was buried in Asmära.

Abret

A. (አብሬት, also Yabret) is the name of a village in the ↗Čaha district of ↗Gurage and a centre of traditional mystical ↗Islam (s. also ↗Islamic brotherhoods) which played a crucial role in the spread and strengthening of the religion in southern Central Ethiopia.

The historical roots of the ↗zāwiya of A. may be found in the first half of the 19th cent. during the early phase of Islamization and Islamic revitalism in the region which reached its apex in the 1880s. The predecessor of the A. tradition was sayyid Ibrāhīm, a son of the highpriest of the Gurage thunder spirit ↗Božžä, gʷetakʷəyä ('lord of the spirit representatives') Sərgʷariye from the Ǝntežära clan of Ǝnor (s. ↗Ǝnnämor). According to legend, already in his childhood he opposed the Gurage traditional ↗religion (s. also ↗Waq, ↗Dämʷamʷit). As a youngster he converted to Islam, leaving the office of gʷetakʷəyä to his younger brother. He joined Muslim teachers in Ayand (Čaha) and Qonnät (Gʸeta [s. ↗Geto]). Sayyid Ibrāhīm was never able to gather a larger following (oral informants). He is commemorated as a wäliye ('holy man') and designated as yäqubba abba [or gʷeta] ('owner/father [or 'lord'] of the grave') after his mausoleum (s. below; oral informants).

The founder of the zāwiya of A. was sayyid Bušrā (also Bušura, Šamsaddīn al-Abretiy, b. 1877, Ǝnangära, d. 1919, A.), the son of sayyid Ibrāhīm and Aseyat. After the death of his father he grew up with the supporters of damo Hamdeno of Gʸeta, who had converted to Islam voluntarily during the ğihād of ↗Ḥasän Ǝnğamo, and was able to protect him from the still strong non-Muslim branch of the Ǝntežära clan. After having studied with different ᶜ*ulamā*ᵓ in western Gurage, sayyid Bušrā completed his Islamic education in ↗Wäläne, went into retreat in Ğimma and then spent three years in Dana (Wällo) for further studies under šayḫ Šihabaddīn Aḥmad until he was given the title of ↗ḫalīfa of the Qādirīya order (oral informants; Nuredin Delil 2007: 20; Mubarek Muzew Muhammad 2010: 26). Gurageland he first taught in the small mosque of šayḫ ᶜAli in A. The Čaha warriors Umär Färda and Ğewhar Ganč̣ena, against the will of the gʷetakʷəyä, built a mosque near Ǝnangära, but after šayḫ ᶜAli's death sayyid Bušrā bought the šayḫ's land in A. and established the zāwiya there. For those Gurage converted to Islam, the šayḫ of A. was now able to take over the central position held before by the gʷetakʷəyä, i.e. receiving voluntary gifts during annual feasts (Božžä cult: nəpʷär, A.: mawlid) in exchange for spiritual protection. Moreover, the šayḫ acted as a charismatic healer and diviner. An ordeal in which sayyid Bušrā had to drink snake venom without being harmed was interpreted as proof that he still had the power of a gʷetakʷəyä. Thus, he was given the leading role in the assembly of the Säbat bet Gurage in ↗Yäğoka which was before led by the highpriest of Božžä (oral informants; Mubarek Muzew Muhammad 2010: 15ff., 30f.; ShGurage 191–94, Shack is wrong in stating that it was Budallāh who drank the venom).

Sayyid Bušrā's time, after the defeat of the ğihād in 1889, was characterized by the establishment of Ethiopian rule and Orthodox Christianity in the region. This was paralleled, however, by an increase in the number and quality of local ᶜulamāʾ, a further spread of Islam, and an intensification of trans-regional Islamic networks. A. had a very active role in this development. Additional to the connection to Dana, e.g., sayyid Bušrā established close relations with sulṭān ↗Abbaa Ğifaar II of Ğimma. He encouraged the copying and collecting of Islamic books in A. and himself authored Arabic manuscripts, such as al-Asrār as-Sāriya ('Travelling Secrets') and a collection of five ↗Manzuma (Mubarek Muzew Muhammad 2010: 39).

The fame of A. reached its peak under sayyid Budallāh (Budälla, also called Abretiye, Abba Ramuz [after his son Ramuz], yabret getočč or šayḫočč, b. 1907, Yəsfa-Aṭaṭ, Ǝža, d. 20 April 1978 [?]). He was the eldest son of sayyid Bušrā and Abida šayḫ Saᶜīd. Sayyid Budallāh received his Islamic education in Azäkäre (Gʸeta) and other places in Gurage country. His father died when Budallāh was still young. One year later, however, he began to take on his father's role.

Sayyid Budallāh received an advanced Islamic education in Dana and, thereupon, was acknowledged as Qādirīya ḫalīfa. However, Abretiye was also open to influence from the Tiğanīya brotherhood, due to his family's good relation with Ğimma and his second wife being a daughter of sulṭān ↗Abbaa Ğoobir (ShGurage 193f.). His wide knowledge, creativity and spiritual inspiration are documented by Arabic manuscripts and printed texts from his hand, such as the Šawāhid ('Things Witnessed'), the Misbaḥa ('Rosary'), the Matḥaf ('Precious Gift', the biography of his father) and a collection of diverse texts, Mağmūᶜa (Mubarek Muzew Muhammad 2010; Nuredin Delil 2007).

Beside, and probably beyond, šayḫ ᶜIsa of ↗Qatbäre, with whose following his own supporters competed, sayyid Budallāh became the most influential Islamic leader in southern Central Ethiopia. Among his followers he was considered a living saint and a great healer. Moreover, curative power was ascribed even to soil from A., especially when taken from the tracks of the šayḫočč or his white mule (oral informants; cp. ShGurage 193f.).

The court in A., where sayyid Budallāh judged according to the ↗šarīᶜa and ↗customary law ([y]ägurage qiç̣ç̣a), was not only frequented by Muslims but also by Christians and adherents of Gurage religion. Thus, for all Gurage Abretiye fully attained and even enhanced the spiritual prestige and political importance inherited from the priestly lineage of the Božžä spirit. Like his father, he also led the Yäǧoka assembly.

During the Italian occupation sayyid Budallāh was acknowledged as official qāḍī of the Gurage and opened an office in ↗Wälqiṭe. He was then also engaged in the negotiations with the British Sudanese liberation army in Gurage with whom he communicated in Arabic. During the reign of Ḫaylä Śəllase I Abretiye was able to further develop his central position. He was invited by the Emperor on several occasions and is even said to have been his adviser is some matters. He is especially remembered for his mediation between the central authorities and the many outlaws active in the region. Thanks to frequent donations from his followers Abretiye and his family were able to accumulate considerable wealth which was partially redistributed. He bought additional land from Amhara ↗mälkäñña around A. and had three houses in Addis Abäba. In 1970 he undertook the ḥaǧǧ (oral informants; Shack – Habte Mariam Marcos 1974: 129, nn. 6, 7; Hasselblatt 1979: 60).

After the Revolution, in 1974, sayyid Budallāh was harassed by ↗zämäča students who accused him of being a feudal lord (Hasselblatt 1979: 67). Four years later, during the Red Terror, the šayḫočč, his son Ḥamza Saᶜīd and his driver were abducted by Därg (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council) officers. The regime never admitted to having killed Abretiye and many of his followers until today refuse to believe in his death (oral informants).

The zāwiya of A. can be described as a little "town". It has had its own electric generator at least since the 1960s and consists of the small mosque of sayyid Bušra, a large ḥadra mosque, the house of Abretiye, now used as a kind of shrine or museum, and hundreds of dwellings (ḫalwa) for pilgrims and residents grouped around an open field with a separate minaret, donated by Ḫaylä Śəllase, in its midst (s. ill.). Another place of pilgrimage is the mausoleum of sayyid Ibrāhīm and the surrounding graveyard of the ᶜulamāʾ of A. in Qubba, Ǝnangära, constructed in a unique style by sayyid Budallāh (Bustorf, in preparation).

Today, A. continues to be an important centre of Islam in the region, the mawlid in the Month of Rağab attracting hundreds of thousands of participants yearly. Many followers, especially Gurage, Səlṭe (↗Səlṭi) and ↗Oromo, stay in A. during ↗Ramaḍān or the great Islamic ↗feasts. A considerable group of mystics lives permanently in and around the zāwiya. It is administered by the sons of sayyid Budallāh and his closest senior followers. The gʷetakʷəyä branch of the Ǝntežära clan maintains the shrine of Božžä in Ǝnangära until today.

Abū Bakr

Kūšam A.B. (ابو بكر; d. ca. 1530, Däwaro) was an ↗amīr and horseman, married to the sister of sulṭān ↗Abū Bakr b. Muḥammad b. Āzar of ↗ᶜAdal.

During the conflict between ↗Aḥmad b. Ibrāhīm al-Ġāzī ("Grañ") and the ↗Walašmaᶜ sulṭān, A.B. sided with his brother-in-law, taking over the command over his troops while the sulṭān campaigned in the Somali territory. When the two armies met at Zaᶜka (ᶜAdal), A.B. fled with his comrades to ↗Harär. There, Aḥmad Grañ besieged A.B. for a period of time, finally defeating him during a sortie at Šamanǧūd. This series of events took place between 1520 and 1525 and enabled Aḥmad Grañ's entry into Harär.

Subsequently, A.B. seems to have changed allegiance, as in 1528 he is listed as a follower of Aḥmad Grañ. In the Muslim campaign against ↗Ifat – still before the beginning of the ↗ǧihād proper – A.B. was wounded by the renegade Wāšū ᶜUṯmān and only narrowly escaped death. He recovered quickly enough to participate in the battle at ↗Šəmbəra Kʷəre in March 1529 and later raids.

During the first combats in ↗Däwaro, A.B., accompanied by four warriors, left his unit and met a Christian troop in a valley. His companions fled the numerically much superior enemy; A.B. chose to confront the adversaries on his own and was killed. He was buried in Däwaro.

Despite his initial enmity to Aḥmad Grañ, A.B. is portrayed in ᶜArabfaqīh's ↗Futūḥ al-Ḥabaša as a pious, ascetic and religious warrior and a staunch defender of ↗Islam. According to this source, A.B. prayed to God that he could die in the ǧihād; an angel of death appeared to A.B. during the Battle of Šəmbəra Kʷəre and announced that his request would be granted; during his final fight, A.B. called out to God to grant him the grace of ↗martyrdom.

Abyssinia

A. was a short-lived weekly publication produced in Great Britain by the ↗League of Nations Union, an influential internationalist association set up in 1920. The publication, which ran from 20 November 1935 to 11 March 1936, at the height of international excitement generated by Italy's invasion of Ethiopia (↗Italian war 1935–36), was founded to support League of Nations sanctions, and appeared as a supplement to the Union's longer-established journal Headway.

A. had a weekly circulation of 90,000 copies. Despite its title it published little about Ethiopia, but concentrated on the latter's relationship with the League, demanding the extension of sanctions to include oil, and opposing the ↗Hoare-Laval plan.

A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS IN ACTION

No. 7
JANUARY 8, 1936

OIL MUST BE BANNED

A CHALLENGE THE LEAGUE
DARE NOT EVADE

THE world must face the oil challenge. Especially is the duty imperative for the League of Nations and all its Member States.

Italy, without home supplies of oil (or coal) is waging a war of conquest whose success depends wholly on the mechanical superiority of her forces. Victory may be beyond her reach, in any case. Certainly she cannot win if her army is immobilised. She needs oil in vast quantities to move much of her sea transport, and all her supply lorries, her armoured cars, her tanks, her aeroplanes.

Her oil supplies come 90 per cent. from League countries and 10 per cent. from the United States. The League is able to stop the war by stopping sales of oil to Italy. The one necessary condition is that the United States, the world's greatest producer of oil, shall not step in and make up the deficiency caused by League action. President Roosevelt and Congress are fulfilling that one condition. American oil exports to Italy will be restricted by law to their peace-time volume.

The next move is the League's. Do League Members mean what they say? Are they faithful to the Covenant? The Covenant pledges them to sever all "trade relations" with the aggressor.

At Geneva on November 6th the League Committee of Eighteen declared that the embargo on key exports to Italy should be extended to:—

Petroleum and its derivatives, by-products and residues;

Pig-iron; iron and steel (including alloy steels), cast, forged, rolled, drawn, stamped or pressed;

Coal (including anthracite and lignite), coke and their agglomerates, as well as fuels derived therefrom.

The Committee advised the enforcement of the embargo "as soon as the conditions necessary to render it effective had been realised." It declared that if the replies from the Governments and the information received warranted such action it would propose a date for bringing the embargo into force.

The proposal was made by Canada. Some weeks later the Canadian Government announced that its delegate had acted on his own initiative. But, contrary to misrepresentation attempted by the League's enemies, Canada was not opposed to the plan. And League Members generally approved it. But there was delay. France was the chief obstacle.

At the end of November, when the Committee should have met to carry the matter a stage farther, M. Laval asked for a postponement. The meeting was put off until December 12th. In the interval came the Hoare-Laval "peace plan." The plan had a direct connection with the oil embargo. In his House of Commons speech on December 19th, after his resignation, Sir Samuel Hoare explained:—

About a fortnight ago it was clear that a new situation was about to be created by the question of the oil embargo. It seemed clear that, supposing an oil embargo were to be imposed and that the non-member States took an effective part in it, the oil embargo might have such an effect upon the hostilities as to force their termination. Just because of the effectiveness of the oil sanction, provided that the non-member States had a full part in it, the situation immediately became more dangerous from the point of view of Italian resistance. From all sides we received reports that no responsible Government could disregard, that Italy would regard the oil embargo as a military sanction or act involving war against them.

M. Laval gave a similar account of his motives and hesitations to the Chamber of Deputies on December 28th. He said:—

Then, remaining always within the limits of economic sanctions, one day—at the request, I believe, of the Canadian delegate and not of the British Government—the question of sanctions applied to oil, iron, copper, and coal was put on the agenda. It happened that I was delayed here, perhaps to reply to an interpellation. If I could have escaped I should have been glad to go to Geneva. I was obliged to ask for an adjournment out of deference to the Parliament of my country. The meeting of the committee was postponed in full agreement with the British Government. Before it took place Sir Samuel Hoare passed through Paris, and we had conversations. You know what followed. We considered that before taking a measure whose consequences for some of us were unpredictable, the moment had come to approach both the Abyssinian and the Italian Governments.

Adadi Maryam

A.M. (አዳዲ ፡ ማርያም, also known as Anfar Maryam; 8°31' N, 38°14' E) is a monolithic church in Soddo ↗Gurage, ↗Šäwa, situated about 65 km south-west of ↗Addis Abäba and 18 km north of ↗Mälka Qunṭure. It is one of the southernmost ↗rock-hewn churches of Ethiopia.

A.M. is an approximately square structure (19.5 x 16 m) with an external pillared ambulatory, encircled by narrow trenches (ca. 5 m deep) and linked at the corners with the mother rock by slightly curved buttresses. The eastern part of the structure (about a third of the length of the monolith) has never been fully excavated.

The church is accessible from two sides. From the north, two stairways, eastern and western, lead by way of the trench and a passage between the pillars to the eastern and western parts of the ambulatory, respectively. From the north-west is a winding stepped ramp leading to the western courtyard, while from the south-west a modern rock-hewn stairway descends to the same.

The western part of the ambulatory, wider than the three others (13 x 4 x 2.6 m), is used as the qəne maḫlet (↗Church buildings). The church has three entrances, from the south, north and west and the interior is divided into two rooms. The western room, relatively narrow (8 x 2.5 m), and lit by two western windows, one on each side of the door, serves as the qəddəst. The eastern room, separated from the western by two pillars and three wooden doors is used as the sanctuary (↗mäqdäs). It houses two monolithic altars and has two windows which open to the southern and northern parts of the ambulatory. Stone carvings, some imitating the architectonic elements, can only be seen on the ceilings in the qəne maḫlet (bands descending onto the pilasters), in the qəddəst (two large crosses) and in the mäqdäs (a small, shallow cupola).

The age of the church cannot be established with certainty. Local tradition ascribes the foundation to King ↗Lalibäla. The structure clearly postdates the ↗Lalibäla complex and might be connected with the movements of some monastic groups to the south at the end of the 14th and in the 15th cent. This assumption seems to be confirmed by the similarity of A.M.'s plan to the churches of ↗Ǝšätän Maryam (upper) and Qanqanit Mikaʾel near Lalibäla.

According to local priests, A.M. is mentioned in the Mäṣḥafä ↗ṭefut as one of the several land grants (↗gʷəlt) given by aṣe ↗Zärʾa Yaʿəqob to ↗Amba Gəšän, and in the pseudo-historical narrative the Zəkrä ṣadəq kept in the Library of the Patriarchate.

Alvares records that the court of aṣe ↗Ləbnä Dəngəl stopped at a rock-hewn church in 1523 which may have been A.M. (BeckHuntAlvar 397–401). An unpublished biography of ras ↗Gobäna Dač̣i (Yäras Gobäna tarik) credits the ras with building the church in 1876. This, however, must refer to the story that A.M. was filled up with earth and stones in the 16th cent. and uncovered in the 19th cent. (cp. Stitz 1975: 18, 24; Shinn – Ofcansky 2004: 346).

UNESCO lists A.M. as a world heritage site. A Swiss team conducted restoration works on the church in 1996–98.

Adamii Tulluu

A.T. (Orom. 'Euphorbia hill'; አዳሚ ፡ ቱሉ; 7°52' N, 38°42' E; 1,636 m A.S.L.) is a town approximately 15 km south of ↗Zʷay in the A.T.-Ğido Kombolča wäräda (Məsraq Šäwa Zone; Oromiyaa Regional State) on the all-weather road from Addis Abäba to Awasa. Today, A.T. has approximately 9,000 inhabitants (CSA 2007). The town is called A.T. after its most prominent landmark, a hill north of the town which is overgrown with ↗Euphorbia candelabrum.

A.T. was founded by the German farmer ↗Götz and his companion Hans Jannasch in 1904/05 after they were given land for farming in the ↗Arsi region by aṣe ↗Mənilək II (Bairu Tafla 1981: 164, 171). Götz first built his farm house at the top of the "Euphorbia hill" near his ostrich farm (Meyer 2001: 318). Soon afterwards, runaway slaves started to settle at the bottom of the hill (Zahn 1951: 159) and thus laid the foundations of the later town. In the 1920s, another companion of Götz, Hakim ↗Zahn, built a macadamized road from A.T. to the Moğo railway station to connect A.T. with the main line in central Ethiopia (Bairu Tafla 1981: 172; Zahn 1951: 171ff.). Since then, Götz's farm house in A.T. was used sporadically as a stop-over by European travellers and scientists.

A.T. expanded during the Italian occupation when it served as a fortress. Between 1964 and 1969 it functioned as the capital of the ↗Ḥayqočč-Butağira awrağğa. Today, one of Ethiopia's agricultural research centres is based in A.T. (Lindahl 2005; Fisseha Teshome Mengistu 2009: 92).

^{c}Addäqäḥarsi Ṗäraqliṭos

^{c}A.Ṗ. (ዓደቀሓርሲ ፡ ጰራቅሊጦስ, also ^{c}Addiqäḥarsi, ^{c}Addi Qäḥarsi) is an archaeological and religious site in the present day wäräda ↗Gulo Mäk̲äda, East Təgray. The site is located at half-way between the area of ↗^{c}Addigrat and ↗Däbrä Dammo; it was visited and briefly mentioned by Paul Henze in 2005 and 2007 (Henze 2011: 273ff.) and recorded in detail by Denis Nosnitsin in 2010 (s. Nosnitsin 2013: 3–15; also Ancel 2013: 91–105). ^{c}Addi Qäḥarsi may be a contraction of ^{c}Addi Däqqi Ḥarsi ('country/village of the children of Ḥarsi'); Ṗäraqliṭos, from Greek Paráklētos, means in Gə^{c}əz 'Holy Spirit'.

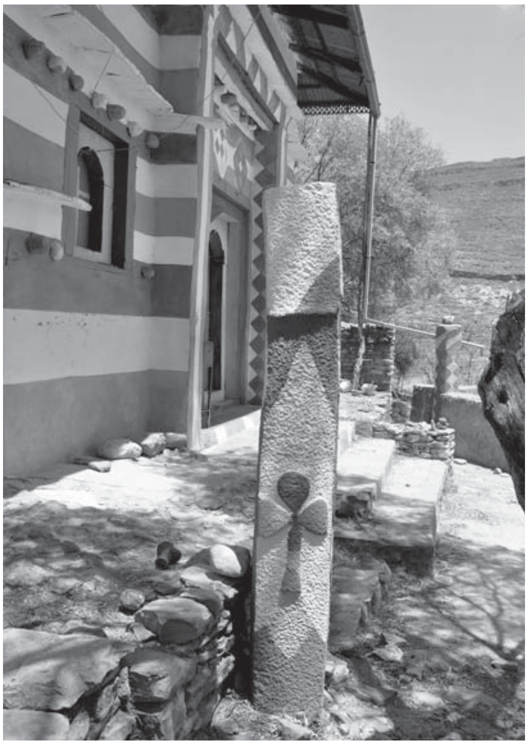
The site ^{c}A.Ṗ. preserves traces of ancient religious tradition. A sanctuary might have existed at ^{c}A.Ṗ. as early as in the first millennium B.C., as is illustrated by the presence of an Epigraphic South Arabian (Sabaean) ↗inscription there (Weninger 2007). Three stone pillars, ca. 2.5 m tall each, may be remains from the Aksumite period. Two pillars stand free at both sides of the podium on which the church building raises; the third pillar has been re-used in the gate-house doorway. One of the two free-standing pillars has an anthropomorphic relief on one side and a relief of the ↗cross on the other.

The church is called ^{c}Addäqäḥarsi Mäkanä Ḥəywät Ṗäraqliṭos. It is a big, relatively recent rectangular building in the traditional Təgrayan style, constructed on a podium. The large compound includes a number of older structures of different age, among them dwellings for priests, and a basin with the holy ↗ṣäbäl-water.

The dedication of the main tabot of the church is to the Ṣadəqan zä-Ṗäraqliṭos ('the Righteous ones of Ṗaraqliṭos'). These saints appear to be a previously unknown group of ↗Ṣadəqan. According to local tradition, there had been a pre-Christian sanctuary on the site; the Ṣadəqan arrived from Tiberias, evangelized the area and made the sanctuary a church under King Al^{c}ameda (↗Ǝllä ^{c}Amida). A conflict arose between the missionaries and the confessors of the old religion, "Jews"; the "Righteous Ones" and their partisans were martyred. A stone platform behind the church is believed to be the burial site of the Ṣadəqan (the place is considered sacred and is not accessible to women). The tradition about the Ṣadəqan is written down in their Acts, Gädlä ṣadəqan zä-Ṗäraqliṭos, a work of ↗Gə^{c}əz literature which has not been previously recorded or known. The oldest manuscript was completed in 1523, during the reign of aṣe ↗Ləbnä Dəngəl, just three years after the site had been visited by the Portuguese embassy (s. BeckHuntAlvar chs. 42–44: "Paraqlitos"; cp. Ancel 2013: 91–105). There are some other indications that the church was re-established by Ləbnä Dəngəl; "Ṗäraqliṭos", now perceived by the local people as a part of the place name, might be a hint to the pre-16th-cent. dedication of the church.



Two pillars in front of the western entry of the church of ^{c}Addäqäḥarsi Ṗäraqliṭos (the front one decorated with a relief of the cross); photo 2010, courtesy of the author

^{c}A.Ṗ. does not feature in later sources, and it seems that the monastic community dissipated, even though the site was apparently favoured by the 19th/early 20th cent. rulers of ↗^{c}Agamä. Today, the church possesses an extensive manuscript collection, formed by several manuscripts of different age. Six mss. contain the Gädlä ṣadəqan zä-Ṗäraqliṭos. Beside the Acts, the hagiographic dossier of the local Ṣadəqan includes the miracles (↗Täʾammər) and a ↗mälkə^{c}-hymn. An entry in the local ↗Sənkəssar for 4 Säne is dedicated to the Ṣadəqan.

Addis Abäba Treaty of 1896

The A.A.T. was a treaty of peace between Ethiopia and Italy, signed after the Battle of ↗ᶜAdwa, recognizing Ethiopia's independence, her full sovereignty and Italy's possessions in Eritrea.

On the eve of the Battle of ᶜAdwa, relations between Ethiopia and Italy were already defined by the 2 May 1889-Treaty of Wəčale (↗Italo-Ethiopian Treaty of Friendship and Commerce), an ambiguous and disputed document. According to the Ethiopian interpretation, Ethiopia was recognized as a fully sovereign state, which accepted Eritrea as an Italian colony (↗Eritrea: Colonial history of Eritrea) beyond the line of the rivers ↗Märäb, ↗Bäläsa and May Muni. According to the Italian interpretation of the treaty, Ethiopia accepted that it was a de-facto protectorate of Italy.

The Italians' overwhelming defeat in ᶜAdwa on 1 March 1896 shattered their ambitious claims and dictated the need to redefine relations. Peace negotiations began ten days after the battle and were conducted in two stages. The first lasted ten days, beginning on 11 March. The Italian major Tommaso Salsa was sent to aṣe ↗Mənilək II's camp by General Antonio ↗Baldissera, first to oversee the proper burial of the dead and then to prepare the way for a new treaty. Mənilək, for his part, chose to end hostilities. Though some of his advisers supported crossing the Märäb and liberating Eritrea, the Emperor decided not to attack the Italians in their fortifications. His considerations included supply difficulties, the need to allow his huge army of peasant-soldiers to return to their farms, and, arguably, an interest in avoiding the reunification of the Təgrayans once Eritrea was re-annexed (he still doubted the loyalty of ras ↗Mängäša Yoḥannəs). Mənilək offered the Italians his acceptance of military disengagement, recognition of the Märäb-Bäläsa line, and the negotiation of a new treaty, annulling Wəčale, and based on full recognition of Ethiopian independence. While still in the Ethiopian camp, Major Salsa received Rome's instructions to offer negotiations based on the principle of Italian special status in Ethiopia. This angered Mənilək, who ordered that the Italian prisoners be marched to Addis Abäba, with Major Salsa as a hostage.

The second stage began on 23 August 1896 when Dr. Cesare ↗Nerazzini, the Italian negotiator, now in Addis Abäba, received instructions to accept Mənilək's conditions. Thus, the A.A.T. was signed on 26 October. It stipulated that the state of war between Italy and Ethiopia was over, and that the Treaty of Wəčale "is and will remain definitely annulled with its annexes" (Marcus 1975: 177). Italy recognized "absolutely and without reserve the independence of the Ethiopian Empire" (ibid.). The two contracting powers agreed to observe – transitorily (regarding Italy's playing for time and its ambiguous diplomatic policy, s. Guazzini 1999, ch. 1) – the status quo "determined by the course of the Mareb, Belessa, and [May-Muni] rivers" (ibid.). This time the textual ambiguity of the treaty of Wəčale was not to be repeated, and it was stated that the official texts in Amharic and French were absolutely identical (ibid.).

Immediately after the formalities for the peace treaty were completed, a convention for the repatriation of the Italian prisoners was signed. Those prisoners who had survived their wounds, the march from ^{c}Adwa to Addis Abäba, and their stay in and around the capital – a total of 1,705 Italian soldiers (including 49 officers) – were all repatriated through Harär and Somalia by the middle of 1897.

The A.A.T. with Italy ushered in a new period. With the collapse of the Italian claim to be a protector of Ethiopia, all European governments recognized her independence, negotiated their treaties and opened their embassies. In the coming decades, Ethiopian sovereignty was to be undermined and repeatedly tested by the imperialist powers, but was not again challenged as bluntly until ↗Mussolini's aggressive ambitions in the early 1930s.

Admasu Ǧämbäre

A.Ǧ. (አድማሱ ፡ ጀምበሬ, also Mälᵓakä Bərhan; b. 6 August 1893, Dima Giyorgis, d. 31 July 1970) was a Gə^{c}əz scholar, theologian and exegete. Under the tutorship of his uncle, liqä ṭäbäbt Kənfu, he studied ṣomä dəgg^{w}a, dəgg^{w}a, zəmmare, mə^{c}əraf, mäwaśəᵓət and qəne.

In 1911/12, A.Ǧ. went to Addis Abäba and later to Däse, where he studied the interpretation of the O.T. and N.T., the ↗Fətḥa nägäśt and the Mäṣaḥəftä liqawənt. According to his own account, he attended the debate on the ↗Trinity known as the and mäläkot-śost mäläkot ('one divinity-three divinities') controversy, held in Däse in October–November 1914, in the presence of the Egyptian abunä ↗P̣eṭros. In 1925/26 A.Ǧ. returned to ↗Dima Giyorgis as qəne teacher. In 1932/33, he prepared a Lectionary (Mäṣḥafä ↗gəṣṣawe) which was well received by aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I, who, impressed by A.Ǧ.'s talent, appointed him teacher at the ↗Mənilək II Secondary School in Addis Abäba.

A.Ǧ.'s intellectual qualities and merits were officially acknowledged and he was given a number of titles: first mäggabe məśṭir, in 1934/35, liqä ṭäbbäbət and, in 1940–41, mälᵓakä bərhan. In 1941/42 he was among those intellectuals who were active in seeking autonomy for the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox (Täwaḥədo) Church from the Egyptian Church. In 1956/57 he was appointed judge at the Supreme Court at the behest of the Emperor. When he retired ten years later he went back full time to academic life.

An articulate writer, one of A.Ǧ.'s most renowned works is his apologetic work Mädlotä amin (1954 A.M.), a response to the Amharic version of ↗Ayyälä Täklä Haymanot's book The Doctrine on the Natures of Christ (1967/68). It is a vigorous, detailed and sometimes disparaging refutation of the methodology and contents of the latter's work. The text also provides an interesting, though not neutral, perspective of the doctrines of the various Christological (↗Christology) parties that emerged since the 17th cent.

Afäwärq Täkle

A.T. (አፈወርቅ ፡ ተክሌ; b. 22 October 1932, Ankobär, d. 10 April 2012, Addis Abäba) was Ethiopia's most celebrated artist.

A.T.'s parents were Täkle Mammo, a minor court functionary, and Fälläqäčč Yämatawärq. A.T. was seriously wounded during the Italian invasion. After the Liberation, he was enrolled in Addis Abäba's Patriots' School. He was subsequently selected as one of the first students to be admitted to the newly established Ḫaylä Śəllase I Secondary School.

In the summer of 1947, A.T. was selected for further education in Britain. In London, he was accommodated by Sylvia ↗Pankhurst, who had already noted the young man's artistic talent during her visit to his school back in 1944. A.T. was admitted to Leighton Park Secondary School, the Quaker boarding establishment in Reading. The Ethiopian Government had intended him to be a mining engineer, but with mediation from Sylvia Pankhurst he was granted a change in curriculum and was duly enrolled at the Central School of Arts and Crafts in London. He went on to become the first African student to be accepted by the prestigious Slade School of Fine Arts. Besides studying arts, A.T. showed a talent in dancing, and partially financed himself by winning prizes at ballroom dancing competitions.

Before returning to Ethiopia, A.T. and Habtäᵓab Bayru, brother of ↗Tädla Bayru, accompanied Bərhanu Täsämma, of the Ethiopian Embassy in London, on an extensive European tour, giving A.T. an opportunity to admire European art in Paris, Madrid and Rome. A.T. was particularly appreciative of Spanish culture and art.

On his return to ↗Addis Abäba in 1954 A.T. was attached to the National Library of Ethiopia (now ↗National Archives and Library of Ethiopia) where he was allocated space for a studio. He began to refer to himself as "Afäwärq Wäldä Nägʷädgʷad" ('A., Son of Thunder') – this designation later appeared as a shield, both in Amharic and English, on a wall of his house and on one of the doors of his car. In the same year he held his first one-man ↗art exhibition, opened by aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I at the Addis Abäba Municipality. This did much to raise the prestige – and pricing – of modern Ethiopian ↗painting.

Subsequently, A.T. was charged, together with ↗Ǝmäᵓaläf Ḫəruy, with the decoration of ↗Gännätä Ṣəge Giyorgis, which had been damaged in February 1937. A.T. designed and executed mosaics for the upper part of one of the inner walls of the Cathedral.

In 1958, he was commissioned to decorate the Africa Hall, the then new ↗United Nations Economic Commission for Africa building, for which he produced his most famous work: the triptych of three stained glass windows which, over 150 cm², depict the sorrow of the colonial past, the struggle of the present, and the hope for the future of independent Africa. Starting from the 1950s, A.T. produced several cover illustrations for ↗Ethiopia Observer.

A.T. travelled widely in connection with awards and exhibitions of his work, in Africa, Europe, Asia and America. He exhibited in Algeria, Bulgaria, France, Germany, Kenya, Russia, Senegal, the Soviet Union, Turkey, the United Arab Emirates, the USA, and Zaire. He was introduced to royal personages, including the Queens of Belgium, England, Iran and Spain, and met important African statesmen, among them Kenneth Kaunda, Jomo Kenyatta, Léopold Sédar Senghor and Kwame Nkrumah, who invited him to Ghana, where he made sketches for a portrait of the statesman.

A.T. was versatile in the subjects that attracted him, no less than in the forms his art took. He sketched and painted many Ethiopian landscapes (e.g., "Sunrise over the Səmen Mountains", 1963). He was fascinated, and re-created on canvas, the city and citizens of Harär, which he visited in 1957; he depicted historic buildings of Addis Abäba, such as the "↗Ǝnqulal bet" (1956, publ. in the Ethiopia Observer) and the castles of Gondär. He also produced a pen and wash image of Betä Giyorgis at ↗Lalibäla (1958). A.T. left a number of paintings of beautiful women, Ethiopian and foreign (his most popular paintings being "The Mäsqäl Flower", 1959 and "Mother Ethiopia", 1963), and a considerable number of self-portraits, including the one hanging in the Permanent Collection of the Uffizi Gallery in Florence, Italy – the first work by an African artist to enter the permanent collection.

A.T.'s profound devotion to Africa is demonstrated in the subject of many of his paintings, including a monochrome portrait of Patrice Lumumba (1960) and an oil portrait of Nkrumah (1964). His "Backbones of African Civilisation" (1969) depicted the Aksum Obelisk (↗Stelae) among other African cultural symbols.

Among his other notable works are the equestrian statue of ras ↗Mäkʷännən in Harär (designed in 1958 and cast in bronze in 1968), and stained glass windows of "Four great warriors of Ethiopia" (↗ᶜEzana, ↗Kaleb, ↗Mənilək II, and ras Mäkʷännən) in ↗Harär Military Academy. He also painted a "Last Judgment" for the Catholic Cathedral of ↗ᶜAddigrat.

In 1959 A.T. designed a large silver cross, executed by the Ethiopian jeweller, Täklu Dästa, for the Chapel of the Tower of London, where it is on permanent display. He also designed numerous postage stamps, posters (such as “This is Ethiopia”, 1963), playing cards, ties and scarves.

A.T. was recognized by many international awards, and, in 1964, was the first winner of the Haile Selassie I Prize for Fine Arts. His funeral at the ↗Qəddəst Śəllase Cathedral was attended by a large number of people, including the Patriarch, abunä P̣awlos I.

Afḍera

A. (^{c}Afar: Afxeera; 13° 17' 20" N, 40° 56' 25" E), also known as Giulietti (s. ↗Giulietti expedition) and as Egogi Bad (Nesbitt 1935: 8, 323; CTI, foglio 2), is a lake (17 km x 7 km; Guida 336) in the north of the ↗^{c}Afar Depression (103 m B. S.L.). It was first explored by ↗Nesbitt in 1927.

A., which gets its waters from *wadi*s and from a number of thermal springs easily located by clumps of doum palms (US-EAGLE), forms a huge sabkha (salt flat) skirted with salt concretions and evaporates (Nesbitt 1935: 318–23). It also has an island. It is home to an endemic species of perch, Danakilia franchettii.

A. is located in a fracture of the East African Rift and is surrounded by the lava flow from active volcanoes: Barawli and Tat ^{c}Alī to the west and Afḍera Tärara to the east, a 812 m high Holocene stratovolcano.

For a long time A. has been nomadic ground for the Rorom ↗^{c}Afar during the rainy season and is now a stopping place for scientific expeditions en route to the Erta ^{c}Ale lava lake.

Administratively, A. used to belong to the ^{c}Afar sultanate of Bîḍu (Nesbitt 1935, map). In the imperial ↗administrative division until 1984, it was included into the Təgray region and later in the special awrağğa of ↗^{c}Asäb (A. wäräda). In 1987 it became part of the autonomous ^{c}Afar region which became ^{c}Afar kəlləl in 1991.

Ag^{w}äza

A. (አጐዛ, also አጎዛ Agoza; 08° 23' N, 39° 56' E; 2,006 m A.S.L.) is a site in ↗Təgray located in the mountains facing the northern cliffs of the ↗Gär^{c}alta massif, on the east side of the Ḥawzen–Tämben road (Ḥawzen wäräda, Ag^{w}äza qušät). There are two ↗rock-hewn churches at the site, the older one on the top of the mountain and the newer one at its foot. Both are dedicated to the Four Living Creatures (Arba^{c}ətu Ǝnsəsa) and the Trinity (Śəllase). According to local tradition and the documents found at A., the upper church belonged to a monastic community known as Däbrä Sahəl, established around the first quarter of the 15th cent. by the metropolitan abunä ↗Bärtälomewos who supposedly is buried there. The monastery flourished until the 19th cent. when it experienced a gradual decline and eventually fell into oblivion with the death of the last monk in the 1990s.

The upper church, now used only occasionally, is cut into the rock at the very top of the mountain and is accessible only by chains. This three-aisled hall was at an unknown time affected by a rock-slide which carried away the vestibule and half of the first bay. The present western wall is constructed of clay and bricks. The central nave and the aisles, equally large, are divided by two pairs of pillars, the first squared, the second octagonal, with bracket capitals and connected by arches. The ceilings of the aisles and of the third bay of the central nave are topped by shallow cupolas. The central nave and north aisle end in the sanctuary with rounded, raised and interconnected rooms, each housing a stone-built altar stuccoed to look like a monolith. The third bay is prolonged towards the north by an extension with a small oculus in the ceiling. Originally, it had an entry which has been blocked by a constructed wall. The southern end of that bay has two small, rounded niches, directed northwards and southwards respectively. At present the church is accessible through a door situated in the first bay of the southern aisle. An arched window in the wall of the second bay has been blocked by stones. In the surrounding caves there is a necropolis which is still in use.

The lower church was hewn in the cliff of the same mountain in 1992. The work, directed by märigeta Zäbərhanat Ḫaylä Iyäsus from Ḥawzen, involved six people and took six months to complete. Entirely hidden in the mountain, the church is accessible by two openings cut into the plain western face of the rock. The tripartite interior is composed of a large, trapezoidal room serving as the qəne maḫlet (↗Church building), with a smaller qəddəst (raised by one step), a nearly circular sanctuary between two side "rooms" which provide access to the aisles. It is prolonged towards the east by a circular room where the mänbärä ↗tabot is kept. The qəne maḫlet is divided centrally by two, large, oval columns, and the qəddəst by two squared pillars. The entrance to the sanctuary is framed by two pillars; two smaller pillars frame the side-room passages. The ceilings of the eastern room and sanctuary are provided with a shallow cupola; six cupolas are carved into the ceiling of the qəne maḫlet.

Among the ↗manuscripts preserved in the newer church there are old fragments previously kept in the old church, some of them rare pieces. The most precious item of the collection is a mid-15th cent. copy of the Four Gospels decorated with full-page miniatures: the ↗Canon tables, a short Christological cycle (↗Crucifixion, Holy Women at the Tomb, Ascension) and the portraits of the ↗Evangelists. The manuscript served as the Golden Gospel (↗Wängelä wärq) of the village and contains documents (one in Arabic) relating to abunä Bärtälomewos, aṣe ↗Yǝsḥaq and aṣe ↗Zärʾa Yaʿǝqob.

A collection of ↗paintings on wood and ↗crosses is also preserved in the newer church. It includes, among others, a large Crucifixion executed by a follower of Niccolò ↗Brancaleone, a panel representing St. ↗George in the so called "Syrian style", and two iron crosses: a staff cross with inlaid brass and a hand cross with figural engravings. Both are said to have belonged to abunä Bärtälomewos.

Aḥiqar

A. is the main protagonist of a story set in the court of the Assyrian Empire, where he is said to be the scribe and counselor to the Assyrian king Sennacherib (704–681 B.C.) and then to his successor Esarhaddon (680–669 B.C.). According to the most fully preserved versions, A. does not have a son, and so he prepares his nephew Nadan (or Nadin) to succeed him by instructing him through a number of wise sayings. Nadan is, however, ungrateful and plots to have his uncle put to death. Through the help of a friend, A. escapes execution. With A. presumed to be dead, the Egyptian Pharaoh issues a challenge to the Assyrian king. A. then reemerges and successfully aides the Assyrian king in this challenge. The story concludes with A. harshly scolding Nadan by means of additional wise sayings, after which Nadan dies.

The narrative concerning A. along with a collection of wise sayings are transmitted in a number of languages. The earliest extant textual witness is a fragmentary Aramaic papyrus from the 5th cent. B.C. (Porten – Yardeni 1993:24–53; Niehr 2007). The narrative and sayings are combined in this papyrus, but they are written in slightly different dialects of Aramaic suggesting that they may have at one time circulated independently of one another. A fragmentary text related to A. is also extant in Demotic. In addition, the narrative and sayings of A. must have been translated into Greek. This Greek translation does not survive, but portions of it were adapted in the Greek Life of Aesop. The lost Greek translation served as the Vorlage for the Romanian and Old Slavonic versions, the latter being the basis for the Serbian and Russian versions. The oldest complete version of the narrative and sayings of A. is found in Syriac (five different recensions). An older Syriac version served as the Vorlage for the Arabic version (sometimes appended to A Thousand and One Nights), for the Neo-Aramaic version (which also shows influence from the Arabic version), as well as for the Armenian version. The latter in turn was the basis for the Georgian and Old Turkish versions.

A complete version of the narrative and sayings of A. does not survive in Ethiopic. Nevertheless, a short text entitled Mäṣḥafä Ḥiqar (መጽሐፈ ፡ ሒቃር, 'The Book of Ḥiqar') is found at the beginning of several manuscripts of the Mäṣḥafä ↗fälasfa ṭäbiban. The Mäṣḥafä Ḥiqar (ed., French tr. Schneider 1978; Engl. tr. Sumner 1972:261–69; 1974:127–35; 1985:55–63; Ital. tr. Lusini 2005:257–66; ed., Engl. tr. Lusini 2011) was translated from Arabic and contains the narrative of A., without any wise sayings. In addition, some sayings of A. are found in (later) manuscripts of the Mäṣḥafä fälasfa ṭäbiban (15 sayings: ed., German tr. Cornill 1875:19ff., 40–44; Engl. tr. Conybeare – Harris – Lewis 1913:128f.; it should be noted that none of the sayings of Aḥiqar are included in the excerpt of the Mäṣḥafä fälasfa ṭäbiban given in DillmChr 40–45). These Ethiopic sayings of A. were translated from Arabic and have parallels in the other versions.

Aʾira

A. (አኢራ, also አይራ, Ayra; Orom. sp. Ayraa; 9° 5ˈ 60" N, 35° 23ˈ 60" E) is a town in today’s Aʾira (Ayra) Guliso wäräda of the Western Wälläga Zone. It has been and still is a centre of ↗Protestantism in ↗Wälläga.

The ↗Hermannsburger Mission rented a single ↗gašša of land from käntiba ↗Gäbrä Ǝgziʾabəḥer Dästa in 1928, located ca. 500 km west of Addis Abäba. Rev. Dietrich Wassmann and two German craftsmen erected a solid residence, a clinic, a school and other buildings, during the following years. For subsistence they started farming and built a grinding mill on the nearby Huursaa River. Sister Martha Wassmann joined the group in 1930, which marked the beginning of medical work at A.

A school was opened in 1932, with 34 pupils, originally using ↗Oromiffaa as the language of instruction. Rev. Wassmann started Biblical teaching. ↗Dafaa Ǧammoo became the first communicant in 1935, others followed. The new Protestant believers maintained the station during the Italian occupation (↗Italian war 1935–36).

In the 1950s former German missionaries returned to A. and others joined, including medical doctors, teachers, pastors and technicians. New buildings for a school and a hospital were erected and an airstrip prepared. To train evangelists the Onesimos Näsib Bible School (↗Onesimos Näsib) was opened. At the hospital a dresser school and a nutritional centre were started. A. became a centre treating up to 200 outpatients and 50 inpatients per day. Ca. 700 students attended the Elementary and Junior Secondary School. In 1970/71 all institutions of the Mission were handed over to the Western Synod of the ↗Ethiopian Evangelical Church Mekane Yesus.

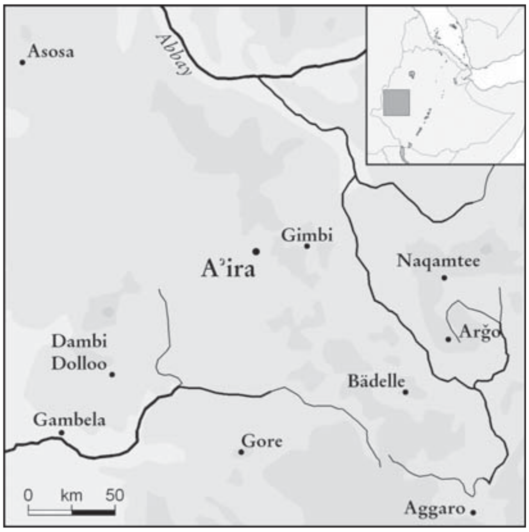
During the Därg regime (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council), the A. station was able to continue its services although many congregations of the area were closed. After 1991 the work expanded. Three million German marks were spent to build and equip a new hospital. The Laaloo Ayraa Secondary School moved to a spacious compound with modern facilities. The Bible School was enlarged and upgraded to a Theological Seminary.

The number of Protestant believers grew rapidly and the Birbir Diillaa Synod, having more than 200,000 members, established its administrative centre at A.

From its humble beginnings in 1928, an important medical, educational and spiritual centre for the whole area has developed.



Out of the total population of the A. and Čäliya towns, Aʾira Guliso wäräda, 90.1 % are Protestants (CSA 1996).

Akalä Krəstos

Abba A.K. (አካለ ፡ ክርስቶስ, also known as Akalä Kəsos; b. Wämbärəya, Agäw Mədər, d. 30 September or 3 October 1707) was a father of the ↗Qəbat school of theology. In the genealogical list of the school given in the gädl of abba ↗Śärṣ̌ä Ṗeṭros of ↗Däbrä Wärq, A.K. is mentioned as one of his successors (Gädlä Śärṣ̌ä Ṗeṭros, fol. 3r; Hummel 2010: 55).

A.K. represented the Qəbat at the council of ↗Aringo, convened by aṣe ↗Iyasu I on 10 October 1682 to reconcile doctrinal differences between A.K.'s school and the ↗Täwaḥədo represented by abba Niqolawos of ↗Mändabba and Addam of ↗Däbrä Libanos of Šäwa (GuiIohan 55f. [tr.]; BassÉt II, 293 [tr.]; Böll in PICES 16 [online]). The assembly declared in favour of the Täwaḥədo doctrine while condemning the Qəbat teaching (BassÉt II, 293). Consequently A.K. and a certain Zäʾiyäsus were exiled (GuiIohan 115; AmhChurchDic vol. 6, 51).

Later A.K. lived in a place called Tamre. When ↗Dəlbä Iyäsus fled from Iyasu I, he sought asylum with A.K. However, the Emperor's troops captured the fugitive and had him imprisoned (GuiIohan 87).

The assassination of Iyasu I in 1706 and the coming to power of his son ↗Täklä Haymanot created confusion among the people. The Qəbat favouring Goǧǧames used this opportunity to liberate themselves from the domination of the central authority that refused to acknowledge this theological school. On 10 September 1707 they crowned the pretender ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon their king at ↗Yəbaba (DombrChr 244f. [tr.]). On hearing of the rebellion aṣe Täklä Haymanot ordered his maternal uncle däǧǧazmač ↗Dərmən of Goǧǧam (s. EAE vol. 5) to reverse the action. ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon and Dərmən fought at Qäbäro Meda. Dərmən won the battle while many civilians and Qəbat monks, including A.K., lost their lives (BassÉt II, 362 [tr.]; Taddesse Tamrat 1988: 16f.).

Liqä ṭäbbäbt A. (አክሊለ ፡ ብርሃን ፡ ወልደ ፡ ቂርቆስ; b. [?], Ankobär, d. 1980/81, Addis Abäba) was a renowned ecclesiastic and prolific and influencial scholar of the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox (Täwaḥədo) Church.

After A. completed the first stage of traditional church education, he left his village and parents and went to Däbrä Dəmaḥ (↗Dima Giyorgis) in Goǧǧam to learn ↗qəne and ↗andəmta. He then went to ↗Däbrä Tabor and studied the ecclesiastical dancing tradition of täkle ↗aqqʷaqʷam with aläqa Mäkʷännən. He further deepened his knowledge of ecclesiastical dance by learning yägondär aqqʷaqʷam from mämhər Bäyyänä in ↗Dabat.

Having finished his school education, A. went to Addis Abäba and started serving at ↗Qəddəst Śəllase Cathedral and later went to Addis ᶜAläm Maryam Church where he enrolled as a teacher of ↗dəggʷa, ↗məᶜəraf and aqqʷaqʷam. It was there that he received the title of liqä ṭäbbäbt ('head of scholars').

Unlike the majority of ecclesiastical scholars in the Church, A. also published in print. Among his best known publications are: Märḥa ləbbuna, Mäṣḥetä ᵓamin and Zena mäṣaḥəftä bəranna.

A. died a natural death and was buried at Qəddəst Śəllase in Addis Abäba.

Alexander Naty

A.N. (አለክሳንደር ፡ ናቲ, b. 10 September 1953, Marda, Mariti Kunamaland, d. 9 December 2003) was a prominent Eritrean intellectual among the very few first generation anthropologists trained in North America. He attended a Catholic mission school in ↗Barentu where he picked up Italian, Təgre and some Təgrəñña, the language of his wife, in addition to his ↗Kunama mother tongue. Later, he also learned fluent English and some Arabic. At some level of his education he also had undergone a training geared towards priesthood. He completed his secondary school education at Qäyyəḥ Baḥri Secondary School in ↗Asmära and then joined the Sociology Department of ↗Addis Ababa University from where he graduated with a bachelor's degree in 1982. His interest in ↗Aari ethnography began under the supervision of Donald Donham whom he accompanied during his fieldwork in the Omo valley, in the early 1980s. After a brief stay at the ↗Institute of Ethiopian Studies as a researcher A.N. left for Stanford University where he received an M.A. in anthropology in 1986 under the supervision of Donham. Between 1988 and 1989 he conducted an extensive fieldwork among the Aari and that is where he met and made friends with some Japanese ethnographers who were doing similar studies as he but with different ethnic groups in the same valley. In 1992 he submitted a dissertation on Aari ethno-historical and political relations entitled as The Culture of Powerlessness and the Spirit of Rebellion among the Aari People of Southwest Ethiopia and graduated with a Ph.D. in anthropology still under Donham at Stanford University.

A.N. was one of the very few Eritrean intellectuals who returned from overseas right after independence. He was a member of both the Constitutional Commission during the process of drafting the Eritrean Constitution and of the Election Board and he collaborated with the Ministry of Education in the development of mother tongue education. Professionally, he was an active member of the American Anthropological Association and African Studies Association. His first appointment as a faculty member was in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at the University of Asmara in 1994. He became its head from 1994 to 1996.

A.N. won a Rockefeller Foundation Grant twice, the first to conduct field research for his dissertation and the second as a part of a career award for African scholars. He regularly attended national workshops and seminars, actively participated in international conferences as a result of which he became well connected to local and foreign institutions, and had a number of short term research residences at, for example, Yale's Agrarian and Social Policy Studies Centre (1992–93) and Leiden's African Studies Centre (Summer 2001). In the meantime, he carried out several brief field research stays among his own people, the Kunama of Eritrea.

A.N. wrote a variety of short articles, the most prominent of which were those on Aari social institutions (1994), ethno-history (1994), metaphors of power (1997), gender and revolution (2002), and proselytization (in EthMis). His first two publications on Kunama ethno-history (2001) and ecology (2002) were preceded by an article on Eritrean linguistic diversity (2000). His article on Aari religious movement as a response to the Ethiopian ↗gäbbar system was first presented at the 15th ↗International Conference of Ethiopian Studies in 2003 and published posthumously in 2006 with the editorial support of Kaneko, Shigeta and Bustorf. In addition, he published numerous newspaper reviews, notices and communications in Eritrean media. In his writing he was influenced by Julian Steward, Victor Turner, Robin Horton and Terence Turner.

A.N. was an important promoter of social anthropology in Eritrea. As inspired and dedicated teacher and mentor to his undergraduate students he drew some 200 students to his introductory anthropology course every year and effortlessly made it feel like an intimate seminar. As an author, translator, editor, and scholar he offered his own iconoclast cast to the ethnography of the Aari and the Kunama by focusing on the analysis of social categories in order to properly comprehend their daily life. As a member of an ethnic minority A.N. articulated his views on ↗ethnicity most vigilantly in which he envisaged integration without discrimination, and favoured tolerance to other languages, religions and ways of life by engaging anthropology as an empirical philosophy not as revision of conventional judgments but as provocation of alternative possibilities of conduct in search of equality, equity and human dignity.

Towards the end of 2003, soon after A.N.'s return from the Hamburg International Conference of Ethiopian Studies to Asmära via Rome, he was briefly incarcerated and then also expelled from the University of Asmara for unclear reasons. Shortly after, he left for Gaš Barka where he caught cerebral malaria in Haykota and was already in coma when he arrived in Asmära where he died. He is survived by his spouse Aster Bäyyänä and his daughter Amanlä.

^{c}Ali Mirāḥ b. Ḥanfaɖé

Sulṭān ^{c}A. (^{c}Afar sp. Qali Miraac Canfaxe; b. 1921, Fursi, d. 24 April 2011, Addis Abäba) was a 20th-cent. sulṭān of ↗Áwsa.

^{c}A. was the son of Hawy Omar and Hanfaɖé Aydāhis of the Mōdayto (Aydāḥissó) group of the ↗^{c}Afar. During the fratricidal "Sangerrá war" (ca. 1898–1919) between the successors of sulṭān ↗Maḥámmad "Illálta" Ḥanfaɖé ^{c}A.'s father was imprisoned in ↗Ǧimma together with his grandfather Aydāhis Maḥámmad and his uncle sulṭān ↗Yayyo Maḥámmad of ↗Áwsa by the order of aṣe ↗Mənilək II (s. also MorDic 241–44).

After the death of Aydāhis ^{c}A.'s father Hanfaɖé was brought up by Aydāhis's brother sulṭān Yayyo. However, when ^{c}A. was two years old sulṭān Yayyo killed Ḥanfaɖé in the course of eliminating all potential competitors to his own son sulṭān ↗Maḥámmad Yayyo. Soon after, ^{c}A.'s mother died and his eldest sister Faṭuma took care of both ^{c}A. and his sister Medina.

In 1943 the Ethiopian government intervened in order to depose sulṭān Maḥámmad who had collaborated with the Italians. Ethiopian troops invaded Áwsa, captured sulṭān Maḥámmad in his palace at Ḥinnālé and appointed the 22-year-old ^{c}A. sulṭān (amóyta) of Áwsa. Aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I gave the title of däǧǧazmač to sulṭān ^{c}A. and the title of fitawrari to Yayyo Ḥámmadu, his brother in-law and former deputy of sulṭān Maḥámmad.

In 1949, ^{c}A. had some disagreement with the imperial government as it attempted to rule Áwsa directly through the appointment of a governor in order to control agricultural land along the ↗Awaš valley. As a result ^{c}A. escaped to Bōhá, on the western shore of Lake ^{c}Uddumma. From there he established contacts with Arab countries in order to create awareness for the Áwsa sultanate and to lobby for a "Bōhá revolt" against the Ethiopian government. After two years of negotiations, in the course of which Ḫaylä Śəllase took the initiative to travel to Áwsa and meet with ^{c}A., the conflict was settled. According to their agreement the governor was removed and ^{c}A.'s wazīr (deputy), fitawrari Yayyo was appointed governor of the new district administered from ↗Asayta. Ḫaylä Śəllase accepted ^{c}A. as a semi-independent ruler responsible only to the Emperor.

In 1952, Ḫaylä Śəllase further conferred upon ᶜA. the title of ↗bitwäddäd.

After this, sulṭān ᶜA. gave between 820 and 2,000 hectares of land to Crown Prince ↗Asfa Wäsän (the only non-ᶜAfar who owned land in Áwsa) at Barga and invited foreign companies to invest in large-scale commercial farms in Áwsa. As the Awash Valley Authority, established by the Ethiopian government in 1962, began to compete for control of land in the ↗Awaš valley, sulṭān ᶜA. adopted a strategy for sedentarization of the local ᶜAfar and allowed them to lease land to ᶜAfar investors. He also engaged himself in modern farming over an estimated terrain of 20,000 ha. The growing wealth of the Áwsa sultanate together with his traditional (spiritual and political) authority as well as cordial relations with the palace in Addis Abäba strengthened his influence in the area.

Sulṭān ᶜA. visited several foreign countries, such as Egypt, Syria, the United States and the United Kingdom. In the 1970s, on the occasion of his visit to Lubbock, Texas, he was given honorary American citizenship by the mayor of the city.

The 1974-↗Revolution brought ᶜA.'s first period of rule to an end. He escaped from the November 1974-executions of imperial ministers and high ranking officials. While the Därg (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council) sent a delegation to Asayta to convince the Sulṭān to go to Addis Abäba, on the night of 2 June 1975, he left Asayta via Manda for Djibouti. On 3 June 1975, his son Ḥanfaḏé declared the birth of the ᶜAfar Liberation Front (A.L.F.). After a sojourn in Djibouti, ᶜA. together with many of his family members emigrated to Saudi Arabia.

Sulṭān ᶜA. was the founder of ᶜAfar Radio Programmes, which are still today broadcasted from Egypt and Ethiopia. He developed cordial relations with Arab countries and was able to obtain support for ᶜAfar political movements from countries such as Egypt and Somalia.

In their struggle against the Därg regime, the A.L.F. cooperated with other liberation movements including the ↗Tigray People's Liberation Front. After the demise of the Därg in 1991, ᶜA. returned to Ethiopia where he started to play a role in his community as nominal leader of the ᶜAfar and man of influence. ᶜA. attended the National Conference held at Africa Hall from 1 to 5 July 1991 together with his sons Ḥanfaḏé and Aḥmad as representatives of the A.L.F. Opposing Eritrea's secession plan, ᶜA. uttered his renowned saying "even our camels know the Ethiopian flag" and the Eritrean delegation left the conference hall in anger.

After the creation of federal regional states, ᶜA.'s party, the A.L.F., won the 1992 regional election and his sons, Ḥabīb (r. December 1991–August 1995) and Ḥanfaḏé (r. August 1995-March 1996), became presidents of the newly created ᶜAfar kəlləl successively until 1996. Soon after a T.P.L.F.-provoked split of the A.L.F. into two wings under his two sons, ᶜA. moved back to Saudi Arabia in 1998 to oppose "T.P.L.F.'s meddling in the internal affairs of the ᶜAfar".

In April 1999 ᶜA. returned to Ethiopia thanks to mediation efforts during the Ethio-Eritrean border war of 1998–2000. During his last years, ᶜA., now father of 14 male and 15 female children, fell ill and was treated at Tor Ḫayločč hospital until his death. His funeral was held in Asayta in the presence of high level government officials from Ethiopia and Djibouti. He was succeeded as a traditional leader by his son Ḥanfaḏé.

Alula Gugsa

Däǧǧazmač A.G. (አሉላ ፡ ጉግሳ; d. 1822) was the eldest son of ras ↗Gugsa Märsa of the Wärräsek dynasty of ↗Yäǧǧu, which was the most influential power group in the first half of the 19th cent. His mother was wäyzäro Amätä Śəllase, daughter of aṣe ↗Täklä Giyorgis.

As a high ranking officer, bearing the title of däǧǧazmač, A.G. was involved in a number of battles of the ↗Zämänä mäsafənt period, playing a significant role to support the rule of his father. In return, he was named governor of ↗Damot and ↗Goǧǧam.

A.G. was the first husband of wäyzäro ↗Mänän Libän Amäde (CRReal 448). The marriage aimed at consolidating the alliance between the Wärräsek and ↗Mammädočč family of Wärrä Himäno. Ras ↗Ali Alula (Ali II), the last Yäǧǧu ruler of the Zämänä mäsafənt, came from this union.

Amäde Kolase

Imām A.K. (አመዴ, horse name "Kolase", Or. 'castrated horse, gelding'; b. 1750s, d. September 1803) was the head of the ↗Mammädočč dynasty of ↗Wärrä Himäno in ↗Wällo from ca. 1788 to 1803.

A.K.'s father was Mäḥammäd (or Mammäd) Abba Ǧibo, the founder of the Mammädočč imamate of Wärrä Himäno. His mother, Alko (or Alkon), descended from Christian noble families of Dälanta and Ambassäl. According to the unpublished notes of Arnauld d'↗Abbadie, A.K. entered the service of ras ↗Goššu Zäwde, governor of Amhara, at the age of 20. He was baptized as a Christian, taking the name Wäldä Gäbrəʾel, and married Goššu's niece, Səhin, who descended from a long line of lords of Bägemdər and Goǧǧam. She was A.K.'s only known wife and the mother of his only known son, ↗Libän Amäde Kolase.

After the death of Goššu, ca. 1783, A.K. returned to Wällo and reconverted to ↗Islam. He joined his father and brother Adäm in the battles against the military campaign aṣe ↗Täklä Giyorgis launched against Wällo in 1783–84. There was some internal feud before A.K. succeeded his father. His brother Bäṭṭo, who had played a strategy of submission and integration within the Christian kingdom, was made ↗däǧǧazmač by Täklä Giyorgis. A.K., who did not want to subdue, rebelled against his brother for some years. He was eventually successful, and in ca. 1788, the year of the death of ras ↗Ali Gʷangul, A.K. took over Wärrä Himäno. Ras ↗Aligaz, the brother and successor of Ali Gʷangul, tried to win A.K. on his side, but A.K. refused to submit himself and to bargain his title of ↗imām against a position in the Christian hierarchy.

The rule of A.K. is characterized by the reinforcement of the regional power of Wällo against the dominance of the power of Gondär led by the Wärräsek (↗Yäǧǧu) dynasty. In the first years of his reign, he defeated two attempts of military seizure of Wärrä Himäno by ras Aligaz who was allied with ras ↗Ḫaylu Wänd Bäwäsän of Lasta. The most audacious act of A.K. was when he entered Gondär in January 1799 to show his strength and sovereignty. The chronicle of the period (CRReal 862f., BlunChr 463f.) says he was castigated as a heathen by the ↗abun and the ↗əč̣č̣äge, but that he reacted in a gentle manner to prove the contrary. Oral traditions of Wällo recount that he performed the Muslim call for prayer (aḏān) from the top of the highest tower of the royal castles of Gondär. A.K. refused to bear the title of ↗ras and to install himself in Gondär as a king maker. He kept his title of imām and imposed his men on territories neighbour to Wällo in order to create a protecting buffer zone. A.K. also consolidated the power of the Wärrä Himäno against the other Oromo lineages of Wällo (particularly Lägä Hida, Lägä Gora and Ǧamma).

A.K. died in a battle against groups of Southern Wällo, in the Ǧamma area (CRReal 873, BlunChr 474). Traditions recount that he was killed by the chief of Lägä Hida, a certain Abba Wasu, who took his revenge against A.K. who had humiliated him publicly mocking his physical disgrace.

A.K. was succeeded by his only known son Libän.

Amäde Lämma

Fitawrari A.L. (አመዴ ፡ ለማ; b. 8 April 1921, ^{c}Ali Bet, d. 21 April 2009, Addis Abäba) was a prominent public figure and parliamentarian.

A.L.'s father was Lämma Endris [Idrīs] and his mother Dästa Gämmäčču. He spent the first 17 years of his life in the ↗Wällo countryside in the service of his parents. He then moved to ↗Däse where he became a successful trader and broker for ḥağği Yəmär [^{c}Umar] Dawd, a wealthy hides and skin merchant. During this service he continued school until graduation in grade ten. Later, A.L. obtained a law diploma from Haile Selassie I University (↗Addis Ababa University). He mastered Amharic, English, Italian and Arabic.

In 1956/57 A.L. was elected representative in the national ↗parliament. Elected for four consecutive legislative periods, he served in both chambers for a period of 16 years. Upon the completion of his services as a parliamentarian, he was appointed governor of ↗Rayya and ↗Qobbo awrağğa.

A.L. also worked in various capacities for a number of community associations and welfare organizations. He was founder, manager and patron of the Ethiopian Swimming Federation (for 20 years), member of the committee for the return of the Aksum obelisk (↗Stelae), founder and president of a vocational training institute, founder and manager of the Wällo Public Transport Association, member of the Ethiopian Traditional Sports Federation, member of the committee for the erection of a monument for aṣe ↗Tewodros II at ↗Mäqdäla and the promotion of the town as a tourist destination, member of the committee for the resolution of the Ethio-Eritrean conflict, member of a committee of elders for the reconciliation of political groups, and patron of the committee for the development and reconstruction of the shrine of šayḫ Muḥammad Šāfī in Ǧama Nəguś, Albukko.

A.L. was married for 65 years. He and his wife had ten children. He was the author of an unpublished 600-page autobiography in Amharic. A.L. died of a sudden illness in his home in ↗Addis Abäba at the age of 88.

Amäde Libän

Imām A.L. (አመዴ ፡ ሊበን; Amäde Libän Amäde, horse name Abba Muğğa; b. 1803, d. 1831) of the ↗Mammädočč dynasty of ↗Wärrä Himäno in ↗Wällo ruled from 1815 to 1831. His parents were imām ↗Libän Amäde Kolase and wäyzäro Ṭuma Gaddisa.

During his childhood, A.L. was the captive of ras ↗Gugsa Märsa, the ruler of the Wärrä Šehočč (Wärräsek) dynasty in Gondär (↗Yäğğu). The reasons for this detention are not known. When A.L. was ten, a peace agreement was reached between Gugsa and Libän Amäde. A.L. was subsequently released, and his sister, ↗Mänän Libän, was married to the son of Gugsa, ↗Alula, forging an alliance between the two ruling families of Wärräsek and Mammädočč. A.L. was then entrusted to däğğazmač Ṭamru, who was in charge of Amhara ↗Sayənt, a Christian territory neighbouring Wärrä Himäno.

In 1815, Libän Amäde died after a long and powerful reign, and A.L. was invested as ↗imām. At the age of twelve, he had to face the rivals of his father who sought to benefit from the lack of military and political experience of the young imām. After resisting a few months, A.L. lost a battle against ras Gugsa's army and was taken captive. For three years, he was kept under guard at an estate in ↗Fogära. But däǧǧazmač Gobäna Alula, the representative of Gugsa in Wällo, lost control of the region and, in 1818, A.L. was sent back to restore calm. The following years, A.L. was in conflict with his half-brother Ali Libän "Abba Bulla", who wanted to seize Wärrä Himäno and the title of imām. To this end, Ali "Abba Bulla" made an alliance with the two brothers and successors of ras Gugsa, ↗Yəmam Gugsa and ↗Marəyye Gugsa. A.L. could rely on the support of his sister Mänän, who was very powerful in Gondär's power games. A.L. also fought very hard battles against other Muslim chiefdoms of Wällo (Qallu, Täkʷəladäre).

In the Christian chronicle of the period (CRReal 487f., BlunChr 885, 910ff.), A.L. is portrayed as a fanatic Muslim, who committed several crimes against the Christians. These allegations of A.L.'s acts of anti-Christian profanation and blasphemy could be rumours, which were reported in the chronicle in order to show that the favours granted by ras ↗Ali Alula, who was A.L.'s nephew, were wrong.

A.L. died after a conflict with Ali Faris of Lasta. Ali "Abba Bulla" then obtained full control of Wärrä Himäno for a few years, before confronting the son of A.L., Libän Amäde Libän.

Amäde Libän

Imām A.L. (አመዴ ፡ ሊበን, horse name አባ ፡ ዋጠው Abba Waṭäw, baptized as Ḫaylä Mikaᵓel; b. ca. 1850, d. ca. 1880) was one of the last leaders belonging to the ↗Mammädočč dynasty of ↗Wärrä Himäno in ↗Wällo. He was the son of imām Libän Amäde Libän and queen ↗Mästäwat.

In the 1860s, Wällo was under occupation of aṣe ↗Tewodros who had established his headquarters on amba ↗Mäqdäla. The two dowager queens, ↗Wärqitu (widow of imām ᶜAli "Abba Bulla") and Mästäwat, carried on the leadership of the revolt against Tewodros and defended for their sons the claim for taking over the dynasty. The young A.L., under the protection of his mother Mästäwat, was the most legitimate claimant to the succession of the Mammädočč leadership and the imamate of Wärrä Himäno, particulary after 1865, when Tewodros sentenced to death Amäde ᶜAli, the son of Wärqitu, at Mäqdäla. But he was soon challenged by another cousin, Mäḥammäd ᶜAli (the future ras ↗Mikaᵓel [Ali]), the stepson of Wärqitu, who started his own rebellion ca. 1867. When Mäḥammäd ᶜAli won the support of Wärrä Himäno factions, A.L.'s position was weakened to a point that he had to move his forces to Wärrä ↗Qallu further east.

After Tewodros's death in 1868, Mənilək (future aṣe ↗Mənilək II) waged expeditions to occupy Wällo, a territory that was necessary in his strategy of conquest of supreme power (cp. GueCopMen 119). After a brief resistance, A.L. submitted, but waged another revolt (GueCopMen 120; CecZeila I, 267f.). He assembled an army in Yäǧǧu, armed additionally with the guns he could seize from the rebellious Zägäyye (GueCopMen 121), but failed to secure support of Kaśa Mərča (future ↗Yoḥannəs IV, s. CecZeila I, 269) and was defeated. A.L. was caught and imprisoned in ↗Wärrä Illu, the then kätäma of Mənilək (BTafA 645; Brielli 1945: 107; corroborated also by oral traditions in Asnake Ali 1983: 15); the governorship of Yäǧǧu was given to ↗Wäle Bəṭul.

A.L. was released by Mənilək after some months in order to fight against Kaśa. However, A.L. rebelled once again, chose ↗Mäqdäla as his base, and pursued his feud against Mäḥammäd ᶜAli, who was at that time on Kaśa's side. Subsequently, Mäḥammäd ᶜAli rallied to Mənilək and was appointed imām of Wällo. In July 1876, after five years of rebellion against this coalition of Mənilək and Mäḥammäd ᶜAli, A.L. was captured and imprisoned. This event marked the achievement of Mənilək's aim at subduing Wällo.

In 1877, another shift of alliance happened when Mäḥammäd ᶜAli rebelled against Mənilək and allied with Yoḥannəs. Therefore, Mənilək reconciled with A.L. (who had already escaped from prison in Ǝnnäwari; GueCopMen 136) and appointed him over Wällo (CecZeila I, 278).

This indirect conflict for the control of Wällo between Mənilək and Yoḥannəs expressed in the feud between A.L. and Mäḥammäd ᶜAli came to an end in May 1878, after the council of ↗Boru Meda that was concluded by agreement on Wällo as a buffer zone between Šäwa and Təgray. This Muslim territory had to be Christianized. Mäḥammäd ᶜAli was baptized by Yoḥannəs; he was renamed Mikaᵓel and made ras. A.L. was converted at Wärrä Illu by Mənilək who became his Godfather. He was renamed Ḫaylä Maryam and made däǧǧazmač (GueCopMen 157f.). Wällo was partitioned between the two rival Mammädočč cousins. Wärrä Himäno and most of western Wällo went to Mikaᵓel. A.L. ruled the territories of lesser fiscal value – Wärrä Illu, Wärrä Qallu, ↗Täkʷəlädäre, ↗Lägä Gora and ↗Lägambo – with his centre in Gärado, in the environs of ↗Däse (to be founded some years later by Mikaᵓel). A.L.'s attachment to his new religion remained loose. While he did not revert to ↗Islam, he kept a neutral attitude towards Muslims, unlike Mikaᵓel who persecuted them to implement the policy of forced conversion ordered by Yoḥannəs.

A.W. died of natural causes at the age of 30 and was buried at ↗Ḥayq. After his death, his domains were ruled by his mother Mästäwat who acted as regent to the young Abba Ǧäbäl, son and successor of A.L. In 1885–86 Mästäwat and Abba Ǧäbäl rebelled against Mikaᵓel's supremacy. Mästäwat died in fight at Lagarafto near Gärado (Asnake Ali 1983: 38) and Abba Ǧäbäl gave up and was allowed to rule the territory of Lägambo (Caulk 2002: 170). He died in 1890, at the age of 17, and was also buried at Ḥayq. This was the final episode of A.L.'s line in the Mammädočč dynasty.

Ambo Agricultural College

A.A.C. (የአምቦ ፡ የእርሻ ፡ ኮሌጅ, Yäᵓambo yäᵓərša kolleǧ) has been a centre for modern agricultural education and research since the 1930s in the town of ↗Ambo.

In 1931–32, ↗Maḫtäma Śəllase Wäldä Mäsqäl, who had studied agriculture in France and Spain, started an agricultural station near Ambo. Shortly thereafter, the Ambo Agricultural School (A.A.S.) offering instruction from grades one to eight began operating. ↗Abrəha Däboč̣ was the first head, and a faculty of four Ethiopian and four French teachers taught courses in agriculture, Amharic, Maths, and French.

During the Italian occupation from 1935 to 1941 (↗Africa Orientale Italiana), the school was closed and the campus was used as a military garrison and prison. Additional buildings were constructed during this period.

After the Liberation, the school was reopened under the direction of Habtä Wäld Kurfa. In 1946, under the Imperial Ethiopian Government, the A.A.S. became A.A.C., administered by the Imperial Ministry of Agriculture. The school began a four-year program of agricultural education for students who had completed the eighth grade and successfully passed the nationwide General Examination that qualified them for secondary schooling. Academic subjects were taught in the morning and practical agricultural work in the afternoons. All faculty and high ranking administrative staff were Germans (↗Germany, relations with).

Graduates who completed the four-year course of study were awarded a Certificate/Diploma. Many of the graduates were employed in Agricultural Extension work or pursued advanced training in German universities. After the founding of the Imperial Ethiopian College of Agriculture and Mechanical Arts at ↗Alämayya in October 1956, many A.A.C. graduates continued their education there. A forestry program was begun as an independent unit in the A.A.C. in 1959, and the school was re-designated the Ambo Agricultural and Forestry School. In that year, 150 students were enrolled. The forestry program was terminated in 1963.

In 1965, the school Director, Efrem Bäqqälä, and Yəlma Yəmänbərhan, Director of the Ǧimma Agricultural and Technical School, proposed a two-year post-secondary institute in Ambo. The Ministry of Agriculture approved the proposal and started advanced training in 1967 (the year the German faculty connection ended). The school was renamed the Ambo Institute of Agriculture, and its director was Tewodros Asfaw.

After the ↗Revolution of 1974, the school became Ambo Junior College of Agriculture, and later, Ambo College of Agriculture, and between 1995–96, it was administered as a department of Ǧimma University. In 2009 A.A.C. became Ambo University.

ᶜAmdä Mikaᵓel

Ras bitwäddäd ᶜA.M. (ዐምደ ፡ ሚካኤል, also known as ᶜAmdo/ᶜAmdu; fl. second half of the 15th cent.) was an influential political figure from the reign of aṣe ↗Zärᵓa Yaᶜəqob to that of aṣe ↗Naᶜod. He remained important even after his death, as evidenced, e.g., by Wänag Sägäd's (future aṣe ↗Ləbnä Dəngəl) grant of a ↗gʷəlt land "to ᶜAśratä Maryam, son of ᶜAmdä Mikaᵓel" (Four Gospels, Däbrä Damo, Reel 1, frame 213v). Already his family had played a decisive role in shaping Ethiopian political history from perhaps as early as the establishment of the aṣe ↗Yəkunno Amlak dynasty in 1270.

The first time ᶜA.M. appears in Ethiopian history is in a royal chronicle, which states that Zärᵓa Yaᶜəqob appointed him as ↗mälkäñña over all of ↗Fäṭägar (PerrZarY 15; ms. EMML no. 1515, fol. 161, s. EMML V, 18). This claim is corroborated by a 15th- or 16th-cent. source on the "Əsṭifanosites" (↗Stephanites) which states that Zärᵓa Yaᶜəqob ordered "ᶜAmdu, governor of Fäṭägar, to bring (to his court) the saints who were in his domain" (ms. EMML no. 4, fols. 138v–139r, s. EMML I, 7; s. also Sergew Hable-Selassie in PICES 4, 542–51). Moreover, the Sənkəssar mentions "ᶜAmdä Mikaᵓel, the Chief of the army of the kings of Ethiopia […], Zärᵓa Yaᶜəqob, Bäᵓədä Maryam and Əskəndər", among those commemorated on 3 Ḫədar (ms. EMML no. 5665, fol. 81r; cp. ColSyn VIII, 246–49).

ᶜA.M. is most remembered for the role he played in determining the successors to aṣe ↗Bäᵓədä Maryam (1468–78), Naᶜod (1478), ↗Əskəndər (1478–94), ↗ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon II (1494), and again Naᶜod (1494–1508). Naᶜod was twice deposed, and both times ᶜA.M. was the power behind it (Taddesse Tamrat in PICES 4, 526f.). The first time, ᶜA.M. found Naᶜod on the throne when he (and Əskəndər) returned from a military expedition. He immediately replaced the new king with Əskəndər. Due to Əskəndər's young age his mother əmmäbet ↗Romna, ᶜaqqabe säᶜat Täsfa Giyorgis and ᶜA.M. strongly supported Əskəndər's regency (PerrEsk 352f.). When Əskəndər died, which happened while ᶜA.M. was on another military expedition, Naᶜod reclaimed the throne. As soon as ᶜA.M. returned, he replaced Naᶜod with ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon, the infant son of Əskəndər, who however died within a few months, exposing the nation to violent internal strife (Taddesse Tamrat in PICES 4, 529f.).

The sources on ᶜA.M.'s death are contradictory. One source maintains that Əskəndər was responsible for his execution (ms. EMML no. 5403, fols. 43r–44v). This source (examined by Sergew Hable-Selassie in PICES 4, 547–50) states that Əskəndər later regretted his actions and had the ras canonized and buried at the monastery of ↗Däbrä Libanos. This assertion, however, is untenable if the ras indeed was instrumental in the crowning of ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon in 1494. Furthermore, the claim is not corroborated by the important sources of the time, such as the gädl of abunä ↗Märḥa Krəstos. The more plausible version, preserved in both Gəᶜəz and Amharic, accuses Naᶜod of the ras's blood: "Naᶜod had his revenge on this renegade (ras ᶜAmdu): he buried him alive up to his chest and they drove on him cows, sheep, horses, mules, camels and donkeys" (Taddesse Tamrat in PICES 4, 526f.; ms. EMML no. 1610, fol. 12v, s. EMML V, 116, and ms. EMML no. 6536, fol. 37v). Possibly at the order of his old adversary, queen ↗Əleni, ᶜA.M.'s body was removed from his grave at Däbrä Libanos to another grave. Finally the body of ᶜA.M. was reburied at ↗Atronsä Maryam by aṣe ↗Ləbnä Dəngəl (cp. ColSyn VIII, 247, 249 [tr.]; GuiSyn I, 697f.; TadTChurch 289). In several Sənkəssar manuscripts it is said that the final burial took place 40 years after ᶜA.M.'s execution, and 20 years after Əleni's death, thus roughly dating ᶜA.M.'s time of death to 1485 (e.g., BritLib Orient. 667, 154; GuiSyn I, 697f.; s. also TadTChurch 289).

ᶜA.M. had an interesting family background. A donation note in one of the Däbrä Ḥayq Əsṭifanos manuscripts (EMML no. 1768, fol. 88r, s. EMML V, 241f.) indicates that he was a descendant of a Jewish family from Yemen: "The origin of this ras ᶜAmdu is Israelite, from the tribe of Joseph. In the time of the reign of the Zagʷe, there came out of the land of Aden a Jewish man, called Joseph, who was named after his father. He was highly honored and wealthy. And he settled in Ǝllaw(ə)z, in the land of Amhara. And subsequently, he begot Amba Nad; Amba Nad (begat) Gʷäžžam Sägäd; Gʷäžžam Sägäd (begat) Amməḫa Ṣəyon; Amməḫa Ṣəyon (begat) Täsfa Ṣəyon; Täsfa Ṣəyon (begat) Gälawdewos; (and) Gälawdewos (begat) ras ᶜAmdu; and ras ᶜAmdu (begat) ras Särṣe; and ras Särṣe (begat) ↗ḥasgʷa (s. EAE vol. 5) Wäsän" (Taddesse Tamrat 1970: 112; Getatchew Haile in PICES 15, 251–59).

Another genealogical note states that the descendants of ᶜA.M.'s family became important personalities in Kätäta, Wäğ, Təgray, and Fäṭägar (ibid. 253f.). Interestingly, the Fäṭägar genealogy states that Zela Rəᶜəd ('Trembler of Zaylaᶜ') begat Dəl Ḫaǧäba ('Victory Escorted Her') from a daughter of Yəkunno Amlak. It is not unreasonable to suspect that this family of Jewish background supported Yəkunno Amlak's overthrow of the Zagʷe dynasty in 1270, at least by popularizing Yəkunno Amlak's connection to the royal family of Israel as later detailed in the ↗Kəbrä nägäśt.

Amhara

A. (in Ethiopic sources mostly አምሐራ Amḥara, sometimes አምኀራ Amḫara, also አማራ Amara) is the name of a historical province located in Central Ethiopia; for several centuries it has also served as an ethnonym (for the ethnic group s. ↗Amhara, EAE vol. 1). The name for one of the most important languages of Ethiopia, Amarəñña (↗Amharic), derives from A.

The place-name A. is missing in the sources of the Aksumite period (↗Aksum). The famous ↗lion of ↗Kombolča standing in the valley of the Borkänna River (on the western margin of an area that later became the historical A.) might be a witness of early local history, but its exact meaning is still undeciphered (cp. Fauvelle-Aymar et al. 2011). Probably the earliest mention of the name A. is to be found in a manuscript of the "Golden Gospel" of ↗Däbrä Libanos dating to 1322 (CRDLib 204 [doc. no. 20]). Numerous references to A. appear only in the Ethiopic medieval sources, starting from the allegedly earliest accounts such as the History of the Campaign of aṣe ↗ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon I (MarAmdS; KrAmdS) and 15th-cent. Vitae of saints; they proliferate in later texts of different genres.

Evangelization of A. is believed to have started in the late Aksumite period, as may be hinted by the traditions about King ↗Dəgnaǧan. The political importance of the A. region apparently increased after the fall of the ↗Zagʷe dynasty, with the (re-)establishment in the late 13th cent. of the so-called ↗Solomonic dynasty by ↗Yəkunno Amlak, commonly considered to be a native of A. The fall of the Zagʷe marked the transition of the political centre of the Ethiopian Christian state further inland, and southward (after Aksum in the north): from the Zagʷe's region of ↗Lasta to A. Significantly, in a few samples of correspondence between the early Solomonic rulers and the rulers of ↗Egypt, as well as in ↗Arabic historiography, the monarchs of Ethiopia are sometimes referred to as "A. king", al-malik al-amḥarī (possibly not only a question of style, but also reflecting the contemporary local usage, s. DerDom 31–35; cp. also al-↗Maqrīzī, al-↗ᶜUmarī). Chernetsov (1996: 25) proposed that the rulers of Yəkunno Amlak's dynasty might have been understood as "kings of A." due to the place of origin of its founder, and, therefore, their people and followers were called "Amhara", who brought this name with them wherever they took over new lands.

Medieval European maps (↗cartography) suggest that A. within the Ethiopian empire had a higher position as a "kingdom" among "provinces", as indicated, e.g., by the mention of a Regno Hamara, or 'Kingdom of A.', on ↗Fra Mauro's map of 1460 (CrawItin fig. 4, map 4, 199; cp. Amara of the earlier ↗Egyptus Novelo, figs. 1–2), and later maps, especially those based

The province Amhara (middle) on a French map of 1728 showing the approximate location of Ethiopian provinces of that period, Amhara bordering on "Sewa" and "Ifat" in its south, "Gojam" in its west, and "Bagemder" and "Angot" in its north, printed to illustrate a French version of Lobo's book on Ethiopia; from the collection of the Raccolta delle Stampe "Achille Bertarelli", Castello Sforzesco – Raccolte Artistiche e Raccolte Grafiche e Fotografiche, Milano on Manuel d'↗Almeida and the one edited by ↗Ludolf (s. LudHist).

In 1520 Alvares travelled through A. from north to south. He entered the province south of ↗Angot, saw ↗Amba Gəšän, visited Lake ↗Ḥayq and ↗Mäkanä Śəllase, and left the province to the south by crossing the rivers of Wänčət and Ǧämma (BeckHuntAlvar 243f., 249–60). Zorzi's itineraries of 1524 mention a "regno" or "provintia Amara" as one of the parts of "Abbasia" (CrawItin 108, 178).

The role of A. in the Ethiopian Christian kingdom is best shown in ^{c}Arabfaqīḥ's ↗Futūḥ al-Ḥabaša which refers to A. as the "centre of the Kingdom" (BassHist 76 [tr]) and, therefore, a region of strategic importance. It is not quite clear why ^{c}Arabfaqīḥ refers to A. as bayt Amḥārā, lit. 'house of Amhara' (only in a few cases A., BassHist 203, 316, 441; HuntGeogr 80f.). This rarely finds parallels in the Ethiopic sources (with a few exceptions; cp. the Chronicle of ↗Susənyos, ch. 41, a passage alluding to Bet Amḥara as a core area of the "bigger A."). Besides, he refers to the "five gates" leading into the interior of A. (BassHist 281f.; cp. DerDom 21ff.): Wäläqa, Ahəyya Fäğği (not a region, but a pass on the River Wänčət, leading from Šäwa to A., cp. also Spencer 1983), Mi^{ɔ}at (?) in Gədəm, and Wasäl (later ↗Ambassäl).

Important information on A. is provided by the work of Manuel d'Almeida (BeckHuntAlm map and XCVII, 11, 18f., 38 etc.), and, especially, through Ludolf's Historia Aethiopica in the 17th cent., the data for which were provided by abba ↗Gorgoryos, himself a native of ↗Sayənt in A. He gave 36 names of places and regions/districts of the "Kingdom of A.". Among these he mentions those which are historically known as localities of significance or important churches: Ambassäl (possibly Wasal/Vasal of the old ↗itineraries, s. CrawItin); ↗Atronsä Maryam; Badabağ, ↗Bärara (Morara of the old itineraries); ↗Efrata; Gəl (possibly Gol, i.e., Däbrä Gʷäl, or the monastery of abunä ↗Bäṣälotä Mikaʾel); ↗Gəše and Gəšän (i.e. Amba Gəšän); Mäkanä Śəllase; Šägla (possibly Sägla, the place of the famous author Giyorgis and his monastery ↗Däbrä Baḥrəy); ↗Tädbabä Maryam and ↗Wägda. On the map of Historia Aethiopica, A. appears situated between the rivers ↗Abbay in the west, ↗Bäšəlo in the north, Borkänna in the east and ↗Käsäm in the south; it also encompasses the region of Lake ↗Ḥayq, with the famous monastery of ↗Däbrä Ḥayq Ǝsṭifanos.

The churches of Mäkanä Śəllase, as well as Atronsä Maryam and Tädbabä Maryam, were in Sayənt (also called Amhara Sayənt). The region of A. hosted also such sanctuaries as ↗Däbrä Nägʷädgʷad, and Gännätä Giyorgis (DerDom 263). The mountain massif of ↗Mäqdäla is located in the northern part of A., close to the gorge of the Bäšəlo. Many of the churches of A. were royal foundations, patronized by the monarchs. Different in A. were used as royal ↗kätäma-camps (DerDom 325ff.; cp. HuntGeogr 110); the relatively high place of A. in the Empire is demonstrated also by the ↗Śərʿatä mängəśt (s. Varenberg 1915–16; Guidi 1922).

In the pre-17th-cent. Ethiopian Christian state, A. can be described in the first instance as the "heart of the Empire and cradle of the monarchy" (DerDom 23), thanks to the intrinsic relations between the main churches of the region and royal power. Being a region of poor economic resources, A. was well protected and played a role as the royal "domain" (similar to ↗Dämbəya in the ↗Gondärine kingdom). At first glance, despite the similar function of the adjacent ↗Šäwa (cp. the notion of the "bicephalous" centre of the Kingdom, Pennec – Toubkis 2004: 7), the conditions in the latter were different: though possessing many more resources, Šäwa was ethnically and religiously heterogeneous, with more transparent and open borders, subjected to the danger of attacks from the Muslim sultanates. Strategically, Šäwa served as the bulwark for protecting A.

In 1531 the armies of imām ↗Aḥmad b. Ibrāhīm al-Ġāzī met aṣe ↗Ləbnä Dəngəl in battle near Waṣil, and later overran A., destroying and sacking some of its main churches (BassEt 246–50, 254ff., 307–16, 326–38; DombrChron 159). Two years later the ↗ǧihād forces invaded A. Aṣe Ləbnä Dəngəl was finally forced to look for refuge in the north of the country. Afterwards, despite the defeat of the ǧihād and temporal recovery of the Empire under Minas and especially aṣe ↗Śärṣä Dəngəl, the decline of A. was imminent. Moreover, its decrease in political importance gave way to the growing significance of the Lake ↗Ṭana region.

The first large invasion of the Oromo into A. probably took place around 1563 (as mentioned in ch. 11 of the ↗Zenahu lägalla), and happened again several times during the reign of Śärṣä Dəngəl. The Oromo groups crossed through A. many times, invading it or taking part in feuds. In the early 17th cent. during the reign of aṣe ↗Zädəngəl, part of the population of A. followed the "false messiah" ↗Zäkrəstos, and the region was subjected to repression (the movement, however, still had support in A. for a number of years). During the rise to power of ↗Susənyos, A. was the scene of the struggle between him and ↗Yaʿəqob, and so suffered a number of times (e.g., Chronicle of Susənyos, chs. 17–18).

Some areas, originally parts of A., populated by Amharic-speakers, were detached from it in the 18th–19th cent., e.g., Anṣokiya (conquered by märəd azmač ↗Asfa Wäsän of Šäwa in the late 18th cent.). Groups of Oromo (Yäǧǧu and Wällo) settled in parts of A. in the 17th–18th cents., cutting off the Lake Ḥayq area from A. (cp. ↗Täkʷəlädäre), and later creating in East A. the enclave of ↗Wärrä Himano. A core area of A., Sayənt remained safe from the incursions. In the first half of the 19th cent., it was governed by the local ruler Təkku Bərəlle, who was defeated by aṣe ↗Tewodros II. The latter managed to bring under his sway parts of the historical A., including Mäqdäla, by 1855. In the 1870s, ↗Wärrä Illu, apparently one more fragment of historical A., became a stronghold and early capital of nəguś ↗Mənilək (II) of Šäwa; he encroached also into Amhara Sayənt, bringing it, eventually, under his control. The A. province disintegrated. During the following decades (A.) Sayənt was ruled by different appointed governors and did not play a significant role. In the 20th cent., under aṣe Ḫaylä Śəllase I, most of the A. territories were included into the province of ↗Wällo, while the name A. was never taken for any administrative entity, except in connection with Sayənt. Nor was the territorial concept of the historical A. re-utilized in ↗Africa Orientale Italiana; remarkably, the areas of the region were given minimal attention in Guida (393f.).

The complex nature of medieval sources hardly facilitates understanding the precise geographic position of historical A. and its borders, as well as its role in the past. Many questions have been answered by recent historical research (DerDom); some attention was attracted to A. in connection with the origin of the Amharic language. However, in view of the fact that for centuries the area populated by the A. (or Amharic-speaking) people was several times larger than the historical A., a comprehensive study of the culture of the historical A. still remains a desideratum.

In today's Ethiopia, the area of historical A. is part of the North and South Wällo zones of A. regional state. The churches and monasteries of historical A. enjoy deep reverence from the Orthodox community throughout the country, though the area of historical A. is not considered anymore the only region of "pure" Amharic culture and language.

Ammǝḫa Abärra Kaśa

Däǧǧazmač A. (አምኃ ፡ አበራ ፡ ካሣ; b. 15 August 1928, Fǝčče, Sälale, d. 4 December 2003, New York) was a renowned Ethiopian diplomat and politician in the government of aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śǝllase I.

A. was the son of the famous Ethiopian patriot leader däǧǧazmač ↗Abärra Kaśa Ḫaylu (s. EAE vol. 5) and of wäyzärit hoy ↗Käbbädäčč Śǝyyum, a daughter of ras ↗Śǝyyum Mängäša; he was also the nephew of ↗Asfa Wäsän Kaśa. He received his tuition in Gǝ^{c}ǝz and Amharic in his father's house and then went to the Swedish Missionary School in Addis Abäba, which he had to leave after the Italian invasion of Ethiopia in 1936. After the death of his father and uncle at the hands of General Tracchia, his mother, who was also actively involved in the ↗resistance, continued the struggle, until they finally managed to flee to Sudan. From there they (including his brother Tariku) went into exile in ↗Jerusalem via Egypt. There, A. attended the missionary school Collège de Frères.

After the Liberation of Ethiopia in 1941 and his return to his country, he was able to finish his secondary schooling at the Ḫaylä Śǝllase School in Kotäbe, Addis Abäba. After the end of World War II, A. was sent to England for further schooling, where he first went to Malvern College and later to Brasenose College in Oxford; here he received his M.A. in politics, philosophy and economics. In 1951 he returned to Ethiopia and was appointed governor of the Sälale district and advisor to the Ministry of the Interior with the rank of däǧǧazmač. In 1955 he was appointed chairman of Ethiopia's election board, where he supervised the first parliamentary elections.

Moving to foreign affairs, A. became ambassador to Yugoslavia. In 1957 he returned and, after the failed ↗Coup d'état in 1960 (s. EAE vol. 2, 1081f.), was appointed governor-general of Bägemdǝr and Sǝmen. In 1964 A. was appointed Ambassador to the Federal Republic of ↗Germany, where he served until 1968. Upon his return he was made a crown councilor (↗Crown Council), a post he held until the fall of the imperial government in 1974 (↗Revolution of 1974).

Under the ensuing Därg regime (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council), A. was imprisoned for eight years and was finally allowed to go into exile in 1982.

He spent the following years in Jerusalem and then went to the United States. During his exile in the U.S. he held several lectures at Howard University and in Afro-American circles, encouraging the interest of other scholars in the study of Ethiopian history and culture.

After his death he was buried in the Qǝddǝst Śǝllase Cathedral in Addis Abäba.

Andom Täsfa Ṣǝyon

Däǧǧazmač A. (አንዶም ፡ ተስፋ ፡ ጽዮን, also Amdom, አምዶም; b. 1892, Däbri ^{c}Addi Ḥannis, d. 1939, Wälqayt) was a prominent Eritrean ↗askari who defected to the Ethiopian side during the ↗Italian war of 1935–36 and played an important and unique role in the ↗resistance against the Italian occupation.

A. had risen to the rank of ↗šumbaš in the Eritrean colonial army and was married to wäyzäro Sändäq Mängǝśtu with whom he had four children.

Two factors contributed to A.'s desertion as well as that of many thousands of Eritreans who had previously been in colonial employment: first, Eritreans joined the regional and international outcry against fascist Italy's invasion of Ethiopia and rallied in solidarity with the Ethiopian resistance; second, many Eritreans (askari and civilian) objected to Italian large-scale mistreatment of Ethiopians, and to the desecration of Orthodox Christian places of worship.

Shortly after A.'s defection with a few hundred Italian colonial troops that he commanded, aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śǝllase I bestowed upon him the rank of qäññazmač before he took part in the Emperor's last ditch defence at the battle of ↗May Č̣äw.

A.'s desertion from and fighting against the fascist forces is distinct in two important respects. First, unlike most of the askari who fought alongside the patriots inside Ethiopia, A. retained command over his forces, and remained autonomous in his operations. By contrast, Eritreans who joined ras ↗Dästa Damṭäw and ras ↗Ǝmmǝru Ḫaylä Śǝllase in the south were not allowed to carry weapons until late 1936 and early 1937, much less to wage autonomous resistance against Italian forces. Second, upon the Emperor's flight out of the country and the southward retreat of the bulk of the patriots' resistance, A. remained in the rugged terrain of the northern Ethiopian highlands and quickly reorganized his forces to wage guerrilla warfare that Ethiopian nobility openly disparaged. He marched northward to wreak havoc behind enemy lines and render its rear base in Eritrea insecure.

The Italian army rushed to crush A. and his forces because of the real threat that they posed and the example they were becoming to the rest of Eritrean askari. Shortly after the Battle of May Č̣äw, a punitive Italian unit tracked A.'s movements back into Eritrea, and encircled his forces, and A. was wounded. After about six months of recovery – hiding in the war zone and in Sudan – A. resumed resistance in the ↗Wälqayt region where he also started to mobilize the people. In April 1939, an Italian unit encircled A. and his forces once more. In the shootout that ensued, he was fatally wounded and died shortly afterwards.

Meanwhile, from his refuge in Bath, England, the Emperor promoted A. to däǧǧazmač, the news of which arrived around the latter's death. In 1960, he was awarded a posthumous Brigadier Generalship.

His remains were returned to his home village and a street was named after him in Asmära.

Annaa

A. (አና) is the name of an Islamic sanctuary in the small town of Huğra Wärrä Abbaye in today's South Təgray Zone, 40 km to the north-east of Allämäṭa. Originally, "A." designated a branch of the Marawa clan of the Oromo ↗Rayyaa group (BTafA 157) and, as traditions claim, this term was employed locally as a synonym of the territory known as ↗Rayya ᶜAzäbo. The place where the sanctuary was established was originally known as Funnan Dimo. It was renamed as Aman Amba in the first half of the 19th cent., by the founder of the sanctuary šayḫ Muḥammad Faqīh Zubayr, better known as Getaw Säyyid. He was the son of šayḫ Faqīh Zubayr of ↗Yäğğu, who had introduced the Qādirīya Ṣūfī order (↗Islamic brotherhoods) in ↗Wällo (HusIslam 69). He moved to the Rayyaa area in 1827 and during his seven year stay he taught ↗Islam to several students from the region.

At A., Getaw Säyyid was succeeded by one of his students, šayḫ Ğamāladdīn Muḥammad al-Annī (d. 1882), who attained the highest level of Islamic scholarship through five decades of intellectual effort. It is through him that A. developed into a multi-functional Islamic centre (↗Zāwiya). Ğamāladdīn Muḥammad composed an outstanding number of texts and very famous Islamic panegyrics (↗Manzuma). About 50 of his copied works are traceable today. Four of them are published, two in Cairo and two in Addis Abäba. Because of these and other legacies that he left behind at A., the term Anniy 'of Annaa [area]' is affixed to his and his descendants' names as a nisba ('surname'). Even today those who have a blood connection to šayḫ Ğamāladdīn are proud to affix the word Anniy to their name

In the late 1870s aṣe ↗Yoḥannəs IV led a series of campaigns to eradicate Islam from territories under his dominion. A.'s mosque was destroyed, all original manuscripts of šayḫ Ğamāladdīn were burnt, and students were persecuted and forced to disperse. After šayḫ Ğamāladdīn passed away in 1882 A.D., the role of A. as a centre of Islamic scholarship and Ṣūfī training for the Qādirīya brotherhood gradually declined and passed to Dana, in Yäğğu, when šayḫ Aḥmad Ādam (Dāniy al-Awal) was made the successor (ḫālīfa) of the šayḫ.

However, A. managed to survive as a shrine and a popular pilgrimage centre, even though both of its founders were not buried there. Getaw Säyyid was buried at Nəguś, in South Wällo, and šayḫ Ǧamāladdīn was buried at Koräme, in Yäǧǧu. There is a ḥuǧub 'veils [i.e. sanctuary]' at A. within which are found five main ḍarīḥ ('mausoleum') of the son, grandsons and followers of šayḫ Ǧamāladdīn and the ḍarīḥ of ᶜAyša, the wife of Getaw Säyyid and daughter of šayḫ Muḥammad Šafī of Ǧama Nəguś. The first task of any visitor to A. is to visit the ḥuǧub and to pray for the pious founders in order to benefit from their baraka ('blessing'). The whole process of the annual ↗mawlid ceremony and the rituals performed at A. are more or less similar to those identified as common to Muslim Wällo by Hussein Ahmed (HusIslam 84). Though Abbink (2008: 122) observed that its relative remoteness had some negative impact, it still attracts thousands of people across different religious and linguistic boundaries. For both Muslims and Christians of Rayyaa, šayḫ Ǧamāladdīn is affectionately named as Abbuwwa (Orom., 'beloved father'), and his descendants are likewise called Abbona (Tgñ. 'our father').

By the end of the 1930s, the Italian authorities, in order to gain the sympathy of the Muslims of the area, constructed at A. a sturdy mosque which is alleged to resemble Catholic Church architecture. It was constructed on the site of the former ancient mosque demolished by aṣe Yoḥannəs IV. Šayḫ ᶜAbdurraḥmān, the grandson of šayḫ Ǧamāladdīn Muḥammad al-Annī and the guardian of the shrine, refused to use this mosque for prayer. Because of his strong opposition, he was imprisoned along with his family on Nokra, one of the ↗Dahlak Islands, for about two and a half years. Nowadays, whenever the compound is used during the mawlid celebration, "the pilgrims rejoice within [it] but do not pray in it. [(…) they] consider it as a sign of victory" (Berhe Derbew 2010: 78). Many pilgrims scratch their names onto the walls of the sanctuary. Just outside the sanctuary compound are located the graves of those who defended and saved the sanctuary from aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I's forces led by ↗Abbäbä Arägay and ↗Abbäbä Damṭäw. They were led by a certain Muḥammad Bača.

Antinori Expedition

The A.E., also known as the "grande spedizione" in Italy's colonial and geographical circles, was a commercial and scientific mission, commissioned by the ↗Società Geografica Italiana (SGI) active in Ethiopia between 1876 and 1882.

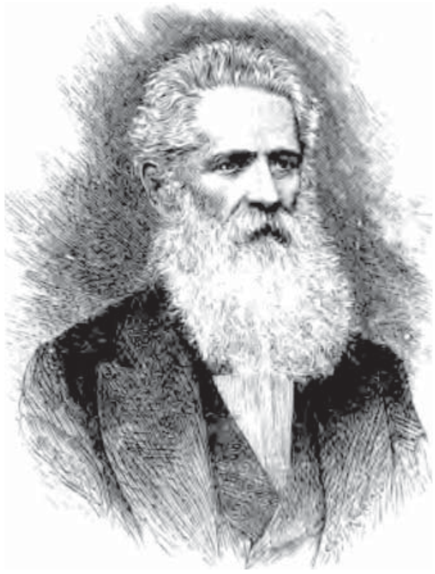
The A.E. was led by Orazio ↗Antinori. Its principal objectives were the creation of a supply and relief station in ↗Šäwa and the exploration of the territories south of the Ethiopian highlands: its ultimate purpose was to locate a gateway to the Great Lakes region – an area then still little known to European explorers.

The original members of the expedition, who left Naples for ↗Zayla^{c} on 25 March 1876, besides Antinori, were the engineer and geologist Giovanni ↗Chiarini, the Italian nobleman and financier of the expedition Sebastiano Martini Bernardi, and Lorenzo Landini, Antinori's assistant. Antonio ↗Cecchi, a navy captain, joined the party on 30 September 1877 in ↗Lǝčče, together with Martini Bernardi, who had been sent back to Italy to improve the expedition's poor supplies.

In the ensuing months, Antinori and Chiarini were allowed to travel throughout Šäwa to survey the territory and collect zoological specimens. Aṣe ↗Mǝnilǝk II perceived the A.E. as an opportunity to strengthen his commercial and political ties with Italy and granted Antinori a parcel of land in ↗Lǝṭ Maräfiya, where the party could build the first Italian scientific station in Ethiopia. In exchange for the land grant, Antinori agreed to provide Mǝnilǝk with ↗firearms. To this purpose Martini returned to Italy for a second time and obtained a supply of rifles from the Rubattino Shipping Company (↗Rubattino, Raffaele).

In May 1878 Antinori instructed Chiarini and Cecchi to continue the exploratory effort and to travel south to locate a path to Lake Victoria. In ↗Käfa the two were imprisoned, together with the missionary Léon des ↗Avanchers, by the Queen of ↗Geeraa, genne Gummiti. Chiarini and des Avanchers died in captivity, while Cecchi was freed in 1880 thanks to nǝguś ↗Täklä Haymanot's intercession. Responsible for soliciting the nǝguś to take action was Gustavo ↗Bianchi, explorer of the Società di Esplorazione Commerciale di Milano, who negotiated the release by promising technical help for the construction of a bridge on the River Tämč̣a (↗Salimbeni expedition).

Chiarini's death and the failure of the expedition shattered the A.E.'s hopes of reaching further south: upon Cecchi's return to Šäwa, the SGI's President Onorato Caetani acknowledged the A.E.'s failure and ordered its return. However, Antinori himself never returned to Italy but died on 22 August 1882 in Lǝṭ Maräfiya.



Orazio Antinori, head of the Antinori Expedition; from Bompiani 1891:54

The A.E.'s accomplishments were limited: the establishment of the station – which remained operational until the Battle of ↗^{c}Adwa; Antinori's zoological collections – primarily housed in the Museo di Storia Naturale of Genoa; and the publication of the members' memoirs that contributed to the production and diffusion of knowledge about Ethiopia.

The A.E. was the SGI's last official expedition to Africa. In 1887 the Battle of ↗Dog^{c}ali marked the end of an era: the surreptitious expansion of Italian interests on the Ethiopian plateau through commercial and scientific expeditions made way for policies of direct military penetration.

I. Archives

a. Introduction

The term A. (from Gr. ἀρχεῖον, archeîon, 'government house [for official records]', in pl. 'official documents', via Lat. archivum), serving also as a singular, designates both one or more collections of documents or public records that because of their historical or cultural value have been either casually stored or carefully selected for permanent or long-term preservation and the physical place(s) they are kept. Meant for the sake of "evidence", their qualities include in principle, but not necessarily, authenticity, reliability, integrity, and usability – copies, fakes and fragments being, however, not any less important to scholars.

A. are different from libraries (s. below) – chiefly, collections of literary texts – as to their functions and organization, although the distinction is not always easy to draw, esp. for ancient and medieval times. If works of literature can be ranged among documentary papers or vice versa, A. are equally often found within library premises or vice versa, as is the case for ecclesiastic material in the early Middle Ages; e.g., for the famous archiepiscopal A. of Ravenna (s. Montanari 1992: 274ff., 281; for modern and contemporary times cp. De Pasquale 2008).

Within this framework, "archival science" (actually, a technique subsidiary to administration and history) encompasses the study not only of material technologies, organizing principles and geographic locations, but also of traditional and electronic storage and catalogue storage methods, digital preservation and the long range impact of storage programs, as well as of the past efforts to keep documents and items and to hand them over, as valuable holders of memories, to future generations. Records are indeed the focus of archival tradition, and can be defined as data or information presented in fixed forms created or received during the course of a tenure or activity and set apart to yield precise data in case of legal controversy.

Evolving from mankind's need to preserve and classify the surrounding world, the use of keeping official documents is very old. Archaeology has revealed A. of hundreds or thousands of clay tablets going back to the 3rd and 2nd millennia B.C. in such sites of the Near East and Greece as Ebla, Mari, Amarna, Ḫattusas, Pylos and Ugarit. These discoveries proved to be instrumental in the knowledge of ancient civilisations as to their writings, languages, literatures, politics and economics. Other A. that existed in ancient China, Greece and Rome have been mainly lost, for their documents were produced in perishable material like wax tablets, paper, parchment (s. ↗manuscripts) and ↗papyrus (s. EAE vol. 5). The latter is preserved almost exclusively, yet abundantly, in Egypt, thanks to the local climate. Here, an important tradition of public and private A. formed from ancient times down to the Islamic conquest and well into the Middle Ages and beyond.

Both the material and typological complexity of papyrus documents and the frequent lack of information on their findings have given rise to an interesting debate among field specialists about the definition of A. vs. dossier, the latter being, in principle, an arbitrary collection, i.e. "a group of texts brought together today concerning a particular person or family, or a particular subject", that "may include a person's archive, if available, as well as other texts that do not belong to the original archive but provide additional information on the archive holder" (Vandorpe 2009: 217ff.). Several A. founded since the early Middle Ages in the service of states, cities and ↗churches or other institutions have survived for quite a long time, often keeping their official function more or less uninterruptedly until now and becoming thereby a basic tool for historical research.

Gianfranco Fiaccadori

b. Medieval and modern archives in Ethiopia and Eritrea

The considerations above also apply, to a certain extent, to Ethiopia, against the widely diffused opinion that royal A. have not been in existence there before the late 17th cent., when aṣe ↗Yoḥannes I had his administrative office, the so called "Chancellery", built at ↗Gondär (next to his "Library"), with a room in the upper store "for the preservation of documents and registers on juridical and fiscal matters" (Monti della Corte 1938: 28f. and pl. IX, cp. Ghiorghis Mellessa 1969: 169; in general, s. Metikou Ourgay 1991 and Wion 2006: 15ff.).

In accordance with the Late Antique "Mediterranean" mould of Ethiopian civilization as it appears from a number of other elements, first and foremost its still operating manuscript production (Bausi, in preparation), it is instead likely that the "city-state" of ↗Aksum was already provided, since its very beginnings, with A. The latter's models are to be sought not so much in the most organized royal A. of the Near East – with South ↗Arabia, where the existence of such A. is proved by the concluding formulae of legal documents on stone (meant for public display) referring to a wooden original signed by the king – as in the diffused archival practice of Graeco-Roman Egypt, which was plausibly also imported or made known by the Alexandrian merchants (negotiatores) soon established at ↗Adulis, the "port of trade" of the Aksumite empire.

In this connection, both the detailed booty registration in ↗ᶜEzana's ↗inscriptions and the title of ᶜaqqabe ḥəgg zäwəʾətu [or ᶜa. ḥ. wä]ṣäḥafe Aksum ('guardian of the Law, that is [or and] secretary [lit. scribe] of Aksum') bestowed , according to reliable sources, by the king on Frumentius or ↗Sälama Käśate Bərhan, the apostle and first bishop of Ethiopia in the first half of the 4th cent., could be significant, for they seem to imply the existence of Aksumite royal A. Again, the perishability of the writing material used in the ↗Red Sea area, along with other circumstances difficult to assess, has prevented that any document came down to us from those A. (Fiaccadori, in preparation). Likewise, however, no Aksumite books are extant, with the disputed exception of the ↗Ǝnda Abba Gärima Gospels (s. Bausi 2010). Thus, it should be but natural to think that, as a practice, like manuscripts and inscriptions, A. did not vanish altogether after the decline of Aksum, since the mid of the 7th cent.

The way documents and A. were physically and institutionally created in Ethiopia and the relevant stages of development remain substantially obscure (s. Crummey 2011: 1ff.). Yet, the surviving evidence – of the utmost importance, from prosopography to economic, social and political history – encompasses several kinds of deeds: "acts granting donations, rights of inheritance and exploitation, land prerogatives and benefits (indicated with the technical terms of ↗gʷəlt, ↗rəst, ↗rim, etc.), usually in favour of the book's owner, foundation charters, inventories of goods and books, any other such document concerning the institution (chiefly a ↗monastery or a church), the place or the region the codex is preserved, or its owner dwells, as historical records, ↗genealogies, ↗monastic rules (e.g., in ms. Florence, Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana Or. 148), prayers, correspondence, etc." (Bausi, in preparation).

Such a variety of documents has been transmitted either in the form of additiones or marginalia, 'additional' or 'marginal notes' (cp. LusStud 110ff. and Lusini 1998: 13f. and nn. 32–33), or rather "guest texts", filling in the blanks and guard leaves of special manuscripts. These notes are composed almost exclusively in Gəᶜəz, but (seldom) also in Arabic and Coptic, although with different linguistic impact, Coptic being chiefly reserved for headings, datings and signatures. At least four "bilingual" or "trilingual" pieces of the kind are known, resp. from the 14th (I), 15th (II), 17th (III) – the latter in two copies of the shorter and one of the longer version – and 19th (IV) cent. (s. Schneider 1970 [I and II]; Bosc-Tiessé – Derat 2011: 89f. and nn. 14-16 [107f.: II = EMML no. 6907]; Wion 2012: 105–10 and n. 15 [III]; and Nosnitsin 2007 [IV]).

Most frequently, important church service books, esp. the Golden Gospel (↗Wängelä wärq) were chosen to preserve such "guest text" collections, often included on separate leaves or quires that were subsequently appended and eventually bound together within one single volume. Copies were sometimes made and inserted, too, along with their antigraphs. No matter the number of documents or their way of transmission, the "host" manuscripts (a few of them dispersed to European libraries) form a downright A., in keeping with the classical definition provided by ↗Guidi on publishing the wealthy 17th-cent. "cartulary" (146 pieces) of ↗Ḥamarä Noḫ (Gondär), preserved in the ms. BritLib Orient. 508, fols. 277v–287 (Guidi 1906: 651f.).

Guidi's definition, indeed very clear, has been recently misunderstood as considering each single document as an A. (Wion 2006: 16f. and Ead. – Bertrand 2011: ixf.). This actually stems from a terminological discussion that, over the past few years, has been focusing on A. in Ethiopia – mainly the official and ecclesiastical ones, private and secular A., such as collections of letters (e.g., of the 19th-cent. däbtära ↗Assäggak̲äñ) and records left behind by lay families (e.g., ras Wäldä Giyorgis and his heirs in early 18th- to mid 19th-cent. Gondär, s. CrumLand 114–43, 292–96), so common in the European tradition, being rather exceptional there (ibid. 15, also for the interlinked research limitations). A further consequence of the same discussion is the proposal, no less astray, to label Ethiopian archival documents as condaghi (sg. -ghe). This term (from Byzantine Gr. κοντάκιον, kontákion, 'pole around which a scroll is wound', suggesting the shape of the first condaghi) was used in Sardinia, between the 11th and the 13th cent., for somehow similar classes of deeds (Kropp 2005a: 618f. and 2005b: 193–97, but s. Wion 2006: 16f.). As a matter of fact, Ethiopic terms are also known for the "codicological units" resulting from the "expansion" of manuscripts with "guest texts" or entire series of them, and deserve more attention: e.g., däbdabbe, 'letter, register, document' (also 'packet, bundle'), pointing to a 'superimposed script'; mäzgäb, 'notebook, record(s), (land) register' (lit. 'treasure'); gäbäz, 'register, repository'; tarik, 'history'; mädbäl, 'collection', etc.

The most ancient published Ethiopic documents, dating from the beginnings of the 13th cent., under King ↗Lalibäla, are found in the Golden Gospel of ↗Däbrä Libanos of Ham, an A. in itself, including also later as well as earlier acts, the latter being apocryphal and in quite recent garb (CRDLib, cp. now Derat 2010: 24–34). The only older collection hitherto known is the mostly unpublished, yet problematic, "cartulary" of King Ṭänṭäwəddəm, the second ↗Zagʷe ruler (ca. 1145/50), which was copied within a single 18th-cent. quire, with land grants for the church of ᶜUra/ᶜOra (Betä) Mäsqäl of Qəfrəya, in ↗Gulo Mäk̲äda (Derat 2010: 25f. and n. 35, cp. Nosnitsin 2010: 2f.). Similar separate parchment ms. registers (of lands) are known but for the much later churches of ↗Däbrä Ṣ́äḥay Qʷəsqʷam and Bäᵓata (Däbrä Ṭəbab) in Gondär and of Fänǧa Maryam in nearby ↗Dämbəya (CrumLand 15, 145ff., 169–77f.).

Other worth mentioning cases of the A. category best represented in Ethiopia are, at least, the Golden Gospel of ↗Däbrä Ḥayq Ǝsṭifanos (the "Gospels of ↗Iyäsus Moᵓa", ms. EMML no. 1832, with 13th–14th cent. documents, cf. Taddesse Tamrat 1970); the second part of the so-called Liber Aksumae (Mäṣḥafä ↗Aksum, s. CRAxum and HuntLand); the Mäṣḥafä ↗ṭefut of ↗Amba Gəšän and his late 17th-/early 18th-cent. "mirror copy", BritLib Orient. 481 (cp. Heldman in AfrZion 246f., no. 107), around which the condaghi notion developed (s. also Kropp 1989–90; 2004 and in VarAeth); ms. BritLib Orient. 650, with land charters by Emperors ↗Śärṣ́ä Dəngəl and ↗Iyasu I (Merid Wolde Aregay 1985); the Golden Gospel of Däbrä Maᶜ(ə)so Qəddus Yoḥannəs Məṭmaq (Gulo Mäk̲äda), with 17th- to 19th-cent. deeds and the unique commemoration, written under aṣe ↗Zärᵓa Yaᶜəqob, of "abba ᵓAstona, the patriarch [liqä p̣ap̣pasat] of the land of Rome", martyred there by "pagans" (ᵓarämawiyan) in obscure circumstances (Nosnitsin 2012), most likely, though, after the re-establishment of the ↗Solomonic dynasty; and ms. EMML no. 9092, with acts by Emperors ↗Bäᵓədä Maryam and ↗Ǝskəndər for the church of ↗Bərbər Maryam (Gamo) that bear witness to the keen interest of the Christian kingdom in the south-west of Ethiopia (Deresse Ayenachew 2011). A few manuscripts, likewise, yield documents on the Ethiopian community of ↗Jerusalem, among them, Paris, BN éth. 32 (with a bilingual piece, too, in Ethiopic and Arabic), 35 and 46 (cp. CerPal II, 382–432).

The presence, in these collections, of acts issued, if not by Aksumite, certainly by Zagʷe and Solomonic kings, poses a major question as to the relationships with the royal A., in terms of contemporary copies or duplicates given to the institution concerned vs. originals kept in the "public record office" (Lusini 1998: 13f. and nn. 32–33, but s. Bausi in StudAeth 22 n. 65 and 2008: 47 and n. 138; Fiaccadori 2011: 201 and nn. 4–5, 204). The term "cartulary" would particularly apply here with reference to a register or book with duplicates of the charters or title deeds relating, e.g., to a monastery or a church (such as ᶜUra Mäsqäl or Ḥamarä Noḫ). In the "Middle Ages", the Ethiopian state seems to have lost a permanent centre, its capitals being, with few exceptions, in a continual motion. These roving capitals, coinciding more often with the royal itinerant military camp (↗kätäma), could have been definitely equipped with A. following (with a few useful books) the movements of the court according to the pattern, well-known to 9th–12th cent. Europe, of "viatory

A." – attended by a few administrative units who brought with them the collections of official documents essential for routine matters.

The existence of such A., as a depository of the originals of acts that have come down to us in the exemplars made for their beneficiary or in further copies, can be reasonably inferred from a passage in the 17th-cent. Vita of ↗Märqorewos of Däbrä Dəmaḥ (d. 1419/20), which avowedly embeds earlier sources and traditions (ed. Conti Rossini 1904: 43f.). The text has it that Märqorewos met aṣe ↗Dawit II in ↗Ḥamasen, while the king was returning from "the land of ↗Sinnār" (the town on the Blue Nile, ca. 270 km south of ↗Khartoum), where he had received a ↗relic of the True Cross "from the envoys of the patriarch" of Alexandria (cp. Raineri 1999: 382f. and n. 77). On that occasion, Dawit would have given to the saint "villages and lands" (aḫgurä wabäḥawərtä): "[…] The king said to Ǧawhar, the prefect of his house [↗mäggabe betu]: 'Bring me the [parchment] leaf [kərtas] I have given to you'. And he brought the leaf as [the king] had told him". Then the latter summoned the śəyyum of Särawe (↗Säraye) and read before him the name of those villages, "in the number of 85", which "he gave to our father Märqorewos […]" (cp. Lusini 1998: 13f. and nn. 32–33).

The existence of royal archives like those overseen by Ǧawhar – most probably an Egyptian – is further confirmed, for the 15th and 16th cent., by a neglected episode attested to in western sources, namely two 1524 letters of aṣe ↗Ləbnä Dəngəl to Pope Clement VII, which he entrusted to Francisco ↗Alvares. As an ambassador of the Ethiopian emperor, Alvares would have delivered them to their addressee, in Paolo ↗Giovio's Latin translation, only nine years later at Bologna. Among other things, Ləbnä Dəngəl was thereby returning to Clement VII, as a mark of affection, the exemplar of the Bull of Union Cantate Domino promulgated in 1442 at the Council of ↗Florence that had been sent by Pope Eugene IV to aṣe Zärᵓa Yaᶜəqob, in whose A. (in nostris archivis proavi nostri, 'in the archives of ours, of our great-grandfather') it had been kept "unchanged" (incorruptum) until then (Raineri 2005: 65f., cp. 59; s. Fiaccadori, in preparation).

c. Contemporary archives in the Horn of Africa

In modern times, the maintenance of A. in the Horn of Africa is becoming a professional enterprise, even though older patterns continue to persist. Older A. of rulers or office-holders are often kept in private hands or get lost; more modern A. are kept in the institutions were they were created, being often highly endangered and in many cases inaccessible; only very recently this started to change especially in the case of higher-ranking state institutions. Libraries (s. below) have become widely institutionalized, and ↗museums – focusing on an attractive presentation of objects for a wider audience in a suitable spatial framework rather than pure preservation of information – have been established.

Archives in Ethiopia

Since the 19th cent., we have reliable knowledge of the state or royal archives kept by Ethiopian rulers (s. esp. letters in RubActa I–III; Smidt 2009). The ↗Mäqdäla treasury, besides assembling a huge collection of manuscripts looted from Gondär, preserved aṣe Tewodros II’s state registers (such as tax records; Pankhurst 1978/79). The mäzgäb of ləǧ ↗Iyasu’s state correspondence, comprising several hundreds of pages, was hidden following the abortive coup d’état of 1916 and is now in private hands.

Of relevance since the 19th cent. at least are also extensive private non-royal A. Later, statesmen and ministers would keep their own mäzgäb (e.g., ↗Bäyyänä Yəmär in EAE vol. 5; Smidt 2010; ↗Täsämma Ǝšäte; ↗Zännäb). Regional rulers too had their own A., as is illustrated by the early 20th-cent. mäzgäb of an Oromo governor in Wälläga, containing letters exchanged by him (Triulzi – Tesemma Taʾa 2003). Otherwise, while rich manuscript collections are known to exist in South Ethiopian Muslim regions (esp. the collection of ʿAbdallāh Šarīf in ↗Harär, but also ↗Arsi), no systematic documentary A. seem to have been kept, ↗oral tradition as remembered by the elders apparently fully replacing the “archiving” function of written documents.

The ↗Italian war of 1935–36 and the looting of Addis Abäba contributed to the loss of a large number of pre-war A. Many state letters and acts were used until well into the 1950s as packing or firing material. It is only from 1941 that one can speak of the establishment of state A. in the proper sense, i.e. of a systematic collection and filing of documents in ministries and, following this, the establishment of national A.

Today, every state office, including those on the regional state (kəlləl) level, keep their own A. some of them being accessible to researchers. One of the A. which are the most important for the study of contemporary history of Ethiopia are the ↗Tigray People’s Liberation Front’s A.

in Mäq̱älä, of which important parts are currently prepared to be opened to researchers through Mäq̱älä University. The publically accessible National Archives division of the ↗National Archives and Library of Ethiopia (NALE, founded as a library in 1943) was only created in 1977. The Ethiopian National Archives and Library Proclamation (No. 179/1999) set a new legal and organisational framework for the NALE, applying to the federal government offices and enterprises and the administrations of Addis Abäba and Dərre Dawa (but excluding the Regional States' administration, who shall have their own A. regulations). Recently, NALE has received the complete A. of the Ministry of Interior before 1991; previously NALE had incorporated former private A. of pre-1974 high ranking state personnel and nobles.

Also NGOs, some of them active since the 1960s, keep A., as do commercial companies (such as, e.g., the St. George Brewery). Due to a lack of legal regulations and incentives, such A. are frequently not transferred to NALE and get subsequently lost. A rise of awareness of the importance of A. can be observed, even private people having started to set up their own A., starting from documenting their personal memories (e.g., by notables of the ↗government of Ḫaylä Śəllase) until the elaboration of specialized collections (e.g., the transfer of the personal library of ↗Bərhanu Abbäbä, containing photos from a one-century-old A. of Armenian photographers, to the French Centre of Ethiopian Studies [CFEE], Addis Abäba, is being discussed).

Archives in Eritrea

Most colonial A., set up by the Italians starting from the late 19th cent., seem to be lost. However, some A. of local residenze (administrative posts) seem to have been preserved, such as the one in ↗ᶜAddi Q̱äyyəḥ in Akkälä Guzay. The rich A. of the residenza of ↗Naqfa have been preserved by chance, as a British officer took care of these A. after the British took over the territory in 1941; the officer published the full material later (d'Avray 1996), thus making the A. which provide detail information on local ethnic subgroups, thoroughly collected by Italian officers at the beginning of colonisation, fully accessible.

In ↗Massawa, the centuries-old presence of an Islamic court, at times under the Ottoman, later under Egyptian administration, is documented in its A. from the 19th cent., in Arabic (basis for important research work on Massawa and Red Sea history; Miran 2009). There are also important private A. of dignitary's families, such as the family of ↗Ibrāhīm al-Muḫtār, the former mufti of Eritrea; the ↗Mirġanīya family (↗Islamic brotherhoods); the ↗nāʾib family; former office holders of the ↗Ethiopian-Eritrean Federation, etc.

The A. of the Municipality and the High Court of ↗Asmära have been recently studied as a unique source of social history (Locatelli 2004; 2007).

A very peculiar form of traditional archiving is the keeping of written local legal regulations (↗Law: law books), which are known from Eritrean highland communities. These local laws are kept (often in secret) by "law villages", which traditionally are not the seats of governors, and where a governor has to go in order to consult the law before decisions. In addition, as in other regions of north-eastern Africa, elders and urbanized families have started to document their oral traditions, and especially genealogies.

The A. of the Catholic church of Asmära are usually only accessible for internal researchers. It seems to preserve important collections, including letters and diaries of some of the first Catholic missionaries established in northern Abyssinia (i.e. the highlands) starting from the 19th cent. (↗Lazarists; ↗Capuchins). Other Catholic records are stored in the Catholic Pavoni Social Centre (s. under Libraries).

Today, the most important archival institution is the Research and Documentation Centre (RDC) in Asmära, a research institution set up in the course of the Eritrean struggle for independence and based also on older collections, regularly enriched by donations, e.g., by researchers. The RDC possesses rare publications and rich collections of unpublished material especially on the former Eritrean and Ethiopian administrations in Asmära. During the 1st International Conference of Eritrean Studies in 2001, the establishment of the National Archives of Eritrea was discussed by state officials, linked with the idea that local institutions, both state-owned and private, shall transfer their collections to these new A. The idea was, however, not realized, which further strengthened the importance of the RDC.

Archives in Djibouti

The general situation of A. is comparable with that of the neighbours: partially well kept, partially in a critical state of preservation. During the colonial period A. had been partially transferred to France, where they are kept in the Archives nationales de France (ANF). The A. of the Chambre de commerce, of the Préfecture de Dikhil and of the Électricité de Djibouti are well preserved, different from numerous others.

A part of the A. of the Chemins de fer djibouti-éthiopiens (↗Railways) is kept in Djibouti. According to the preservation survey conducted by the CFEE (2009), a bulk of the documentary heritage is kept in sacks, but also in cupboards in the administrative buildings or hangar, often without inventories. Only a smaller part has been accessible to researchers.

d. Foreign archives

Interactions of foreign powers with Ethiopia and Eritrea are documented in the relevant A. kept abroad.

The A. of the ministries of foreign affairs of the ↗United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, ↗France, ↗Italy, ↗Germany, ↗Austria and ↗Russia possess particularly rich collections due to their early involvement in diplomatic contacts with Christian Ethiopia, and, partially, neighbouring Muslim kingdoms such as ↗Awsa or the Somali sultanates (in the case of France, Great Britain and at times Austria there were vice-consuls in Massawa, who starting from the mid-19th cent. had to send regular reports on local developments; s. Bairu Tafla 1994; s. the quite comprehensive overview in RubInd and especially RubActa I–III). In particular, ↗colonialism (especially Italian, French and British) left behind a rich documentary record kept in various governmental and non-governmental archives.

Due to the Ottoman territories at the coast, there are rich collections in today's ↗Turkey (s. Orhonlu 1974), and, similarly, in the State A. of ↗Egypt, Dār al-Kutub, in Cairo, due to the involvement of Egypt in the Horn of Africa in the 19th cent. Especially around the Egyptian–Ethiopian War 1875–76 many documents were produced, which are well-kept in the State A. (DouinIsm III). Most scientific reports of geographers and ethnographers, such as a unpublished ethnographic book manuscript by Werner ↗Munzinger, written in the 1870s about the northern Sudan and today's Eritrean territories, were kept at the Société khédivale de géographie at Cairo, but were destroyed in ca. 2002 after they were identified as "insignificant" for Egyptian history. Usually, however, A. are well-kept in most countries who had been involved in north-eastern Africa.

In most Western countries one can find explorer's reports on north-eastern African territories in A.; especially rich seem to be the collections in Gotha, a 19th-cent. centre of cartographic and ethnographic interest esp. in north-eastern Africa, which have not yet been made accessible to the public. Such reports – and sometimes rich cartographic material – can also be found in museums and occasionally state A. (e.g., the Ziegler Map Collection at the Basle State Archives). Rich material produced by social anthropologists is usually preserved in ethnological institutes (e.g., ↗Frobenius-Institut, Frankfurt am Main).

As missionary involvement was a great factor in the modernization of Ethiopia, numerous missionary institutions are or were in possession of important A. relevant for the region. For the early Protestant mission, this is especially the A. of the ↗St. Chrischona-Pilgermission (most of which is now kept in the Spittler private A. in the Basle State Archives), and the A. of the Swedish mission in Uppsala; for the Catholic mission, the A. of the ↗Lazarists, Paris, are particularly rich, and those of the ↗Capuchins in Rome, not to mention the ↗Vatican A.

Private A. left by foreigners who were involved in the region are usually in the hands of their descendants. They can be of greatest importance, even if they often contain few documents only (cp. the case of a single 1913 photo of nəguś ↗Mikaʾel, s. Smidt 2008). Unfortunately, these A. are often undervalued and can easily perish; a comprehensive study and inventory remains a desideratum.

Also the centuries-old migrations of Yemenites to the Horn of Africa and inverse are reflected in the existence of A., which, however, are virtually unknown yet to researchers. A special case are the private collections of the "al-Aḥbūš" communities in the Yemen, especially in Bayt al-Ḥabšī and in the capital city of Ḥadramawt, Asay^{c}un, possessing important manuscript collections allegedly containing reports on their history.

In best cases, private A. are transferred to public repositories or are officially declared publicly accessible (e.g., the A. of Indian merchants and companies, such as ↗Mohamedally & Company, in his descendants' hands in Gujarat, India). State A. and museums receiving private collections are often not closely linked with ↗Ethiopian studies (e.g., the collection of the former teacher at the Addis Ababa School of Fine Arts, Ebba Dettenberg-Weddig, went to the Gottorf Museum, Schleswig; or the early 20th cent. Melchers collection to the Bremen Übersee-Museum; the Saska Laszlo papers in the Ethnographic Museum of Hungary; cp. Szélinger 2011).

A recent project documented virtually all A. in France, even very remote and quite unknown ones such as the Château Antoine d'Abbadie in Hendaye, which possess documents related with Djibouti and the wider Ethiopian region (Prijac 2011).

Film and photo A. are a special category so far often overlooked by researchers, even if nowadays hardly underestimated in their importance (cp. ↗Photography). There is no institution, which explicitly collects film material from north-eastern Africa (↗Films in EAE vol. 5), but in recent years film A. in metropolitan centres such as Paris and Berlin started to catalogue old film material and partially restore them, with the effect that some films produced by early film makers in north-eastern Africa started to be accessible to researchers. One of the most important film A. with ethnographic films from north-eastern Africa is the Institut für den Wissenschaftlichen Film, Göttingen.

In addition to visual records, sound records documenting interviews, music and songs of north-eastern Africa have been kept in specialized collections since the early 20th cent., but are generally even more incomplete. Mainz University possesses a collection of music cassettes from Africa, with some focus on Ethiopia starting from popular music in the 1980s. The most pioneering work is the CD publications by Francis Falceto (label: Buda Productions), with the serial title éthiopiques, which document music from the early 20th cent. to the 1990s found in most diverse collections, thus now by themselves forming a "virtual" music A. Early 20th-cent. recordings of instrumental music and songs are found in the ↗phonogram collections, especially in the musicology department of the Ethnographic Museum of Berlin-Dahlem and in the Akademie der Wissenschaften of Vienna. Huge recordings of interviews by social anthropologists have been donated in recent years to the ↗Institute of Ethiopian Studies.

II. Libraries

Unlike A., L. are organized collections of written materials (printed books, ↗manuscripts, but also maps as well as other formats, including ↗photographs and microforms) that serve preservation and research, not primarily aimed at preserving documentary historical records. L. can be broadly accessible (public) or meant for personal or family use (private).

In Ethiopia, L. traditionally had their roots in the “treasure houses” (↗əqa bet) of the churches and monasteries and of the nobility. These treasuries usually included manuscripts, but made no distinction between them and other precious objects. This is a consequence of the institutional role the Ethiopian Orthodox Church has played as the main keeper of the written and literary culture. (cf. Too 2010). In tourist areas these houses are now often locally called “[↗]museums”.

The majority of well over 20,000 churches and monasteries in Ethiopia and Eritrea preserve anything between a few and several hundred books and documents. Some of them fulfil the function of an A. (s. above), but most are concerned with the practice of religious devotion. Several projects have attempted to document these collections, but probably less than ten percent have been microfilmed and/or digitized so far, and even much less researched or translated (Lusini 2007). Earlier travellers collected, copied or had manuscripts copied by local copyists, from ecclesiastical collections, and in some cases even from private ones. Though thousands of books were thus taken out of the country, the greatest bulk of manuscripts remained in the possession of church institutions, either monasteries or churches, to a very limited extent also in private houses. The investigation of church and monastic libraries is at its very beginning, very often basing only upon monastic inventories (cp. Sergew Hable Selassie in OrbAethChoj; BauEr I, 15f.; Pankhurst in PICES 12; Wion in PICES 16; Bosc-Tiessé 2009).

Due to difficult conditions of preservation and, even more, economic pressure, a number of these collections are endangered and were dispersed or even destroyed only in recent years. An example is the destruction by fire of the A. of the late Aksumite ↗Däbrä Damo monastery less than a decade ago (s. also ↗Manuscripts: Ethiopic manuscripts).

In the Muslim areas of Ethiopia and Eritrea, manuscript collections are also known to have existed for centuries; especially ancient Muslim kingdoms or entities such as ↗Harär. Many Arabic and ağamī manuscripts survive in private collections – the best known being the one of šayḫ ᶜAbdallāh Šarīf (s. Gori, in preparation). Also the religious centres of Islamic brotherhoods and other centres of learning (↗Mosques) preserve documents, e.g., ağamī manuscripts in Oromiffaa in the surroundings of Harär, in ↗Wällo or in ↗Arsi (s. also ↗Manuscripts: Arabic manuscripts).

In many regions of Ethiopia and Eritrea, L., according to recent research, are in popular imagination restricted to very few powerful scholars, lords or spiritual leaders, who, through these documents, have access to hidden knowledge and power. There are also legends of lost ancient L., which are still kept by neighbouring communities who refuse any access to them, according to popular belief; such narratives are linked with the idea that “true knowledge” exists, but in the hands of few, and not generally accessible.

Besides church and monastic L., royal and private manuscript collections have been known to exist since early times. Tradition has it that a small building erected by aṣe ↗Yoḥannəs I in ↗Gondär was intended as a L., though it may have stored only the imperial A., or indeed may have had other uses (Ghiorgis Mellessa 1969: 369). Tradition maintains that the Emperor was a studious person who “greatly loved books” (DonMurad 180) and also maintains that it was a L.; the L. designation was accepted without question by Monti della Corte (1938: 27).

The first major Ethiopian L. of which reliable evidence exists was the extensive collection of manuscripts assembled by aṣe ↗Tewodros II at his mountain fortress and capital of ↗Mäqdäla, which became the storehouse of his treasures. A significant part of these treasures were fine manuscripts, many seized from Gondär and transported to Tewodros’s capital at ↗Däbrä Tabor before being taken to Mäqdäla. As a result of the ↗Napier Expedition of 1867–68 and the consequent suicide of Tewodros, 400 of the over 1,000 manuscripts looted from Mäqdäla were transported to England. Of these 350 were acquired by the ↗British Library.

It was not until the early 1930s that the idea of a public L. emerged, in response to the spread of modern education and the establishment of printing presses producing literature in ↗Gəʿəz and ↗Amharic. The first public L. was organized for the Ministry of Education by Georges Pecoul, a Frenchman who became an advisor to the Ministry in 1932, but died two years later. It had several hundred Gəʿəz manuscripts and Amharic printed books, as well as books in French, English, German and Russian, some of which had been received at the Palace and had been turned over by the Emperor ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase to the Ministry. By 1935 the L. contained more than 1,000 volumes.

Further Ethiopian library development was interrupted by the Italian occupation of 1936–41. In the period immediately preceding the occupation, the Emperor's L. was looted and was only partially recovered. During the Italian Occupation, the Ministry of the Pen archives and many manuscripts were taken to Rome, some being returned after the War. The Italians established a central L. for ↗Africa Orientale Italiana in Addis Abäba, for the use of Italian civil servants. It contained some 15,000 volumes, mainly in Italian. These later formed the nucleus of the Research Division of the National Library (later ↗National Archives and Library of Ethiopia, NALE; now officially National Archives and Library Agency, NALA). A strong collection on Eritrea was also built up in ↗Asmära.

L. as a public service developed in the post-war period of reconstruction. On 5 May 1944, the National Library was inaugurated by Emperor Ḫaylä Śəllase, with the aim of preservation and cataloguing of material concerning Ethiopia (s. also EAE vol. 3, 1153a). In 1952, the Institut Éthiopien d'Études et de Recherche came into existence, as an attachment to the National Library. It was devoted largely to archaeological research. In the 1950s and 1960s the collection of foreign language books increased considerably, particularly in the social sciences, thanks to a vigorous engagement with embassies and cultural centres in the capital. A programme of monthly public lectures was launched in 1958 in the Ḫəruy Wäldä Śəllase Reading Hall, and proved an immediate success. Lectures about the newly emerging states of Africa, some by African leaders attending conferences in Addis Abäba, drew large audiences and were relayed by loudspeaker to listeners outside. The programme has been recently reactivated.

The organization of the National Library into "Research Division" and "Public Division" was confirmed by the Proclamation 50/68 of 1975/76. The National Library was brought together with the National Archives in 1999 as NALE, following Proclamation 179/91. The two respective Directors report to a single Director-General in the Ministry of Information and Culture. In 2005, NALE, by Proclamation 471/98, was re-named NALA, the National Archives and Library Agency. A new four-floor building was inaugurated in the same grounds in 2008; it houses the National Archives as well as reading rooms and offices. The Ethiopica collection remains in the old library building. There are over 620 parchment manuscripts, including early illuminated ones, some 400 paper manuscripts, almost 500 rare books, archive letters, relevant publications in foreign languages, thousands of microfilms, and early newspapers printed in the country. A spacious periodicals room is well attended, as are the general Amharic and foreign language collections in the Reading Hall, visited by 60,000 readers a year.

In 2009 NALA received gratis the entire L. of the British Council in Ethiopia, at first under partnership with NALA, but in 2011 as a gift. It comprises 15,000 books relevant to Ethiopia, in areas such as management, and development, education and culture, and 2,000 CDs and videos, many for English language teaching and learning. In addition NALA received software for library automation of the catalogues, membership records and circulation.

The first separate public L. in Ethiopia, the Addis Ababa City Council Library, was established in the Municipality building during the Revolutionary period, and continues to serve the public. Because of the high demand, readers are limited to four hours at a time.

A public L. in Gondär was for a time situated in ətege Məntəwwab's (↗Bərhan Mogäsa) castle, but later acquired its own building. During the 1974 Revolution L were established at district level in urban areas. With the administrative division of the country into Regions in the early 1990s L. provision became a regional responsibility.

The L. of ↗Addis Ababa University is Ethiopia's largest L. resource, with a collection of half a million catalogued volumes, well over 600 microform formats, and more than 3,000 serial titles. Founded in 1961, it took over the collections of the University College of Addis Ababa in 1964, when Rita Pankhurst was appointed the first University Librarian. L. on the main campus and other campuses, as well as those outside the capital, were gradually incorporated into a single University Library system. The main L., named after J.F. Kennedy, opened in 1965 and was inaugurated in 1970 by the Emperor and Rose Kennedy. Built with aid from the ↗United States of America on two floors and a basement (put to use later), it provided a total area of 7,500 m². Together with the building, a grant of US-$ 345,000 from the Ford Foundation helped to provide a basic book stock, essential periodicals, and three expatriate professional staff to catalogue new books. As pressure on the L. increased, its use was restricted first to students above the first year, the latter being provided for in faculty L.; more recently it has opened its doors to all students, faculty and staff, though access to some material is severely rationed.

The first sudden increase in student numbers after the 1974 Revolution, and the growth of post-graduate studies, placed a heavy strain on library resources. Despite some recognition of the plight of educational L., these strains have increased as undergraduate student numbers, and postgraduate studies in many fields, have inexorably grown, while budgets have not increased proportionately. In response to pressure on space and reading materials from a student population of over 40,000 and a teaching staff of over 2,000, the Kennedy L. and some branch libraries in the University system have, since 2004, been open daily for 24 hours. The main L. activities have been automated. Through the internet, available in all nine L., continuous access to the full text of 10,000 electronic journals and leading bibliographic data bases has been made available online since 2004, in collaboration with the International Network for the Availability of Scientific Publication (INASP). The University plays a major role in the Consortium of Ethiopian Academic and Research Libraries, and in an international Program for the Enhancement of Research Information, as well as participating in the Africa-wide Database of African Theses and Dissertations.

The L. of the ↗Institute of Ethiopian Studies (IES; founded in 1963) plays a unique role in the University and the country as its leading research resource on Ethiopia. It developed under the leadership of its first Librarian, Stanislaw ↗Chojnacki, from the Ethiopica collection of the University College of Addis Ababa. The IES L. aimed to collect not only books and periodicals about Ethiopia or printed in Ethiopia, but also rare manuscripts, archives, theses, maps, photographs, slides, and, later, microfilms, films and computer-generated materials connected with the country, and with Eritrea and the Horn of Africa.

During the Revolution, Däggäfä Gäbrä Ṣadəq, the first Ethiopian Librarian of the Institute, saved many endangered books and archives from wanton destruction. The L. pioneered the publication of an annual national ↗bibliography, Ethiopian Publications 1965–79, later produced as a series of indexes by NALA. In its first 40 years the L. grew to become the world's largest collection under one roof of information on Ethiopia, with over 100,000 books (3,000 in Ethiopian languages) 2000 M.A. theses, 38,000 photographs and 10,000 reels of microfilm. In 2010–11 the 14,000 archival records were digitized. Retrospective conversion of the card catalogue is in progress. The growth in library holdings has necessitated the search for more space, and an adjacent 5,800 m², three-floor purpose-built library is nearing completion.

The University of Asmära, granted university status in 1967, had to establish a new L. in English, as the institution, previously run by Italian nuns, comprised mainly books in Italian. An insufficiency of relevant stock hampered the ability of the L. to support teaching. With the independence of Eritrea in 1991 L. links across the frontier were severed. In 1993 the faculties were accommodated in buildings in different parts of the city and the University was subsequently closed.

Also in Asmära, the Catholic Pavoni Social Centre has built up one of the most important regional research centres with books and unpublished material since the 1960s, under the guidance of Fr. Ezio Tonini. Additionally, the Research and Documentation Centre has an increasing collection of books and manuscripts (s. under Archives above).

As faculties and colleges in Ethiopia developed into universities and research institutes there was little change in the ability of their libraries to provide adequate budgetary support for teaching and learning. It was difficult to obtain foreign exchange for books and journals published abroad. In the early 21st cent. determined efforts to automate L. processes improved the organization of academic L. and, through the Internet, access to the resources of the wider world, but overcrowding and a paucity of books still handicapped the learning process.

The British Council Library, which opened in the early post-Liberation period, acted as a popular free, later fee-paying, public L., which kept up with the times, being the first in the capital to offer internet café facilities. It also concentrated on Africa and development literature, in the form of reports generated by ministries and international agencies, and trained specialist reference librarians. In 2009 the library was transferred to NALA. The French, German and Italian Cultural Institutes and, on a more modest scale the Russian one, also provide L., stocking periodicals and books mainly in their respective languages. These libraries are much appreciated by students and citizens wanting to improve their language skills.

Addis Abäba has benefited from the presence of the United Nations Economic Commission for Africa (UNECA 1958), with its innovative information systems and specialization in African economies. Though not publicly available, the UNECA L. is accessible to scholars.

A well-organized, digitized L. belongs to the International Livestock Research Institute (ILRI, headquarters in Nairobi) that developed in 1995 from the International Livestock Center for Africa, established in 1974. In 2010–11 the L. converted most of its stock to electronic media. Most of its 40,000 printed volumes and 250 printed journal holdings were donated to universities and agricultural institutes. The L.'s facilities, including subscriptions to 46 electronic journals, shared with Nairobi Headquarters, are used not only by its staff but also by numerous external research workers and students of agriculture.

Several Government research institutes, such as the Health and Nutrition Research Institute (formerly the Pasteur Institute) and some other government-related special L., receive foreign assistance or free periodical and report literature. Many others suffer from lack of adequate budgets.

Among private libraries mention should be made of Ḫaylä Śəllase's L. containing works donated by Ethiopian authors, both in manuscript and in printed form.

A L. was also assembled in the ↗Jubilee Palace, at first intended for important visitors, comprising books in English on contemporary affairs, economics and politics.

Sustained Library and Information Science education began in the mid-1960s at Addis Ababa University with a one-year full-time, or two and a half year part-time, undergraduate Diploma in Library Science designed for junior librarians. Until it was discontinued in 1976 some 425 students had graduated with this diploma. Intended for para-professionals, it was revised, and extended over two years in regular classes and three in extension. In this guise it was reinstated in 1978. By 2005 about 900 students had graduated. In response to a proliferation of educational and other public institutions, and consequently of L., in the period 1977-86, a Bachelor of Library and Information Science four-year degree programme was introduced. It graduated some 650 students until it was phased out and replaced in 2000 by a four-year Bachelor of Science in Information Systems degree course to take into account the shift of mission of the University towards more postgraduate education and research. As a result of these initiatives a pool of professional and para-professional information workers have begun to provide well managed library and information services.

The Ethiopian Library Association (ELA) was founded in 1967 and achieved official status in 1969. It published biannually in 1969–78 an ELA Bulletin, as well as, in 1968, a Directory of Ethiopian Libraries and in 1976, a Directory of Special Libraries. The ELA was re-constituted as the Ethiopian Library and Information Association, and published the first number of an ELIA Newsletter, in 1995.

Rita Pankhurst

Arras, Victor

A. (born Hendrik Lodewijk A.; b. 8 July 1901, Lier, d. 2 April 1996, Antwerp) was a Belgian Catholic priest and prominent scholar of Eastern Christianity, who made an important contribution to ↗Ethiopian studies.

A. entered the Franciscan Order (Order of Friars Minor, ↗Franciscans) in 1920 and was ordained priest in 1926. Between 1936 and 1940 he worked for his Order in Rome. He obtained the degree ("licence") in oriental philology and history from the Oriental Institute of the Catholic University of Louvain in 1946. In 1950, after the death of his Ethiopic teacher Henri De Vis (d. 1949), A. was appointed "lector" for Ethiopic (↗Gəᶜəz) language and literature at the University of Louvain, a position which, following the division of the university in 1968, he continued in both the French- (Louvain-la-Neuve) and Dutch-speaking (Leuven) sister institutions until 1975.

Alongside his teaching, he produced a great number of text editions, always accompanied by Latin translations and succinct Latin introductions. These editions were typically based on personal inspection of the ↗manuscripts, which led him to travels and extended work visits all over Europe. His first edition dealt with the Miracles of ↗George of Lydda (1953). He then turned to the publication of the large collections of ascetic-monastic texts, for which he introduced the titles that have remained in use until the present day (↗Monastic literature): Collectio monastica (1963), Patericon (1967), Asceticon (1984), Geronticon (1986), and Quadraginta historiae (1988). A third area of interest was constituted by the texts related to the death of the Virgin Mary (↗ᶜƎrräfta lämaryam): his two-volume edition (1973–74) includes the important "Liber requiei", a full version of which exists only in Gəᶜəz, and nine shorter treatises.

Although A. defined his editorial task rather narrowly and mostly refrained from providing annotation or contextualization of the texts that he edited and translated, his knowledge of the language was profound, and the quality of his work excellent. Several of his publications proved to be instrumental in subsequent research by other scholars on related texts in Arabic and other Eastern Christian languages, in particular by Joseph-Marie Sauget, van ↗Esbroeck, Lucien Regnault, and Stephen Shoemaker.

A. easily ranks as the most productive and authoritative Ethiopic scholar in Belgium in the 20th cent.

I. Introduction

An extremely rich variety of artistic traditions is found among the ethnic groups and religious cultures in the Horn of Africa. A high level of creativity and diversity in modes of cultural expression is to be observed. Such traditions of creativity include academic fine A., graphic design and ↗photography, traditional church and manuscript ↗painting (s. also ↗Colours), ↗architecture, mural A., ↗rock A. and sculpture (s. also ↗Stelae; ↗Megalithic culture; ↗Waakaa), but also folk A., artistic craftsmanship and decorative A. ("useful A.", s. also ↗Handicrafts, ↗Jewellery, ↗Pottery, ↗Wood and Woodwork, ↗Basketry) as well as body A. (↗Henna; ↗Body ornamentation, ↗Body modification, s. EAE vol. 5), ↗clothing and fashion (s. also ↗Weavers and weaving) or performing A. such as ↗Cinema and ↗Theatre.

This article is concerned with the visual A. (Amh. ሥነ ፡ ጥበብ, śənä ṭəbäb 'art') and artistic traditions as far as they are not treated elsewhere in this Encyclopaedia.

The collections of the ↗Institute of Ethiopian Studies, the National Museum and the National Library (↗Archives and libraries, s. EAE vol. 5), all in ↗Addis Abäba, as well as those of several ↗museums (s. EAE vol. 5) in other parts of the country include prominent examples of A. However, their collections are not comprehensive. The documentation and interpretation of many of the forms of visual A. remain in an embryonic state and some artistic traditions have not yet been studied in depth.

II. Modern and contemporary art

With the exception of a few internationally renowned artists, such as ↗Ǝskəndər (Alexander Boghossian), ↗Gäbrä Krəstos Dästa, ↗Afäwärq Täkle (s. EAE vol. 5) and Wäsäne Wärqe Kosrof (Wosene Worke Kosrof, b. 1950), the broader A. world has paid relatively little attention to modern and contemporary Ethiopian artists, even though Addis Abäba has twice been home to active fine A. communities, once in the 1960s (Heran Sereke-Brhan — Shiferaw Bekele 2007: 18–29) and again in the post-Därg (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council) environment starting from the 1990s (Nagy – Achamyeleh Debela 2007: 36–41; Klemm – Niederstadt 2009: 9f.). Today, Ethiopian artists produce work that references their cultural heritage while utilizing new materials and technology. Many now focus on mixed media, photography, or site-specific installations.

Innovation is not a new phenomenon among Ethiopian artists. Near the end of the 19th cent., foreign visitors began purchasing objects, particularly paintings, as mementos of their time in Ethiopia and church painters responded to this demand, giving rise to a genre known as "contemporary painting in traditional style" (s. part III below; Biasio 2006; 2009). By the 1920s, young artists, including ↗Agäññähu Ǝngəda, were training abroad in Europe and North America. Once home, several of them established A. schools in the 1940s and 1950s (Nagy – Achamyeleh Debela 2007: 10). With the support of aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I and with funds from an exhibition, Allä Fällägä Sälam Ḫəruy (Ale Felege Selam, b. 1929) founded the ↗Fine Arts School in 1957/58. The school trained students to teach and work as professional artists. While early faculty were foreign expatriates (e.g., Karl-Heinz ↗Hansen-Bahia), Ethiopians were soon recruited as instructors (e.g., Gäbrä Krəstos Dästa). Initially, students focused on graphic design, painting, or sculpture, but during the Därg regime, greater attention was paid to mural A. and sculpture due to their use for propagandistic purposes.

By the mid-20th cent., galleries and shops dedicated to the sale of A. were established in Addis Abäba. These exhibited works by artists working in the modern fine A. tradition as well as by church-trained painters such as qes Addamu Täsfaw (b. 1929). The city's foreign cultural institutions, such as the Alliance Française and the Goethe Institut (today German Cultural Institute/Gäbrä Krəstos Dästa Centre), maintained active ↗art exhibition schedules and continue to do so.

The Ethiopian contemporary A. community has grown strong in the post-Socialist period. More women are participating in the A. world as artists, including Məḥrät Käbbädä (b. 1979), and as curators and gallery owners, and the number of students applying to A. schools is increasing. Artists have greater opportunities for education and better access to resources, including exhibition and studio space, materials and patrons. Ethiopian-born and foreign expatriates have returned to Addis Abäba with an interest in supporting the A. Several senior artists, including Yoḥannəs Gädamu (b. 1947, d. 2010), also returned from the ↗Diaspora, providing advice and encouragement to younger generations. The Fine Arts School has been incorporated into ↗Addis Ababa University as the School of Fine Arts and Design, and private A. schools have been founded, including the Enlightenment Art Academy, opened by Ǝšätu Tərunäh (b. 1952) and Asnake Kəflä (Asnake Kifle) in 2006. Important contemporary A. institutions include the Asni Art Gallery, founded by Qonğit Səyyum (b. 1963), the Atelier, established by French expatriate Leo Lefort, and the Zoma Contemporary Art Center, a non-profit organization founded by Mäskäräm Assägʷäd (Meskerem Assegued). A number of young artists have moved to Europe and North America but few have found significant success when compared to the older generation who left during the Därg regime or to a large group of fellow artists who travel abroad but remain based in Ethiopia.

The success of contemporary Ethiopian artists can be seen in the recent exhibitions that explore their work and in their being selected to exhibit at prestigious biennales. Key international shows include, e.g., Ethiopian Passages: Dialogues in the Diaspora (2003), Continuity and Change: Three Generations of Ethiopian Artists (2007), and Painting Ethiopia: the Life and Work of Qes Adamu Tesfaw (2005). Since 2000, Assäfa Gäbräkidan (Assefa Gebrekidan, b. 1973), Elyas Səme (Elias Simé, b. 1968), Mulugeta Gäbrä Kidan (Mulugeta Gebrekidan, b. 1970), Mulugeta Taffäsä (Mulugeta Tafesse, b. 1960), and Zäryəhun Yätəmgeta (Zerihun Yetmgeta, b. 1941) were selected to participate in the world renowned Dak'Art Biennale in Dakar, Senegal. Ethiopian artists of all generations continue to exhibit at home and abroad and to accept international residencies and many now use the internet as a means of reaching an audience beyond Ethiopia.

Contemporary sculpture and other fields

Painting is the genre most associated with contemporary Ethiopian A. However, a number of artists have long focused on sculpture and other fields, including digital compositions such as those created by Aččamyälläh Däbbäla (Achamyeleh Debele, b. 1947), photography, and installation and performance A. More than 50 years ago, Maitre Artiste Afäwärq Täkle designed Africa Hall's stained glass windows. With the founding of the Fine Arts School, students were offered training in graphic design, mural arts, and sculpture. Early graduates experimented with a variety of media, for example, the woodcut prints created by Tulu Guya (b. 1946). Austrian Herbert Seiler taught sculpture at the school and produced numerous works for the government and private collectors; many of these remain extant today.

During the Därg, artists were encouraged to create work in support of the Socialist regime; in this way mural A. and sculpture were promoted due to their potential as a means of propaganda. Throughout the late 1970s and the 1980s, a number of Ethiopian sculptors were sent abroad for further study, particularly to the former Soviet Union. Prominent among these is Bäqqälä Mäkʷännən (b. 1964), the most internationally renowned of the contemporary Ethiopian artists creating three-dimensional works and site-specific installations. Black Box (2002) at Asni Gallery and Chance and Choice (2008) at Lela Gallery are among his exhibitions in Addis Abäba, but he also exhibits widely abroad. Other well-known sculptors include Getaččäw Yosef (Getachew Yosef), who created the Bole Road sculptures (2003) commemorating the Forum on China-Africa Cooperation, and Mikaᵓel Betä Śəllase (Mickaël Bethe-Selassié, b. 1951), who works with papier-mâché. Several artists better known as painters also experiment with non-traditional media and found objects. Among these, Bäḫaylu Bäzzäbbəh (Behailu Bezabih, b. 1960) creates collage paintings and wooden sculptures reminiscent of Konso ↗waakaa, while Ǝngədaget Läggäsä Amäde's (Engdaget Legesse, b. 1971) pillar-like sculptures utilize ↗magic scroll motifs (s. part IV below).

Due to the paucity of fine A. materials, especially in the Socialist period, contemporary Ethiopian sculpture usually incorporates recycled goods and found objects, rather than more traditional sculptural materials such as clay and marble. Assäffa Gäbräkidan and Elyas Səme are receiving international attention for their installations and mixed media projects that make use of buttons, cardboard, household containers and utensils, plastic bags, and thread, among others. Their work has been featured in solo exhibitions including Assefa Gebrekidan: a Glimmer of Hope (2005) and Elias Simé: Eye of the Needle, Eye of the Heart (2009). Another young artist, Täsfahun Kəbru (Tesfahun Kibru, b. 1977), creates three dimensional "paintings" and large sculptural forms using a range of materials including baskets, cast-off metal, gourds, and pencils.

Although photography has been practiced in Ethiopia since the second half of the 19th cent., contemporary Ethiopian artists have only recently begun to focus on the medium, as resources were often lacking, as was interest in photography as a fine A. Among younger artists, Mikaᵓel Ṣäggaye (Michael Tsegaye, b. 1975) has been active as a photographer for much of the last decade. Award-winning photographer Ayda Mulunäh (Aida Muluneh, b. 1974), who returned to Ethiopia after years abroad, recently published her work Ethiopia: Past/Forward (2009). She is active in training young Ethiopian photographers.

Site-specific installations and performance A. are a challenge for Ethiopian artists, few of whom can afford to focus solely on these A. forms. Yet, a number of artists actively experiment with the genres. Mulugeta Gäbräkidan's Boundaries Bound, which combined a mixed media installation with performance, was exhibited at the 2010 Dak'Art Biennale. A major proponent of such experimental work is curator and gallery owner Qonǧit Səyyum who enables artists to produce such installations and who does so within her own artistic work. In the last decade, murals, a related form of installation art, have enjoyed a revival, particularly as part of the efforts to "beautify" and "clean up" Addis Abäba and other major urban centres. Graphic design remains an interest for young Ethiopian artists, many of whom make a living as graphic designers, allowing them to support their creative work as painters and sculptors.

III. Contemporary painting in traditional style

With the founding of Addis Abäba in 1886, and the arrival of foreigners and legations, demand for Ethiopian "souvenirs" increased. Church painters started to produce artwork for this new clientele, and paintings became available to patrons outside of the church and nobility. This new category of painting is known as "secular painting" (Pankhurst 1966), "folk painting" (Girma Fisseha – Raunig (1985), "traditional painting" (Ricci 1989), "popular painting" (Pollig et al. 1993) or "contemporary painting in traditional style" (Biasio 2006; 2009).

The traditional themes of church paintings – religious subjects, portraits of rulers, or hunting and battle scenes – were still reproduced, but new themes emerged, such as daily life, church rituals, and legends, above all the story of the Queen of Sheba (↗Makədda). These innovations were driven by the requests of foreign patrons and by the creativity of painters, who experimented with and then included successful new themes in their repertoire.

Through the early 20th cent., paintings were still somewhat difficult to acquire commercially. As demand increased, especially during the tourist boom (↗Tourism) of the 1950s and 1960s, paintings began to be mass-produced in artists' workshops and in government established schools. Autodidacts also began producing for the commercial market, which led to a loss in quality when compared to works produced by church-trained painters. During the Därg (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council) regime, the market for paintings and other souvenirs fell as tourism decreased.

Today, church-trained painters (e.g., qes Addamu Täsfaw [b. 1929], liqä bərhanat Bərhane Gäbrä Iyäsus [b. 1958]) still produce large, high quality canvases and a few, especially in and near Aksum, educate their children, including their daughters, to follow in their footsteps. Some academically trained painters (e.g., Taddäsä Wäldä Arägay, b. 1953), also create work in the traditional style, as do some younger artists, who produce such paintings to help support their work as full-time studio artists.

Contemporary tourists prefer small paintings on parchment or canvas which are easy to transport. Foreign and Ethiopian collectors usually purchase large works on canvas.

Well-known painters in the traditional style include: ↗Bälaččäw Yəmär, his son Sälomon Bälaččäw (b. ca. 1919/20, d. 1997), ↗Fəre Ḥəywät (s. EAE vol. 5, active around 1910), ↗Bäḫaylu Gäbrä Maryam and Wäldä Mikaʾel (active in the 1920s), Śahlä Ḫaylu (active in the 1930s), ↗Yoḥannəs Täsämma, ↗Bərhanu Yəmänu, qäññ geta ↗Ǧämbäre Ḫaylu, ↗Wändəmmu Wänd, ↗ʿAlämu Ḫaylä Maryam, ↗Qanna Sambata. Still active are Bərhanu's son, Getaččäw Bərhanu (b. 1971), qes Addamu Täsfaw, Bərhanämäsqäl Fəśśəḥa (b. 1947), and liq bərhanat Bərhane Gäbrä Iyäsus. Although the number of church-trained artists has declined, painters continue to create for the church and for commercial clients; Aksum and its surrounds are particularly active in this regard.

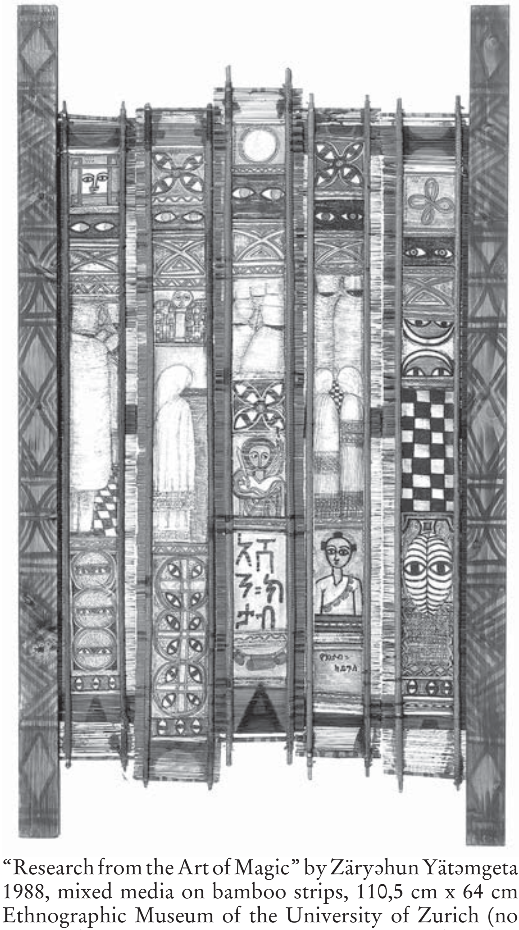
IV. Magic scrolls as a motif in contemporary art

↗Magic scrolls have been a popular theme of modern painting since they were introduced by Alexander Boghossian (↗Ǝskəndər) after he returned from Paris to Addis Abäba in the late 1960s. He was keenly interested in symbolism and religion and gained inspiration from the ↗paintings found in Ethiopian Orthodox churches and illuminated ↗manuscripts. By the 1970s, the influence of magic scrolls became widespread in contemporary Ethiopian A.

One of the painters who followed Ǝskəndər to Washington, DC was Wäsäne Wärqe Kosrof. Throughout his career, the Ethiopic script and magic scrolls have played a dominant role, especially in his last series The Colour of Words (since 1996). Wäsäne feels that he is a kind of a 20th-cent. ↗däbtära, and believes that his paintings have a ↗healing influence on the beholder.



“Research from the Art of Magic” by Zäryəhun Yätəmgeta, 1988, mixed media on bamboo strips, 110,5 cm x 64 cm; Ethnographic Museum of the University of Zurich (no. 20999); from Biasio 1989:117, photo courtesy of Kathrin Leuenberger

Aččamyälläh Däbbäla (b. 1949), who has lived in the USA since 1972, depicts magic scrolls in his work because of their aesthetic value and philosophical and spiritual meanings. Magic scrolls also figure prominently in the paintings of Zäryəhun Yätəmgeta who was impressed by Boghossian's work, although he never ventured abroad for further studies. In 1968, Zäryəhun began to create canvas paintings featuring strip compositions inspired by magic scrolls. In ca. 1979, he started a series of bamboo-strip paintings formally modelled on magic scrolls. Today, he is arguably best known for these works, which he continues to create. Magic scroll motifs also appear in other media and techniques used by Zäryəhun. As a teacher at what is now the School of Fine Arts and Design, Zäryəhun has influenced many of his students.

Among these is Ayyälä Asäffa (b. 1960) who also produces artwork incorporating magic scroll motifs as well as paintings modelled on Zäryəhun's bamboo strip series. Ǝngədaget Läggäsä featured and emphasized magic scroll motifs in the 1990s and early 2000s on three-dimensional painted wooden artworks he calls "magic pillars".

While the expatriate artists transform the magic scroll motifs into ornamental designs, the artists in Addis Abäba express the motifs realistically, often using Jacques Mercier's book Ethiopian Magic Scrolls (1979) as a source of inspiration.

V. Modern and contemporary art in Eritrea

In the course of the 20th cent. the rich A. production in Eritrea underwent a dynamic development, under European, Ethiopian, and other influences. Especially the capital ↗Asmära is marked by the presence of many forms of modern A.

In the Christian highlands, painted A. originally belonged exclusively to the domain of the Orthodox Church, where rich mural paintings, icons and illuminated manuscripts were produced until the contemporary period (↗Painting, traditional; also cp. ills. ↗Bəlen Sägädä, ↗Ḫaylu Täwäldä Mädḫən, ↗Mary, Apocalypse of). Much of the modern A. in Eritrea, however, went through a development quite independent of these predecessors.

The first activities in modern A. were linked with the Italian colonial presence. Several modern Italian painters resided in Colonia Eritrea at least for short periods of time. Some produced portraits of local Italians, others painted local, folkloristic scenes (such as ᶜAfar habitations in the desert). However this activity had little visible influence on indigenous A. production. In addition, the demand for the artwork of craftsmen rose especially from the 1920s when Eritrea went through a rapid process of ↗urbanization. For example, reliefs and wall paintings with classicist or pseudo-antique motifs were popular (s. for example a "Roman villa", s. Sallinen 2003: 55, cp. 63). Churches (such as the Catholic cathedral of Asmära), as well as the newly founded ↗cinemas and the ↗theatre (in Asmära) were painted and decorated inside, and in some cases also restaurants and bars (the theatre was designed by Odoardo Cavagnari, completed in 1920 with a ceiling painting, Sallinen 2003: 50f.; there are lion head sculptures and ornate stuccos in the Cinema Impero, ibid. 129; woodcarvings in the Bistro Alba show popular scenes).

Ornamental ↗ironwork decorates many fences around older buildings (such as the 1905-built synagogue). Sculptures and other artistic memorials can be found in the Italian cemeteries (e.g., ibid. 134). In architecture, Italian influence resulted in the well-documented "Asmara Style" (↗Asmära architecture). The role of locals in this kind of A. production has not been studied yet. As in Ethiopia around the same period, local A. production in "traditional style" slowly developed for the small market of foreign visitors, which is still alive (e.g., depicting scenes showing the Queen of Sheba and Solomon).

A totally different stream of A. production started to develop mainly during the Federation and subsequent union with Ethiopia: At the newly founded ↗Fine Arts School in Addis Abäba there were also Eritrean students; other Eritreans visited A. schools in other countries such as India, which led to the creation of modern A. in Eritrea (with some earlier attempts already during the ↗British Military Administration in the 1940s, cp. ill. for MaTäDä under "Theatre in Eritrea", EAE vol. 4).

During the armed struggle, the ↗Eritrean People's Liberation Front (EPLF) formed a fighters' A. group in ca. 1978 led by Bərhane Adonay following an idea of "Art for the Masses". The group included female fighters. Some of its members remained as active artists after the struggle (cp. Matzke 2001: 20f.). Breaking with previous traditions, a Socialist Realism style was developed, glorifying the struggle; folkloric scenes were also prominent, serving to underline the popular character of the armed struggle (for an underground exhibition of paintings and sculptures, s. Marando 1987: 86f.; cp. also the catalogue of another A. exhibition during the armed struggle, National Guidance Department 1990).

Post-1991 Eritrea witnessed a further rise in the production and appreciation of diverse forms of modern A. Free groups of artists, partially made up of former fighters, now organized exhibitions especially in Asmära, but also in the countryside, answering a rising public interest especially in the urban context, such as the Mərara Art Association (Smidt 2001: 18, paintings, ibid. 2f., 6f., 18f., 39f., 43). With such associations, Eritrean artists continued to develop their own artistic "language", partially leaving the traditional motifs and allowing for more artistic freedom; the presence of foreign art teachers (e.g., from China and India) also nourished this process. Part of the production shows the influence of Socialist Realism, similar to the developments in Ethiopia. Scenes from the liberation struggle continued to be painted, but, as a contrast a sort of ethnographical realism (displaying often idyllic scenes from the countryside) became more prominent (cp. ill. EAE vol. 4, 335). Some of the scenes carry indirect messages, e.g., when women are depicted carrying water up a mountain in a painting by Abrəham Mogäs of 1989 (exhibited repeatedly in independent Eritrea, Smidt 2001: 39; cp. National Guidance Department 1990: 28), symbolizing the difficult path of Eritrea towards a more promising future.

A. associations started to teach – mainly Realist – painting to interested students. Artists found diverse fields of activities and demand, e.g., as cinema painters in Asmära, portraitists, illustrators for books, newspapers, brochures and postcards, designers for the theatre and culture festivals, and wall-painters for shops, restaurants, and the government, e.g., depicting harmonious scenes from the period of the liberation struggle, such as dancing fighters (s. Abdulkader Saleh et al. 2008: 343), collective meals in the bush, and other communal activities.

The politics of memory also created a demand for sculptures; e.g., Asmära has several sculptures showing plastic sandals (kongo or šədda), worn in the past by fighters, which stand for the successful struggle with very limited means (cp. Tedros Abraham 1999). Especially after the 1998–2000 war with Ethiopia, militant scenes, usually painted by former soldiers of the Eritrean army, became prominent once again, much more than the "peaceful" development issues or cultural scenes popular in the pre-war years (Matzke 2001: 21). However, A. also continued to develop independently of the needs of political expression, e.g., combining abstract forms and folkloristic motifs with human figures (with such painters represented at first, in smaller, international exhibitions, such as the exhibition Art from Eritrea – Roots and Diaspora of 2002 in Caldogno, Vicenza). For example the productive Mikaʾel Adonay (b. 1962) integrates modern decorative elements and traditions of church painting into his very colourful oeuvre, marked to a great extent by themes of the struggle.

Asir Mätira

A.M. (አሲር ፡ መቲራ, also known as Däbrä ᶜAlima or Däbrä ᶜAlama; variants Asira Mätira, Asər Mätira, Ašər Mätira etc.) is a monastery situated in East Təgray, Aṣbi Wämbärta wäräda (previously Aṣbidära awrağğa), at the foot of the mount Zəban Hoṣᵓa, near the spring called May Ṣadəqan. The local tradition (collected in Mitiku Gebre Hiwot 2006) claims that Däbrä ᶜAlima was founded by King ↗Gäbrä Mäsqäl. It also preserves a folk etymology of the name A.M.: the monastery was once attacked by Muslims (probably the ↗ᶜAfar), who looted its treasures, but, while dividing the booty, quarrelled and fought each other to death. The only survivor, the head of the brigands, exclaimed: Asira mätira! (Tgn.: '[this place] has bound and chopped [us]!'; a different etymology is recorded in Gigar Tesfaye 1979: 97). The tradition recounts that the monastery flourished in the 15th cent. under aṣe ↗Zärᵓa Yaᶜəqob, but later was frequently endangered by the Muslims. It was re-established by a certain abunä Yəsḥaq in the 17th cent. and favoured by aṣe ↗Yoḥannəs IV. A.M. was closely associated with ↗Gundä Gunde (perhaps as a ↗gʷəlt of the latter), which is vividly remembered by A.M.'s tradition. In 1997 the monastery was re-opened as ↗nunnery by abba Gäbrä Mädḫən, an energetic monk and native of ↗Wäğğärat, and became very successful in different development projects.

A.M. does not feature in the known sources (it does not appear identical with "Asira" of CRDLib 184, no. 1 and 211, no. 24 or CRAxum no. 39). The little available tangible evidence on the monastery hints at A.M. as an old foundation and remarkable monastic centre of East Təgray. The fine medieval church of the monastery was briefly recorded in the 1970s (Plant 1973: 38f.; Gigar Tesfaye 1979, fig. 1); unfortunately, it was destroyed in late 1990s, reportedly by lightning, and a new massive church was constructed on the slope of Zəban Hoṣᵓa. The reference to A.M. as a "↗Stephanite" community (Gigar Tesfaye 1979: 97; Heldman in PICES 1, 11f.) is confirmed by the documents preserved in the monastic library that has recently come to light. The monastery probably marked the south-eastern border of the influence of Gundä Gunde. A foundation record (entitled ሥርዓተ ፡ አበው, Śərᶜatä abäw, 'The Order of the Fathers'), preserved as a marginal note in the fragment of an old Sənkəssar, tells that the monastery was destroyed by an unnamed king-transgressor (nəguś ᶜalawi), and reestablished by abunä Gäbrä Mäsiḥ (of Mäzba) and abunä Abäkärazun of Däbrä Qaᶜat with the assistance of ↗təgre mäkʷännən Akkälom (otherwise unknown), through the permission of aṣe Zärᵓa Yaᶜəqob who sent to the foundation ceremony pappas abunä ↗Yoḥannəs. Another note in a ↗Senodos manuscript confirms this information, adding that the abbot was a certain abba Yəsḥaq, and the event took place during the tenure of Metropolitans ↗Gäbrəᵓel and Mikaᵓel (who indeed came to Ethiopia with adjunct bishop Yoḥannəs who had the title of ↗eppisqoppos). Further notes report of the "seven gʷəlt-lands" given to A.M. by təgre mäkʷännən Akkälom (according to a 18th-cent. record, they were located in Mänbärta, Deśᵓa and Sänᶜafe). Though we know of the prominent Stephanite monks ↗Gäbrä Mäsiḥ and ↗Abäkärazun, the identity of the founders of A.M. remains somewhat uncertain. The known Vitae of the Stephanites (including the published Gädlä Abäkärazun, Conti Rossini 1910) do not contain any mention of their activities in Aṣbidära/Mänbärta. Still, the historical link of A.M. to the Stephanites is well attested in A.M.'s library, which possesses an old (at least 16th-cent.) copy of the Vita of abunä Ǝsṭifanos (not used in any scholarly edition, but printed, with Amharic translation, by the community of A.M.), and an old (severely damaged) manuscript with the Vita of abunä Abäkärazun (in a version different from Conti Rossini 1910).

Asnaqäčč Wärqu

A.W. (አስናቀች ፡ ወርቁ; b. 18 April 1935, Addis Abäba, d. 14 September 2011, Addis Abäba) was a prominent musician, actress and dancer.

A.W.'s mother died when she was three years old. She was raised by her godmother and successively lived with her sister and her aunt. While she was still a teenager, she married an Italian businessman from Addis Abäba.

In 1952 at the age of 17, A.W. was cast for a role in the play Yäfəqər ç̣orra, staged at the Municipality Theatre in Addis Abäba. Until that time there were no female actors in Ethiopian theatres and A.W. was probably the first actress on a public theatre stage in Ethiopia (although other sources claim that Sälamawit Gäbrä Śəllase was the first; ↗Theatre).

When the Ḫaylä Śəllase I Theatre (later National Theatre) was opened in 1955, A.W. joined its cast as an actress and singer. She took vocal and musical training with the Austrian director of the theatre, Franz Zelwecker. His training helped her to gain a sense of professionalism in theatre. Her professional performance in David and Uriah (probably combined with her fair complexion) let many in the audience believe that she was a foreigner. This success launched her fulltime acting career. In the following years she played many roles, including Desdemona in the 1963 production of Shakespeare's Othello.

At that time A.W. started her musical career outside theatre and established her own cabaret in Wəbe Bäräha (in Arat Kilo, Addis Abäba), where she entertained a growing fan base. Many years before she had taught herself to play krar (↗kərar), of which she mastered the two krar playing techniques, gərf and dərdər, which she applied to her songs accordingly. This instrument became her trademark. A.W.'s music, mostly love songs, is reminiscent of the ↗azmari-music of central and northern Ethiopia, using the four scales (↗qəññöət), təzzəta, ambassäl, bati and ančihoy. Over the years she developed her own unique singing style. She even used to call herself angʷäragʷari ('mutterer') instead of singer, referring to her melancholic muttering vocal performance. Usually she performed alone. The only time A.W. performed with an accompanying band she did not receive a good reception among her fans.

In the 1970s A.W. extended her creative work to professional music when her first recordings appeared on Philips-Ethiopia (a recording studio established in the 1970s by Kassahun Ǝšäte) in 1974. Her second album was published on Kaifa Records in 1976. Both albums were consecutively banned by the new Därg regime (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council), since her music was considered to be of no use for the propaganda. She nevertheless continued publishing her music, now on cassette, in 1976.

In 1987 A.W. took part in the legendary Həzb-lä-həzb Tour (‘People to People Tour’) where she performed with over 50 of the greatest Ethiopian artists in a tour of 60 cities worldwide.

Although A.W. officially ended her career in 1988/89, she performed at several occasions in the 1990s, e.g., on a tour in Germany in 1996 together with ᶜAlämu Aga. She also performed in Sabine Prenczina’s Farandj (1990) which won an award during the Istanbul International Film Festival. In 1998 and 2001 she appeared in the French-Ethiopian theatre productions Michel Leiris à Gondar and Oncle Vania (Chekhov), both directed by Geneviève Rosset in Addis Abäba.

In 1998 A.W. also won an award for her lifetime achievements by the Ethiopian Fine Arts and Mass Media Prize Trust.

A.W. died in Addis Abäba and was buried on the cemetery of the Qəddəst Śəllase cathedral on 16 September 2011.

All recordings of A.W. were compiled by Francis Falceto in 2004 in the series Éthiopiques, recalling A.W.’s connection to her instrument under the name The Lady with the Krar.

Atnatewos

Abunä A. (አትናቴዎስ; b. 1896, Kurbarya, Akkälä Guzay, d. 1961?) was an Ethiopian Orthodox Täwahədo bishop of Eritrea.

Formerly called Gərma Gäbrä Ewosṭatewos, A. attended the first and second stages of traditional church education (↗nəbab bet and ↗zema bet) in ᶜAddi Ḵʷala under mämhər Gäbrä Ḥəywät. He then joined the monastery of Ṣaᶜəda Ǝmba Śəllase where he studied ↗andəmta for ca. ten years. He was subsequently ordained and elected abbot of the monastery, a task he carried out for 45 years.

A.’s tenure as abbot is particularly remembered for his efforts in sustainable development. On his orders, dams were constructed at Maᶜədaway and Dängiya Wärq. A.’s missionary activities were primarily directed at the neighbouring Muslim-dominated areas. He established monastic communities in ᶜAqordät, Om Ḥağär and Kärän.

A. was also among the founders of the ↗Maḫbärä Ḥawaryat and an active promoter of the ↗Eritrean-Ethiopian Federation.

On 20 April 1961, A. was appointed bishop of Eritrea. He died shortly thereafter and was buried at Däbrä Abunä Bəṣuᶜa Amlak (↗Kodadu).

Aymällal

A. (አይመለል) is a historical area in the northern Gurage region and today designates a hill west of Bui. “A.” also serves as an alternative ethnonym of the Kəstane, or ↗Soddo ↗Gurage and as name of one of their sub-units (Soddo: agar). Moreover, it is sometimes used to designate the Soddo Gurage language. The area of A. is known as an ancient Christian centre in southern Ethiopia (cp. also ↗Galila, ↗Mədrä Käbd and ↗Zəqʷala).

A. (“Alamale”) is mentioned in the Chronicle of aṣe ↗ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon I (14th cent.) as one of the provinces governed by a mäkʷännən or mäsfən (MarAmdS 53 [tr.]. In the 15th-cent., during one of his southern journeys, aṣe ↗Bäᵓədä Maryam visited a country called “Ǝlamale” or “Ǝlamalali” which might be tentatively identified with A. Ǝlamale included such sub-districts as Sädäqäbäba and Dägu Dägumañ. In Dägu Dägumañ, the Emperor once rested during the fasting season and planted wine, lemon trees and sugar cane (PerrZarY 157, 159f. [tr.]; cp. HuntGeogr 107). In the 17th cent., ↗Almeida (BeckHuntAlm 10f.), following ↗Paez (BecRASO II, 15), mentions A. among a list of territories belonging to the realm of the ↗Prester John and locates it south of “Ganz” (↗Gänäzo) between “Hadeá” (↗Hadiyya sultanate) and “Ogge” (↗Wäǧ).

According to the historical traditions of many – but by far not all – clans and sub-groups of the Gurage, A. was the first settlement in the region of azmač Səbḥat who is said to have led their ancestors from ↗Guraᶜ in today's ↗Akkälä Guzay (ShGurage 14f.; Ullendorff 1950: 337), or from "Təgray" or "Gondär", into the area. From A. these groups claim to have spread over the entire Gurage region. Azmač Səbḥat is said to have been a general, or even a "son", of ↗ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon I, and a Solomonic descent is often ascribed to him (for a genealogical example from the Gamio clan of ↗Ǝndägañ s. Bustorf 2002: 47f., 108). According to a tradition mentioned by Chiarini (in CecZeila vol. 2, 89), Səbḥat became "king" of the Gurage and had his seat on an island of Lake ↗Zʷay, his descendants ruling until the reign of ↗Śahlä Śəllase of Šäwa. Chiarini's legend about a king of all the Gurage finds no evidence in other oral or written sources. However, all these traditions may well have some historical core in that the migrants from the north were probably Ethio-Semitic-speaking military colonists (cp. ↗č̣äwa) who were sent by ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon I in order to secure the boundaries of the Christian kingdom against the Muslim principalities in the south. The legends establish Christian and royal northern origin as core elements of historical consciousness of many Gurage sub-units.

The area of A. was conquered by the troops of gärad ↗ᶜAbdannāṣir during his campaign in Wäğ and Gurage in 1532 (BassHist II, 392). It is difficult to estimate the degree, up to which the ancient population of A. could actually have preserved its ethnic integrity and Christian identity after this, and the subsequent migration of the ↗Mäč̣č̣a Oromo through the area. Cut off from the Christian centres they, like other Gurage groups, could preserve at least some Christian traces, but also developed a local form of the Gurage religion (cp. Terrefe Woldesadik 1967: 4ff.).

In any case, at the time of the southward expansion of the influence of Šäwa under nəguś Śahlä Śəllase, A. was still known as a Christian enclave beyond the Awaš. ↗Krapf, who met priests from A., mentions it as a Christian village with a "degenerated" Church (Krapf 1858: 72, 108). Śahlä Śəllase subdued a great part of the Soddo area south of the Awaš probably during the first half of the 19th cent. He controlled A. from his outpost of Čole (Harris's notes cited in Darkwah 1975: 29; cp. HarAeth vol. 3, 38). According to oral tradition, he also established marriage relations with the chief of A. As the chief had no unmarried daughter himself, he gave into marriage a girl from ↗Səlṭi whom he had originally planned to marry himself (BrHad 186; for alternative versions of the legend cp. Bustorf 2011: 208–11).

In the 1870s nəguś Mənilək of Šäwa (later aṣe ↗Mənilək II) subdued A., and Soddo in general, an action interpreted at the court as a re-conquest of originally Christian territories.

Ayyälä Täklä Haymanot

Abba A. (አየለ ፡ ተክለ ፡ ሃይማኖት, also known as Mario da Abiy Addiʾ; b. 25 March 1926, ᶜAbbi ᶜAddi, Tämben, d. 21 December 2001, Addis Abäba) was a ↗Capuchin priest and scholar. He joined the Capuchin Order in 1943, and pursued his philosophical and theological studies in Asmära (Gaǧərät), where he was ordained priest on 21 December 1950. After this, A. was sent to Rome for higher studies. In 1956, he obtained a doctorate in dogmatic theology from the Gregorian University. Upon his return to Ethiopia, between 1957 and 1962, he was appointed Director of Capuchin students of Philosophy and Theology and Professor of Dogmatic Theology at Gaǧərät. Later, he was transferred to ↗Kärän, where he served as the Rector of the Diocesan Minor Seminary between 1962 and 1973.

A. was Director of the Ecumenical Centre of ʿAddi Wəgri (↗Mändäfära) between 1972 and 1978, and at the same time he taught Ethiopian History and General Ethics at the University of ↗Asmära. In 1975, he was elected Provincial Minister of the first African Capuchin Province of St. Francis in Ethiopia. At the end of his service as Provincial Minister, he was appointed Vicar Delegate of the Apostolic Vicariate of Harär between 1979 and 1984.

A. was imprisoned by the Därg (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council) for a month and a half between February and March 1978, suspected of collaboration with the ↗Eritrean People's Liberation Front. In his articles and public speeches he had strongly supported a federal system of government, calling upon the historical fact that in Ethiopia the rule of the nation was shared among several regional kings, submitted to the central authority of the emperor.

In July 1988, A. was elected the first African General Definitor of the Capuchin Order in Rome, an office that he held until 1994. He organized the historic Pan-African Capuchin Congress of Nairobi at the beginning of August 1992. Back in Ethiopia, he served as Director of the Capuchin students of Philosophy and Theology in Addis Abäba, and Professor of Dogmatic Theology at the Capuchin-Franciscan Institute of Philosophy and Theology between 1994 and 1995.

A. was a prolific writer, his publications covering several aspects of Ethiopian history, religion and culture. He chiefly published Ṣälotä Säʿatat, a book of prayer according to the Ethiopian rite of liturgy and his doctoral thesis, La dottrina della Chiesa etiopica dissidente (1956). The latter work aroused controversy in Ethiopian Orthodox circles and was refuted by numerous texts from Christian Ethiopian Orthodox writers, the most important being ↗Admasu Ǧämbäre's apologetic treatise Mädlotä amin (1961/62). A.'s last publication was a book on Ethiopian Mariology. In the last ten years of his life, he travelled to more than 40 countries, disseminating the fruits of his scholarship.

Ayyukkoo

A. (also bahe bahe) is a bridal lament of the ↗Arsi. It is performed solo and without accompaniment by the bride on her ↗wedding day. The performance is referred to as ayyukkoo ḍahaču ('singing A.').

In A., the bride mourns her separation from her family; she also laments her having to enter an often pre-arranged and loveless marriage and calls to her family for consolation. As such, it is also a way of encouraging her family and friends to grant her support in form of bridewealth and wedding gifts.

Bakaree Godaana

B.G. (b.?, Waamaa Mokofa, Naqamtee, d. 1868) was a leader of the ↗Leeqaa during the reign of aṣe ↗Tewodros. He unified the Leeqaa around ↗Naqamtee town and founded the Warra Bakaree (or Leeqaa Naqamtee) dynasty (Terefe Woldetsadik 1968: 74; Abebe Ambachew et al. 1957: 9). A member of the Naᵓa lineage of the Waayyuu Leeqaa clan, B.G. was the only child of his parents. He lost his father during childhood and was brought up by his mother, Mugee.

B.G. was adopted by his paternal uncle, Bararti Ammo, the ↗abbaa bokkuu of the Naᵓa lineage. As an old man with no sons Bararti had been defeated by his enemies several times in defence of his lineage's land rights. B.G. together with Fido Bookkisaa, the abbaa bokkuu of the entire Waayyu clan, supported Bararti. Both had ancient claims on the position of abbaa bokkuu of all Waayyuu. B.G.'s help in the defeat of four of Bararti's archenemies boosted his rise to power and his election to the office of ↗abbaa dulaa by the local Naᵓa ↗gadaa assembly in 1851 (cp. ↗Leeqaa; Triulzi 1986: 51f., 60).

On the occasion of B.G.'s election and following the advice of Bararti, the gadaa assembly gave B.G. control over a stretch of land called Handaq. This was a huge wooded area between the rivers Angär and ↗Didessa rich in ivory, honey, cotton, wild animals etc. Gradually, he started to levy taxes from the people who grazed their cattle, collected wood, hunted animals or collected honey. Thus he gathered considerable wealth and annexed further territory elsewhere in Leeqaa for his family (Tesema Taᵓa 2006: 65; Bairu Tafla 1969: 11).

B.G. surrounded himself with armed followers and continued to consolidate his position by accumulating ever more wealth. He ignored the gadaa rules and refused to share the spoils of war. B.G.'s aim was to establish his authority beyond the Naᵓa lineage over the area between the Waamaa and Didessa rivers. He pushed his rival Fido Bookkisaa out of Naqamtee to Diggaa in the west and established his residence in the centre of Naqamtee town (Tesema Taᵓa 2006: 66).

Eventually, B.G. became ↗mootii and established a new government structure and judiciary system; he rewarded his followers by distributing land.

The basis of B.G.'s rule was military strength as well as an aggressive appropriation surplus of goods. He encouraged trade in Naqamtee town by attracting traders from outside. However, after consolidating his dynasty, he died fighting in battle. He was succeeded by his son ↗Moroda Bakaree (Tesema Taᵓa 1993: 63–66; 2006: 66f.).

Bakrī b. Ǧaᶜfar b. Bakrī b. Ǧaᶜfar aṣ-Ṣādiq b. Muḥammad ᶜUṯmān al-Mīrġanī

B.Ǧ. (بكري بن جعفر بن بكري بن جعفر الصادق بن محمد عثمان الميرغني; b. 1911, d. 1954, Asmära) was the son of sīdī Ǧaᶜfar al-Mīrġanī (b. 1871, d. 1943), leader of the Eritrean "branch" of the Ḫatmīya ↗Islamic brotherhood during Italian colonial rule. When he was seven years old he started learning the Qurᵓān under šayḫ ḫalīfa Ǧaᶜfar. B.Ǧ. was enrolled by his father, sayyid Ǧaᶜfar al-Mīrġanī, at the Salvago Raggi School in Kärän, the first colonial school in the country (founded in 1911), which was designed for the sons of local Muslim notables. At first several locals expressed their resistance to the enrolment of their sons to the Italian school, but later on they were persuaded to follow sayyid Ǧaᶜfar's example. At the Kärän School, sayyid B.Ǧ. studied the Italian language and, after that, pursued the study of Arabic and Islamic sciences with two teachers, šayḫ Muḥammad Ḥamīd and šayḫ al-Maḥǧūb.

From ca. 1924 B.Ǧ. began to attend colonial official occasions with his father. Despite his tender age, he began to assume a relevant political role in the colony as mediator in conflict resolution. According to az-Zamān, in 1925, at the request of the Italian authorities, B.Ǧ. successfully intervened in the local resistance against a settlement in the newly founded town of ↗Täsänäy.

At an unknown date, the Italian Government invited B.Ǧ. to Italy, where he was received with honours and visited "all the Italian cities" with imām Iyaya's son and other Muslim dignitaries. In Eritrea he visited several places whose population asked him to give Islamic instruction and reconcile controversies. He succeeded in local conflict resolution, providing "his righteous recommendations" (Bruzzi 2010: 106f.).

B.Ǧ. began his role as a Muslim religious leader in the western Eritrean lowlands already in the colonial period. In the crucial years following World War II he served as a mediator and was engaged in the political organization of the country. The British authorities sought his mediation role in the ↗təgre-↗śəmagälle conflict (Venosa 2011: 63f.).

Elected president of the ↗Muslim League in 1946, he ended up declaring his alignment with the ↗Unionist Party. The publication of this declaration contributed to the decline of his authority and to the break-up of the Muslim League (Tekeste Negash 2005: 110). Little detail is known about his role during the period of ↗Ethiopian-Eritrean Federation, but according to az-Zamān he accommodated to the new political setting and was on good terms with aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I's government.

Däğğazmač B.B. (በየነ ፡ በራኺ; b. 1887, Əmba Dərho, Ḥamasen, d. early 1970s, Asmära) was an Eritrean politician and advocate of the union of Eritrea with Ethiopia.

B.B. was the first son of raᵓəsi ↗Bäraḵi Bəḵit, and thus a member of the local nobility of ↗Ṣäᶜazzäga in Ḥamasen; he was closely related to raᵓəsi ↗Ḫaylu Täwäldä Mädḫən. B.B. received elementary education at the Swedish Missionary School (↗Evangeliska Fosterland Stiftelsen) in Asmära.

Although one of the key members of the ruling families of the region, B.B. was not a significant player in Eritrean political affairs until 1946 when he became an active member of the "Unionist" wing of the ↗Maḫbär fəqri hagär, a political party which advocated the unconditional union of Eritrea with Ethiopia. On 5 December 1946, the ↗Unionist Party elected raᵓəsi Kidanä Maryam Gäbrä Mäsqäl, who was about 80 years of age at the time, as honorary president, while B.B. (at the time däggyat) was elected as president. B.B. took over presidency of the party in 1947 which he retained for the next years.

In 1950 B.B. and ↗Tädla Bayru ᶜOqbit, who was the secretary general of the party, were elected as representatives of the Unionist Party to the UN Assembly to present the party's case before the UN General Assembly (↗Ethiopian-Eritrean Federation; ↗United Nations).

However, as president of the Unionist Party, B.B. was not involved in many of its activities; most of his tasks as president were accomplished by Tädla Bayru.

B.B. continued to believe in the union of Eritrea with Ethiopia and retained his membership of the Unionist Party but remained inactive in Eritrean politics for most of the years until he died.

Bäyyänä Yəmär

Qäññazmač B.Y. (በየነ ፡ ይመር, Fr. Beuyeneu Ymeur, Engl. Bayana Yimar; b. ca. 1865, d. after 1931) was the first Ethiopian Minister of Posts and Communications, and one of the first Ministers of Foreign Affairs of Ethiopia under ləğ ↗Iyasu.

B.Y. was originally one of the courtiers of ətege ↗Ṭaytu. In 1901 he was nominated director of posts and telegraphs, in a time of rising correspondence and cable communications with the outside world (cp. ↗Postal System; ↗Stamps; ↗Telecommunications). He was thus the responsible Ethiopian contact person of the concession holders ↗Chefneux and ↗Ilg. In early 1907 B.Y. rose to the rank of administrator of posts and telegraphs (including telephones, s. Mersʾé Hazen Wolde Qirqos 2004:38), in succession to the Swiss Jean-Adolphe Michel (director of Ethiopian Posts 1904–07). Thus, he was in charge of an upcoming Ministry of Posts and Communications, to which he was appointed in 1907 during the establishment of a system of ministers (ibid.:42, but cp. TSTarik IV, 122).

During B.Y.'s tenure French specialists were employed to work under him and Ethiopia became a member of the Universal Postal Union (1 November 1908).

When ətege Ṭaytu assumed her regency in 1909 she appointed him Minister of Posts and Communications. However, he was soon imprisoned following an unknown conflict in 1910, according to some reports, or rather after May 1911, when B.Y. joined the party of ras ↗Abatä Bʷayaläw who wanted to nominate an ↗əndärase to run the state's affairs, in opposition to ləğ Iyasu's party (s. Mersʾé Hazen Wolde Qirqos 2004:98).

On 13 December 1914 B.Y. was appointed Minister of Foreign Affairs by ləʿul ləğ Iyasu, according to B.Y.'s extant appointment letter (but "1912" according to lists of today's Ministry of Foreign Affairs; "1915" in Tornay – Sohier 2007:210; 6 December 1914 in Mersʾé Hazen Wolde Qirqos 2004:42, which is probably the date of the actual decision).

During the ↗Coup d'état of 1916 (s. EAE vol. 2, 1081) B.Y. allied with the opponents of ləğ Iyasu and was confirmed in his post by Empress ↗Zäwditu. However, in March 1917, ras Täfäri (later aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I) himself assumed the direction of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. B.Y. was again nominated Minister of Posts and Communications or Posts, Telephone and Telegraphs, respectively (Marcus 1975:268; Eshetou Mengesha 1975:47), and seems to have been elevated to the rank of däğğazmač (KTMast mentions him with this title as one of the supporters of Zäwditu in conflicts with Täfäri). After Zäwditu's death, Ḫaylä Śəllase sacked B.Y. due to an increasing lack of confidence, confiscated his house and banned him from the capital. His house was given to the Emperor's daughter ↗Tänaññä Wärq and her husband ras ↗Dästa Dämṭaw (later Ǝtege Mänän Primary School, today Dəl Bätəgəl School).

The correspondence of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs between December 1914 and February 1916 (Smidt in PICES 16), contains detailed information on the daily proceedings of B.Y.'s Ministry in this crucial period, marked by changing relations with foreign powers during ↗World War I and a rapid modernization of Ethiopia. These documents also confirm that Iyasu continued to reign in the name of his grandfather Mənilək even after the Emperor's death which was not made officially known, and that his father nəguś ↗Mikaʾel assumed a de facto co-regency controlling a part of the state affairs (ibid.). The seal, which B.Y. used during his time as Minister of Foreign Affairs shows interesting innovations.

B.Y. is known under several different titles in the sources. The French minister Boucoiran calls him qäññazmač (ibid.:210f.; Mersʾé Hazen Wolde Qirqos 2004:183; Smidt in PICES 16); the official list of foreign ministers of today's Ministry of Foreign Affairs has him as däğğazmač, while he is also remembered as fitawrari by others. B.Y. is reported to have also carried the title ligaba. However, this may have its reason in a confusion of B.Y. and ligaba Bäyyänä Wändəmagäññähu who belonged to the fiercest opponents of ləğ Iyasu during the Coup d'état of 1916, and after that played a crucial role during the civil war between Iyasu and his opponents. He had been alienated because of an affair between Iyasu and his wife (GebMolIyas 360–65; Mersᵓé Hazen Wolde Qirqos 2004: 151).

Bäzzabbəh

Ato B. (በዛብህ, also known as B. Wäriq; d. November 1865) was a ruler of Šäwa from about 1863 until the return from imprisonment of aṣe ↗Mənilək II in August 1865.

B.'s background is somewhat obscure. According to Soleillet (1886: 273), he was a slave of nəguś ↗Śahlä Śəllase. On the other hand, he was prominent enough to be mentioned among the notables who fought bravely against the army of aṣe ↗Tewodros II in 1855. B. is generally depicted as a courageous warrior.

Tewodros appointed the half-brother of nəguś ↗Ḫaylä Mäläkot, ↗Ḫaylä Mikaᵓel Śahlä Śəllase, as ↗märəd azmač, while ato Andargaččäw was appointed ↗abägaz. However, the two appointees were unable to keep order, and in 1859 they were replaced by ato Abboyye as märəd azmač and B. as abägaz. This provoked the rebellion of ato ↗Säyfu Śahlä Śəllase, another brother of Ḫaylä Mäläkot, and Tewodros had to come to their assistance and made his second campaign in Šäwa. In 1863 Tewodros called the Šäwan notables to ↗Wällo, but B. either refused to go (GueCopMen 97) or stayed behind to govern Šäwa and then rebelled (AWTarik 141; BTafA 583). B. built up a considerable power base in central Šäwa, and in November 1864 he travelled to ↗Däbrä Bərhan and proclaimed himself king of Šäwa. He faced both local revolts and an invasion by Tewodros. B. had developed the mountain area of ↗Afqära in southern ↗Mänz into a virtually impregnable fortress and Tewodros had to return without gaining a decisive victory.

On 30 June 1865 Mənilək escaped from ↗Mäqdäla. He was generally well received as the legitimate ruler of Šäwa, although he had to fight the governor of Efrata. B. refused to submit, and on 22 August 1865 they met on the battlefield at Gädəllo in ↗Gədəm. B. was defeated, according to some sources because his soldiers refused to fight the son of their previous king (AWTarik 147). B. escaped and fled to his fortress at Afqära. From there he sent messengers to Mənilək asking for amnesty, which was granted. According to the sources, he did not give up his claim to the throne, was arrested for conspiracy and executed in November 1865.

Since all sources are closely linked to the Šäwan court, it cannot be ruled out that B. was in fact pardoned in order to lure him out of his stronghold at Afqära and then captured and put to death simply because he represented a serious challenge to Mənilək and his notables. The account of ↗Ḫəruy Wäldä Śəllase is critical and points out both the lack of concrete evidence of treason after he was pardoned and the unsatisfactory manner in which the trial was conducted (AWTarik 150f.). In any case, after the execution of B., Mənilək was firmly in control of Šäwa.

Bender, Marvin Lionel

B. (b. 18 August 1934, Mechanicsburg, PA, d. 19 February 2008, Carbondale, IL) was an American linguist who throughout his 40-year professional career was concerned with Ethiopian languages, especially little-known ones, particularly of the ↗Omotic and ↗Nilo-Saharan groups.

B. discovered an interest in Ethiopian linguistics while teaching mathematics in 1962–65 at the then Haile Sellassie I University (↗Addis Ababa University). After Ph.D. studies at the University of Texas (1968 thesis Amharic Verb Morphology: a Generative Approach), B. returned to Ethiopia as a member of the Ford Foundation-funded Language Survey of Ethiopia (other members were Robert L. Cooper, J. Donald Bowen, and Charles A. Ferguson), and was the principal author of the Survey's 1976 report (BendLang).

In 1971 B. joined the Department of Anthropology at Southern Illinois University (Carbondale, IL), where he taught until retirement in 1996, except for visiting appointments at the University of Khartoum (1978–79) and Addis Ababa University (1980–81). In 1982–86 he was the head of the department.

B.'s work ranged across anthropological, descriptive, and historical topics, but regularly returned to broad surveys leading to the genetic classification and subclassification of Ethiopian language groups: Ethiopian languages generally (1971 – the first thorough inventory of Ethiopian speech varieties and attempt to identify these as languages or dialects of languages); Nilo-Saharan (1996); Omotic (1975; 2000; 2003; 2005b); East Sudanic (2005a); ↗Cushitic (2008). His language-group reconstruction-classifications were based on thoroughly presented comparative lexical and/or morphological data, much of it gathered first-hand during travels across Ethiopia; these works have become primary sources on the language groups (cp. Hayward 2009: 88 on Omotic). As a mathematician, B. often in his work assigned importance to quantification, particularly lexicostatistics, but also, e.g., in his frequency study of ↗Amharic phonemes (1974). Yet his work also employed traditional comparative methods of lexical comparison and phonological reconstruction, and avoided imaginative claims.

B. was particularly concerned to bring the Nilo-Saharan languages into the mainstream of Ethiopian and African linguistics. As first syntheses in broad fields, his conclusions were often controversial, as in his early argument (1975) for the Omotic hypothesis: that these languages constitute a sixth family within ↗Afro-Asiatic (B. preferred "Afrasian"). But he was not reluctant to revise his conclusions, as of his Omotic subclassification (Bender 1975; 2000; 2003).

B. edited and contributed to several volumes of papers of Ethiopian linguistics, which introduced and provided first descriptive works on some languages (esp. BendNonSLang and Bender 1983). He was the founder and first editor of the Nilo-Saharan Newsletter, author of numerous book reviews, a frequent presenter at conferences of Ethiopian and Afro-Asiatic linguistics, and a contributor of many articles to the Encyclopaedia Aethiopica.

Bərhanu Abbäbä

B.A. (ብርሃኑ ፡ አበበ, Berhanou Abbebe; b. 14 October 1932, Addis Abäba, d. 1 July 2008, Harare, Zimbabwe) was a Francophone Ethiopian scholar and senior official. Born from a Catholic and Francophone family originating from Šäwa, he claimed ancestry from the ↗Wag šum dynasty. He started his education in traditional schools and completed his primary education at the Alliance Française of Addis Abäba. His secondary education he took at the Lycée Guebré-Mariam, being its first student to complete the baccalauréat in 1953. His examiners were Jean Leclant and André ↗Caquot (s. EAE, vol. 5), then in charge of the French Archaeological Mission in Ethiopia.

B.A. went to Paris to study law under the supervision of René David. Between 1959 and 1967, he was an Amharic teacher at the ↗Institut national des langues et civilisations orientales, Paris, and a Ph.D. candidate working on land tenure in Šäwa (dissertation published in 1971) under the supervision of Joseph ↗Tubiana.

In 1968 B.A. returned to Ethiopia. He joined the ↗Institute of Ethiopian Studies, where he was in charge of the manuscript section of the library. In 1968 he was appointed director of the Ḫaylä Śəllase I Prize Trust, a position through which he became acquainted with major Ethiopian intellectuals and artists as well as international Ethiopianists. Between 1972 and 1974 B.A. held the position of Deputy General Manager of the Chemin de fer Djibouti–Ethiopien (↗Railways).

Under the Därg (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council) regime, B.A. occupied several positions in the Ministry of Telecommunications and the Ministry of Culture. In 1980, he joined the History Department of ↗Addis Ababa University (AAU) to become its External Relations Officer a year later.

In 1997, after having retired from his AAU position, B.A. was employed as a researcher at the Centre français des études éthiopiennes, Addis Abäba, where he showed a special dedication to French-Ethiopian cultural exchange. B.A. published a general history of Ethiopia (1998) and contributed several papers to the ↗Annales d'Éthiopie (1970, 1987, 2001, 2002, 2003, 2004). He orchestrated the French-Amharic and Amharic–French dictionaries (2003, 2004) and he translated masterpieces of French literature into Amharic such as ↗Rimbaud's Bateau ivre (2000) on the occasion of the opening of the Rimbaud cultural centre in Harär, as well as Saint-Exupéry's Le Petit Prince (published posthumously in 2010). Before his death, he was proof-reading his translation of Albert Camus's La Peste, yet to be published.

Beside his scholarly works, B.A. was involved in diplomatic activities for the ↗Organization of African Unity contributing to a study on the 1994 genocide in Rwanda, and taking part in electoral observation missions in Democratic Republic of Congo 2006 and in Zimbabwe in 2008. It was during this last mission that he passed away. The library of the Centre français des études éthiopiennes was named after him, to remember the significant and energetic role he played in strengthening Ethio-French friendship.

B.A. was survived by his wife Fəqərtä Śəyyum and left behind three children.

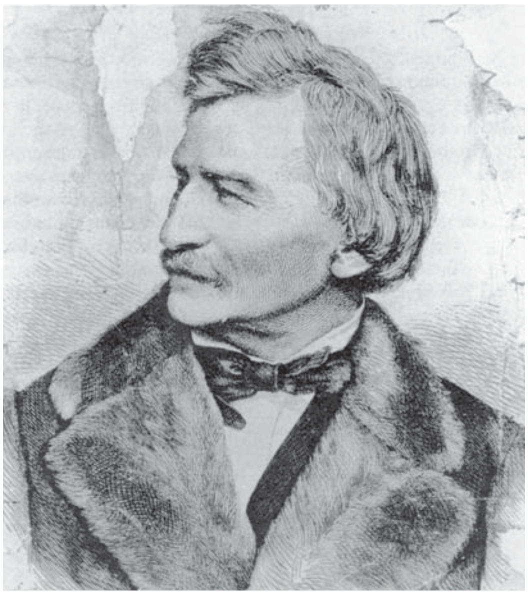
Bernatz, Johann Martin

B. (b. ca. 22 March 1802, Speyer, d. 19. Dezember 1878, Munich) was a German artist and illustrator, who accompanied the Harris Mission (↗Harris, William Cornwallis) of 1841 to ↗Šäwa. With his depictions he contributed greatly to the mid-19th cent. European image of Ethiopia.

B. was the son of a brick-layer, and began life as a chimney-sweep, but acquired an artistic education, after which he sketched antiquities in Bavaria. In 1836–37 he accompanied a party of German scholars travelling to Palestine, and duly published a volume of illustrations entitled Bilder aus dem heiligen Lande (Stuttgart 1836). B. wanted to undertake a similar artistic enterprise in India, but, facing major difficulties, joined the Harris Mission instead – and became its official artist, selected by the East India Company. Landing at the port of ↗Tağūra in 1841, he travelled through the ↗ᶜAfar countries, crossing the ↗Awaš River, and proceeded to ↗Alәyyu Amba and ↗Ankobär in the then independent kingdom of Šäwa.

During the journey, B. produced many fine, very realistic, sketches and paintings of considerable historical and ethnographic interest, showing settlements, locals with their traditional clothing, their houses, scenes from their life and a slave market, and also animals, botanic details, and hunting scenes.



Johann Martin Bernatz; from Haberland, 1986: 12

B. was responsible for virtually all the illustrations in Harris's memoirs The Highlands of Aethiopia (1844), and in a remarkable supplementary volume entitled Illustrations to the Highlands of Aethiopia (1845). He subsequently published a larger, lavishly illustrated volume of coloured lithographs, Scenes in Ethiopia, under his own name in English in 1852, and in German as Bilder aus Aethiopien (in 1854), which met enthusiasm among geographers and intellectuals like Alexander von Humboldt, Heinrich Barth and others. Due to this success he was asked to illustrate also a number of other travel accounts to the East-Sudan and Abyssinia (e.g., Heuglin 1874). He also illustrated Theodor von Heuglin's Reise nach Abessinien (Jena 1868) and Heinrich Barth's Reisen und Entdeckungen in Nord- und Central-Afrika (Gotha 1857–58). The originals of most of B.'s works are preserved in the Frobenius-Institut in Frankfurt (for ill. s. also: EAE vol. 3, 35; EAE vol. 4, 553).

Blemmyes

B. (Dem. T-Brhmt, 'the Blemmyan lady' [?]; Blhmwt; Copt. S. ⲂⲖϨⲘⲞⲨ, B. ⲂⲀⲖϨⲘⲰⲞⲨ and vars.; Gr. Βλέμ[μ]υαι/-μυες; Lat. Ble(m)myae/-myi/-myes) is the name of a nomadic tribe attested between the Upper Nile Valley and the Red Sea shores. It has been connected with either the ↗Beğa balami, 'desert inhabitant', or the Egyptian Brhj/Brhw (Takács 2001), a toponym to which a native ending -m would have been added. Besides a few mentions in Egyptian texts (FHN nos. 50.5, 513 B.C.; cp. B-w-r3-h-3-y-w, a toponym, in the stele of Antamani, FHN 34.16, late 7th cent. B.C.), the B. are often met with in Greek and Latin sources, both literary and documentary, as well as in Coptic ↗papyri (s. EAE vol. 5).

The earliest Greek reference is provided by Theocritus, with a "rock of the B. whence the Nile is no more seen" (Idyll. VII, 114 = FHN no. 116). In Ptolemaic times, the location of the B. is detailed by Eratosthenes: next to the Megabari, they inhabit Lower Nubia and are subjects (hypakoúontes) to the Ethiopians, i.e. Nubians, and neighbours (hómoroi) of the Egyptians (in ↗Strabo [s. EAE vol. 5], Geogr. XVII, 1, 2 p. 786C = FHN no. 109); featuring among "the Ethiopians who live above Syene [hypèr Syḗnēs]", i.e. Aswān, they are nomads, "not numerous, nor warlike, though they were thought to be so by the ancients, because often, like brigands (lēistrikôs), they would attack defenceless persons" (XVII, 1, 53 = FHN no. 190). In ↗Ptolemy's list of the East-African tribes, the B. range between Molíbai and Dēkádai (Geogr. IV, 7, 31), i.e. much further south than in Eratosthenes. ↗Pliny puts them among the monstrous races of the desert African areas, as "having no head, their mouth and eyes being attached to their chests" (Nat. hist. V, 44–46). The "curly-head[ed]" (oulokárēnos) Blémys, "chief [prómos] of the Erythrean Indians" and eponym of the B. in the 6th-cent. Dionysiaca by Nonnus of Panopolis (XVII, 385–97; s. Dostálová-Jeništová 1956), might be an invention of the poet or a derivation from ancient sagas (cp. Dionysius' Bassariká in Chuvin 1992: 277–81, but also the Egyptian graffito preserving the name Βλέμυς, Blémys, ed. Baillet 1926: 532f., no. 2054, possibly prior to Nonnus).

The assimilation of B. and Bougaîoi (↗Beğa) is commonly accepted. Yet, the two ethnonyms occur together in one single text: Epiphanius, Ancor. 113, 3, lists the B. before the Axōmîtai among the descendants of Ham, and in Panar. 66, 83, 7 he introduces the Bougaîa after the Axōmîtis, but in De XII gemm. 19ff. (Lat. vers.), he records Bugaei and Blemyae separatedly from each other (FHN no. 305). Bougaeîtai are found in Greek inscriptions concerning the of nəguś ↗ᶜEzana (RIÉ 270.7 and 270bis.6 = FHN nos. 298, 3 and 299, 8), and Begá feature in the 2nd/3rd-cent. ↗Monumentum Adulitanum (RIÉ 277.12 = FHN 234, 12); in a 6th-cent. scholium to it in the Florence ms. of ↗Cosmas Indicopleustes (Top. Chr. II, 60), however, the ethnonym Atalmô, not the following Begá, is glossed with Blémmyai, as the Aksumite usage (Wolska-Conus 1968: 353, s. Fiaccadori, in preparation, equating Atalmô to Ḥadarmó; cp. ↗Ḥədaräb, ↗Ḥadārém). Moreover, the interpretation of the name given in the LXX ("Septuaginta") to the Persian Haman, Βουγαῖος, Bougaîos (Esth 3, 1 and 9, 10: ብግያዊ, Bəgəyawi in the Eth. vers.) as "a gentilic denoting the Beja" as war-like and hostile (Wechsler 2001), is not convincing, that name calling rather for an Iranian etymology.

A sounder equivalence of the two ethnonyms is suggested by the Arabic and Coptic papyri found in 1972 at Qaṣr Ibrīm: the letter sent in 758 A.D. by the governor of Egypt Mūsā b. Kaᶜb to the ṣāḥib Muqurra wa Nūba ('lord of Muqurra and Nūba') refers to al-Buğa, who appear as B. in the corresponding (unpublished) Coptic document (Plumley 1975; Hinds – Sakkout 1996). This definitely prevents the identification of the B. with the Baliyīn (-iyūn or -iyyin) of Arab medieval geographers – actually the Bilin or ↗Bogos (s. Fiaccadori 2009–10: 199ff.)

The B. seem to have remained heathen until, if not beyond, Justinian's age (s. Dijkstra 2004). Procopius, informs on their pantheon, as well as on their human sacrifices to a solar deity (Bell. I, 19, 35f. = FHN no. 328). A clue to their conversion to Christianity in the 6th cent. A.D. can be seen, however, in the Graeco-Coptic royal ordinance from al-Ǧabalayn addressed to a woman called Amnas, "whose Christian name is Sophia" (P. Köln ägypt. 13 = FHN 339). A reference to the B. as "turning away from the despicable idols to know the eternal God" is in P. Cairo Masp. 67004.9. Interpreting the presumably B. text on a Saqqāra ostracon as a translation of Ps. 29, 3–4a (Browne 2003) would fit in with such traces of Christianization.

According to the Historia Augusta, of the second half of the 3rd cent. A.D., under Emperor Aurelianus the B. were associated with the wealthy Alexandrian merchant Firmus, who led a revolt in 272 A.D. Most likely, though, such association (societas) consisted more in trading relations, for he carried on business with India (XXIX, Fl. Vop., Quadr. Tyr. 3, 3–4 = FHN no. 283). The revolt of Firmus quickly quelled, the B. appear in Rome among the exotic captives and animals of Aurelian's triumph (Hist. Aug. XXVI, Fl. Vop., Aurel. 33 = FHN no. 283). Ten years later, Probus defeated the B., after they occupied Coptus and Ptolemais in Upper Egypt, and took some of them as captives to Rome (XXVIII, Fl. Vop., Prob. 17 = FHN no. 284). A different version occurs in Zosimus: Ptolemais, allied with the B., rose against the emperor and attacked Coptus, but the generals of Probus settled the revolt (Hist. A71 = FHN no. 323).

Describing the withdrawal of the southern Egyptian border from Hierà Sykáminos to Syene under Emperor Diocletian (298 A.D.), Procopius has it that the B. live in the interior of the inhospitable region between Aksum (Auxômis) and Elephantine, whilst the Nubians (Nobátai) dwell on the Nile's shores (a literary anachronism in his own time). To both of them the emperor had granted a yearly amount of gold, provided they no longer plunder the Roman territory. As a further precaution against incursions, Diocletian founded on the island of Philae shrines common to Romans and B. (Bell. I, 19, 27–33 = FHN no. 328).

Friendly relations with the Romans are still documented forty years later by the presence of B. envoys in Constantinople during the celebration of Constantine's tricennalia: Eusebius mentions them next to Indians (Aksumites?) and Ethiopians (V. Const. IV, 7 = FHN 293). Blemmyan embassies in Constantinople are further attested in the imperial petition of P. Abinn. 1 (= FHN no. 295).

Incursions of B. against the monastic communities on the southern fringes of Egypt are frequently recorded in hagiography: e.g., the Paralipomena to the biographical corpus of St. Pachomius (d. ca. 356 A.D.) recount the kidnapping of one of his monks by B., who forced him to worship their gods (§ 9 = FHN 296). Evagrius relates that ↗Nestorius (d. 451 A.D.) was taken "captive of the spear" (doryálōtos) by the Blemmyes, who then freed him (Hist. eccl. I, 7). Actual evidence of such unceasing raids is in the petition Appion, bishop of Syene, addressed to the emperors Theodosius II and Valentinian III in the 2nd quarter of 5th cent. (SB XX 14606 = FHN 314). Around the middle of the 5th cent., Priscus informs that the defeated B. and Noubades sent ambassadors to Maximinus, probably the dux Thebaidis, for a one-hundred-year peace treaty, and until his death refrained from plundering Roman expeditions (fr. 21 Bornmann = FHN no. 318, cp. also Iordanes, Rom. 333 = FHN no. 329, with Florus, Alexandrinae urbis procurator, instead of Maximinus).

Famous is the journey undertaken in 423 A.D. by the historian and diplomat Olympiodorus of Thebae (Photius, Bibl. cod. 80, p. 62a, 9–26 = FHN no. 309) to the towns of Talmis, Prima, Phoinikon, Chiris and Thapis, all in B. territory, and to the emerald mines of the region, which could not be visited "without a royal order". To Olympiodorus the poetic fragment of a Blemyomachia in P. Berol. Inv. 5003 may be also ascribed (Livrea 1978; FHN no. 326; Miguélez Cavero 2008: 59ff.). However, Cosmas Indicopleustes credits B. and Ethiopians with exporting to Taprobane (Ceylon) the emeralds in which their region were rich (Top. Chr. XI, 21).

An interesting case of B. federation with the ↗Byzantine empire is provided in a letter of A.D. 518 or 523 by ↗Justin I to Ǝlla Aṣbəḥa (↗Kaleb; ↗Abrəha and Aṣbəḥa) transmitted within the Greek Martyrium Arethae: the emperor threatens the nəguś with sending Blemmyan and Noubadian troops against Ḥimyar via Aksum (§ 27, ed. Detoraki 2007: 259 = FHN no. 327). On closing the aforesaid excursus, Procopius describes the demolition of the sanctuaries at Philae on the orders of ↗Justinian I by his Persarmenian general Narses (Bell. I, 19, 37 = FHN no. 328). The last documentary piece on the B. is P. Apoll. 15, 4 (705–06 A.D.), where "a tax in gold pertaining to the territories of the B. [tôn Blemmýōn]" is hinted at – a probable allusion to the ḫarāǧ they owed to the Arab administration of Fusṭāṭ.

Besides Greek and Latin literary and documentary sources, a corpus of Greek and Coptic documents produced directly in the B. milieu is extant (Hägg 1984; Satzinger 1985). The oldest of these documents is probably a Greek inscription from Talmis (Kalabsha) concerning B. cult societies that was produced under a phýlarchos called Phonoin (SB V, 8697 = FHN no. 313). He is perhaps the same as Phonēn (a slightly different phonetic writing) who, once made king, sent to Abourni, king of the Noubades, the long papyrus letter found in 1976 at Qaṣr Ibrīm (SB XIV 11957 = FHN no. 319). In such an important, yet somehow obscure text the kingdoms of the B. and Noubades appear as merely tribal societies. Here, the Nubian king Silkō, known from his Greek triumphal inscription, where the defeated Blemmyes are curiously depicted as kaloí, 'noble' (OGIS 201 = FHN no. 317.9), is introduced by Phonēn as Abourni's predecessor. The 13 Greek and Coptic 6th/7th-cent. documents from Pathyris (al-Ǧabalayn), written on gazelle (?) skin, are of the greatest interest (Mitthof 2007: xxv–xxxi). The corpus consists of nine acknowledgements of debt in a form similar to that typical for the Theban region (BGU III, 795–97 = FHN nos. 342, 341, 343; BKU III, 359, 361 = FHN nos. 333, 332; SB III, 6259, X, 10552, 10553, 10554 = FHN nos. 338, 340, 335, 337), a donation also implying a manumission (BKU III, 350 = FHN nos. 331) and three royal ordinances (P. Köln ägypt. 13; SB III 6257–8 = FHN nos. 339, 336, 334). The scribes bear typically Greco-Egyptian names: Sansnōs, Agathōn, Dioskoros, who is perhaps the same as Dioskoros "scribe of the Blemmyan nation" (grammateús éthnou(s) Blemméou) of SB XVIII, 13930.1.

This corpus sheds light on the hierarchy of the Blemmyan kingdom, with a titulary that proves to be partly influenced by Byzantine ones, and depend but partly on tribal customs: the king is called basileús/basilískos and the highest dignitary is presumably the phýlarchos, to whom an otherwise unattested hypotýrannos was subordinated; court officials could have been the doméstikoi (Hägg 1990). Among the religious ranks, prophêtai and klínarchoi are mentioned. Besides the names of three kings (Pokatimne, Charachēn and Barachia), the Pathyrite documents also provide evidence for such administrative and legal Greco-Latin terms of uncertain meaning as kommérkia, kouratoría and synétheia, as well as for a mysterious "Noubadian currency", kérmata Noubaritôn.

Body modification

The concept of B.M. covers various practices of artificial modification of the human body. From the disciplines of art history and design the definition of B.M. was coined as a practice altering the body or taking something away from it, or of supplementing as adding something to the body (Barnes – Eicher 1992: 16). In this definition transformations of hair, skin, nails, the muscular and the skeletal systems, teeth and breath are all described as B.M. (ibid.: 18). As reversible artificial modifications such as body painting (s. also ↗Cosmetics, ↗Henna), hairstyling (↗Hairstyles), training the body, or overeating to promptly gain weight till a set date ("fat-men-contest" of the Bodi [s. ↗Meʾen] or certain wedding preparations for girls, e.g., of the Dinka [Fisher 1984: 53]) are already considered in other articles, they are not to be considered here.

B.M. designates often painful practices to modify the very substance of the human body, resulting in changes which are not easily reversed or perhaps not at all. Pain is frequently considered an essential part of B.M. and is given high cultural value. In the Ethiopian discussion B.M. is nowadays even mentioned in the same context as that of "harmful traditional practices". Some types of B.M. are in fact better described as body mutilation and are also not considered in this article. Such are the branding of thieves and slaves (↗Slavery), ↗castration and the amputation of body parts (especially tongues and limbs, or female breasts) applied as a punishment (e.g., the mutilation of religious dissidents by Christian rulers [s. DillmZarY 24, 38, ↗Hulätt lədät] or according to the ↗Fətḥa nägäśt and the ↗šarīʿa). Mutilation was also carried out in order to terrorize the enemy (e.g., ↗Anole, ↗Askari, ↗Tewodros II, as well as in the case of queen ↗Ǝsato, who is reported to have been mutilated by having one of her breasts cut off [Sergew Hable Selassie 1972: 113ff.]).

In the Horn of Africa combinations of different forms of B.M. can be found in various ethnic groups. At least one form of B.M. is practised in nearly every culture in the region. While some forms are still practiced today, others were abandoned due to a shift of cultural values or adaption to state policies.

From an anthropological perspective, B.M. includes various practices of cultural expression and has many, often combined, motivations and meanings. Most modifications are carried out on exposed parts of the body. They serve as visible markers of age or life stage, of gender, of ethnic or lineage distinction, of social status or class, of religious background or institutional affiliation; and may also express wealth and bravery. Moreover, B.M. is practiced to enhance beauty and sexual attraction.

Most forms of B.M. are combined with initiatory practices (↗Initiation) or other rites of passage. They show the individual's gain in social status and social recognition. B.M. can therefore be seen as a "visible biography" inscribed in the bodies of individuals. Markers of social distinctions inscribed in the body, such as, e.g., being the first or second wife, the number of enemies killed in battle or the number of admirers. However, a particular tattoo or the way in which teeth are filed, may also express individual preference and choice.

Other modifications are done for medical (↗Healing, ↗Medicine, traditional), magical (↗Magic) or religious reasons. Some forms of B.M. are medical practices which have to be carried out by experts (Amh. wägešša, ↗Healers) such as uvulectomy, tooth extraction, male ↗circumcision (Lord 1970: 190f.; Messing 1972: 262f.; Pili 2007: 7f.; Vecchiato 1993: 164f.; Young 1976: 151; for some medical instruments used s., e.g., Forkl 1997: 128f.).

Since an individual's biography cannot be separated from his or her upbringing, social status, experiences, life challenges and health problems, as well as cultural background and cultural values, each B.M. reflects this connectedness. Such decoration not only has a special meaning, but also a special efficacy ascribed to it, which is reflected in its medical procedure and gives a deeper significance to individual choices and to the biographical body inscriptions themselves. Therefore, very often ornaments and decorations can be found not only in B.M., but also in handicrafts and ↗art and hava a special symbolism (s. Klemm 2006: 136–41 about Afran Qaalluu [↗Qottu] Oromo Women and the meaning of tying hairnet and scarf).

Recent scholarly literature on B.M. is mainly informed by Western discourses on adornment or body art as well as medical, psychological and feminist issues, mainly considering B.M. practiced in Europe or the USA etc. While in colonial and post-colonial times B.M. in Africa had been a favourite topic mixed with exoticism and voyeurism (s. travel accounts as well as missionary and government reports), it experiences a far less ethnocentric revival since the 1980s starting from art history (e.g. Roach – Eicher 1973; Vogel 1986) and inspiring anthropology and social sciences. There are, however, a number of early exceptions to ethnocentric descriptions as well (s., e.g., ↗Muḥammad b. ᶜAbdalbāqī al-Buḫārī al-Makkī; Joos van ↗Ghistele; Parkyns 1853).

Types of body modification

Types of B.M. may be classified by the body parts involved, by the social function of the practice in question or by the ethnic group in which those practices are performed. Here, in order to have a clear structure, the classification is made according to body parts (cp. Barnes – Eicher 1992: 19).

(1) Skin: B.M. on the human skin (s. also ↗Body ornamentation) takes three different forms: Tattooing, scarification and branding (e.g., Forkl 1997: 128). Tattooing is a widespread practice in the highlands of Ethiopian and Eritrea practiced by Orthodox Christians (VSAe II, 284, 426, 714; Wood 1868), as well as Muslims (Klemm 2009: 60ff.). To be mentioned here are, e.g., the Amhara, Təgrəñña-speakers, ↗ᶜAfar, ↗Argobba, ↗Beǧa, ↗Gurage and ↗Oromo (Beckwith – Fisher 1990: 104f.). Religious symbols (e.g., ↗crosses, stars) as well as lines and simple ornaments are used for tattooing mainly the face, neck and breast of women (Girma Fisseha 1997: 17). These show their religious or ethnic distinction and enhance female beauty (fieldnotes Müller 2003, Thubauville 2010: 106). Crosses are, furthermore, believed to protect the bearer against evil ↗spirits and were already common during the reign of aṣe ↗Zärʾa Yaᶜəqob (Conti Rossini – Ricci 1965: 29f.). Fine lines around the eyes are believed to protect against the evil eye (↗buda) and cure sight problems. One of the medical purposes of neck tattoos is to prevent throat problems.

In the case of tattooing it has to be emphasized that B.M. is considered to be an integral part of culture. This fact is reflected by the use of the same design found in tattoos and on material items (e.g., pottery, basket and cloth weaving or woodwork). Nowadays tattooing is often replaced by less permanent facial painting with henna (fieldnotes Müller 2003) and nail polish (Klemm 2009: 61).

Scarification is common among the ↗Banna (VSAe I, 355), ↗Hamar (Krutak 2009: 108–14), ↗Kara [Karo] (Beckwith – Fisher 1990: 304f.), ↗Ñaŋatom (ibid. 260f.), ↗Nuba, ↗Nuer (ibid. 100, 258), Meʾen (VSAe I, 402), ↗Mursi (Beckwith – Fisher 1990: 262f.), Oromo (Klemm 2009: 61), Suri and Toposa [Sudan] (Fisher 1984: 44f.). Two different types of scarification are known in Ethiopia, firstly, simple scarification, creating a hard scar-relief and secondly, cicatrization, creating a blackened bas-relief, a mixture between tattoo and scar-relief. Incisions and scars around the eyes and on the eyelids or eyebrows are believed to cure eye-diseases. Scars at the temples protect against headaches. Among the Afran Qalluu Oromo women usually use scarring on the eyebrows, the bridge of the nose and the cheeks to heal, protect and beautify, in some cases, however, scarring was also used to make children ugly and thus protect them from being taken away from their families (Klemm 2009: 61).

Branding has usually been used as a punishment for thieves or as a sign for slaves, but not as B.M. One exception, however, are the Banna, who, for medical reasons, used a fire-drill to burn scars into men's torsos or arms to prevent them from sickness and to make them strong (VSAe I, 355).

As a rare case of B.M., male nipple extirpation has been observed among the ↗Yäm. It was practiced as an initiatory practice for boys at the age of about ten years, who did not belong to the royal clan (VSA III, 363–69; BeckHuntAlvar 157). The removal of the right male breast was also reported among the Beǧa (s. ↗Ibn Sulaym al-Aswānī).

(2) Teeth: A cultural phenomenon known in southern Ethiopia, as in many parts of Africa, is the modification of parts of the denture, such as the extraction or filing of teeth. The incisors of the upper or lower jaw, in some cases also the molars, are removed in various ethnic groups. Some examples are the ↗Añwaa, Banna, ↗Bäšada, ↗Komo, Meʾen and Nuer. Among the latter only the clan of the chief is exempted from this custom, while Meʾen women have four teeth extracted from their lower jaw. Among the ᶜAfar the filing of the upper incisors is still common today. The removal of teeth is often combined with the piercing of lower lips and ears (VSAe I, 335, 346, 355, 402), as observed among the Karo and Hamar (Beckwith – Fisher 1990: 298, 303) as well as the Eritrean ↗Nara (Murdock 1959: 170). Among the Toposa teeth extraction is explained by the fact that women without lower incisors resemble the highly appreciated cattle, instead of less valued goats (Fisher 1984: 45). The Komo give a medical reason for the removal of the mandibular central incisors: in the case of a severe tetanus infection, which results in lockjaw, the sick can still be fed through the hole in the denture (fieldnotes Meckelburg 2010; cp. Barnes 2010: 16 for the Massai).

In many ethnic groups the removal of teeth is performed in the context of initiation rites (for variations between different ethnic groups s. article on Initiation). In northern Ethiopia and Eritrea teeth are, with some exceptions, only extracted for medical reasons: One of the traditional treatments for infants with diarrhoea is extracting the milk teeth (fieldnotes Müller 2008).

(3) Gums, lips and uvula: Tattooing the upper and sometimes the lower gums of Amhara, Gurage, Oromo and Təgrəñña-speaking women is meant to enhance their beauty and furthermore seen as a protection against evil spirits. Depending on the individual choice or preference of the child's mother, some have the whole upper gums tattooed with a black colour, others only the gums above every second tooth, which has the effect of an alternating black and red design (fieldnotes Müller 2003).

A widespread practice in northern Ethiopia and Eritrea, based on traditional medical concepts, is the removal of parts of a baby's uvula in order to prevent infection of the throat (cp. Hartley – Rowe-Jones 1994: 65f.; Messing 1972: 262f.). This practice is furthermore said to improve the voice, which is reinforced by swallowing butter (fieldnotes Müller 2004).

Lower lips can first be pierced by needles or nails, later the hole produced can slowly be widened by lip plugs (cp., e.g., VSAe I, 335f., 343, 355, 402, 412, 417, 441; VSAe III, 18, 22). This practice is often combined with the extraction of the lower incisors and the piercing of the ears in various styles [cp. also (2) Teeth]. Another cultural phenomenon, which has become a tourist attraction, is the insertion of lip plates into the ever widening lower lip of ↗Baale and Surma women (Beckwith – Fisher 1990: 248, 270–77). A common explanation given by the Baale for the origin of this B.M. is that it occurred in the 19th cent. to protect women from slave traders, because they were dismissed for their deformation (cp. Fisher 1984: 55 on the Kichepo or Klemm 2009: 61 on Oromo scarification).

(4) Ears and nose: The piercing of ears is very common. Piercings range from a single hole for small jewellery or for a long nail hanging down from it to smaller or bigger ear plugs. In some ethnic groups even the whole ear will be pierced with many small holes into which rings may be inserted. For special examples s. Banna, Meʾen (VSAe I, 101, 168, 231, 309, 355, 396, 401f.; VSAe II, 204, 209, 283, 319, 394, 466), Hamar (Beckwith – Fisher 1990: 247), Surma (ibid. 272–79, 286f., 289) Toposa (Fisher 1984: 44f.) and Turkana (ibid. 43). Nose piercings are rare, only found among the Beǧa (ibid. 280f.; Beckwith – Fisher 1990: 110).

(5) Genitals: Different kinds of modification and mutilation of the genitals are practiced in the Horn of Africa (cp. ↗Circumcision, female;

↗Circumcision, male). Genital modification of men and women is either done in early infancy (s. ↗Baptism) or as an initiation ritual (cp. fieldnotes from Uganda, Müller 1999).

Most Ethiopian boys – of whichever social, ethnic or religious background – are circumcised today. Male circumcision includes the removal of the foreskin, and in some cases frenectomy (removal of the frenulum). Historically even extirpation of the testicles (sometimes only the left testicle), e.g., among the Yäm (BeckHuntAlvar 157), is reported. Among the Amhara circumcision is common on the seventh day after birth, among the Tǝgrǝñña on the eighth day – before leaving the hut where the woman delivered and before baptism (fieldnotes Müller 2003; Shack 1974: 37). For the Oromo, male circumcision is conducted at different ages depending on the region, and religious belief of the practitioners. For the Western Gurage, male circumcision is performed between the age of eight and ten (Shack 1974: 107). In Harari culture, boys are circumcised between the day of birth and the age of 15 (ibid. 128f.). Circumcision is mainly practiced in hospital today (fieldnotes Müller 2003; Gibb 1996: 137).

Female circumcision, even if prohibited by Ethiopian as well as Eritrean state laws, is still widespread as well. Girls are mutilated either by clitoridectomy (removal of the clitoris), by the removal of the clitoris and the inner labia, or by infibulation (removal of all or part of the inner and the outer labia). The excision of the prepuce of the clitoris and the partial sewing of the inner labia is called absuma arabi in Oromiffa and arabi absum in Harari, the full removal of the clitoris, parts of the labia majora and the labia minora and the sewing together of the remnants of the labia minora is called absum hodha in Oromiffa and ge absum in Harari (Klemm 2002: 161, Gibb 1996: 136).

Clitoridectomy is performed among the Amhara on the fifth day after birth and among the Tǝgrǝñña on the seventh (Shack 1974: 37). Among the Oromo, all three kinds of female circumcision are common, depending on the region, ethnic group and religious belief, and infibulation is still widespread (Gibb 1996: 138). In some areas the vagina is not only circumcised, but also tattooed (Klemm 2002: 164). This B.M. normally takes place between the age of eight and ten, prior to the beginning of menstruation (ibid. 169). For Western Gurage girls clitoridectomy is performed between the age of eight and ten as well (Shack 1974: 107). Today girls in Harari culture undergo clitoridectomy between the age of four and ten performed by a traditional midwife. Not long ago, however, infibulation was still a cultural imperative (Gibb 1996: 136f.) and for Somali living in the region this is still the case today (ibid. 138).

British Military Administration of Ethiopia

The B.M.A. (Ethiopia, 1941–44), as opposed to the ↗British Military Administration (Eritrea) was not a full care-taker government. The government of Great Britain (↗United Kingdom: British colonialism in the Horn of Africa) saw Ethiopia as part of the Occupied Enemy Territories after the defeat of the Italian Army. Thus, in its own interests, Britain influenced the future of Ethiopia after independence, exerting administrative control over Ethiopia in the first years after liberation.

In February 1941, during the battle for Ethiopia (↗War of Liberation), British Foreign Minister Anthony ↗Eden declared that Ethiopia's territorial integrity would remain intact and that Britain recognized the claim of aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I to the throne. He added that as long as the war lasted, "temporary measures of military guidance and control" would be required.

When the Emperor returned to Addis Abäba on 5 May 1941, he was joined by British advisers from the Foreign Office in the newly reopened British legation, and by British Army political officers. They were led by Brigadier Daniel Arthur ↗Sandford, Major (later Colonel) Robert Ernest ↗Cheesman, British Minister Robert Howe, and Deputy Chief Political Officer (DCPO) Brigadier Maurice Lush.

Sandford and Cheesman, who had long been acquainted with Ethiopia, were of the opinion that Ḫaylä Śəllase was the only man capable of introducing order and progress, and that it was in British interests to keep him as a grateful ally. Meanwhile the British army was still liberating the rest of the country and establishing local provincial military administrations. The British War Office, at that time and unlike the Foreign Office, considered Ethiopia as occupied enemy territory, and many of the officers involved were reluctant to see the emperor's men restoring his authority and methods. The Emperor and his men were instructed "to agree to abide in all important matters, internal and external, touching the government of the country, by the advice rendered to them by His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom". However, on 31 January 1942, following the interventions of Winston Churchill and Eden, a "wartime agreement" was signed by the Emperor and the British Chief Political Officer, Major General Sir Philip Euen Mitchell, for the administration of occupied enemy territories in East Africa. It granted the Emperor the help of British advisers, troops and finance, as if without any political control. The agreement brought the B.M.A. to an end but the British Military Mission (BMM.) and the British advisers, backed by their garrisons, retained in power as long as the war lasted.

During those years the Emperor was kept under strict British surveillance and even his private correspondence was censured. Nevertheless, the British also rendered meaningful assistance to the various Ethiopian ministries in Ḫaylä Śəllase's newly reorganized ↗government. They thus not only controlled the country during the rest of the war, but also helped laying the foundations for the post-war modernization of Ethiopia's institutions. The BMM – headed as of mid-1943 by Major-General Algeron Edward Cottam, began the rebuilding and the training of the new, now gradually modernized Ethiopian army.

The British Military Administration (Eritrea) officers, however, had a different policy. Under the leadership of Brigadier Stephen ↗Longrigg, the chief administrator, and of DCPO Eritrea Brigadier Brian Kennedy-Cooke, and with a view to their post-war plans for Eritrea, they tried to promote the idea of an autonomous "Tigrai State" as a nominal part of Ethiopia, but in practice under future British influence from ↗Asmära. As a result of these differences, a complicated struggle over the future of Təgray began, which lasted from June 1941 to October 1943. In this context, British Military Administration (Eritrea) officers tried to encourage the Təgrayans' self-awareness and to mobilize the ambitions of the two hereditary chiefs of Təgray, ras ↗Śəyyum Mängäša and ras ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase Gugsa. In contrast, BMM officers and the Addis Abäba-based British advisers helped the Emperor to try and assert his direct authority in the province, and to alert London against what they saw as Asmära's undermining of his power. The tension in Təgray – the British dimension of which was not the main cause – culminated in the outbreak of the ↗Wäyyanä revolt in Təgray. It was quelled in early October 1943 also by British bombers brought from Aden by British officers of the BMM in Ethiopia. In thus helping Ḫaylä Śəllase to defeat the Təgrayan insurgents, his British advisers and the Addis Abäba-based officers contributed significantly to his emerging absolutism.

On 19 December 1944, following twelve months of negotiations, a new Anglo–Ethiopian agreement was signed and Britain agreed to voluntarily restrict her rights in Ethiopia and remove her garrisons, except from the ↗Ogaden. The British went on training the Ethiopian army and rendering assistance to the government, but the special status and role of their advisers and officers in Ethiopia ended. Britain remained as a colonial power in ↗Somalia, Eritrea, ↗Sudan and ↗Kenya, but did not win Ḫaylä Śəllase as a grateful neighbour. Rather, remaining ever suspicious of British intentions, the Emperor would gradually reorient his international policy from Great Britain to the USA.

Brocchi, Giovanni Battista

B. (also de B. and Battista da Imola, Lat. Broc[h]us, de Brochis; b. ca. 1450, Imola, d. March 1511, Rome) was an Italian administrator and diplomat as well as traveller and ecclesiastic. Born to a noble family of Imola that had been involved in local government since the early 12th cent., in 1477 he became chancellor and familiar of the town's lord Count Girolamo Riario, a nephew of Pope Sixtus IV, and started since his long career in the service of the Holy See (↗Vatican).

As a papal envoy, B. was entrusted with several diplomatic missions to France, in late 1479 to Louis XI, and Spain. These missions, carried out in the political aftermath of the Pazzi conspiracy (aimed at replacing the Medici as rulers of Florence and definitely favoured by Riario), where quite unsuccessful and brought harsh criticism upon B. He fell out of favour with his former patrons and, shortly after returning to Rome in 1481, took minor orders as a secular cleric, thereby securing himself a career in the papal Curia.

As soon as he was ordained, he went to the Holy Land (↗Jerusalem), most likely on pilgrimage. As a guest of the ↗Franciscan convent at Mount ↗Zion, he was highly appreciated by its prior, the custos of the Holy Land Giovanni Tomacelli. The latter introduced B. to the Ethiopian embassy that, in the same year, had been sent to Cairo to seek a new metropolitan (↗pappas) and, after performing its duty (a few months later a metropolitan and a bishop, ↗Yəsḥaq and ↗Marqos, were dispatched to Ethiopia), on 18 April had just arrived in Jerusalem to visit the Holy Sepulchre (cp. the Islamic sources on the embassy, at Cairo and Jerusalem, in CerPal I, 281–88).

According to the Itinerary to the Holy Land and to Saint Catherine of the contemporary Franciscan Paul Walther of Guglingen (1482), the Ethiopians claimed to be on their way to Greece, where they hoped to obtain an Orthodox prelate to crown their young emperor, i.e. aṣe ↗Ǝskəndər. Thereupon, Tomacelli suggested that they go instead to Rome, for having such prelate appointed by the Pope would have been much more prestigious (ed. Sollweck 1892: 39f.). This should be complemented with information found in other sources, first and foremost the Treatise on the Holy Land and the Orient also by a Minorite, Francesco Suriano, then a member of the friary of Mount Zion (1485). The Treatise makes it clear that, in agreement with the head of the embassy, Tomacelli sent to Rome a delegation of two Ethiopian monks from Jerusalem, one of them named "Antonio" (*An-/Ǝnṭon[ə]yos or *An-/Ǝnṭonəs), with B. as an interpreter (ed. Golubovich 1900: 82, tr. Bellorini – Hoade 1949: 95) – who may well have learned Arabic or Amharic in Jerusalem.

B.'s claim that the Ethiopian delegation had been sent to Rome directly from Ethiopia by aṣe Ǝskəndər who had appointed B. himself as its guide is recorded only some 30 years later, in the account inserted by the pontifical master of ceremonies Paride de Grassi (d. 1529) into his still unpublished Treatise on ambassadors to the Roman Curia, written after 1504 (Lefevre 1958:107f., but s. Fiaccadori 2011: 138).

From Jerusalem, therefore, the party arrived in Rome in November 1481 (as witnessed by the immediate report of the Milanese ambassadors to their lord, s. Ghinzoni 1889: 151ff. and Lefevre 1958: 109ff.). At the court of Sixtus IV, "Antonio" and his companion(s, whose number vary in the different sources) introduced themselves, and were gladly received, as "representative of ↗Prester John"; as such, they were portrayed in two scenes in the 1481–82 frescoes, attributed to Biagio d'Antonio, on the southern walls of the Sistine chapel (Bonechi 2011; cp. Fiaccadori 2011, also for a further portrait , within 1527, of "Antonio" in ↗Santo Stefano dei Mori). With B.'s linguistic assistance, the Ethiopians met, and were examined by, such personalities from the Curia as the Franciscan theologian and bishop Roberto Caracciolo and the Benedectine dean of the Sacred College of Cardinals Guillaume d'Estouteville (de La Roncière 1927: 137 and n. 5).

This "embassy" ended by prompting the idea of a mission to Prester John. To this end, having fulfilled his tasks, B. left the Ethiopians in Rome and, in January 1482, reached Cairo on his own (the Ethiopians did not head back until after 12 May 1482, s. Fiaccadori 2011: 139 and n. 27).

Together with the two Franciscan friars from Mount Zion who had been designated for that mission, i.e. the Spaniard Francisco Sagara – who was, though, "delayed on the way through sickness" – and the Italian Giovanni di Calabria (reportedly, from the [de] Baffa family of Cosenza), in mid-1482 B. went upstream the Nile to ↗Sawakīn. From there, being unable to coast the Gulf of ↗Massawa and the island of ↗Dahlak, they travelled by land, crossing the ↗Marya territory, ↗Eritrea and ↗Təgray, up to the highlands, with the "church of the king" (↗Atronsä Maryam?), in which they saw "an Italian-style organ", and to the rugged "gates" of Aḥəyya Fäǧǧi, through which they finally descended to ↗Šäwa and, in December, "after many perils and many vexations borne", reached the royal camp (↗kätäma) at ↗Bärara. There, they met ten Italians, "all men of good repute", among them the Venetian painter Niccolò ↗Brancaleone. In no way, however, can the arrival of the papal envoys at Ǝskəndər's court be echoed in his chronicle: "... bishops [pappasat, also 'metropolitans'] and many priests came from Holy Jerusalem, and the churches were renovated" (PerrEsk 341). This passage rather alludes to the arrival of Metropolitan ↗Yaᶜəqob, formerly a bishop of Jerusalem, with his retinue of prelates – indeed, before Ǝskəndər's death in 1494 (s. Fiaccadori, in preparation, against Cerulli 1972: 395).

Yet, B. and Giovanni di Calabria "failed to get an audience" with the king, "on account of the death of the said lord", i.e. aṣe ↗Bäᵓədä Maryam (in 1478), and the minority of his son and successor (Ǝskəndər was eleven year old at that time), as well as the hostility of "certain lords" ruling for him, "who did not like their mission". Thus, a few months later (about a year since they left), Giovanni decided to send B. back to Jerusalem, himself staying behind in Ethiopia. B. arrived in Jerusalem on 27 December 1483: his report to the new prior of Mount Zion and custos of the Holy Land, Paolo da Canneto, is included, with the remarkable 1482 ↗itinerary of Ethiopia, in Suriano's Treatise (ed. Golubovich 1900: 84–87, tr. Bellorini – Hoade 1949: 97–100, cp. CrawItin 40–54 for commentary).

In 1484, Paolo gave B. a letter for aṣe Ǝskəndər, asking the king to embrace the Catholic faith and offering him the gifts that, two years before, had been brought from Rome by "Antonio" – who was still keeping them in Jerusalem along with the pope's letters for Prester John (ibid. 1900: 81ff.; 1949: 94ff.). With that letter, B. left again for Ethiopia, arriving on 18 January 1484.

The mission of B. and Giovanni di Calabria, who were eventually able to see Ǝskəndər (so that Giovanni could have hardly been martyrized by the Muslims in 1483, as stated, instead, by Ribetti 1710: 103), seems to have had no special consequence for Ethiopia, but was the last significant event in the country's early contacts with Christian Europe (TadTChurch 266 n. 5). The chronicle of Däbrä Ṣəge (↗Gärᶜalta) reflects the king's enthusiasm about the visit of the "Franks" (many European traders, artists and craftsmen were in Ethiopia at the time , but “a priest called Yoḥannes”, i.e. Giovanni di Calabria, is explicitly mentioned therein), which may have caused an outcry at his court, in particular of the faction led by the powerful bitwäddäd ʿAmdä Mikaʾel and of the local clergy, scared of the sympathies earned by them in terms of “religion” (p. 56 of the ms., quoted ibid. 291 and n. 3, cp. 292f.).

The mission had a deeper impact on Rome, to which B. (after a long stay in Siena) was definitely back in 1487, there ending his career as a member of the papal Curia and scriptor apostolicus (from 1500). In 1505, pope Julius II appointed B. governor of his native Imola. In 1511, B. was murdered in obscure circumstances – connected, most plausibly, with his political activity as a representative (agente) of Imola to the pope (Lefevre 1958: 104f.).

Even after his return from Ethiopia, B. never ceased to cultivate his interests in the land of Prester John. On this he become an expert, leaving notes and records that contributed to fostering the knowledge of the country through Renaissance Europe (ibid. 66–75). In 1487 he borrowed from the ↗Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana a book “in Indian [i.e. Ethiopic] language” (s. ↗“India” as a name of Ethiopia) that he gave back in January 1493. Such 15th-cent. manuscript, identifiable with today’s VatLib Vat. et. 20, a Psalter, had been probably brought by B. himself from Ethiopia. It was borrowed again in 1513 by Johannes ↗Potken, who used it for his Psalterium Aethiopicum edition (Lefevre 1940 and 1958: 66–70, cp. Wilkinson 2007: 67 and n. 16).

C

Caquot, André

C. (b. 24 April 1923, Épinal, d. 1 September 2004, Paris) was a linguist and philologist. He attended the Lycée at Vesoul and later the Lycée Louis le Grand in Paris. In 1948, he graduated from the École Normale Supérieure. From 1949 to 1952, C. researched at the Institut français archéologique in Beirut and, from 1953 to 1955, he participated in the Mission archéologique française in Ethiopia. Back in Paris, at the École Pratique des Hautes Études ("Sciences Religieuses") he studied Amharic and Gəᶜəz under Marcel ↗Cohen. In 1955–56, he was Directeur d'Études at the same institution and from 1957 to 1960 he taught comparative Semitic religions at the Faculté de théologie protestante of the University of Strasbourg. From 1964 to 1968, C. taught Hebrew and Judaism at the Sorbonne. In 1972, he was appointed to the chair of Hebrew and Aramaic at the Collège de France, succeeding André Dupont-Sommer. He retired from this position in 1994.

C. was a member of several scientific societies, including the Société asiatique, Société des Études juives and International Association for the History of Religions. In 1977, he became a member of the Institut de France (Académie des Inscriptions et Belles Lettres). He was also the recipient of several honours, among which was the Star of Ethiopia.

A man of vast culture and with a fine taste for the arts, C.'s publications cover a wide array of fields. He presented new Aramaic texts and discussed the Deir Alla inscriptions and Qumran and Ugaritic problems. In ↗Ethiopian Studies, he was director of ↗Annales d'Éthiopie, since its foundation in 1955 (with Jean Leclant and ↗Käbbädä Mikaᵓel). He published numerous articles that covered several topics, from editions of Gəᶜəz and Amharic texts to works on South Arabian paleography (↗Epigraphic South Arabian) and divine ↗kingship.

Cattaneo, Celestino Annibale

C. (also Celestino da Desio; b. 21 January 1864, Desio, Monza, d. 15 February 1946, Cerro Maggiore, Milan) was a Franciscan ↗Capuchin friar and missionary. He joined the Capuchin Order in 1883 and was ordained priest in 1886.

Inspired to join missionary life by cardinal Guglielmo ↗Massaja's undertakings (AGC ML(C) 97/171:4), C. was a missionary in Mesopotamia from 1891 to 1910. There he witnessed the Turkish and Kurdish persecution of the Armenians and played a prominent role in saving more than 4,000 lives (Annali Francescani 27, 1899, 270; interview with C., Milano, 6 August 1936; AGC ML(C) 97/171:5).

In 1910, C. returned to Italy and was appointed rector of the Capuchin's International College in Rome and professor of Hebrew language. Shortly after, he was assigned to the mission of Eritrea, which in 1911 was entrusted to the Longobardian friars. He worked as the assistant of the newly appointed Apostolic Vicar of Eritrea, Camillo Carrara, and soon learned Təgrəñña; he published a life of Giustino De ↗Jacobis in Təgrəñña. During this period he reorganized the minor seminary in ↗Kärän, opened the mission among the ↗Kunama, tried to settle disputes between the local clergy and bishop Carrara and oversaw the opening and directorship of the renowned Scuola S. Michele d'arti e mestieri in ↗Sägänäyti.

From 1920 to 1923 C. was sent to Anatolia. On 4 October 1923, he was appointed General Commissioner of the Capuchins for south-eastern Europe. On 24 March 1925, Pope Pius XI nominated C. Apostolic Vicar of Eritrea and on 19 April 1925 he was ordained titular bishop of Busiris in Desio.

During C.'s bishopric, which ended with his resignation on 1 February 1936, missionary personnel was increased and particular attention was paid to ministry among the Kunama, to the reparation and construction of churches and missionary structures and in establishing an indigenous hierarchy, which eventually resulted in the Episcopal ordination of ↗Kidanä Maryam Kasa in 1930.

C.'s last years in Eritrea coincided with the Italian invasion of Ethiopia (↗Italian war 1935–36). In a public speech to the Italian Army in ↗Dog^{c}ali, C. declared himself a fervent supporter of Italian colonialism and of ↗Mussolini (Il Quotidiano Eritreo, 30 October 1935, 1). His missionary zeal was acknowledged by Pope Pius XI, who, after his withdrawal from public life, nominated C. as advisor of the Holy See and archbishop, titular of Sebastopolis in Abasgìa. The Italian Government awarded him the title of "Commendatore" and "Grande Ufficiale della Stella d'Italia al merito coloniale".

Č̣.B. (ጨው ፡ ባሕር, lit. 'salt lake/sea', 4°43' N, 36°57' E, also ጨው ፡ ውኃ Č̣äw Wəha, 'salt water', or Lake Stefanie, Bau Čialbe [Arbore, Boorana], Bass Baccade, Bass Marle, Basso na Ebor [Massai]) is the southernmost of the Ethiopian ↗Rift Valley lakes, north-east of Lake ↗Turkana. It lies on the border between the Southern Nations Nationalities and Peoples Regional State and Oromiyya kəlləl and in times of maximal flooding its waters may stretch over the border into ↗Kenya. Č̣.B. is mainly fed by the seasonal Dullay (Wäyṭo) River and the ↗Sagan, its main tributary which drains the Amaaro and Konso Mountains. The lake lacks any outlet and most of its water is lost by evaporation. The lake basin covers an area of approximately 2,000 km². Its character varies from mudflats to swamp and open shallow water according to ever varying inflow. Only the northern end is permanently covered by water. The maximum depth of the lake is ca. 7.5 m.

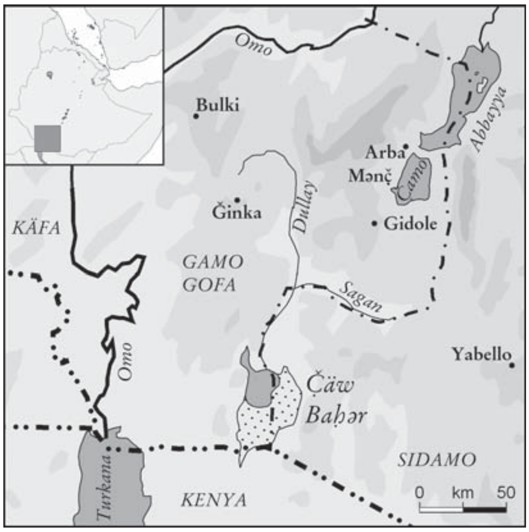
The vegetation of the lake area is characterized by salt-tolerant flora. In winter the lake hosts a multitude of ↗birds, especially flamingos, and the area around the lake is known for ostriches, gazelles, antelopes and the Grevy's Zebra. The large ↗elephant and giraffe populations reported by the 19th cent. were exterminated (↗Ivory). Today, the lake forms the centre of the Stephanie Wildlife Sanctuary (↗Parks, National) but conservation measures are almost non-existent.

On the northern shore of the lake, along the Dullay River, live the Hor (or Hoor, ↗Arbore). A distinct group of ↗Waata, the Waata Wando ('Waata of the plains'), with ca. 2,000 members, who have become agro-pastoralists, live north-east of the lake, where they temporarily share pastures with the Arbore (Gabbert – Thubauville 2010). In the area east of the lake the ↗Boorana seasonally graze their cattle and have temporary settlements and to the west by the ↗Hamär, whilst on the Kenyan side live Rendille pastoralists.

The highly saline water of the lake cannot be used for domestic or agricultural purposes but there are some freshwater springs in its south-east the use of which is subject to interethnic mediation. The fresh water springs carry mineral rich (salty) water which is used as medicine by the population and drunk by cattle. During dry periods at the eastern shores of the lake the Boorana (before also the Arbore) may collect salt which they use for their animals.

The history of the lake's subsequent exploration is closely related to the endeavours to locate the more important Lake Turkana. In 1888, the first Europeans to visit Č̣.B. were the Austro-Hungarian travellers Ludwig von ↗Höhnel and Samuel Teleki von Szék. They named the lake after Stefanie of Belgium, the wife of Crown Prince Rudolf of Austria-Hungary. "Rudolf" again was the name given to Lake Turkana during the same expedition. Hereafter, the lake was visited and described by Vittorio ↗Bottego and Lamberto Vannutelli (in 1896), Henry S.H. Cavendish (in 1897), Sinclair Wellby (in 1899), James J. Harrison (in 1900), Archibald E. Butter and Philip Maud (in 1903) and Charles William Gwynn (in 1909; cp. von Höhnel 1938).

On his expedition in 1895 to Lake Turkana, the American explorer Arthur Donaldson ↗Smith (s. EAE vol. 5) surveyed Č̣.B. and found the lake "nowhere deeper than 25 feet" (ca. 7.5 m [cp. above]), but abundant with fish, and many species of birds and large populations of crocodiles and ↗hippopotamus (cp., Smith 1898: 248–51).



Smith discovered a lake "only separated from Lake Stephanie by marsh, and maybe connected with it in flood", cp. Smith 1898: 254), extending from the north-eastern corner of Č̣.B. which he named Lake Donaldson. This section of the lake is today dried up. The Harrison expedition found Č̣.B. dry, "nothing but a vast extent of ground strewn with shells and heaps of fish bone" (Harrison 1901: 271).

Modern scientific interest is attracted by the geological data the lake provides. As Č̣.B. is relatively close to important paleontological sites of the Omo-Turkana basin (↗Paleontology) its sedimentation may help reconstructing the environmental conditions in one of the earliest known human habitats. Recently, the Hominid Sites and Paleolakes Drilling Project of the universities of Cologne, Potsdam, Aberystwyth and Addis Abäba was launched.

Alexander Meckelburg – Dirk Bustorf

Cederqvist, Karl

Reverend C. (orig. surname Jansson or Johansson; b. 28 October 1854, Fellingsbro, Sweden, d. 11 November 1919, Addis Abäba) was a ↗Swedish missionary and staunch supporter of the young Evangelical Church in Ethiopia.

As a young man C. worked as a farmhand and carpenter's apprentice till he took up theological training. C. studied at the Johannelunds Missionsinstitut in the years 1879–85, where he became a close friend of the Ethiopian missionary ↗Onesimos Näsib. In 1885 he was ordained and a year later sent as a seaman's pastor to Hamburg, Germany, and in 1888, to Liverpool and to Grimsby in the United Kingdom.

At the suggestion of Onesimos, the ↗Evangeliska Fosterlands Stiftelsen (EFS) called C. to lead their fourth Oromo expedition in 1892. Before his departure he took a course in medical training at Livingstone College, Leyton in Great Britain, for further qualification. The missionaries arrived at Lamu (now Kenya) in December 1893. However, their initial plan to reach the ↗Boorana, west of Lake Rudolf (↗Turkana) failed and the attempt was abandoned in 1895. C. returned to ↗Ǝmkullu where the EFS had a mission station and C. spent three challenging years in the mission stations at Ǝmkullu and Kismayu. Finally he initiated the "Juba Mission" in 1898, aiming to proselytize the people living along the ↗Ganaale. The plan was abandoned in 1902, after which C. returned to Sweden.

Onesimos wanted C. to join him in a Gospel ministry among the Oromo in ↗Wälläga, while the latter had his mind still set on the Boorana. When C. arrived in Addis Abäba, on March 29, 1904, sick and worn out, Onesimos had already left. C. decided to remain in Addis Abäba. His initial efforts to engage the ↗British and Foreign Bible Society in selling religious books failed. In the meantime C. independently engaged himself in selling religious books, in private tuition and in importing ↗Bibles and other religious publications in Amharic. In 1906 he opened a simple school in Addis Abäba, which later developed into a small worshipping congregation.

In 1912 C. bought a plot of land on which a more permanent school (later known as the "English School") and clinic were to be built. Classes were held in Bible studies, Amharic, English, history, geography, science, hygiene and singing. C. also imported large amounts of medicine for treatment and even distributed it to other missionary clinics in the country. He took particular interest in the treatment of women, children and slaves, as the high costs generally made medical treatment inaccessible for them. His care of the sick earned him the title hakim among the locals.

When abunä ↗Matewos came to power he tried to chase out ↗Protestantism. C. encouraged and helped those people with Evangelical persuasion or sympathies such as aläqa ↗Tayyä Gäbrä Maryam or ↗Ḫəruy Wäldä Śəllase in their work. Teachers and students in C.'s Evangelical mission station were constantly threatened with sanctions from Matewos.

Karl Cederqvist; photo ca. 1890s, from the archive of the Swedish Evangelical Mission, Uppsala

In November 1918 the entire country suffered from an outbreak of flu, but C. continued to visit and treat the sick. However, his personal health suffered. In the end he succumbed to a stroke and was buried in Addis Abäba in the presence of many missionaries and students.

Chernetsov, Sevir

C. (Sevir Borisovič Černetsov; b. 15 December 1943, Kostroma, d. 3 February 2005, St. Petersburg) revived the traditions of classical ↗Ethiopian Studies in Russia after a gap of 50 years.

C. was born in an evacuated officer's family (during World War II) and grew up in Leningrad (now St. Petersburg). In 1961, he enrolled at the Department of African Studies of the Oriental Faculty of the Leningrad State University (Amharic section), headed by Dmitrij Olderogge. He graduated in 1967, and the same year he joined the Kunstkamera (the Leningrad section of the Institute of Ethnography) as research assistant to Olderogge who was head of the African section. In August 1971 C. married the scholar of Old Russian literature Milena Roždestvenskaja, a daughter of the poet Vsevolod Roždestvenskij.

In 1974, C. defended his Ph.D. ("Candidate of Sciences") thesis on Ethiopian ↗magic scrolls, a topic already touched upon by Boris ↗Turaev and lying at the intersection of philology and ethnography.

Two genres of ↗Gəʿəz literature – the royal chronicles and the lives of the saints – were of particular interest to C., mainly because these sources could be used to reconstruct the course of Ethiopian history and understand the essence of the processes that took place in the Horn of Africa during medieval times. Religious studies, including ↗hagiography, were fairly strictly prohibited during the Soviet period, and C. concentrated his efforts on ↗historiography. Over the course of 15 years, he published three volumes of translations of Ethiopian chronicles into Russian, with detailed commentaries (1984, 1989, 1991), taking up another project begun by Turaev. He also completed two monographs on the history of Ethiopia under the ↗Solomonic dynasty up to the end of the 17th cent. (1982, 1990), the former earning him the degree of "Doctor of Sciences" (1984). A history book for students was published posthumously (2004, publ. 2005).

C.'s work at the crossroads between socio-political history and ethnography is best illustrated by his research on the origins of the ↗Amhara (e.g., 1993, 1995).

C. also spent a good deal of time and effort on the Kunstkamera's Ethiopian collections, and prepared a catalogue of the objects of Ethiopian art preserved there (1997).

C. visited Ethiopia twice, to attend the Eighth ↗International Conference of Ethiopian Studies in 1984 and the Eleventh in 1991.

In the early 1990s, C. re-launched the systematic teaching of ↗Gəʿəz at St. Petersburg State University, for the first time since Turaev.

During the last years of his life C. submitted numerous articles to the Pravoslavnaja enciklopedija ('Encyclopedia of Orthodoxy', edited under the auspices of the Russian Orthodox Church) and the Encyclopaedia Aethiopica. C. was one of the initiators for the revival of the research periodical Hristianskij vostok ('The Christian Orient') in 1999 and was an active member of its editorial board until his demise.

Chojnacki, Stanislaw

C. (b. 21 October 1915, Riga, Latvia, d. 3 July 2010, Sudbury, Ontario, Canada) was a prominent Polish scholar. The son of Alexander Chojnacki and Wanda, née Sadowska, C. obtained a law degree from Warsaw University in 1937. He subsequently served in the Polish army, and attended the Sorbonne in Paris. At the end of the war he went to Rome and in 1950 he emigrated to Canada. He took an M.A. in Slavonic studies at Montreal University, and was recruited by the Jesuit Lucien ↗Matte as Librarian of the new University College of Addis Ababa (UCAA; ↗Addis Ababa University).

C. established the UCAA library in 1951 with an emphasis on collecting works on Ethiopia. In 1959 he organized the first exhibition of works printed in Ethiopia. C. also began collecting Ethiopian ethnographic objects in the library and instituted a student Ethnological Society: its Bulletin ran from 1953 to 1961, and was reprinted in 2002. One of the founders of the Horticultural Society of Ethiopia C. also instructed students in art, organized the UCAA gardens, and collected butterflies and other zoological items, which were later transferred to Addis Abäba's Natural History Museum (s. ↗Museums, EAE vol. 5).

With the foundation of the ↗Institute of Ethiopian Studies (IES) by aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I, C. became its librarian and museum curator, as well as co-editor, with Richard Pankhurst, of the ↗Journal of Ethiopian Studies and the first volume of a Dictionary of Ethiopian Biography (DicEthBio). He built up an extensive ↗manuscript microfilm collection by obtaining copies of films taken by Ernst ↗Hammerschmidt, the UNESCO and the EMML (↗Ethiopian Manuscript Microfilm Library), and foreign diplomatic papers on Ethiopia filmed by Sven Rubenson. To familiarize readers with recent publications he produced Ethiopian Publications and several other bibliographical works, including a Register of Current Research on Ethiopia and the Horn of Africa, co-edited with Richard Pankhurst. C. joined other librarians in advocating a law of deposit for printed materials – but failed to get one enacted.

In 1967, C. founded a Committee for the Preservation and Restoration of Old Ethiopian Paintings, which was replaced in 1968 by the present Society of Friends of the Institute of Ethiopian Studies. C., with their help developed the world's finest collection of Ethiopian icons and church paintings. He also had a dedicated band of supporters, most notably Däggäfä Gäbrä Ṣadəq, who succeeded him as IES Librarian, Gərma Fəśśəḥa and Täläyyä Gäbrä Mädḫən.

C., whose first writings on Ethiopia were historical works based largely on European travel literature, turned in the 1960s to art appreciation. He wrote on several modern Ethiopian artists, including ↗Gäbrä Krəstos Dästa and ↗Ǝskəndər, before turning extensively to Ethiopian classical art, on which he was soon regarded as an authority. Such detailed studies were subsequently consolidated in his comprehensive monograph Major Themes in Ethiopian Painting (ChojPaint), followed by Ethiopian Icons (Chojnacki 2000), an extensive Catalogue of the comprehensive IES Collection he had helped to build, and his no less innovative Ethiopian Crosses: a Cultural History and Chronology (Id. 2006).

Cowrie(s)

C. snails (Amh. ዛጉል zagul; Tgn. ዛዕጎል za^{c}əgol; Orom. elellaani) from the southern ↗Red Sea and the Indian Ocean are used in the Horn of Africa mostly for decorative purposes. Sometimes they are used in protective charms. In the northern Sudan they were at times used as ↗currency (as in West Africa, where C. money was of great importance). It seems that C. were also used as currency in Ethiopian areas close to the Sudan, such as in ↗Goǧǧam where this is reported in the 1930s (Smidt 2009: 158, n. 23). C. are already mentioned in early Amharic dictionaries (e.g., Isenberg 1841: 158, 179).

C. have been, and still are to some extent, an important export product for the Dahalik, the inhabitants of ↗Dahlak. In the 19th cent., C. were fished in great quantity there (Andree 1869: 161). European merchants were able to buy cheap C. in ↗Massawa, Dahlak and other East African trading centres. There were, e.g., Hamburg merchants in Massawa as early as the 1840s who later established a commercial station in Zanzibar (the first having been ↗Rodatz; s. Smidt 2007) and transported C. to West Africa.

C. were transported far inland. All over Ethiopia, in a remarkable number of ethnic groups, C. are consistently used as a decoration on leather clothes, mainly worn by women and their babies, and on milk utensils. For example, milk containers of the ↗Boorana are decorated with C. Leather stripes holding babies on the backs of their mothers are extensively covered by C., e.g., among the Tägaru (↗Təgrəñña-speakers) and Boorana. These C.-decorated leather "bags" for babies (s. ill.) play a role, for example, in the Təgrayan Christian annual fertility feast of Abrəha wä Aṣbəḥa, which is practised by women who wish to become pregnant (not described yet in ethnological literature, but notable in this context).

The fact that the usage of C. is widely related to babies, children, women and milk utensils, suggests that their use may once have been widely associated with a special power of the C., protecting against ↗spirits, as these persons, and also milk, are imagined as especially vulnerable. C. are also used for children and women's necklaces (↗Jewellery), and in such cases the owners, as documented in ↗Təgray, consider them as amulets (cp. ↗ṭälsäm). C. may occasionally be used for decorating the bracelets of young men, both in the highlands and among diverse ethnic groups in south-western Ethiopia. C. also appear in local folk traditions; e.g., there is a Boorana tale concerning a C. necklace lost by a woman, a loss which leads to numerous misdeeds (Sahlu Kidane 2002: 101–04). A ritually important belt decorated with C. played a key-role in peacemaking rituals among some Oromo groups; the group receiving the belt could not refuse reconciliation (for details on the cultural role of C. among the Boorana s. Leus – Salvadori 2006). The gorfa, a milk container of the Boorana exclusively woven by women and also linked with women's rituals, is usually decorated by C., fixed with giraffe tail hair (Bassi 1999: 82f.; but, as C. are expensive, sometimes gorfa are used before the decoration is added, which however, is generally seen as necessary; ibid. 74ff., 83, 86). Woven milk containers are associated with fertility and abundance, and, by extension, with the reproductive capacity of the family (ibid. 75f.).

A concrete explanation of why a special power may be associated with C. is not usually offered by locals; one may hear that it reminds one of an eye, thus protecting against the evil eye; in ethnological literature one can also find the explanation that the "identification of the woven container (gorfa) with the female body is again stressed, in my opinion, by the C. shells attached to the gorfa container, symbolizing, by formal analogy, the vagina" (ibid. 76).

Archaeological research demonstrated the importance of C. for ancient cultures. In Late ↗Gaš Group burials (ca. 1700–1500 B.C.) several "crowns" of C., originally fixed on perishable material, were found. Even earlier, in the late Neolithic period (4th millennium B.C.), C. were used in personal adornments. Due to their rareness, being imported from far, it seems that they were regarded as appealing items and possibly also as markers of rank. The earliest example of a C. clearly linked with a high social rank is the 1st-cent. B.C. golden crown of a Meroïtic noble with a C. as part of its decoration (s. ill.; from the Graveyard West, Meroë, now kept in the Boston Museum). During recent research in Yəha a C. was found in sediments dated around 800 B.C., i.e. the Ethio-Sabaean period, reworked as it is still done today for decorative purposes.

Däbrä Maᶜṣo

D.M. (ደብረ ፡ ማዕጾ, from Gəᶜəz/Tgn. maᶜṣo, ‘gate, door’, LesCDic 75b, KaneTDic 1945a) is an ↗amba in Gulo Mäḵäda, East Təgray (for location s. Däbrä Zäyt, EAE vol. 5), prominent for its ancient church dedicated to St. ↗John the Baptist, Däbrä Maᶜṣo Yoḥannəs.

The earliest mention of the region and community can be found in the Mäṣḥafä ↗Aksum, where D.M. appears as a tributary to ↗Aksum Ṣəyon (CRAxum 11, 20 [text]). The context in which the official bearing the title of śəyyumä Maᶜṣo features in the documents collected in the Golden Gospel of ↗Däbrä Libanos of Ham (CRDLib nos. 9–10) suggests that the governor of the D.M. area was active in political struggle against the 13th-cent. emperor ↗Yəkunno Amlak (the title later reappears in the documents CRDLib nos. 11, 14f., 17, 20, 22). The Acts of the 15th-cent. abunä ↗Ǝsṭifanos mention that the saint was brought to D.M. for punishment (Getatchew Haile 2006: 60 [tr.]). Also in the 15th cent., aṣe ↗Bäᵓədä Maryam used D.M. as prison (PerrZarY 129). The district also features in the registers of the ↗Śərᶜatä mängəśt (Varenbergh 1915–16: 13; s. also HuntGeogr 247, 249ff. “Däbrä Mäḥəšo”).

The present church building is a recent rectangular construction in traditional Təgrayan style.

The manuscript collection of D.M. contains some old manuscripts witnessing to the former importance of the site, e.g., a homiliary collection which, according to a note, was donated to the church by aṣe ↗Dawit II in the late 14th-early 15th cent. and an old Four Gospels book probably from the same period.

Däbrä Zäyt

D.Z. (ደብረ ፡ ዘይት) is a historical site in the present day Gulo Mäk̠äda wäräda, East Təgray.

The recently documented site (Nosnitsin 2011; 2013: 16–24) is located not far from ↗ᶜAddigrat, a few kilometres away from the old rural road connecting the area of ᶜAddigrat and the district where the monastery of ↗Däbrä Dammo is situated. The site lies on several terraces under a cliff. Its more recent part accommodates a few household structures, a recent rectangular church (constructed in the 1980s), a sacristy (əqa bet), and a bell tower. A gate-house is located at a lower level. Behind a wall, older structures are located including the old church, the former əqa bet, as well as a cave with a ↗ṣäbäl-source.

The most remarkable structure of the site is the church of D.Z.: a small medieval basilica-like building with one nave and two rows of timber columns (four in each one) inside, and a narthex. According to local tradition, it was constructed in the 16th–17th cent. The church luckily escaped destruction and renovation. Some wall ↗paintings (partly whitewashed), possibly contemporary with the foundation, are still preserved. They may have been executed by the same painter who decorated the nearby church of Araᶜro Täklä Haymanot (described in Lepage – Mercier 2005: 206f.).

The ↗tabot is preserved in the mäqdäs located in the eastern part of the church and screened off by a curtain; the mänbärä tabot is placed in an apse formed by a stone barrier and a rough arch above. The roof of the church is flat, with a dome over the sanctuary indicating the presence of a cupola inside. Beside the main entrance, there is one small door and one window in the northern wall of the narthex, one window in the northern wall of the nave, and a door and a window in the eastern wall of the church building.

An ↗inscription in vocalized Gəᶜəz as well as crosses are carved into the rock surface above the rock-cut stairway located behind the church.

The history of the site is virtually unknown. According to local tradition, the oldest construction on the site was a pre-Christian temple, referred to as an ‘Old Testament synagogue’ (yä-Orit məkʷərab), and the first church was constructed during the time of the Aksumite king ↗Bazen. The only mention of the site in historical records seems to be in the ↗gʷəlt of the 14th-cent. ruler ↗Yaᶜəbikä Ǝgziᵓ preserved in the Golden Gospel of ↗Däbrä Libanos of Ham (CRDLib 26, no. 17). This document mentions an ↗ᶜaqqabe säᶜat of D.Z., Täsfa Ṣəyon.

The church library possesses a number of old manuscripts (most of them in poor condition). Among them, there are fragments of a 14th- and a

15th-cent. Gospel books, and a fine (15th- or 16th-cent.?) "leporello", with eleven miniatures depicting scenes with the Holy Family and saints on one side and a text (a miracle of Mary) on the other side. A codex with the ↗Haymanotä abäw, dating back possibly to the mid-16th cent., may be among the oldest known copies of the work. Among the paraphernalia, the church possesses two fine triptychs (one of them with clear traces of European influences).

Dabrimēla

D. is a semi-autonomous ↗Sāho group which owes its name to Mount Däbra of the Mola chain in the south of ↗Akkälä Guzay (PollEr 268, TrIslam 178f.; for location s. Sāho, EAE vol. 4, 469). According to some traditions, D. belong to the ↗Minifire Sāho, with whom they also share the same dialect (Mina, Central ↗Sāho).

There are two D. clans: Labhale-t ᶜAre ('the house of Labhalé [lit. 'one of male descent', the eponymous ancestor of this lineage]') and Alades ᶜAre (Ala des, 'one who hides his goats', was the eponymous ancestor of this lineage).

The Labhale-t ᶜAre are sedentary farmers, they also breed livestock for their subsistence economy. Their centres are Makko and Šəmäzana in Eritrea and Monoḫsayto in Təgray, Ethiopia. A Labhale-t ᶜAre branch, Seehorma, lives in the ↗Irob area. Labhale-t ᶜAre are predominantly Christians; most are bilingual in Təgrəñña.

The Alades ᶜAre are nomads who migrate between the Däbra and ↗Amba Soyra mountains where they interact with the ↗Ḥazo and the Gaᶜasó from the Minifire clan group. Their centre is at Assad on the Upper ᶜIndēli. The Alades ᶜAre are predominantly Muslims.

The Qādīdá clans of ↗Zula, who are of D. origin, had been ruled by the ↗nāʾib of Ḥərgigo until they were freed by the Italians and allowed to have their own rēdanto. In the 1931 Italian census, they appeared (as Bet Ḫalīfa and Bet Šek Maḥmud) as part of the ᶜAsawərta Lēliš ᶜAre (↗Asaorta). The Qādīdá are bilingual in Təgre.

The D. clans are headed by traditional chiefs (rēdanto). During the time of the ↗Africa Orientale Italiana and the ↗British Military Administration they, like most other surrounding Sāho tribes, were administered by the Minifire chief ᶜAlī Bey. In the second half of the 20th cent., the Labhale-t ᶜAre were headed by rēdanto Gäbrä Abrəham and more recently by ləğ Abärra. Alades ᶜAre were headed by ḥağği ᶜAbdallāh in the second half of the 20th cent., who was succeeded by his son Aḥmad Ṣālih.

Several versions of D. origin exist. A tradition suggests that the D. were founded in the late 17th cent. by a certain Ismāᶜīl, who claimed descent from a (clearly legendary) sulṭān Girgis of Istanbul (if he was a historical person, Ismāᶜīl can have been a tax collector, or a deserter, of the Turkish troops in ↗Massawa, s. PollEr 269, LewPeople 175). Seeking the origin far outside is, however, a wide-spread ancestral myth among the ethnic groups of the Horn of Africa. In this case one could also think of a political allegiance at a certain moment in Sāho history: groups under Turkish (Ottoman, Egyptian) influence referred to Turkish rulers, whilst those under Ethiopian influence referred to Ethiopian rulers (e.g., aṣe ↗Minas for Minifire; ↗Dawit for the Dawut Šuma sublineage of the Labhale-t ᶜAre).

Most D. claim their descent from the Dahimmēla sub-group of the ↗ᶜAdohyammára ᶜAfar who are believed to have settled in the area between eight and ten generations before the Turks, i.e. in the 12th–13th cent. (interview with Täsfa Maryam, who also mentioned Ismāᶜīl settling among an already existing D. tribe). The Dahim-mēla had good trade connections with the Təgrayan powerbase at that time (TrIslam 171). They could have penetrated the Sāho areas to secure the caravan route to Təgray, and later settled and mixed with the local population (but cf. Conti Rossini 1904: 45f.).

Pollera (in 1935) hypothesized that the D. group (which at his time numbered ca. 1,000, PollEr 272) is actually formed by people of different descent who settled around the monastery of Däbrä Maryam which was once flourishing on Mount Däbra – and to which the mountain itself owes its name. Once the monastery declined, the people who depended on it needed a common identity to justify their territorial claims (PollEr 269; this theory is opposed by most D. who do not want being associated with Christian Semitic Ethiopia).

Dähne Wäldä Maryam

Qäññazmač D. (ደህኔ ፡ ወልደ ፡ ማርያም; b. 28 September 1882, Sälla Dəngay, Šäwa, d. 25 January 1964, Addis Abäbä) was an important politician in the service of consecutive governments of aṣe ↗Mənilək II, ləǧ ↗Iyasu, Empress ↗Zäwditu and aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I.

D. was the son of baššа Wäldä Maryam Ǝsṭifanos, a veteran of the Battle of ↗^{c}Adwa, and wäyzäro Wälättä Yoḥannəs Wale Tädahäññ. He completed his traditional education, tutored by a teacher from the ↗Zəq^{w}ala monastery, and started to work in the office of ṣäḥafe təʾəzaz ↗Gäbrä Śəllase, joining Mənilək's service at the age of 13. He was soon after assigned to the Emperor's immediate office, serving there for over a decade and a half as private secretary. D. held several posts such as: Secretary responsible for foreign affairs; Secretary of the Council of Ministers under ləǧ Iyasu, and Director General of the Ministry of the Pen (1917–28). In addition, he was head of the first ↗printing press.

Empress Zäwditu also relied on D. as one of her loyal and closest advisors and aides. This status was not accepted by the then regent ras Täfäri (later aṣe Ḫaylä Śəllase I) who eventually suspected D. of helping the Chief of the ↗Imperial Bodyguards to stage a short-lived opposition to Täfäri's growing power. The Empress refused Täfäri's request for the detention of D., but he was removed from Addis Abäba and was appointed ↗näggadras of the ↗Arsi Province.

Apart from special assignments such as organizing the national exhibition on the occasion of Ḫaylä Śəllase's ↗coronation, and serving as controller of Mənilək Memorial House, he was appointed näggadras of ↗Ǧimma, ↗Gumma, and ↗Ǧanǧäro.

During the ↗Italian war of 1935–36, D. joined ras ↗Kaśa Ḫaylu's army and went to the front in March 1935. After the ↗Graziani massacre of 19 February 1937, the Italians deported him to the Sardinian island of Asinara where he was incarcerated until June 1939. After the Liberation he returned to Ethiopia with the Emperor.

During the post-war period, D. was given the task, together with bitwäddäd ↗Mäk^{w}ännən Ǝndalkaččäw, of restarting the post-war government and of ensuring stability and security in Addis Abäba. He held several posts such as administrator in the Ministry of the Interior on matters related to justice and commerce, and the management of enemy properties in the twelve provinces; he was chairman of the Disciplinary Committee and a principal advisor in establishing the Ministry of Pensions and the pension system. He was appointed first Vice-President of the Lower House of ↗Parliament and became a member of the Upper House (1956–60).

D. was buried at Wämbär Maryam Church in Zəqʷala.

Dämbäzan

D. (ደምበዛን, also ድምበዛን, Dəmbäzan, and ድምብዛን, Dəmbəzan) is a historical region in Eritrea at the edge of the ↗Ḥamasen plateau. Today it forms an administrative unit within sub-zoba ᶜAddi Täkälezan of zoba ᶜAnsäba and includes the villages of ↗ᶜAd[di] Täkälezan, ᶜAddi Kolom, ↗Däqqämḥare, Šəmanəguś Laᶜəlay, Šəmanəguś Taḥtay, Gäššənašəm, Däqqi Zärᵓu, Däqqi Gäbru, Gʷälagul, Hayyälo, Guritat and Wara. It also includes the historical village of ↗Ǝmba Dorḥo.

In the past, the historic district of D. commanded the strategic northern approaches to the central highlands of Eritrea. Its location had in various historical periods made the area an important stopping point to the coast during the medieval times. The antiquity of human settlement in this district goes back to the 3rd cent. A.D. at the latest, when the first significant historical witness documenting the appurtenance of D. to the Aksumite sphere of influence, i.e. the Greek Aksumite inscription of king ↗Sembrouthes (RIÉ no. 275), is attested.

Earlier than the 15th cent., the inhabitants appear to have been descendants of ↗Agäw speakers who came from the region of ↗Lasta in north-central Ethiopia, during one of the various waves of Agäw migrations investing the region and giving origins to different ethnic groups (Conti Rossini 1916: 631f.), from the ↗Bilin to the north (probably once occupying also the D., from where they were expelled by a second Agäw wave) up to the ↗Adkämä Məlgaᵓ in the central Ḥamasen and ↗Säraye. The region of D. shares the characteristic distinction of its population in dominant and subordinate groups founded upon lineage, i.e. ↗šəmagälle (i.e. descendants from Agäw people) and ↗təgre – as it largely happens among the ↗Təgre-speakers, yet rarely among the ↗Təgrəñña speakers (Perini 1895: 236ff.).

The name of the region is likely to retain the word dämbä, dämba, 'enclosure where animals are kept durign the night' (KaneTDic 2064), present in Təgrəñña, but especially attested in areas where Agäw people settled (cp. Conti Rossini 1938: 791): this hypothesis could also lead to the explanation of D. as a composite term consisting of dämba, and zan 'elephant', the latter term being proper of the Agäw languages (ʒan-a*). The derived notion of 'king', and not the primitive of 'elephant', however, is probably used here (cp. KolTrad III, 57, 59). It is uncertain whether the name of ጅመጃን Ǧəmmäǧan also used for D. (LitPEA I, 287 [text], II, 344 [tr.]; Perini 1895: 236) has to be interpreted as a variant of D. or as an independent element plus the zan/žan element. Other connections are however possible, also independent Ethio-Semitic roots dnbz 'support, sustain' (and also dnbs 'wrap up, roll up') being attested (cp. Cohen et al. 1993: 278; LesCDic 136).

The genealogical traditions collected by Kolmodin assign an important place to D. as one of the main historical districts of Ḥamasen (KolTrad II, 242), and indicates in "Dəmbəzanoy son of Faluq" the eponymous key figure in the genealogy of one of the main branches of Ḥamasen people (ibid. I–II, no. 13), while another tradition credits the inhabitants of D. together with those of ↗Karnäššəm to be the descendants of the tribe of Levi (ibid. no. 32). The existence of a D. (with the title of ↗käntiba, a frequent one for the rulers of D.) early attested by oral traditions at the middle of the 14th cent. (ibid. III, xif.), i.e. at the most remote limit of the reliable oral tradition, is also found in written sources, which numbers among the ancestors of ↗Ḥazzäga an older Dəmbäzan "the cripple", son of Ankəzan, and a younger Dəmbäzan son of Šəmanəguś (ibid. 56f., 58 [text from the Golden Gospel of Ḥazzäga], 60 [tr.]; also ibid. I–II, nos. 5, 8, 13).

According to written traditions in the possession of the monastery of ↗Däbrä Bizän (cp.

Conti Rossini 1900: 164f.) and also published together with documents of the Mäṣḥafä ↗Aksum (CRAxum 23 [tx.], 26 [tr.], doc. no. 11) – yet from a special source which is indicated as "Eryth.", i.e. a manuscript copied by Conti Rossini himself in Eritrea and probably directly emanating from the archive of the monastery – D. was given as a personal and feudal irrevocable hereditary possession (↗rəst) to ↗Filəp̣p̣os of Däbrä Bizän by aṣe Dawit, whereas different rights over other lands were extended and renewed in the following time by aṣe Zärᵓa Yaᶜəqob, aṣe Ləbnä Dəngəl and aṣe Gälawdewos. In colonial times the rights of Däbrä Bizän on D. as well as over other areas were dismissed by the Italian authorities, and probably in this connection Conti Rossini (1916: 399f.) later maintained the scarce reliability of the documents on which Däbrä Bizän had based its claims in the past. It is uncertain whether "the two Dəmbaza" listed by the same Mäṣḥafä Aksum concerning tributes (CRAxum 8 [tr.], 8 [tx.], doc. no. 3) can be related to D. So uncertain is the identification with D. of the hereditary property and feudal rights of "Debezanà" owned by "Endoninàs del Takalà" (Conti Rossini 1916: 409f.).

During the 18th cent., the district witnessed fierce rivalry and feud between the various descent groups. Italian colonial rule and the construction of the Asmära-Käräan road in the 1920s made ᶜAd Täkälezan the commercial centre for the surrounding region. During the 1970s, the ↗Eritrean People's Liberation Front had used the district as a garrison against the armies of the Därg (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council). At present, the area of D. is inhabited mostly by Təgrəñña speakers who make a living in agriculture, livestock herding and commercial activity. They are Christians (Orthodox Täwaḥədo, Protestants and Catholics), with a significant Muslim minority.

The district is also known to have produced its own ↗customary law (ḥəggi, cp. ↗Law: traditional law books) which for centuries was transmitted orally but was put into writing in Təgrəñña only during the 19th cent. It was valid throughout the Italian and British colonial periods and attempts to change this traditional form of justice was not made until after the federation of Eritrea and Ethiopia in 1952 and the annexation of the former by the latter in 1962. Ḥəggi Dämbäzan reflects the factual or legendary descent of the people of this district from a common ancestor (Dämbäzanoy, s. above) and their adoption of the customary law as binding. The law deals with disputes about land tenure, criminal offences, marriage and divorce, dowry and bride wealth, inheritance, blood feud, domestic violence, altercations, adultery, rape, procedure in litigation, etc. The statute was revised and modified at regular intervals and put to the scrutiny of elders' knowledge of legal customs in order to ascertain the continuation of the traditions and pay attention to the needs of communities. The various aspects of the customary law and the information they carried are arranged in short, numbered paragraphs, each bearing a title and thus greatly facilitating access to individual topics. Today ḥəggi Dämbäzan still continues to serve as a frame of reference for the administration of justice among its adherents.

Debné

The ↗ᶜAfar name D. designates (1) a dry-bed river of the upper basin of the Saday, to the North of ↗Obock and (2) an ethnic (sub-)unit which began its migration from that river toward the ↗Gōbaᶜád plain to the south-west and further, toward the Ethiopian escarpment up to the confluence of the ↗Awaš and ↗Käsäm rivers.

Mount Ḥarká near the River D. is the eponymous name of the senior D. lineage, the Ḥarkám mēla ('the people of Ḥarká') and its leading lineage, the Arbāhinto. The direction followed by the D. led by Ulēl Abūsa Arbāhim (ca. at the beginning of the 17th cent.) and the chronology of their migration (s. above) which began in the 16th cent. are known thanks to oral memory based on genealogies. The word mēla ('people') is an indication of the heterogeneity of the warriors who gathered under Ulēl Abūsa Arbāhim, along with other peoples from the Wēᶜima area: Adᶜali, Ḥaysamāle, Rukbak Đer mēla and ᶜAblé. Even as late as the middle of the 18th cent., these tribes tried to invade the Áwsa (↗Awsa) oasis, but they were defeated by the ↗Mōdaytó.

Until today the five groups already mentioned maintain their political alliance known as the Debnek Wēᶜima coalition, whose members settled to the south and west of Áwsa. This coalition included the Gibdōso on the middle-Awaš, the Takᶜil and Ḥasōba of Kurbili, the ᶜAblé and Ḥaysamāle around Erer, and the Daḥrumá of Mullu. The Badoytammēla who also originated from the Obock region were not part of the alliance. From a customary point of view, the D. judicial authority encompassed the Ayrolassó, Garaysá, Maᶜanḍiyta, Basōmá, Songog Godá and Mafā groups some of whom stayed in what is now the Republic of ↗Djibouti. A difference must be made between the political and judiciary role of the D. From a political point of view, weakened by the wars seeking to conquer Áwsa, the D. had to withdraw from the Eastern part of the Gōbaᶜád and from the outskirts of Zaylaᶜ, leaving this region to the Somali ↗ᶜIssa who were their pastoralists (HarAeth 151) or part of the sultan's guard (Soleillet 1866: 58). The first indication of a conflict with them occurred in the year 1866. The simultaneous offensive of the ᶜIssa and of the Mōdaytó of Áwsa resulted in the splitting of the D. into two: those at the Awaš-Käsäm confluence and those of the Gōbaᶜád. There, the main sub-groups which settled with the Ḥarkammēlá were the Ayrolassó, Ankáli, Garaysá and Mafā lineages.

The power of the D. was always based more on the personal capacity of their leaders than on birth. As the historic leaders of the coalition, the abba ('father') or sultan was always chosen among the D. Arbāhintó. The first to bear this title is Arbāhim b. Ḥamad "Surus", ca. 1770. But due to their followers' heterogeneity, this "fatherhood" never led to a structured sultanate as in the cases of Tağūra and Raḥayto. Rather, it depended on a complex equilibrium as summarized in the saying: Wēᶜima madᶜa leh, Debne ḍinto leh ('the Wēᶜima apply the law strictly, the D. have the sense of compromise').

Here, information about the rules of the devolution of power, tax-payments or the alleged fixed residence of the "sultan" in the date-grove of Dikhil given in EAE vol. 2 (article "Gōbaᶜád") must be corrected. The various sub-groups under D. political leadership always lived on their own and did not pay any fixed tribute. The "sultan" had no fixed residence, a fortiori in the little date-grove of Dikhil where, prior to the creation of the French military post in 1928, there was no permanent well. The "sultan" Ḥummad b. Loᶜoyta (b. 1830, sultan in 1864) stayed in various places, finally in Lokmōna near Dorra where he died (17 October 1902). Personal ability as well as the strategic geographic location of the D. explains the diplomatic influence gained by some Debnek Wēᶜima elders during the colonial period and their geographic mobility. The road followed by Rochet d'Héricourt during his two journeys to Šäwa was secured by various Debnek Wēᶜima chiefs, starting with the D. abba Loᶜoyta b. Arbāhim (Ḥummad b. Loᶜoyta's father), who came into power ca. 1830 and who guided the French traveller on his way to Šäwa in 1839; Ibrāhim b. Ḥammádu of the Ḥaysamāle group; he met Waᶜays b. Ḥagayó in Ḥasanɖēra, whose son, Bitᶜa was to sign the "Déclaration de protectorat faite par le cheikh des cheikhs de Erer" with ↗Lagarde on 2 September 1890.

Depui, Laurent Marcel Alphonse

Lieutenant-General D. (b. 5 February 1878, Besançon, d. 18 September 1947 Wād Sāḥil, Tunisia) was soldier, diplomat and administrator in the service of the French colonial administration in the Horn of Africa.

D. was the son of a lance corporal and voluntarily entered the French army at the age of 18 and went to Madagascar in 1899. He was introduced to ↗freemasonry in 1904 when he assumed the position of second lieutenant. During his life, he founded four Masonic lodges under the allegiance of the Grande Loge de France. In 1911, he was posted to the Brigade Indigène de la Côte Française des Somalis (↗Djibouti) He was in charge of recruitment of soldiers and drew a map of the territory. During this time he also wrote the first dictionary of Djibouti-Arabic (1912) and he converted to Islam occasionally assuming the name Chérif Ibrahim Debaoui. After he had led a geographical mission to Ethiopia from March to June 1914, he became the main intelligence agent of the French government in Ethiopia and in the Horn of Africa until 1918. He collected information about the ruling elite of the country and its political context in his unpublished Journal de Mission officielle en Ethiopie (Somaliland). During spring of 1916, he was in charge of the 2nd and soon afterwards of the 1st Somali battalion. As its captain, D. led this battalion during the Battle of Verdun in France.

From 6 to 25 February 1917, he was in Ethiopia together with the governor of Djibouti to attend the coronation of Empress ↗Zäwditu. During that time, he stayed in the house of ras Täfäri (later aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I) whom he had met before in ↗Harär.

Eventually, D. was in charge of recruiting soldiers in the Horn of Africa but he was finally appointed instructor at the French military mission in the Ḥiǧāz (today western Saudi Arabia) in April 1917. He was promoted to the rank of commander of the column of the amīr ᶜAlī near the town of Medina to help the Arab revolt. It seems that he did not return to Ethiopia. After the mission was dispersed, he joined the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs being appointed to the Consulate at Jeddah. D. was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-general in 1931, and he retired three years after and later died in Tunisia where he lived as Chérif Ibrahim Debaoui.

Dərmən and P̣awlos

Däǧǧazmač D. (ድርምን; d. 13 October 1708) and däǧǧazmač P̣. (ጳውሎስ; d. 13 October 1708) were brothers of ↗Mäläkotawit, one of aṣe ↗Iyasu I's concubines and the mother of aṣe ↗Täklä Haymanot I. Both were intimately involved in planning and carrying out the murder of Iyasu in October 1706.

In March 1706, the court nobles deposed Iyasu and crowned Täklä Haymanot. Iyasu withdrew into exile to the island of ↗Däq in Lake ↗Ṭana. The nobles feared, however, that Iyasu's supporters in ↗Damot and ↗Goǧǧam might attempt to rescue him and restore him to the throne (as they did). D. and P̣. doubtless participated in these events in ↗Gondär, but they are first mentioned as members of a delegation the court sent in July that persuaded Iyasu to leave Däq island where he resided and go to Č̣əqla Mänzo on Lake Ṭana's eastern shore.

They were ringleaders in a second court-appointed delegation in early October charged with persuading Iyasu to retreat to ↗Wähni Amba, obviously to isolate him from his allies from Damot and Goǧǧam, or with murdering him. When Iyasu adamantly refused to leave Č̣əqla Mänzo, D. and Ṗ., aided by riflemen and Oromo soldiers in the delegation, swiftly dispatched him. D. speared Iyasu, the riflemen shot him, and the conspirators attempted (but failed) to burn Iyasu's body before fleeing. This episode is found in the Sənkəssar manuscript BritLibOrient. 660 (s. BudSaint I, LXXVIII). It is a frequent feature in illuminated manuscripts.

Shortly thereafter, Täklä Haymanot appointed D. däǧǧazmač and governor of Goǧǧam; Ṗ. was made däǧǧazmač of Bägemdər. Later D. used fire and sword to crush a rebellion in Goǧǧam and districts south of Lake Ṭana in 1707.

Under aṣe ↗Tewoflos, the regicides were condemned to death. Ṗ. was fetched from his asylum in the church of ↗Qʷäraṣa. On October 13, 1708, the second anniversary of Iyasu's murder, Mäläkotawit and Ṗ. were hanged, D. and the murderer of Täklä Haymanot were speared to death, the remaining conspirators were shot and speared, and their bodies left for wild animals (DombrChr 250; Bosc-Tiessé 2008: 185).

Dərsanä Ṣəyon

D.Ṣ. (ድርሳነ ፡ ጽዮን, 'Homily [in honour] of ↗Zion') is the title of a Gəᶜəz text mainly devoted to the glorification of the ↗Ark of the Covenant and St. ↗Mary.

In manuscripts, the D.Ṣ. often appears together with the ↗Kəbrä nägäśt, placed before the latter text in a series of composite manuscripts (e.g., "D.Ṣ." ms. from Aksum Ṣəyon [ᶜ*əqa bet* of the ənda ṣəllat 'Ark chapel'], 1925 A.M. [1932/33 A.D.], fols. 1r–15v; from Ǝnṭoṭṭo Maryam, 20th cent., fols. 1r–24v) as well as in the ms. from Ṭana Qirqos used for the 2005 printed edition (pp. 1–28). In multiple manuscripts, it is placed after the Kəbrä nägäśt (ms. NL 630, 1977 A.M., fols. 44r–59v) or included in the ↗Dərsanä Maryam homiliary (e.g., ms. EMML no. 8979, Šəme Maryam, 1884 A.M., fols. 137r–146r; ms. EMML no. 8713, Ṭana Qirqos, 18th cent., fols. 1r–8v; ms. Ṭānāsee 72, 16th cent., fols. 25r–42v [HamTana 77f.: here 18th cent.]). Sometimes, the D.Ṣ. can also be transmitted as an independent text (e.g., ms. NL 273, 15th cent., 39 fols., ms. EMML no 8823, Bäbbäks Däbrä Gännät, 19th cent., 20 fols.; ms. EMML no. 8429, Kota Maryam, 17th cent., 18 fols.). The miscellaneous manuscripts containing the D.Ṣ. frequently also contain such texts as the Zena Ṣəyon (ms. NL 630, fols. 59v–67r; EMML no. 8429, fols. 18r–21v), Täʾammərä Ṣəyon (ms. EMML no. 8823, fols. 20v–30r; printed 2005: 265–80) and Mälkəʾa Ṣəyon (printed 2005: 281–86). A critical edition (with an English translation) has been recently produced (Amsalu Tefera 2011).

The content closely depends on the narration of the Kəbrä nägäśt and locates the Ark of the Covenant at the Aksum Ṣəyon cathedral, whereas Zion is used as a metaphor for the Virgin Mary. The text provides no information on the date or the author of the composition; the composer is referred to as ኖላዌ ፡ አባግዕ ፡ ወአጣሊ (nolawe abagəᶜ wäʾaṭale 'shepherd of sheep and goats'; D.Ṣ. § 99). It seems plausible that the D.Ṣ. was composed after the Kəbrä nägäśt, sometime in the 15th cent.

The D.Ṣ. is read during the celebration of Maryam Ṣəyon on 21 Ḫədar (= 30 November or 1 December; ↗Feasts), the day on which the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox (Täwaḥədo) Church (EOTC) celebrates the arrival of the Ark of the Covenant in Ethiopia (cp. Amsalu Tefera 2011, § 136; HamTana 78; LesCDic 288; Ermyas Käbbädä Wäldä Yäsus 2004/05: 364; Munro-Hay 2006: 233 n. 34; Mahler 2007). Formerly the priest read the D.Ṣ. inside the mäqdäs; today the priest (or anyone devoted to Zion) reads it every morning, standing barefoot under a dəbab in front of the ənda ṣəllat. After the reading, laymen may kiss the manuscript to receive the blessing. The D.Ṣ. is believed to help infertile women to bear fruit if they make a vow in front of the Ark (implying St. Mary) while carrying the D.Ṣ.

In the list of the books of the Holy Bible and church service books prepared by the EOTC Holy Synod (1982/83: 175) D.Ṣ. is classified under historical books (cp. Mängəśtu Gobäze 2010: 32).

Dobbelaar, Leonardus

Bishop D. (b. 4 May 1942, Hulst, the Netherlands, d. 20 March 2008, Addis Abäba) was a Catholic missionary. He joined the Congregation for the Missions (Vincentian Fathers; ↗Lazarists) on 7 September 1962 and was ordained priest on 20 July 1969. He studied at the Pontifical Oriental Institute in Rome from 1968 to 1971 and soon after left for Ethiopia as a missionary.

D.'s first appointment in Ethiopia was the parish of Sappa Maryam and its out-stations in the prefecture of Ǧimma-Bonga. In 1978, together with his fellow Dutch missionaries, he was expelled from the Ǧimma-Bonga area by Täsämma Bälay, a 'henchman' of the communist regime of the time (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council). From that time on, he worked for many years as director of the seminarians of his congregation and as professor at St. Francis' Joint Studium (today Capuchin Franciscan Institute of Philosophy and Theology) in Addis Abäba.

D. served as Major Superior of the Lazarists in Ethiopia from 1984 to 1994. He succeeded bishop Fəqrä Maryam Gämmäčču when, on 2 July 1994, Pope John Paul II appointed him Vicar Apostolic of ↗Naqamtee.

D. had a good command of the Amharic language. He was actively engaged in several offices: director of seminarians, professor at the Theological Institute, bishop and member of the Ethiopian Episcopal Conference. He denounced the practice of female ↗circumcision and was also a vocal opponent of the Ethiopian Gəʿəz Rite, which he considered alien to non-Semitic-speaking Ethiopians. He protested to the Holy See about the teaching of Gəʿəz language and liturgy at St. Francis' Joint Studium to seminarians of Southern Ethiopia.

Drewes, Abraham Johannes

D. (b. 18 July 1927, Batavia [now Jakarta, Indonesia], d. 19 October 2007, Noordwijk) was a prominent Dutch Semitist with a focus on ↗Ethiopian studies.

On leaving the Leiden Municipal Grammar School in 1945, D. studied Arabic and Hebrew at Leiden University and ↗Epigraphic South Arabian with Gonzague Ryckmans (Louvain). In 1952-53 D. studied at Oxford with H.A.R. Gibb, Alfred Beeston and Chaim Rabin. He graduated in 1953.

From 1954 to 1957, D. conducted epigraphic research in Ethiopia, in the service of the French Archaeological Mission. He also studied

↗Amharic and ↗Səlṭi and explored local Islamic ↗manuscript traditions in Harär.

D. returned to the Netherlands in 1957. After several months as doctoral assistant in Leiden, he became teacher-researcher at the Arabic language department of Utrecht University. After the completion of his doctoral thesis (1962, Inscriptions de l'Éthiopie antique), his position was converted into a lectorate.

In 1962–63, D. spent a sabbatical year in Los Angeles, learning from Wolf ↗Leslau and Gustave von Grünebaum. Between 1964 and 1974, D. regularly travelled to Ethiopia, collecting data on Ethiopian epigraphy, the Səlṭi language and Harari manuscripts.

In 1968 D. became Professor of Comparative Linguistics and South Semitic at the University of Leiden. He taught courses in Arabic, Amharic, Gə^{c}əz, Historical Linguistics, Arabic Linguistics, Ancient South Arabian Epigraphy, North Arabian Epigraphy, Ethiopian Epigraphy, Səlṭi and Maltese.

In the late 1960s, D. started his collaboration with Roger ↗Schneider on the corpus of Ethiopian ↗inscriptions (s., e.g., Drewes – Schneider 1967; 1970; 1972). Its main result was the Recueil des inscriptions de l'Éthiopie des périodes pré-axoumite et axoumite (RIÉ I–II; a volume with D.'s own translations and commentaries remained unfinished). In 1978 D. married his wife Liza.

After D. retired in 1992, he dedicated most of his time to Ethiopian epigraphy, trying to finalize the missing RIÉ volumes. He also worked on the Səlṭi material that he had collected. In 1993, the Oosters Instituut acquired a collection of Pre-Islamic South Arabian sticks, and D., with Jacques Ryckmans (Louvain, d. 2005), took up the challenge of transcribing the inscriptions. His last published article (2007) is devoted to linguistic and textual aspects of Islam in Ethiopia.

D. wrote with great precision and sharp analytical skill and his publications are extremely valuable.

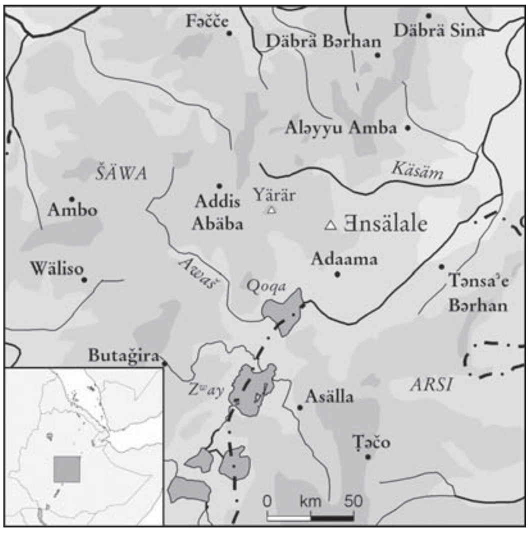
E

Ənsälale

Ǝ. (እንሰላሌ, also Ənsəlale) is a village and an archaeological site in the former ↗Šäwa province (today, East Šäwa zone, Oromiyyaa region), situated in Gimbičču wäräda, 12 km east of Mount Bokan (2,621 m A.S.L., 8° 88' 75 N, 39° 26' 77 E). Together with sites such as ↗Yärär, ↗Zəqʷala, ↗Adadi Maryam etc., it may belong to a small group of ancient churches in southern Ethiopia. The site can probably be dated to the 14th–15th cent. It is not to be confused with a place of the same name in ↗Damot.

The ruins of Ǝ. were completely covered with earth before locals rediscovered the site. The site was professionally recorded in 1964 by the French Archaeological Mission of Francis Anfray. They excavated the foundations of a rectangular building (outer diameter: 11.70 m^2; inside dimension: 9.30 m x 7.90 m) with thick walls, a stone paved floor and stone bases of four columns inside. Poorly preserved stairs on the north-western side indicate the former entrance. Mortar was not used. Traces of charred wood indicate that the building was destroyed by fire.

In the centre of the building, 2.70 m deep into the foundations, a grave with a plastered stone coffer and human bones was excavated. The building was originally surrounded by a court partially paved with stones and a fence.



Peculiar to the site are the geometrical decorations engraved into the relatively soft volcanic stone material, crosses, rosettes, and braided decorative trims. In motif and style they resemble Islamic (especially Mamluk Egyptian), Coptic or Byzantine relief ornaments. Characteristic is the rosette with eight leaves, similar to those occurring in the Betä Maryam church of ↗Lalibäla. These decorated pieces, which were collected by locals near the entrance, were probably part of the door frame.

A number of broken fragments of red and black ware (↗pottery) were found (pieces of plates, bowls, jugs, goblets, handles and cones). They are decorated with pairs of horizontal borders and geometric forms. However, the good state of the glaze may suggest that the pottery is much younger than the building itself. Other objects found are fragments of glass and a Chinese porcelain cup, an iron hammer, iron hooks and two little golden plaques.

Euprepius

E. (ca. 514–30, in Gəᶜəz known as ኣጳራጳ […], ʾApärapä […], in Syr. ʾ*wprp* and ʾ*wprpys*, probably Greek Εὐπρέπιος) was the metropolitan bishop of ↗Aksum in the years of king ↗Kaleb’s expedition(s) to South Arabia. In secondary literature he is also erroneously interpreted as Eupremius, Eutropius and Eutrepius (cp. MHAlex I, 81, n. 217).

E. played an important role as the main destinee, with king Kaleb, of one or more petitions issued by the Christians persecuted in South Arabia, requesting the intervention of the Aksumites. Three sources, all of them connected with the hagiographic cycle of the persecution in ↗Ḥimyar and ↗Nağrān, but not necessarily independent, witness to the existence of E.:

1) the Book of the Himyarites reports (index of chs. 39–40) that a certain Umayyah (ʾwmyh) informed E. and king Kaleb of the persecution conducted by the Jewish king Masrūq against the church in Ḥimyar; E. is then quoted (ch. 48) in the speech held by Kaleb after his victory, concerning the reconciliation of those who had denied their faith;

2) the Second Letter of Simeon of Beṯ Aršām quotes E. "bishop of the Cushites", as the destinee of a petition, together with king Kaleb, by the author of the Second Letter himself;

3) further evidence is provided by a new, recently discovered Ethiopic version of the Martyrium of ↗Arethas, attested to in a manuscript preserved in a church at Lake ↗Zʷay (cp. Yohannes Gebre Sellasie 2009; Bausi 2010; Marrassini 2011; the text had been briefly hinted at by SerHist 127): E. is mentioned here as the metropolitan bishop of Aksum at the time of Kaleb "king of Aksum […] in the fifth year of the reign of Yosṭenos, king of Rome […] in the 251st year of Diocletian and in the 835th year of Alexander", i.e. 523 A.D. The name is given as ʾApäräpä […], unfortunately mutilated at the end, but certainly the same E. as in the Syriac sources (the name is attested in 6th-cent. Christian Egypt, cp. BrakKirche 87). The new version of the Martyrium, though claiming to have been translated from the Greek, certainly derives from an Arabic Vorlage: nevertheless the name of E. in Gəʿəz does not suggest that it passed through Arabic, and probably implies the use of other sources and a more complex explanation.

F

Fadasi

The term F. (fa-daši, 'people of cold water') refers to a sub-group of the ↗Berta as well as to an old gold-bearing region west of the River ↗Dabus, south of ↗Asosa, in today's regional state of ↗Beni Šangul-Gumuz. The name has been used by various travellers for the main market of F. at Gogora (today Šobora), and is also variously identified with the old market of Bambeši, today's Bambasi (cp. James et al. 1996: 33). Bambasi is the administrative centre of a wäräda of the same name in the Asosa zone of Beni Šangul-Gumuz kəlləl.

F. lay on an important trade route between ↗Sinnār, ↗Fazoġli (s. EAE vol. 5) and the region of the ↗Oromo, bordering ↗Gidaamii and Mendi, respectively. Its main market was situated at the foot of the Gogora mountains (Gessi 1892: 165). Schuver (James et al. 1996: 31), in the 1880s, noted that F. is not the name of a village but a district, under the administration of a makdum (mugaddam, i.e. a district administrator) appointed by "the great Sheikh of Gomosha" (cp. Ḫʷomoša, Komosha). The administrator of F. though, "resides at Gorgura" (Schuver, ibid.).

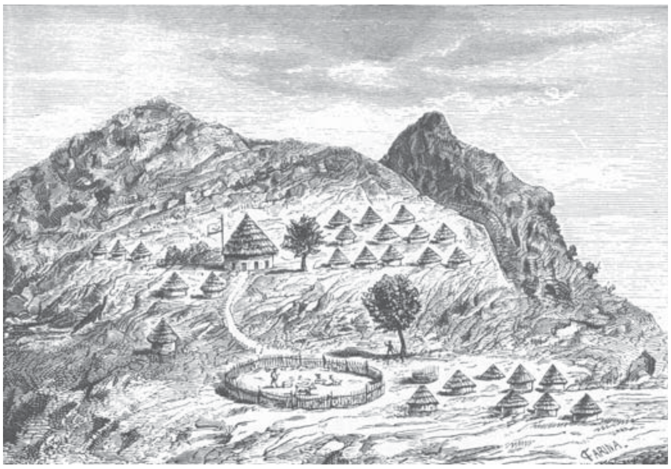
F. was the southernmost outpost of a wider network of markets which connected the Sinnār region with ↗Wälläga. These centres were attended by Sudanese Arab traders, who traded with local merchants and exchanged goods, especially ↗salt, with the Oromo for "oxen, iron and honey" (Gessi 1892: 166; cp. also Triulzi 1981: 80, 126). The trade was taxed by the ruler of F.

The Arab merchants (ǧallābā) arriving towards the end of the 19th cent. stayed in the region as traders and preachers (fāqī) and mixed with the local population. They established a ruling class known as ↗Waṭāwīt and gradually took over power from the former ruling elite, the so-called ǧäbalawīn, descendants of the ↗Funǧ aristocracy, that had earlier intermarried with the local Berta population.

Thus F. became one of the four important Waṭāwīt sheikdoms, next to Asosa, Ḫʷomoša and Bela Šangul (Beni Šangul). Local tradition holds that the dynasty of F. goes back to an-Nūr, a Sudanese of Rubāṭāb (Ǧaʿalīn) descent (for the genealogy of the ǧäbalawīn as opposed to the Waṭāwīt rulers of F., s. Triulzi 1981: 121).

Early accounts of F. go back to the geologist Russegger (1844: 539ff.), who gathered information about the gold deposits of the region. Other European reports of F. are from the Austrian traveller Ernst Marno from the 1870s. He was followed by Romolo Gessi and Pellegrino ↗Matteucci coming to assist the ↗Antinori expedition (s. EAE vol. 5) in ↗Käfa via Bela Šangul. Marno had travelled from Famaka to Bela Šangul in the company of šayḫ Ḫʷağalī Adam (not to be mistaken with the later ruler of Asosa, šayḫ ↗Ḫʷağalī al-Ḥasan).

During this time, F. was exposed to various threats. While Ḫʷomoša and Bela Šangul were tributaries of the Ottoman-Egyptian Sudan, F. due to its remote position rejected these claims. Marno (1874: 99), however, notes that F. had been annexed by Egyptian troops in 1873, but Gessi (1892: 166ff.) mentions that šayḫ Ḥasan of F. had made an agreement with the surrounding Oromo "not to let any Turk pass into the territory". However, the trade caravans of the Oromo were under continuous threat of ambush from the local "Amam" (cp. ↗Mao, ↗Kwama) (ibid.).



Drawing showing Fadasi, probably at the foothill of the Abbaa Mooti, from Gessi 1892: 164

In addition to these external threats, Maḥmūd of Ḫʷomoša and Ḫʷağalī of Bela Šangul lay claim to F. and in order to end a blood feud between the two, Ḥasan married one of his sisters to Ḫʷağalī (Marno 1874: 70, 84).

During the time of the ↗Mahdīya, the call for a ğihād was followed only by a few Waṭāwīt rulers. One of them was Muḥammad al-Ḥasan of F. (today mostly referred to by his horse name "Abbaa Mooti"). He probably hoped for new alliances and to release F. from the shadow of the stronger Waṭāwīt sheikdoms. The ğihād was stopped by the joint resistance of ras ↗Gobäna Dači and ↗Ǧootee Tulluu of Gidaamii (cp. Triulzi 1981: 149ff.), but Abbaa Mooti strengthened his position in the region under the remaining Mahdīya.

After the end of the Mahdīya and before the region was annexed under aṣe ↗Mənilək II, there was constant fighting for supremacy among the Waṭāwīt rulers. Power shifted after the annexation of the region and led to a gradual but steady consolidation of power over the whole region under šayḫ Ḫʷağalī al-Ḥasan. As a semi-autonomous ruler, tributary to Addis Abäba, Ḫʷağalī, managed to sustain the demand for ↗gold, ↗slaves, ↗coffee and ↗ivory by gradually reducing F. and the other centres to his tributaries.

Oral tradition of F. is today largely alive in the town of Bambasi. Local tradition has it that the name Bambasi refers to a "Mao" ruler, Bambaše, which points to the ethnic mix of pre-Arab Berta and Mao societies, that lived in the region. It is interesting to note that the legend of the "wise men" (i.e. Muslim merchants and preachers who settled among the Berta; cp. Triulzi 1981: 103–08) is today adopted by the Mao, while the Berta of Bambasi claim purity of Arab descent. Today the local Berta population prefers the name fadaši. Also a considerable number of Omotic-speaking Mao (cp. ↗Mao of Bambasi) live in the wäräda.

Farago, Ladislas

F. (birth name Faragó László; b. 21 September 1906, Csurgó, Hungary; d. 15 October 1980, Southbury, CT) was a Hungarian journalist.

Born to a Jewish family he studied at the Academy of Commerce and Consular Affairs in Budapest. From the early 1930s he lived in Germany and later in London. He retained his Hungarian citizenship until 1938, working for several newspapers and news agencies (e.g., Berliner Zeitung, New York Times, Sunday Chronicle, Associated Press [AP], etc.).

In 1935 F. was sent to Ethiopia by the AP as a war correspondent during the ↗Italian-Ethiopian war of 1935–36. The book he wrote during that time (Farago 1935) did not cover the war but became a major source on pre-

Portrait of Ladislas Farago from the Hungarian newspaper Az Est, vol. 26, 222 (29 September 1935); from the collection of the author war Ethiopia. During his stay in Ethiopia he befriended various influential members of the imperial family (e.g., ras ↗Kaśa Ḫaylu) and was decorated by aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I. According to Román (1935) his father was offered the title of honorary Ethiopian consul in Hungary, but he did not accept it.

In 1936 F. went again to Ethiopia, crossing the Sudan border illegally. He tried to reach the frontline, but an attack of malaria made him to return from Dabdo. In the same year he published a compilation of several authors including himself, which was "torn apart" in Sylvia ↗Pankhurst's ↗New Times and Ethiopia News. However, F. contributed articles to the same newspaper later.

In 1938 F. settled in the U.S. where he worked at several army and government offices while continuing to work as a journalist. After World War II he published books mainly on military espionage.

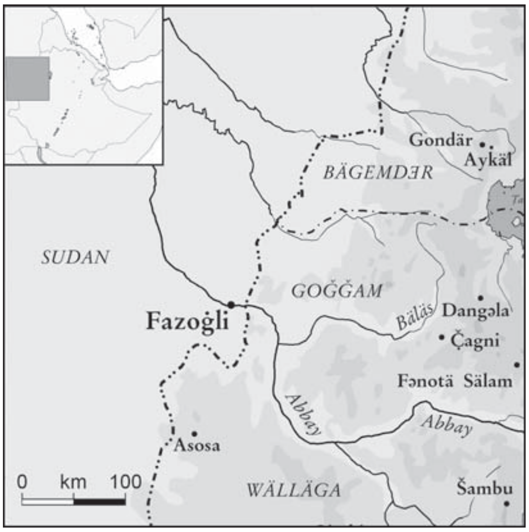
Fazoġli

F. (also Fazokl, Fazoqli, Fazuġli; in Amh. sources: ፋዙቍሎ, 'Fazuqulo' or ፋዝቆሎ, 'Fazqolo'; Arab. فازوغلي) was an important centre of trade, and ↗gold from F. was traded in the ↗Red Sea and the Nile Valley. F. belonged to a wider network of the trade centres together with Bela Šangul (cp. ↗Beni Šangul), ↗Funǧ and ↗Wälläga, providing gold via the Ethiopian heartland to the Red Sea, probably since Aksumite times (s. below).

F. has been a place of attraction for various travellers in the Sudan and western Ethiopia. The first mention apparently goes back to Luis de Azevedo who, in 1607, mentions "a kingdom of ፋዝቆሎ ['Fazqolo'], with much fine gold and horses exchanging trade with the [Ethiopian] empire" (Triulzi 1981:58). The place of "Sasu" mentioned by ↗Cosmas Indicopleustes (McCrindle 1897:52f.; PankBord 29f.; Wolska-Conus 1968:362) has been identified with F. and has led to scholarly speculation about Aksumite gold trade with F. (Wainwright 1942; SerHist 232; for discussion s. also Triulzi 1981:58ff.). It is suggested that the local ↗Berta of F. (intermarried with Sudanese Arabs and part of the Funǧ aristocracy of F.) might have traded gold with the ↗Agäw of ↗Goǧǧam who served as intermediaries for the Aksumite king. Cosmas describes how the gold (called tancharas) was exchanged between local traders ("dump barter trade"; cp. Triulzi 1981:60) against meat and salt. Support for this thesis comes from Arkell (1944:31) who assumes that tancharas might go back to the Berta word sančaru, which "is the name of the ground-bean [...] resembling impurities in a nugget of gold; and it may at an earlier period have been used as a standard weight [...]".



Securing and regulating the gold trade of F. seems to offer an element of continuity in the history of the region which was part of the kingdoms of ↗Napata, ↗Meroë and later the Funǧ. During the early 16th cent., F. may have been associated with the province of ↗Damot (cp. CrawItin 80); on the map ↗Egyptus Novelo under the term Damot is written the word aur(um), 'gold' (ibid.; Triulzi 1981:60). The Jesuit ↗Paez mentions F. for the "best gold to be found in the whole of Ethiopia" (ibid.); the court of ↗Gondär is known for its raids for gold against F. (ibid.:61), but peaceful trade-relations were also maintained (PankBord 372).

In the late 17th cent. F. became the southernmost, semi-autonomous, outpost of the Funǧ kingdom of the ↗Sinnār confederation. The kings of F. held the title of mek (also manǧīl cp. Disney 1945: 39) and were tributaries to Sinnār (for a list of F.'s meks s. Budge 1907: 205). With the incorporation of Sinnār into the Ottoman-Egyptian Sudan in 1821, it was also the gold of F., as well as the local ↗slave trade, that ↗Muḥammad ᶜAli sought to control. When Ernst Marno visited the region in the 1870s, towards the end of the Turkiyya, F. had lost its power and the mek of F. had been reduced to the role of a "village headman" (Marno 1874: 42); thus it seems that F. had lost its independence and importance. Little is known about F.'s actual administration either before the Turkiyya and after. Despite this, one may assume some historical importance for F. until the 20th cent., since, in 1944, Disney attended the coronation of the last Funǧ mek at F., describing F. as "the traditional headquarter of one of the lesser principalities of the Fung empire" (Disney 1945: 37).

Today only the existence of Ǧäbäl F. ('Mount F.'), south of the Roseires reservoir, points to the earlier location of F.

Fəkkare mäläkot

The F.m. (Gəᶜəz ፍካሬ ፡ መለኮት, 'Interpretation of the Godhead') is the most important writing, and one of the very few that survived, attributed in the past to the so-called Zämikaʾelite heresy (↗Zämikaʾelites). It is a high level theological treatise with an inspired tone and a remarkable literary and linguistic complexity.

The F.m. deals with the weakness of human understanding regarding the mystery of the Godhead, and of the ↗Trinity in particular. The author demonstrates his thesis by examining biblical passages – the literal interpretation of which is strongly denied, and thus being at variance with the traditional theological positions of the Ethiopian Church (as maintained at least since the time of aṣe ↗Zärʾa Yaᶜəqob) – and claiming numerous instances of patristic corroboration (↗John Chrysostom, ↗Epiphanios of Salamis, ↗Gregory of Nyssa, ↗Athanasius, Shenoute the Alexandrian patriarch, the Nicaene Fathers, Cyriacus of Behnesa, ↗Basil the Great), which are mostly taken from the ↗Haymanotä abäw.

The F.m. is transmitted in the codex unicus ms. BN Éth. 119 (ZotBNat 141), fols. 1r–25r, an early 17th-cent. manuscript brought to Paris via Cairo, Jerusalem and Rome, by the Catholic and alleged pretender to the Ethiopian throne, ↗Ṣägga Krəstos (s. EAE vol. 5). The manuscript was later kept in the library of Jean-Baptiste Colbert and was also known to ↗Ludolf, who left a handwritten description of it. The F.m. together with the three other treatises contained in the manuscript was published by Enrico ↗Cerulli (1958): F.m. 1–63 (text) = 65–152 (tr.); the Ḥamärä näfs ('The ship of the soul', fols. 25ra–36ra), ibid. 153–89 (text) = 191–213 (tr.); the Märs amin ('The safe haven' or 'The haven of the faith', as proposed by Piovanelli 2004: 196, fols. 36r–48vb), Cerulli 1958: 233–69 (text) = 271–314 (tr.); and the Śäwänä näfs ('Refuge of the soul', fols. 49r–58vb), Cerulli 1960: 103–17 (text) = 119–35 (tr.).

Concerning the incapacity of the rational human mind to understand the mystery of divine nature (implying a sort of general pessimism on the human condition) Cerulli saw themes and motifs proper to Late Antique gnosticism and Manichaeism (s. also CerLett 144–50; ↗Christology). These ideas, which had already surfaced as the Zämikaʾelite heresy in the 15th cent. during the period of the theological controversies under Zärʾa Yaᶜəqob (cp. CerMaria 112–21), must have been taken up again by an heretic group in the turbulent cultural climate of the new controversies caused by the arrival of the ↗Jesuits, from the second half of the 16th to the early decades of the 17th cent.

Cerulli's largely accepted hypothesis has recently been challenged by Piovanelli (2004) on the grounds of a sound and fresh re-examination of the evidence. The theses of the F.m., far from being implicit in or inspired by gnostic or Manichaean thought, are easily traced back to theological positions well known in the Christian tradition and a theme often found in medieval Christian Arabic theological elaboration. The interpretation of biblical passages in chs. 2–5 of the F.m. – with a refutation of the literal interpretation of Gen 3:22, 1:27 (as well as of Ps 102 [101]:26, Mt 5:34f., Ex 33:20, 1 Jn 4:12, Jn 1:18, Mt 11:27), Gen 1:26 (and Ex 15:11), and of Gen 18, Ex 3:2, Dan 2:34–35:45 – would simply serve to maintain the doctrine of the unknowability of God and of the necessity of an allegoric interpretation of the Scriptures in an anti-anthropomorphic sense. Like other treatises contained in the same manuscript as the F.m., the Ṣäwänä näfs in particular (ed., tr. also by Ludolf 1691: 493–508; Leslau 1964) – an epistle written in Təgray and sent to aṣe ↗Susənyos as early as the early 1620s and also known in Portuguese, Spanish and Italian abridged versions (cp. Pennec 2000, 2003: 297–306, 321–24; Piovanelli 2004: 216, n. 74) – the F.m. would be the work of an Ethiopian monastic milieu of strict Orthodox monophysite observance (↗Monophysitism). The Orthodox authors of the F.m. and of the other treatises were not followers of the Zämikaʾelite dissidents of the 15th cent. – who, indeed, never were an institutionalized movement; they simply attempted on the one hand to revitalize traditional and conservative attitudes of general Christian and Alexandrian ascendance, and on the other hand to offer a contrast to the new Catholic threat. The temporary disappearance of the particular iconography of the Trinity in the immediate restoration of the Orthodox Alexandrinian faith would be part of the attempt to reshape and smooth out archaic theological positions of Aksumite origin (e.g., preservation of some Jewish customs and literal exegesis of the Scriptures) which had been particularly stressed in the writings authored by Zärʾa Yaʿəqob (Piovanelli 2004: 218ff.).

Fəre Ḥəywät

F.Ḥ. (ፍሬ ፡ ሕይወት; fl. early 20th cent.) was an Ethiopian artist. Little information about his life is available. As was common in the late 19th/early 20th cent., F.Ḥ. received his training as a church painter in a monastery in the Ethiopian highlands (Dolz 2007: 27; ↗Art, s. EAE vol. 5).

At the beginning of the 20th cent., traditionally-trained religious artists like F.Ḥ. and his contemporaries ↗Ḫaylu Wäldäyas and ↗Bälaččäw Yəmär incorporated traditional sacred motifs into their work, but they slowly began to evolve rigidly religious or ritual works for secular narratives. By the order of aṣe ↗Mənilək II and at the request of other patrons, F.Ḥ. rendered scenes of royal court ceremonies, receptions, and dinners, as well as historic subjects like the victorious battle of ↗ʿAdwa and the less-known Battle of ↗Ǝmbabo, or portraits of foreign diplomats (Dolz 2006: 187). F.Ḥ. knew many foreigners living in Addis Abäba, such as the Russian Dr. A.I. Kohanovskij (in Addis Abäba 1907–13; s. Pankhurst 1966: 35 [ill.]) or Dr. Robert Scheller-Steinwartz (1865–1921), who resided in ↗Addis Abäba from 2 January 1909–27 August 1910, as second German Envoy to Ethiopia. Most remarkable is a 1909 diptych painted on to a plaster bas-relief on wood. It is bearing a portrait of Scheller-Steinwartz wearing a white uniform and a pith helmet, mounted on a horse and jumping over a lion (s. ill.).

F.Ḥ. was perhaps the first Ethiopian artist ever to sign his works. This practice, formerly regarded as unacceptable by the Orthodox Church, indicates how F.Ḥ. distanced himself from a purely religious milieu, in that the painter remained anonymous (Ströter-Bender 1991: 72). He was one of the founders of the genre which Biasio coined "contemporary paintings in traditional style" (Biasio 2006; 2009; ↗Art, s. EAE vol. 5) which had their breakthrough at the beginning of the 1930s (Girma Fisseha 1993: 20; Forkl 2004: 92).

Filəp̣p̣os

F. (ፊልጶስ, also known as F. II; fl. early 19th cent.) was the 43rd əč̣č̣äge of ↗Däbrä Libanos of Šäwa (CerDLib III, 157; CecZeila I, 381; the 45th əč̣č̣äge in Ḫəruy Wäldä Śəllase 1928/29:113). F. held the position from 1822/23 to October 1830

(BlunChr 484; CerDLib III, 157; Ḫəruy Wäldä Śəllase 1928/29: 113).

Little is known about F.'s life, other than that his provenance was either ↗Atronsä Maryam (CecZeila I, 381; Ḫəruy Wäldä Śəllase 1928/29: 113) or ↗Tädbabä Maryam (ms. BN Éth. 215; CerDLib III, 157).

Before becoming əčč̣äge, F. held the title of mäkbəb. Under this title he appeared in 1819 during a theological dispute at ↗Gondär, on the side of the ↗Hulätt lədät doctrine, in the presence of the metropolitan abunä ↗Qerəllos. Wäldä Yona was the əčč̣äge at that time (CRReal 892; CerDLib I, 157).

F. next appears in the chronicles in 1828, already as əčč̣äge. When the Oromo Babbu Barihoy marched into Gondär that year, several of his soldiers sought ↗asylum in the compound of the əčč̣äge. Thereupon the residence was attacked and many monks were killed. After this incident the right to grant asylum was withdrawn from the əčč̣äge and restored only at a later time (CRReal 904ff.). When the missionary Samuel ↗Gobat spent time in Gondär he came into contact with F. Apparently they became friends, spending their time in theological debates (CrumMis 31ff.).

F. is also known as the owner of a manuscript containing a short chronicle which documents historical events up to the 17th/18th cent. The content of this text was recited by heart by däbtära ↗Aṣqu, a friend of F., to Antoine ↗d'Abbadie and recorded by the latter in his notebook (which is now ms. BN, d'Abbadie 270; Conti Rossini 1917: 701f.). According to Conti Rossini, the traditions contained in F.'s books were written down – not necessarily by him – in a manuscript which came from the famous monastery of ↗Maḫdärä Maryam, in Bägemdər (the location of the original manuscript is unknown today).

Some accounts given in the chronicle are of special interest. A variation of the legend of the serpent ↗Arwe, the king ↗Ityopis and ↗Makədda, is retold. In this version Ityopis and not ↗Angäbo killed Arwe (Conti Rossini 1917: 701; DAE I, 40). The term ↗däbtära, according to the text, was used for the first time to designate members of the clergy at the time of king ↗Dəgnaǧan (Conti Rossini 1917: 706f.). According to F.'s book, the conflict between aṣe ↗ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon I and ↗Anorewos "the Elder" does not originate from the marital practices of the king, but rather from issues related to the celebration of the ↗Sabbath day (ibid. 709f.; TadTChurch 209). As a consequence of this episode, the king built some churches in order to expiate his transgression against the monk (Conti Rossini 1917: 709f.).

Another noteworthy account, not found elsewhere, concerns the time of aṣe ↗Bäʾədä Maryam, during whose reign it was necessary to be a member of the tribe of "Levi" to become an ordained deacon or priest; furthermore, "there were only two priests in the church or in the chapel of the king" (Conti Rossini 1917: 711f.; TadTChurch 232, 246). The chronicle further ascribes the authorship of the Mälkəʾa Mikaʾel and the Mälkəʾa Qʷərban to Bäʾədä Maryam (Conti Rossini 1917: 711; TadTChurch 277). The authorship of both Mälkəʾa ↗Maryam and Täfäśśəḥi Maryam is ascribed to the son of Bäʾədä Maryam, aṣe ↗Naʾod (Conti Rossini 1917: 711; TadTChurch 277).

A remark is also made on a battle between aṣe ↗Gäladewos and ↗Aḥmad b. Ibrāhīm al-Ġāzī (Grañ) at Sar Bakʷəsa (↗Sarbakusa; Conti Rossini 1917: 712). It is followed by a short mention of the battle of ↗Wäyna Däga, where Grañ died.

The account ends with the reign of aṣe ↗Susənyos and a short list of the kings following aṣe Susənyos (i.e. Iyasu I, Täklä Haymanot, Tewoflos, Bäkaffa and Dawit III).

Film: Ethiopia and Eritrea in film

I. Introduction
II. Ethiopia and Eritrea in Italian films
III. Ethiopia and Eritrea in germanophone films
IV. Ethiopia and Eritrea in French films
V. Ethiopia in visual anthropology
VI. Developments in regional film-making

I. Introduction

The history of non-fiction films (hereafter F.) on the Horn of Africa is rich, complex, and diverse (a thorough filmography was provided by Prouty 1996) and the bulk of them are not yet studied and reviewed. In the absence of major published scholarly works and comprehensive publicly accessible filmographic databases, this article focuses on early developments in F.-making, certain milestones in the F. history of the region, the representation of the region in (selected) early western F.-making (sub-articles II, III, IV), its impact on fictional F. (sub-articles II, IV), as well as on Ethiopia as a field for visual anthropology (sub-article V). Local developments (cp. also ↗Cinema) will be reviewed in sub-article VI.

A large number of older F. from Ethiopia and Eritrea have found their way into different North-American and European F. archives (e.g., www.filmarchives-online.eu). The preservation and re-editing of these F. is an ongoing process that has gained momentum in the last two decades through new digital technologies and serious efforts to secure funding for F. preservation programmes.

In the first half of the 20th cent., the region saw foreign travellers, journalists, diplomats, researchers, missionaries, adventurers, etc. from various cultural, political or professional backgrounds, who left the first filmic documents on the Horn of Africa. Probably the majority of F. were produced to promote the cause of sending institutions or companies. The costs of F. production, however, were high compared to the potential gain or advantage of the F. itself. Unlike most F. on Ethiopia, some were relatively successful at cinema box offices, such as, e.g., the professionally well promoted Abessinienflug/Wings over Ethiopia (1934/35) by the Swiss aviator Walter Mittelholzer (1894-1937; for a personal account of his flight to Ethiopia s. Mittelholzer 1934, 1977: 107ff.).

A good number of F. were not shot for the broader public, e.g., the German diplomat Fritz Max Weiss (also Wyss, 1877–1955) is said to have filmed in ↗Addis Abäba only privately, while the British consul Robert Ernest ↗Cheesman took amateur footage of religious ceremonies and his travels in Ethiopia in the 1920s (s. British Film Institute [BFI], online F. catalogue). Yet many F. were taken by "expedition crews" touring the region who were accompanied by a specialist in charge of filming and photography. These professional "cameramen" were important members of the crew, because photographs and F. were major components of the marketing strategies of such expeditions. An illustrative example in this regard is the work of the German cameraman Paul Lieberenz (1893–1954). His Auf Tierfang in Abessinien (1926) is a kaleidoscope of stereotypical images of Ethiopia in early non-fiction F.: the journey of a group of Europeans from ↗Djibouti to Addis Abäba, dances of "exotic women", scenes of the "oriental market" of ↗Harär, big game ↗hunting, the problematic crossing of rivers, certain cultural practices (here: harvesting among the ↗Sidaama), etc.

In most cases a F. crew consisted of only a few members, i.e. foreign F.-maker(s) plus assistants, local advisors and staff members. Only the filming was done in situ, the rest of the production process took place in the home countries of the F.-maker(s). Many important ethnographic F., for instance, were produced by a team consisting of an anthropologist in co-operation with a documentary F.-maker (cp. also sub-article IV).

In later years, especially after the outbreak of the ↗Italian war of 1935–36, professional F. crews from Western countries came to the region exclusively to shoot F. for the big newsreel production companies, like the "expedition" of Laurence T. Stallings (1894–1968) for Fox Movietone News.

Major developments in the history of film in Ethiopia

F.-making in Ethiopia was started in the early 20th cent. by Europeans travelling in Ethiopia. The first F. on record are presumably those made by Ralph P. Cobbold on behalf of Warwick Trading Co. in 1901. A series of relatively short F. under the title "With the Anglo-Abyssinian Expedition" is listed in The British Film Catalogue, Vol. 2, Non-fiction Film, 1888–1994 (Gifford 2000: 70) as follows:

> "Dance of David by Abyssinian", "Abyssinian Priests and Natives Assembling for Worship", "Dance of Abyssinian Priests before Ark of the Covenant", "Emperor Menelik's Troops on the March", "Ras Makonnen Reviewing his Army at Harrar", "Emperor Menelik's Troops Entering Harrar", and "Entry of Ras Makonnen at Head of Abyssinian Army".

Moreover, Cobbold took part in the British campaign against ↗Muḥammad ʿAbdallāh Ḥasan (Roberts 1987: 193).

The first "block" of F. shot in Ethiopia reached European audiences in the years prior to World War I. It was a time when F.-workers from Europe travelled the world and returned with short F. from seemingly remote countries, especially the colonies.

In Italy, the Turin based F. production company Ambrosio distributed a number of short F. from "Abyssinia", probably directed by Italian pioneer documentary F.-maker Roberto Omegna (1876–1948). The first of these were Caccia al Leopardo (1908), Matrimonio Abissino (1908), Usi e Costumi Abissini (1909), Funerale Abissino (1909), and Come si viaggia in Africa (1909). The same Ambrosio F. appeared also in France at the end of 1910 with corresponding titles in French and partly also in Germany (cp. Leopardenjagd in Abessinien, 1909) – a fact which allows one to assume that these F. circulated in the F.-markets of many different European countries. These F. mark the beginning of a rich tradition of Italian F.-making in the Horn of Africa, especially with regard to Eritrea (cp. also sub-article II).

In France, another F.-maker, Charles Martel, presented his F. En Abyssinie (1909/10) at a session of the Société Géographique de Paris. It is preserved in the Service des Archives du Film at Bois d'Arcy in France (Prouty – Rosenfeld 1994: 126).

Another surviving short F. is Alfred Machin's Chasse au marabout en Abyssinie/Marabujagd in Abessinien (1911). Machin (1877–1929) made a long journey along the Nile in 1909 up to the Ethio–Sudanese border region, and being an industrious and progressive F.-maker, used this opportunity to produce three F.-series (Voyage en Afrique, Les Grandes Chasses en Afrique, Voyage en Egypte). The marabou hunting F. with a length of 130 min. (of which 100 min. are colourized) was professionally promoted by Pathé Frères in a number of European countries. It was piece no. 4 in the Les Grandes Chasses en Afrique series (Bousquet 1994, no. 4269 with further references).

Other known F. of that time in German cinemas were Die Äthiopier (1909) and An der äthiopischen Grenze (1909/10); however, currently there is no trace of surviving copies (for basic filmographic references s. Birett 1991: 7, 20).

The period from World War I up to the early 1930s offered a number of interesting F., in particular F. by ↗expedition crews that produced revealing footage from places and people(s) difficult to visit; examples are the ↗Grühl – Kiermeier expedition to ↗Käfa (1925/26), the Borgstädt – Ruhe expedition to ↗Dime and parts of the ↗Omo valley (1926/27) or the Italian expedition among the ↗ᶜAfar or Danakil (1928/29). F. had become a means to successfully promote and illustrate the work of these expeditions.

An extensive second "block" of F. concerning Ethiopia and Italian-occupied Northeast-Africa (↗Africa Orientale Italiana) was produced shortly before and during the ↗Italian war of 1935–36. Among the many F. that can be mentioned in this regard are Martin ↗Rikli's Abessinien von heute: Blickpunkt der Welt (1934), Ronald Haine's The Real Abyssinia (1935), Walter Mittelholzer's Abyssinia, the Italian Istituto LUCE's (L'Unione Cinematografica Educativa) Il cammino degli eroi (1937); or the Russian-made Abissinija (1935/36). The Soviet cameramen of Soyuskinochronika, Boris Zeitlin and Vladimir Yeshurin, apparently filmed inter alia "the bombardment of the field hospital at Dessie" and caught "one Italian bomber falling at Kakala"; allegedly even a poison gas attack and its victims were recorded (Monthly Film Bulletin 4, 1937, 264).

This period is especially interesting not only because much new material was produced by international F. crews, but also because the F. material produced in earlier years was re-used and newly synchronized. For instance, in 1935 the German F. production company Bavaria-Film AG marketed a sound F. from material produced during the silent F. era (Friedliches Abessinien, 1935) and made use of the material of the Grühl and Kiermeier expedition.

The F. artist Lutz Becker has made good use of the F.-material of this epoch for his Lion of Judah (1981), which according to Roberts (1987: 214) "poignantly counterpoints war footage from both sides and admirably demonstrates the possibilities for the serious reconstruction of history through film".

Aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I's post-war reign saw a number of important F. like the Images d'Ethiopie/Beelden van Ethiopie (1947/48) by Paul and Jean Pichonnier, that was shown at the 1949 Cannes F. festival, or the Deutsche Wochenschau made Abessinien: Kaiserreich zwischen gestern und morgen (1956) that was produced to highlight the efforts of the Ethiopian regime to modernize the country while at the same time caring for the traditions of its people. Influential co-producers of this coloured sound F. were the Ethiopian officials ↗Makʷännən Dästa and Admasu Badima. It was one of the noteworthy F. shown at the 16th ↗International Conference of Ethiopian Studies in Trondheim, Norway in 2007.

Ḫaylä Śəllase was fascinated by F. and cinema and understood how important F. could be for reaching (foreign) policy objectives. There are several filmic portraits of the Emperor that helped to create and temporarily maintain the image of a benevolent modern leader with a colourful personality, e.g., The Lion of Judah (1950) by Anthony de Lotbiniere or Focus on Ethiopia (1952) by Castleton Knight.

During the final years of Ḫaylä Śəllase's regime until the early years of the ↗Revolution of 1974, however, F. – maybe for the first time – started to impact on politics as some documentary F. revealed the very problematic state of affairs in parts of the country (with regard to drought, corruption, land property and social issues, etc.). British TV journalist Jonathan Dimbleby managed to shoot, export, and broadcast his report on the 1973 Ethiopian ↗famine (The Unknown Famine, 1974), which shocked Ethiopian and European audiences alike. In a newspaper article (Dimbleby 2002) the director looked back at his work and took the view that it contributed to the overthrow of Ḫaylä Śəllase's regime: "Crudely recent to include scenes of high life at the imperial palace and retitled The Hidden Hunger our footage was used to soften up the Emperor's subjects for a military coup which brought Comrade – later President – Mengistu to power". Later noteworthy reports by Dimbleby for British television were: Return to Ethiopia (1974), Ethiopia: A Revolution is Declared (1975), Ethiopia: Famine and War (1975).

In the field of ethnographic F., the early 1970s were important years, for instance, Gardner's F. on the ↗Hamär, Rivers of Sand (1974), triggered discussions, the first F. on the ↗Mursi by Turton and Woodhead was released, and Klausberger was able to film the Bodi (↗Meʾen; Die rituelle Blutwaschung Unyjen bei den Bodi, Süd-Äthiopien, 1973/75).

While some remarkable documentary F. were produced before the Revolution – e.g., Bud Greenspan's The Ethiopians (1971) on Ethiopian marathon runners) – the years after the fall of Ḫaylä Śəllase were used effectively by the new regime to produce politically motivated documentary-F.; often together with new partners from socialist countries like the Soviet Union, Cuba, Czechoslovakia or the German Democratic Republic (GDR). Burden of the Past: Path to the Future (1976) directed by Michel Papatakis was an Ethiopian-Czechoslovakian co-operation. A F. on the rural education campaign (↗zämäča; Call of the Motherland [1976]) was officially presented by an Ethiopian delegation in the GDR (Bräuer 1976) and East German F.-makers Hubert Kröning and Armin Wünsche produced documentaries for the GDR and Ethiopian television (e.g., Äthiopien 1977 [1977]; Mohamed, der Schuhputzer [1978]; cp. Richter 1980: 140f.).

Many of these F. were shown on Ethiopian television and screened at public meetings. However, for many years the range of Ethiopian TV was extremely limited and the number of (propaganda) documentaries was still small (cp. Müller 1978; Richter 1980: 138). F. production under the Mängəśtu regime was restricted. Many F.-makers' projects could not be realized until the regime had fallen.

Issues in film history research

The main issues are three:

(1) Accessibility and preservation of F. material: A number of F. that are known to have existed are nowadays lost or are inaccessible (e.g., Kurt Lubinski's Hochzeitsreise nach Abessinien [1928] or Jacques Stüssy's Weißer Mann in Abessinien [1936/37]). There has been no major programme to document, restore and digitalize the majority of F. that were shot in Ethiopia and the Horn of Africa region and that now lie in various F. archives across the world. Preservation programmes, however, are necessary prerequisites for effective historical studies on F.

(2) Adequate representation of peoples and cultures in F.:

Some ethnographic documentaries that were filmed in Ethiopia have raised the question of the (limits of) proper representation of cultures and peoples. An instructive example for a debate on such issues is the discussion on Robert Gardner's Rivers of Sand on the traditions of the Hamär between the F.-maker, the involved anthropological experts Jean Lydall and Ivo Strecker, and reviewers like Lionel M. ↗Bender (s. EAE vol. 5; for references and a summary of the debate s. Loizos 1989: 69ff.). The feeling of unease with Gardner's F. and the subsequent debate triggered the production of a number of noteworthy "Hamär F." by Strecker – Lydall – Head (The Leap Across the Cattle [1979]; The Father of the Goats [1984]; The Hamar Herdsman and his Music/The Song of the Hamar Herdsman [1986]; The Women who Smile [1990]; Two Girls go Hunting [1991]; Sweet Sorghum [1994]; Duka's Dilemma [2001]; Bury the Spear [1993/2001/2004]).

Other issues are caused by the problematic representation of certain ethnic groups in television documentaries relative to "proper" ethnographic F. Some documentaries on the ↗Suri, for instance, can be regarded as examples of attempts to create and reproduce ethnic stereotypes (stick-fighting, lip-plates, ↗body ornamentation [also ↗body modification s. EAE vol. 5]) rather than instructive reports holding aesthetic and intellectual values. This has provoked researchers to speak of the "filmatic exploitation" of a people (personal communication with Jon Abbink; cp. also Abbink 2009).

(3) F. and their impact on the international image of the Horn of Africa:

a look into the F. history of Ethiopia and the Horn of Africa shows that the image of Ethiopia (as well as Eritrea and Somalia) has changed immensely throughout the 20th cent. Ethiopia was once associated with the successful fight against colonialism, the remarkable reign of Ḫaylä Śəllase I, and magnificent monuments along the "historic route" such as the rock-hewn churches of ↗Lalibäla. However, even though there are lots of amazing F. on various aspects of Ethiopian cultures, it can probably be argued that F. have contributed heavily to the international image of Ethiopia as a place where – more than anything else – hunger, violence and epidemics were endemic. Jonathan Dimbleby wrote that in the past the combination of famines and atrocities in the wars of the 1970s/80s "had imprinted on our collective memory an indelible image of Ethiopia as a nation of skeletons and savagery" (Dimbleby 2002).

Repeated reports on Somalia that focus mainly on drought, civil war, piracy, alleged terrorist groups, forced mass migration, etc. tend to have created an equally problematic international image. The case of Eritrea is slightly different, but nor is its international image positive.

The evolution of this intractable image (and an effective means to modify it) is under-researched. Even though the TV and cinema markets are not the only important media sectors that contributed to the formation of a probably unbalanced image, it seems reasonable to assume that they are highly significant.

II. Ethiopia and Eritrea in Italian films

As shown above, filmic representation of the Horn of Africa in Italy started with Roberto Omegna. This was followed by Luca Comerio who devoted much attention to the conquest of Libya around 1912: the Italian F. archive carries an anonymous, short silent F. on Eritrean colonial troops, at present entitled La vita dei nostri ascari eritrei in Libia.

In Baldassarre Negroni's Zuma (1913, 23 min.), the Italian actress Hesperia (Olga Mambelli) played Zuma, an African female slave whose hairstyle and clothes remind us of Eritrean colonial ↗photographs around 1900. Some of Zuma's characters were in blackface (white actors performing in black makeup as stereotyped Africans – originally Afro-Americans – commonly used in early vaudeville shows). One of the richest descriptions of Eritrea was filmed in 1922 by ↗Capuchin friars under the title L'Eritrea (52 min. 8 sec.). In 1924, the documentary Aethiopia (16 min. 13 sec.), directed by Franco Martini and produced by Sindacato di Istruzione Cinematografica (later LUCE), focuses on Guelfo Civinini's expedition to Eritrea and Ethiopia. Il sentiero delle belve (78 min.) by Vittorio Tedesco Zammarano was edited in 1932 and advertized as a hunting reportage set in ↗Africa Orientale Italiana, but it was made out of material filmed by Zammarano in Somalia around 1920.

American cinema had dominated Italian screens from the mid 1910s. Until the protectionist legislation inaugurated by the 1938 Alfieri Law, Fascism handled fiction cinema mostly as entertainment: it did not oppose Hollywood's imaginary influence, considering American F. incapable of fomenting social conflict and able to provide models of youth, vitality, and adventure that were compatible with Fascist ideology. On the contrary, from 1925 on, the regime carefully controlled information, Italian self-representation, and popular culture through Istituto Nazionale LUCE. During Fascism, LUCE (still existing today) had educational, propagandistic and patriotic aims. It produced hundreds of documentaries and F. of different natures (science, history, archaeology, medicine, army, folklore, ethnography, geography, demography, tourism, etc.), and also photographs and "cinegiornali" (newsreels that had to be projected by cinemas before any show).

In the late 1920s, LUCE produced documentaries about Italian noblemen visiting the colonies (e.g., Viaggio di S.A.R. il Principe di Piemonte nell'Eritrea italiana [1928]; Spedizione di S.A.R. il Duca degli Abruzzi [1928, 52 min. 29 sec.]), on Italian expeditions (cp. Corrado ↗Zoli's expedition in Eritrea settentrionale [1929, 15 min.]; Raimondo Franchetti's Spedizione Franchetti nella Dancalia [1929]), the commemoration of the ↗ᶜAdwa defeat (e.g., Trasporto in Eritrea delle Salme degli Italiani caduti in Adua [1926, 28 min.]), and the legacies of the Roman empire (Ritorno di Roma [1926, 44 min]). Early colonial documentaries also had some ethnographic content, such as Il viaggio del Principe Umberto in Eritrea. Da Tessenei ad Agordat (1928, 9 min.) that showed dancing group scenes, that are similar to those that would appear later in some of the 1930s colonial fiction F. Viaggio di S.M. il Re in Eritrea (1932, 38 min. 25 sec.) is already a sound documentary F. like Aspetti e ricordi di S.A.R. il Duca degli Abruzzi nel suo viaggio in Abissinia (1932–1937, 8 min. 35 sec.). The production of LUCE sound colonial documentary F. and newsreels increased from 1935 onward (cp. Da Adua ad Axum. Le tappe dell'avanzata italiana in Africa Orientale or Camicie nere in A.O.). LUCE opened its office in Asmära and groups of cameramen were directed by Luciano De Feo, Corrado D'Errico, and Giuseppe Croce. LUCE carefully and enthusiastically reported the Ethiopian campaign (↗Italian war of 1935–36). In 1936, it produced approximately 20 black and white F. and documentaries connected with the occupation of Ethiopia that tended to portray it as a great, adventurous, noble and civilizing event, like e.g.: Il cammino degli eroi (68 min.) directed by D'Errico and projected at the Venice F. festival; Legionari al secondo parallelo. Diario di un milite della 221^{a} legione fasci all'estero (35 min.) directed by Romolo Marcellini, it portrays subaltern Italian soldiers overseas; Sulle orme dei nostri pionieri (48 min. 18 sec.); Con la colonna Starace a Gondar e al lago Tana (17 min. 10 sec.); Ore di guerra nel cielo africano (13 min.); Da Dessiè a Addis Abeba (21 min. 10 sec.); Strade romane in terra d'oltre mare (11 min. 15 sec.).

In 1937–39 noteworthy examples were: L'Italia imperiale (53 min. 45 sec.), celebrating the first anniversary of the Fascist empire, and Attività mineraria in Eritrea (18 min. 10 sec.). Cronache dell' Impero, a supplementary colonial newsreel. In 1939, G. Martucci directed a propagandistic LUCE F. on Addis Abäba's renewal, La fondazione della nuova Addis Abeba (20 min. 38 sec.), that shows images of various peoples and sites, accompanied by propagandistic statements in Italian; this F. enthusiastically praises the Italians' deeds in Ethiopia (including Guglielmo ↗Massaja's) that allow the local population to overcome fatal diseases, illiteracy, ↗slavery, and misery, caused by the "barbaric" and "brutal" Ethiopian kingdom (as it is described by many Italian sources of this period).

As far as sound fiction F. are concerned, several Italian "colonial F." of the 1930s are stories of Italians' sacrifice and redemption through colonialism in Africa; including the elegant Lo squadrone bianco (1936, 96 min.) directed by Augusto Genina – the story of an Italian military outpost in the Sahara desert – that welcomes the conquest of Ethiopia, however focusing on the previous Italian conquest of Libya (1911–12). The rhetoric in Scipione l'Africano (1937, 115 min.), directed by Carmine Gallone, and partly supported by LUCE, implicitly glorifies the proclamation of the fascist empire, through the exaltation of Rome and Scipio's feats in North Africa. Through the portrayals of relations and reconciliations between generations, in Italian F. focusing on Ethiopia, the new, pure, righteous, young generation accomplishes what the previous generation did not manage to do, thus implicitly avenging the ᶜAdwa defeat. This is the case of the first fiction movie that focuses on the Ethiopian Campaign Il grande appello (1936, 85 min.) by Mario Camerini and co-written by Mario Soldati, as well as Luciano Serra pilota (1938, 106 min.), directed by Goffredo Alessandrini, supervised by Vittorio Mussolini, and interpreted by Amedeo Nazzari. Flavio Calzavara's Piccoli naufraghi (1939, 84 min.) portrays 13 boys (one African included) who furtively manage to sail from Italy to the Horn of Africa, hoping to join the conquest of Ethiopia. Il grande appello – a family drama with nationalistic intention – displays some wide pictures of the landscapes and peoples of the African Horn, as it happens with other Italian F. set in colonial Northeast-Africa: Marcellini's Sentinelle di bronzo (1937, 83 min.), Guido Brignone's Sotto la Croce del Sud (1938, 78 min.), and Alessandrini's Abuna Messias (1939, 96 min.), starring the Ethiopian actress Bərḵä Zäytu Täkle (Berchè Zaitù Taclè), dubbed by Giovanna Scotto. Abuna Messias is an expensive, paternalistic F., partly funded by the Catholic establishment, that narrates Cardinal ↗Massaja's second mission in Ethiopia in mid-19th cent. Paradoxically, although Abuna Messias is a conservative F. with many performers in blackface, it seems to anticipate the postcolonial historiographic assumption that, in most cases, a local agency and an African will were fundamental for European colonialism to take off. Other F. as well, called on Italian foreign policies, in order to justify colonialist aspirations. Sentinelle di bronzo touches on the controversial point of the legitimacy of the Italian aggression against Ethiopia (denounced by the ↗League of Nations). The F. vaguely refers to the ↗Wälwäl incident of 1934 and asserts that the occupation was right and positive, because Italy brought order and justice to Somali regions unjustly threatened by Ethiopia. Sentinelle di bronzo, turning the Italian actress Doris Duranti into a desirable African-Muslim girl, implicitly speaks of Italian colonial and expansionist tactics in the Horn of Africa, where Rome favoured, for its own profit, the Muslim minorities against the Orthodox Christian majority. Sotto la Croce del Sud, filmed in Africa Orientale Italiana, displays the symbolic and regenerating role played by Italy in the Horn of Africa by sketching a benevolent portrayal of the efforts carried out by Italian "pioneers" to start agricultural farms and settle on the Abyssinian plateau. However Sotto la Croce del Sud is also a pastiche of international F. genres in vogue at the time; here, aesthetic and political canons are repeatedly subverted, thus constructing highly ambiguous images of "Italians", "foreigners", "settlers", "Africans", and "meticci" ("half-casts") that the Fascist press sometimes found unacceptable. Sentinelle di bronzo and Il grande appello put on Italian screens the popular, notoriously attractive and sexually available north-east African young women (the famous "Faccette nere") that were essential elements of Italian colonial imagery. But, while Il grande appello simply shows the girls sitting at the tables of a bar, Sentinelle di bronzo exceptionally possesses a long nude scene: sexy, joyful, naked African girls bathe themselves in a river. While commercial colonial "erotic-love novels" did not survive the rise of State racism that toward the end of 1930s banished "interracial" relationships and their representation, "colonial cinema" was able to get round the fascist racist legislation, whose directives are anyhow discernible in several colonial F.

After ↗World War II, in the postcolonial period, Angelo tra la folla (1950, 96 min.) by Leonardo De Mitri deals with the adventures of an Eritrean-Italian boy, the orphan of an Italian colonist who has been sent to Rome. Luciano Emmer's Cavalcata di mezzo secolo (1952, 85 min.) is a documentary F. on the first half of 20th cent. that focuses, among others, on the Ethiopian Campaign. Calzavara's La pattuglia dell'Amba Alagi (1953, 98 min.) is a F. on the Italian memory of war in Africa Orientale.

In La mia signora (1964, 103 min.), Luigi Comencini's sketch Eritrea stars Silvana Mangano in the role of an Italian prostitute called Eritrea. Magia nuda (1974, 99 min.), by Castiglioni and Guerrasio is a F. about magic worldwide, Ethiopia included. Most importantly, Pier Paolo Pasolini filmed in Eritrea approximately one third of Il fiore delle Mille e una notte (1974, 130 min.), as we deduce from the features and the clothing of numerous extras and characters, including the scene of the queen and the king betting on the love between a girl and a young man, called by Pasolini Sitt and Hasan. The F. main female character is Ines Pellegrini (probably a stage name), an African-Italian young woman Pasolini met in Asmära; she also appears in Pasolini's last F. Salò o le 120 giornate di Sodoma (1975, 117 min.). Pasolini refers to former Italian colonies also in La rabbia di Pasolini (1963–2008, 82 min.), which is a sort of posthumous remake of La rabbia (104 min.), directed by Guareschi and Pasolini in 1963. After Pasolini's death, Ines Pellegrini only interpreted genre movies and erotic comedies, such as Una bella governante di colore (1976). But the most famous Eritrean actress in Italian cinema is Zeudi Araya (Zäwdi Arᵓaya), who interpreted numerous 1970s–1980s genres F., including La ragazza dalla pelle di luna (1972, 90 min.).

Nipoti miei diletti (1974, 100 min.) by Franco Rossetti narrates an incestuous relationship and the "dream" of the Ethiopian Campaign. In 1976, Antonio Climati and Mario Morra realized the documentary F. Savana violenta (95 min.) that includes the capture of zebras in Ethiopia. Dal Polo all'Equatore (1986, 96 min.) is an experimental F. by Gianikian and Ricci Lucchi that explores the imperial nature of photography by re-editing Comerio's footage from travels around the world. In 1989, Giuliano Montaldo directed Tempo di uccidere (110min.) that takes inspiration from Ennio Flaiano's homonymous novel (1947), set in the Horn of Africa during the Ethiopian campaign. In 1998, Montaldo, using LUCE F. material, directed a documentary F. on Fascism, Le stagioni dell'aquila (88 min.) that also deals with the occupation of Ethiopia. Abissinia (1993, 87 min.), by F.R. Martinotti, is not set in the Horn of Africa; the title of the F. refers to the nickname given by locals to the desolate outskirts of Rimini. In more recent years, when the languages of video and F. have tended to merge, Theo Eshetu, an Ethiopian-Dutch F.- and videomaker who has lived most of his life in Italy, realized Il sangue non è acqua fresca (1997, 58 min.) that focuses on his Ethiopian family heritage through the story of his grandfather and former minister in Ethiopia, ↗Täklä Ṣadəq Mäkʷəriya. Come un uomo sulla terra (2008, 52 min.) is a documentary F. directed by Andrea Segre, Dagmawi Yimer (Dagmawi Yəmär), and Riccardo Biadene (occasionally also shown in Italian cinemas) that narrates the dramatic journey through Africa of migrants from the Horn of Africa, who strive and suffer to reach Italy via Libya.

III. Ethiopia and Eritrea in germanophone films

For the period between the mid-1920s until the mid-1950s German archival sources (Bundesfilmmarchiv/BFA Berlin; http://filmportal.de) indicate the production of a dozen long F. related to the subject:

1) digitalized copies available at the BFA (Berlin): Hermannsburger Mission, Mit der Hermannsburger Mission in Abessinien (1935); Johann Albert Menno (Jam) Borgstädt, Im Schatten des Goldenen Löwen (1935, 78 min.); Martin Rikli, Abessinien von Heute – Blickpunkt der Welt (1935, 101 min.).
2) nitrofilm copies at the BFA: Ernst Garden, Auf Tierfang in Abessinien (1926); Paul Hartlmaier, 11000 km Ostafrika (1939).
3) digitalized copy available at the Swiss Filmarchiv: Walter Mittelholzer, Abessinienflug (1934).
4) videocopy on the market: Admasu Badima – Dej. Makonnen Desta – Manfred Purzer, Äthiopien – Kaiserreich zwischen Gestern und Morgen (1956, 101 min.).
5) status unknown: St. Petrus Claver Sodalität (Breslau), Streifzug durch Abessinien (1926); Jam Borgstädt, Abessinien, das Land der Somalis und der Amharen (1926); Max Grühl, Aus dem Reiche des Königs der Könige (1926/27), Kurt Lubinski, Hochzeitsreise nach Abessinien (1928); Paul Hartlmaier, Amba Ras (1953); Wilhelm Schmah, Wunderland Abessinien (1956, 59 min.).

Additionally, the BFA holds some older material as well as non-digitalized copies of German newsreels (UFA-Wochenschau, DEULIG Tonwoche), in particular covering the Italian war 1935–36.

On the ideological level, early German documentaries and entertainment F. marked a switch from the public display of exotic people, shown in Zoological Gardens and at public fairs of pre-World War I ↗Germany, to the genre of exotic F. located in Africa during the 1920s. Both genres had colonial and racist underpinnings (Schöning 1997). Remarkable figures during this period were the director Ernst Garden and his cameraman Paul Lieberenz, who in their 1926 F. worked with advisers such as Lutz Heck, academic director of the Berlin Zoological Garden from 1932 to 1945, and Oskar Neumann, ornithologist and traveller in Ethiopia.

During the mid-1920s, documentary F. on Ethiopia by such filmmakers as Max Grühl and Jam Borgstädt contributed to spreading the image of a land of easy fortunes, open to fortune-hunters. At the end of the 1920s, the trope of the "Ethiopian Journey" conveyed by many F. became a symbol for fraudulent schemes and for luring investors and prospective tourists into unfulfilled dreams of gain and adventure (Zitelmann 1999: 137).

The regional scope of F. on Ethiopia was broad. Borgstädt recorded his impressions in Somali-settled territories, ↗Wälläga and Ǧimma (BIFK 2378). The team of Garden and Lie-

Advertisement for Martin Rikli's film of 1935 Abessinien von heute – Blickpunkt der Welt; from the collection of Martin Haars berenz focused on ↗Arsi and Ǧimma (Bairu Tafla 1981: 67) and Mittelholzer on the ↗Ittuu. Max Grühl filmed in ↗Käfa during a four month expedition there in 1926, which was sponsored by the Munich based F. company EMELKA (PAA, 47156). For their part, the Hermannsburger Mission's F. described the road between Addis Abäba and Wälläga, the early days of ↗Aʾira (s. EAE vol. 5), including a visit of däǧǧazmač ↗Habtä Maryam Gäbrä Ǝgziʾabəḥer, and (partly staged) impressions on ↗Oromo culture.

The most productive period of documentaries on Ethiopia (Borgstädt, Rikli, Hermannsburger Mission, Mittelholzer) was during 1934–36. Then documentaries served to steer public opinion on German ambiguous policy during the Italian-Ethiopian war 1935–36 (Zitelmann 1999: 138ff.). Thus, Borgstädt and Rikli presented "tradition" and "modernity" as dual aspects of "independent Ethiopia" (BIFK 2378, 2379). Both F. were withdrawn from public circulation when the Italian victory approached (Anon. 1997: 5).

In ↗Austria, which was in 1935 under Austrofascism, with clear pro-Italian leanings, Rikli's film was banned from the start (Orlando 1993: 63). Here a certain propagandistic impact was produced by the German dubbed version of the Italian propaganda documentary by Corrado D'Errico Il cammino degli eroi (1936), which was presented as 217 Tage Abessinien (Von Rom bis Addis Abeba) (Wiener IFK, 1426; film copy at Zentrales Landesarchiv Niederösterreich, St. Pöltgen).

During the 1930s the tension between the representation of Ethiopia as an independent state on one side, and colonial aspirations in Africa on the other side, reveals a subtext common in many documentaries. Paul Hartlmaier's F. transported this shifting attitude into the 1950s. His F. in 1939 was sympathetic towards Africa Orientale Italiana and counted with the support of Goebbels' Reichsministerium für Volksaufklärung und Propaganda (PAA, R 65574). However, when the F. was reedited in 1953 as Amba Ras, it was presented as a eulogy of the Ethiopian Empire. In 1956 a team that included däǧǧazmač ↗Mäkʷännən Dästa produced a distinctive patriotic F. combining tradition and modernity.

Some of the early filmmakers also produced short topical and educational documentaries: Borgstädt on iron-production among the Dime (Haberland 1964); Grühl on trade, ↗ənsät, and European settlers in Ethiopia; Rikli on modern education, the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox Church, Addis Abäba, the Ethiopian army, and aṣe Ḫaylä Śəllase I.

Many of the long F. were accompanied by illustrated brochures, published in Berlin (Illustrierter Film-Kurier, IFK) or Vienna: Garden (BIFK 419); Mittelholzer (Wiener IFK 926); Borgstädt 1935 (BIFK 2378); Rikli (BIFK 2379). In addition, many of the directors or cameramen published popular travel- and photo-books about their Ethiopian journeys (Grühl 1929; Hartlmaier 1953; Lieberenz 1935, 1946; Lubinski 1929, 1935; Mittelholzer 1934; Rikli 1935, 1947). Borgstädt (1935) wrote a small article praising aṣe ↗Mənilək II as a colonial hero. An adviser in Borgstädt's second film, Hans Jannasch, a German settler and adventurer in Ethiopia (Bairu Tafla 1981: 61, 164, 171f.), provided with his Im Schatten des Negus (Jannasch 1930) a written blueprint for the Im Schatten des goldenen Löwen (1935, 78 min.) evoked by Borgstädt. Material of the Hermannsburger Mission documentary on the early days of the missionaries' work in Ethiopia was also used in two publications by Dietrich Waßmann (1935; 1938).

IV. Ethiopia in French films

The director Charles Martel was commissioned by Jules de Foberville to film in Ethiopia for the production company Le Lion, and shot 3,400 meters of scenes during a one year travel in Ethiopia (1909/1910) about which he reported during a conference at the Société de Geographie in 1910 (cp. also Introduction). An edition of the materials, entitled L’Abyssinie au temps de Ménélik (24 min.) is kept in the Archives françaises du film (a division of the Centre national de la cinématographie et de l’image animée).

In 1917, Amédée Eywinger accompanied for the Sections Photographiques et Cinématographiques des Armées, a French, Italian and Russian diplomatic delegation to the coronation ceremony of empress ↗Zäwditu. Two different editions of the film exist: the first one is entitled Addis Abeba (7 min.) and is kept by the Etablissement de Communication et de Production Audiovisuelle de la Défense, at Ivry-sur Seine; the second one is entitled Fêtes du couronnement de la reine Zaoditou (13 min.) and is kept by the Musée Albert Kahn, at Boulogne-Billancourt.

This museum keeps also the unique copy of the film called La Mission Charles Michel-Côte, Éthiopie-Soudan, 1920 (29 min.), directed by Edmond Famechon and produced by the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs. 7,000 to 8,000 meters of film were shot. The last roll of film is missing which might probably be lost.

Later the Dakar–Djibouti French expedition (1931–33; ↗Mission Dakar-Djibouti) which included prominent Ethiopianists such as the well-known Marcel ↗Griaule, Michel ↗Leiris, Deborah ↗Lifchitz, the Anthopologist André Schaeffner (1895–80), and the painter Gaston-Louis Roux (1904–88) collected valuable data contained in approximately some 6,000 pictures and 1,600 metres of films roll. The materials are part of the collections of the former Musée de l’Homme in Paris where Schaeffner and Leiris played a prominent role after World War II. Indeed French documentaries on Ethiopia are scarce. For the contemporary period, one may mention Ivo Strecker’s Sacrifice et divination chez les Hamar du sud de l’Éthiopie (1985, 44 min.), and Hugo Ferran’s La Royauté Maalé (to appear with Christensen Fund, UNESCO and French CNRS support) as well as Ethiopia: on the trail of the first Christians (2011) by Jean-Louis Saporito. Other important examples are films by Makeda Ketcham (Makədda Käččam), like Mémoires, paroles et visages du chemin de fer franco-éthiopien (2012). Among the non-scholarly travellers’ films for the conference organization Connaissance du Monde are Freddy Tondeur’s 1977–78, Éthiopie, les mitraillettes de Saba and Christian Monty’s Éthiopie, 10 millions de montagnards (1967, 18 min.).

The first fiction F. was Léon Poirier’s La Voie sans disque (1933, 109 min.) adapted from the novel by André Armandy published a year before. This film was shot out of studio and at the French Somali Coast as well as in Ethiopia (around ↗Awaš and Addis Abäba) with local recruited walk-ons. The action takes place in 1917. A restored and digitized copy is available at the Archives du film français and can be watched at the Bibliothèque nationale de France.

Other notable feature F., realized in France are inter alia Va, Vis et Deviens (2005) about the Operation Moses, and the “French Cinema” contribution, Si le vent soulève les sables (2006) based on the novel Le Chamelle by Marc Durin-Valois portraying civil plight in war-torn Somali territories.

V. Ethiopia in visual anthropology

A great number of ethnographic documentaries have been produced based on anthropological inquiry and long-term fieldwork among Ethiopian cultures and societies. A number of F. were produced in collaboration between an anthropologist as a specialist of a given culture and a professional F.-maker. One of the most acknowledged example is that of anthropologist David Turton and Leslie Woodhead (Woodhead – Turton 1974; 1982; 1985; 1991a; 1991b). Since 1974, they have been making insightful documents on the cultural events and episodes of the ↗Mursi people as well as their relations with the neighbouring ethnic groups, which have been aired in the Disappearing World Series of Granada Television in the United Kingdom. Ivo Strecker and Jean Lydall have collaborated with filmmakers and made distinguished ethnographic F. series (Lydall – Head 1990; 1991; 1994; Strecker 1979; 1984; 1986; 1995; Strecker – Lydall 1995) over a long period of time particularly on the ↗Hamär. In particular, Lydall and her daughter, Kaira Strecker's, Duka's Dilemma (2001) has been acclaimed as one of the epoch-making works of visual ethnography. It follows the personal and intimate drama of the crises of a Hamär family arising from the relationship between co-wives.

The recent development of digital technology as well as the dramatic growth of visual anthropology festivals and conferences has further furnished the production of ethnographic F. As a result the mode of audio-visual narrative has diversified. Ethnographic F. are now used as educational resources in higher education and are widely circulated in international visual anthropology scholarly circles such as Coordinating Anthropological Film Festivals in Europe (CAFFEE) and Nordic Anthropological Film Association (NAFA). Among some of the most widely screened F. in anthropological F. circles are the following:

Chaalo. The Voices of Morning (2004), which portrays a mystic religious cult figure in Oromo; Lalibaločč. Living in the Endless Blessing (2005), which documents the interaction between the ↗Lalibäločč and the locals in ↗Gondär; The King Never Dies (2007), which recounts the challenging moments of the continuity of the ritual among the ↗Konso and Morokapel's Feast. The Story of a Kara Hunting Ritual (2007), which deals with intense debates about traditional rights and ownership of a leopard skin among the ↗Kara.

Some of the F. (e.g., Strecker – Pankhurst 2004; Kawase 2006; Girke – Köhn 2007) have raised

Scene from the shooting of the 1974-film "The Mursi" by Leslie Woodhead (with David Turton) with the cameraman Michael Dodds in the foreground; photo 1974 by Chris Wangler, courtesy of Leslie Woodhead significant issues on the degree of interaction between anthropologist and subject and about the researcher's roles and responsibilities of advocacy in and outside the research field.

It is noteworthy that several works were created by Ethiopian scholars in the Visual Cultural Studies programmes at the University of Tromsø. These include Awura Amba (2009), which recounts the story of a local self-sufficient egalitarian community in south Gondär working and living together, and Ensete, Soul of the Gurage (2009), which is about the various roles the ənsät plant plays in ↗Gurage society. It is also important to mention Ethiopian filmmakers such as Gondär-born Samson Giorgis (Samson Giyorgis) who has been based in France since the 1980s. He has directed documentary F. on Ethiopia and its cultural identity. Samson deals with ethnomusicological documentation, Ethiopian Polyphonies Doko Songs/Harari Songs (2001), and The Return of Obelisk (2007), which focuses on the cultural significance of a historical monument, the Aksum Obelisk, and its return to Ethiopia from Italy. Shooting with Mursi (2010), which was directed and produced by Ben Young and Mursi-born filmmaker Olisarali Olibui, has been widely discussed at anthropological festivals for its self-portrayal of an indigenous people. A F. panel was held for the first time during the 16th ↗International Conference of Ethiopian Studies in 2007 at the Norwegian University of Science and Technology in Trondheim. This event, which particularly focused on historical/anthropological F. on Ethiopia from the past to the present, led to interdisciplinary debates on the subject and techniques in which scholars approached F. subjects audio-visually.

VI. Developments in regional film-making

F. production by local teams without a marked influence of foreign F.-makers is relatively recent (cp. also ↗Cinema). A number of notable F. produced by Ethiopian F. pioneers first appeared in the late 1960s, for instance Solomon Bekele's (Sälomon Bäqqälä) F. The Rotten Existence (1968/70) with a critical view of corruption, or Hirut, abbatwa man näw ('Hirut, who is her father?', 1965/66) by Ilala Ibsaa and Jokaris Lambros (the latter is discussed in Warren 1978: 57).

Due to political and economic issues in the following decades, however, a F. industry did not develop. Although, in the first decade of the 21th cent. the market for low budget video productions grew rapidly, quality feature F. production for cinema was still limited (cp. also ↗Theatre).

Among the influential figures in the creative F. scene in Ethiopia one should mention inter alia: Sälomon Bäqqälä, Afework Manna (Afäwärq Manna), Yemane Demissie (Yämanä Däməsse), Theo Eshetu (Teʾo Ǝšätu), Samson Giorgis (Samson Giyorgis), Salem Mekuria (Sälam Mäkʷəriya), Makeda Ketcham (Makədda Käččam), Tewodros Teshome (Tewodros Täšomä), Michel Papatakis (Mikaʾel Papatakis), Aida Ashanafi (Aʾida Ašänafi), Ermias Woldeamlak (Ǝrməyas Wäldäʾamlak), or Zelalem Woldemariam (Zäläʿaläm Wäldämaryam) (for basic filmographic references for many of these F.-makers s. FESPACO 2000); special mention is due to the important F. director of Ethiopian origin Haile Gerima (Ḫaylä Gärima) who produced a number of internationally highly esteemed F. on Ethiopian topics like Mərt sost ši amät (‘Harvest: 3000 Years’, 1976), Adwa: an African History (1999) or Ṭeza (2008) (s. Pfaff 2004: 203ff.; Davis 1975: 18ff.; Howard 1985: 28ff.).

As for Eritrea, whose F. industry is yet in the process of (re-)formation, one may mention the F.-makers Alemazitu Berhane (Alämazitu Bərhane), Ambessa Jir Behe (Ambäsa Ǧər Bəḥe), or Isaias Tsegai (Isayəyyas Ṣäggay).

Nowadays, F. production clusters have emerged in urban centres in the region, even though production for the television and cinema market still has strong limitations. A report on the present Ethiopian television and audiovisual media sector was produced by Anaïs Prosaïc for the French-German TV channel ARTE for the series “Zapping International” in 2007 (last broadcast on 10 December 2008).

New Ethiopian short F. and feature F. are regularly presented at F. festivals, both at a national level (e.g., at the relatively young annual Addis International Film Festival) and at the international level (e.g., the short F. Mängäd (‘Road’) [2006] directed by Daniel Taye Worku [Danəᵓel Tayyä Wärqu] and produced by Solomon Bäqqälä was screened at the 57th Berlin International Film Festival and the Cannes International Film Festival in 2006).

Films in Somalia and Djibouti

In Somalia F. started with Hadj Mohamed Giumale’s (Xaaji Maxamed Jum^{c}ale) pioneering work Miyi iyo magaalo (‘Bush and Village’, 1968) which is a story about a couple that abandons nomadic life for a future in the city. He was followed by Idriss Hassan Dirie (Idris Xasan Diriiye) who completed Dan iyo xarrago (‘Necessity and extravagance’, 1973; for a review article s. Afrique-Asie 36, 1973: 48). Other noteworthy Somali productions were The Somali Darwish (1984) by Amar Sneh and Said Salah (Sayid Saalax), the short F. Geedka Nolosha (‘The Tree of Life’, 1987) by Abdulqadir Ahmad Said (^{c}Abdulqaadir Axmeed Sa^{c}iid) or Fire Eyes (1994) by Soraya Mire.

The earliest F. from Djibouti appeared in the 1980s: the first internationally reviewed F. was Le grand Moussa (1984) made by Ahmad [Axmed] Dini (s. Bingo 377, 1984: 27) and accompanied by Frele biche/Belle biche (1984) by Moussa Farah.

Ethiopia in Masonic symbolism

Ethiopia holds an important place in modern Masonic symbolism, as well as in Masonic rituals and several legends. The most important legend is that of Hiram Abiff, one of the three kings responsible for the construction of ↗Solomon’s Temple: “So Hiram made an end of doing all the work that he made king Solomon for the house of the Lord” (1 Kgs 7:40). Three of his workers, called Jubela, Jubelo and Jubelum, murdered him with a 24-inch gauge for the first, a square for the second, and a mallet for the third, which are the different tools of the different Masonic degrees. Once they had done their task, the three tried to flee to “Ethiopia” from an Egyptian port, and this is where the legend of Hiram becomes linked to the Egyptian legend of Osiris, to ask the pardon of the wise Queen of Sheba (↗Makədda).

In Masonic symbolism, “Ethiopia” represents the origin of an ethical system. For Masons, the word “Ethiopia” signifies “ethical vision” or “ethical focus”. One of the reasons Hiram’s workers wanted to go to “Ethiopia” was to revise their moral outlook. They lost sight of the “Great Blueprint and the destiny of Man”. The legend of the Columns of ↗Enoch (in F. the seventh patriarch before the Great Flood, great grandfather of Noah) is considered as the founding religious text of F. Thus, James ↗Bruce, a member of the Canongate Kilwinning Lodge, Edinburgh, during his voyage to Ethiopia (which was also a quest for Masonic truth) searched for an Ethiopian version of this book. He brought back three copies of the Book of Enoch (Mäṣḥafä Henok) to Europe.

The Masonic lodges which existed in the region before 1909 were located in Egypt or in Aden (Aden Felix N° 355 and Aden Lodge N° 7845). Four Freemason lodges existed in the Horn of Africa. Three were of French allegiance and one of Italian allegiance. The first of the Grande Loge de France, was the lodge Djibouti–Diré-Daoua N° 433 (1911–40), Orient Djibouti. Its founder was Laurent Depui (1878–1947), a soldier who became the first Worshipful Master. It comprised a membership solely of colonial origin, mostly French, but also some Armenian and Greek, civil servants and workers of the Chemin de fer franco-éthiopien (thus the name of the lodge; ↗Railways). There were not more than 24 members in 1914 dwindling down to five by 1932. The most illustrious of these was Henri de ↗Monfreid, who was a member from 1912 to 1915, the year of his expulsion. The second lodge in Djibouti was the lodge N° 204 du Droit Humain of allegiance to the Grande Loge Mixte et Internationale. It quickly became part of Lodge Djibouti–Diré-Daoua N° 433. The third French lodge of the Grand Orient de France was the lodge La Lumière d'Éthiopie, Orient Addis Abeba (1909–24). It mostly consisted of merchants of ↗Armenian, Syrian, and ↗Greek origin, as well as some French civil servants, such as its founder, Honoré-Marius Roux (1874–1954), French consul in Addis Abäba. Well-known people were also members of the lodge, such as Alexis Desvages, editor of the ↗Courrier d'Éthiopie; Abraham Koeurhadjian, an Armenian of French culture and a confident of ras Täfäri (later aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I); Stelio Bollolakos, the owner of l'Hôtel Impérial in Addis Abäba, which was used as the "temple" for Freemason dress in Ethiopia. The only member of Ethiopian origin was Charles-William Martin alias ↗Wärqənäh Əšäte who was the treasurer of the lodge in 1911. Where and when he became initiated in F. is not known. This lodge did not hide that it was a tool of French influence in Ethiopia to spread the "Lumière [i.e. 'civilisation'] jusqu'au cœur des populations arriérées et encore plongées dans les ténèbres" as was stated in the preamble of its policies and procedures. The fourth lodge, part of the Grande Oriente d'Italia, was in Asmära.

The Grand Lodge of Ethiopia was founded in 2010. It works according to the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of F. (Rite Ecossais Ancien et Accepté). In Djibouti, there is a Grande Loge National de Djibouti with allegiance to the Grande Loge National de France.

Fukui, Katsuyoshi

F. (b. 18 November 1943, Otsuka, Shimane Prefecture, d. 26 April 2008, Kyoto) was a leading figure in the anthropological study of southern Ethiopia and the main architect of a remarkable growth in ↗Ethiopian Studies in Japan since the 1980s (s. also ↗Research, ethnological and ethnographical). Through his own research and writing, through the work of the many younger scholars whom he inspired and encouraged, and through tireless bridge-building between Japanese and foreign academics, he helped to put the study of southern Ethiopia and of Northeast Africa firmly on the map of Japanese anthropology.

Already as an undergraduate F. spent nearly a year amongst the agro-pastoral Iraqw of northern Tanzania (↗Pastoralism) and while he was a master's student he made a short visit to Ethiopia for ethno-botanical research. F. graduated from the Faculty of Agriculture, Kyoto University, in 1967 and completed a master's degree in the same faculty in 1969. Also in 1969 he formed the "Kyoto University Slash-and-Burn Cultivation Study Group" and began a study of shifting cultivation in Kochi Prefecture, western Japan, leading to the publication of his first book in 1974. In 1973 he obtained a doctoral degree from the Graduate School of Agriculture at Kyoto, with a thesis on the "Classification of the vernacular names of cultivated plants in Ethiopia and an historical analysis of their dissemination" (in Japanese). In the same year he married Masako Toyama and began field research amongst the agro-pastoral Bodi (↗Meʾen) of south-western Ethiopia who remained the chief ethnographic focus of his research and writing for the remainder of his life.

In 1971, F. was appointed an assistant professor in the Research Institute for the Languages and Cultures of Africa, Tokyo University of Foreign Studies. In 1976 he moved to the then newly established National Museum of Ethnology (Minpaku) in Osaka and in 1993 he became Professor in the Graduate School of Human and Environmental Studies at Kyoto University. He remained in this post until he retired in 2007.

F.'s early research on botanical classification, shifting cultivation and East African agropastoralism led him to a lifelong preoccupation with the concept of "nature" as a cultural construction and with the relations between plants, animals and humans. His theoretical concerns were always firmly rooted in detailed and systematic empirical research. One of the first products of his fieldwork amongst the Bodi was a prize-winning essay on cattle-colour symbolism (1979). This was followed by his monograph on ↗colour and pattern in 1991 and in 1996 by a meticulously researched study of the cultural selection of cattle-colour diversity, also amongst the Bodi. Another long-term interest of F. was in the causes and determinants of inter-ethnic conflict, a subject on which he organized two international conferences. Indeed, his tireless energy in promoting communication and collaboration between Japanese and foreign scholars was another notable feature of his contribution to the anthropology of East Africa and to Ethiopian Studies in Japan. The conferences he organized resulted in a series of co-edited books (1979; 1994; 1996) and the three-volume proceedings of the 13th ↗International Conference of Ethiopian Studies, held in Kyoto in 1997 (PICES 13).

One of F.'s most important contributions to Japanese anthropology was the inspirational influence he had on younger scholars. Through a series of research projects which he led from the mid-1980s until retirement, he provided encouragement, guidance and financial support for promising Japanese scholars. He also recognized the importance of creating institutional structures to support this growing community of scholars, and was a leading figure in the founding, in 1992, of the Japan Association for Nilo-Ethiopian Studies, of which he was President between 2001 and 2007.

He is survived by his wife, Masako, his daughter Michiko, his son Takahiro and three grandchildren.

G

Gäbrä Ǝgziʾabəḥer Gilay

Blatta G. (ገብረ ፡ እግዚአብሔር ፡ ጊላይ; also known as Gäbrä Ǝgziʾabəḥer Gila-Maryam by the Italian administration; b. ca. 1860, Ṣäʿada Krəsṭiyan, Ḥamasen, d. 1914, Addis Abäba) was an important politician and diplomat in the service of aṣe ↗Mənilək II, who played a crucial role after the Battle of ↗ʿAdwa.

G. received his traditional education at ↗Däbrä Bizän and as a well-educated intellectual became an official interpreter of the Italian government in ↗Eritrea in 1897. He played an important role in the negotiations between ↗Italy and Ethiopia as well as in the peace talks (↗Addis Abäba Treaty of 1896) after the Battle of ʿAdwa, frequently crossing the border as an official member of the Italian diplomatic team and having access to secret information.

G. held this position for just two years until he was accused by the Italians of political espionage and summarily tried and convicted in 1899. The political situation of 1899 was very critical since rumours about a possible occupation of Eritrea by Ethiopian troops became increasingly frequent. Blatta G. was depicted as a traitor who agitated anti-Italian feelings. Several papers confiscated from his home, letters written in code to important political figures such as ras ↗Mäkʷännən Wäldä Mikaʾel, ras ↗Mängäša Yoḥannəs and Mənilək II, appeared to be irrefutable proof of his guilt. The "letter to Mənilək" (cp. Taddia 1994: 493–516) was examined very carefully by the Italian administration and immediately translated.

G. was among the about 100 prisoners who succeeded in escaping the colonial penitentiary of Nokra in 1899 and reached Təgray. Subsequently he moved to Addis Abäba where he became a valuable political adviser at the court of Mənilək and began the most significant intellectual phase of his life.

G. soon became a critic of the Ethiopian ruler and wrote numerous poems of protest, secretly distributed every Sunday, against sacrificing Eritrea and for having negotiated with the Italians over the border. His anti-Italian feelings gave rise to many discussions with ↗Afäwärq Gäbrä Iyäsus who supported the Italian cause.

Blatta G. wrote several books. Among the most important were an anonymous booklet and an unpublished text of memoirs, containing historical and religious information about Ethiopia.

Because of G.'s criticism of Mənilək's courtiers and bureaucrats he was eventually exiled and sent to ↗Harär, though he returned to the capital and spent the last years of his life in Addis Abäba.

G. is remembered both in Addis Abäba and in Asmära as an opposition leader, writer, interpreter, adviser and moralist.

Gäbrä Krəstos Täklä Haymanot

G.K. (ገብረ ፡ ክርስቶስ ፡ ተክለ ፡ ሀይማኖት; b. 1880, Waqi, Aksum, d. 20 October 1932, Addis Abäba) was an early 20th-cent. Ethiopian author, journalist and educator.

The eldest son of a local evangelical leader aläqa Täklä Haymanot Məhərka, G.K. was educated at the Swedish Evangelical Mission Boy's school in Asmära (↗Evangeliska Fosterlands Stiftelsen). In addition to his native Təgrəñña and Amharic, G.K. mastered French, Italian and English. In 1900, he became teacher at the same school. On 20 February 1913 he married Yəhdäga Gäbrä Hawaryat.

In June 1920, G.K. moved to Addis Abäba. There, he was welcomed by Olof (Ole) Eriksson, who had arrived to the Ethiopian capital in May of the same year, after having been expelled from Asmära (cp. ↗Bərhan Yəkun) in 1915 (Colonia ↗Eritrea). Besides teaching older boys, G.K., together with a fellow missionary Yoḥannəs Wäldä Maryam, assisted Eriksson in his translation work as well as in the revision of Martin ↗Flad's translation of Dr. Barth's Bible Stories.

In September 1921, G.K. became director of ras Täfäri's new ↗Bərhanənna Sälam printing press, taking over from an Italian manager. He subsequently became the first editor-in-chief of the Bərhanənna Sälam newspaper, supported by ↗Märsəᶜe Ḫazän Wäldä Qirqos as assistant editor. His dedication and industriousness became proverbial (cp. Bahru Zewde 2002: 189).

In the years immediately preceding the Italian invasion, G.K. wrote, together with ↗Täᵓammərat Amanuᵓel, a series of articles denouncing Fascism. The Italian Embassy filed a lawsuit against them. The two were put under arrest; however, ras Täfäri (later ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I), who presided the court, did not take the conviction seriously. The two were allowed to secretly spend the nights at the home of afä nəguś ↗Näsibu, and were released after a short time.

G.K. did not live to see the Italians enter Addis Abäba; they did, however, remember the offense, and forced G.K.'s widow and children from their house (Həywät Ḫədaru 1974/75: 409f.). His son Gad, who also fought in the ↗Italian war 1935–36 (Arén 1999: 466), reclaimed the house after the liberation.

G.K. left an important contribution to Ethiopian intellectual life. Besides compiling editorials for the Bərhanənna Sälam (cp., esp., the maiden issue, where he dwelt upon the education role of the periodical), G.K. wrote a number of books on subjects ranging from history and geography to arithmetic manuals. He also authored a number of hymns in the ↗Ethiopian Evangelical Mekane Yesus Church hymnbook still in use today. His Aç̣ç̣ər yäᶜaläm tarik (1924/25) was used as schoolbook in the early days of the Täfäri Mäkʷännən School. It was the first to present to the Ethiopian public the broad sweep of world history, covering the Jewish, Chinese, Indian, Japanese and Western civilizations, and concluding by an optimistic picture of Ethiopia's induction into the modern age through its Crown Prince. G.K. dedicated his life to "fostering the spread of learning and popular literacy through the institutions at the heart of Ethiopia's emerging public culture" (De Lorenzi 2008: 346).

Ǧa^{c}far al-Mīrġanī

Ǧ. (Ǧa^{c}far b. [Muḥammad] Bakrī b. Ǧa^{c}far al-Ṣadīq b. Muḥammad ^{c}Uṯmān al-Mīrġanī, جعفر بن [محمد] بكري بن جعفر الصديق بن محمد عثمان الميرغني; b. 1871, [?], d. 1943, Täsänäy, Eritrea) was the leader of the Eritrea "branch" of the Ḫatmīya ↗Islamic brotherhood for most of the first half of the 20th cent.

Of G's first 30 years we know only that he spent his youth in Umm Durmān during the Mahdīya in the ↗Sudan (O'Fahey 1994: 208). An Italian colonial report notes that together with his brother Ḥasan, Ǧ. was taken prisoner by the ↗Mahdists in a battle. Ǧ. makes his appearance in the historical record following the death of his great uncle, ↗Hāšim al-Mīrġanī – until then the head of the Ḫatmīya in Eritrea – in 1901. Governor Ferdinando ↗Martini's attempts to persuade Hāšim to relocate to ↗Kärän in order to exercise his authority over Italian Eritrea's Muslims had failed. Following Hāšim's death the Italian authorities directed their efforts to Ǧ., who had until then resided in ↗Kassala, and with whom they were more successful. After a brief stay in ↗Massawa in 1902, Ǧ. settled in Kärän where he became the official representative of the Ḫatmīya in Eritrea (Bruzzi 2006: 437f.).

Colonial intervention in Ḫatmīya affairs and the establishment of Ǧ. in Kärän generated tensions over leadership, authority and legitimacy especially with his aunt, šarīfa ^{c}Alawīya (daughter of the late sayyid Hāšim) who was based in Massawa where she exercised great influence. These tensions bred internal divisions and factionalism in the Eritrean branch of the Ḫatmīya. As the daughter of Hāšim and granddaughter of the founder of the Ḫatmīya, ^{c}Alawīya contested Ǧ.'s "engineered" leadership in Eritrea. Colonial intervention seems to have disrupted the hereditary transmission of authority in the Mīrġanī family. It also shaped and fuelled the division between the Sudanese and Eritrean branches of the Ḫatmīya and revealed cleavages revolving around gender and generational gaps.

Tensions came to a head in early 1910 when ^{c}Alawīya requested the authorities to assign her a residence in Kärän as well as the payment of a monthly allowance. The problem between Ǧ. and ^{c}Alawīya was also played out among their respective followers. In that context a point of great conflict revolved around the authority to appoint new *ḫalīfa*s (here 'representatives') and collectors of oblations. ^{c}Alawīya contested her perceived sidelining which took away from her this capacity. Yet, in December 1910 reconciliation between the two parties was reached: ^{c}Alawīya recognized Ǧ.'s official leadership but it was also decided that adepts of the Ḫatmīya order in Eritrea were free to follow representatives of their choice regardless of internal loyalties.

Around the same period and in connection to these rivalries, the Italian authorities considered transferring Ǧ. to Massawa or to Asmära but such plans did not materialize and he remained in Kärän. Some tension subsisted between the authorities and Ǧ. as to the elimination of his ("foreign") Sudanese *ḫalīfa*s and the appointment of local *ḫalīfa*s recognized by the Italian administration (Bruzzi 2006: 438–45).

According to colonial correspondence and reports, Ǧ. assisted the Italian authorities in mobilizing ↗askari and legitimizing the conquest of ↗Libya (1911). Italian propaganda included Ǧ.'s statements undermining the legitimacy of the Ottomans as "true" and "legitimate" Muslims (Bruzzi 2006: 446). Ǧ. worked within a framework of accommodation to Italian colonial rule which led to the consolidation of his power and authority in Eritrea at large. Less is known about his activities and positions in the 1920s and 1930s under the fascist authorities in Eritrea.

Ǧ. was buried in Ḫatmīya (al-Sanīya) near Kassala. His son sayyid ↗Bakrī (EAE vol. 5) continued to exercise authority in Kärän. In December 1946 Bakrī was elected President of the Eritrean ↗Muslim League (Bruzzi 2006: 448).

Gäläb

G. (ገለብ) is a small town situated in the ↗^{c}Ansäba valley of Eritrea, 47 km north-east of the regional capital ↗Kärän. It is the main centre of the ↗Mänsa^{c} clan of the ↗Tǝgre who live between the coast and the ↗Rora Mountains. G. is important for the history of ↗printing and education, due to the early presence of a Protestant mission (↗Evangeliska Fosterlands Stiftelsen). The town has ca. 1,200 inhabitants (Saba Issayas 1996), but at times many more, according to the season.

G. is situated not far from the old boundary of ↗Ḥamasen, in the fertile historical district of Mänsaᶜ Bet Abrəhe. Archaeological findings in G. point to an important role of this area as a "bridge" between the Sudanese cultures and the Ethio-Eritrean highlands, to which it was also linked also in later centuries through a common Christian heritage. Until today, about half of its population professes Christian Orthodox traditions, while the other half are Muslims. Due to missionary activities there are also Protestants and Catholics. The people of G. are traditionally agriculturalists (today ca. two thirds of the permanent population) while some are transhumant pastoralists who move twice a year between the lowlands and the highlands. The latter are Muslims while the Christians are sedentary and live in stone or brick houses and are following the ↗ṣəlmi land tenure system, in which land is owned by patrilineal families (Saba Issayas 1996).

One of the most important Təgre sub-clans of G. are the ᶜAd Habay (belonging to the Zawra), who trace their origin to an apical ancestor, Haboy, from ↗ᶜAd Təmaryam (Sundström n.d.) and who became the ↗təgre 'bondsmen' or 'serfs' of a noble group. The ᶜAd Kedraš are a Zawra təgre serf group in G. and Məhəlab. Another sub-clan in G. are the ᶜAd Hišal, a sub-unit of the ᶜAd Gabres sub-clan (ibid.). Two other təgre sub-clans of G. are the ᶜAd Mähari and the ᶜAd Bula (one of five lineages of the Bet Abrəhe who had their own chief), and both are from the ᶜAd Lawağ. Another lineage belonging to the five Bet Abrəhe are the ᶜAd Aylay. Originally not Mänsaᶜ but ↗Ḥabab are the ᶜAd Ammar from the ᶜAd Hafärom. The ᶜAd Dobaᶜat are said to have originated from the ↗Sudan. An exiled, formerly noble, group were the ᶜAd Dobloy, who were forced to leave due to heavy conflicts over the local chieftaincy accorded by aṣe ↗Fasilädäs. Some of them migrated back from Ḥamasen to G. in the late 19th cent., paying tribute like the other təgre (ibid.).

The Swedish mission established itself in G. by the early 1870s where it founded a school, supported by the governor of this then Egyptian territory, ↗Munzinger. The school was attended by students of ↗Təgrəñña and Təgre background such as the deacon ↗Täwäldä Mädḫən Gäbrä Mädḫən, who worked on a Bible translation into Təgre in G. Many of the first literary works in the Təgre language were produced in G. For example, the "Spelling and Reading Book", written by the latter together with Täwäldä Mädḫən Gäbru (1889) was produced in G. (but, as with other works produced in G., printed in ↗Ǝmkullu). Other languages were also actively studied at G., with the aim of producing religious texts, such as ↗Onesimos Näsib's Oromo text of ca. 1890. Pupils such as the educational writer ↗Yəsḥaq Täwäldä Mädḫən of the G. school played a crucial role in the later Evangelical Church of Eritrea.

The activities of the missionaries had an important impact on the preservation of the Təgre language and oral literature, as they actively documented the rich heritage of the people of G. and its surroundings. Enno ↗Littmann's principal Təgre informant Naffaᶜ wäd ᶜEtman was from G. Many of the texts collected within the framework of the ↗Princeton University Expedition thus originate from G., especially those from the Mänsaᶜ Bet Abrəhe, LitPEA, vols. 3–4A, nos. 1–265 (s. also Littmann 1911). The missionary Richard ↗Sundström, stationed at G. starting from 1898, collected and documented a number of Təgre tales, songs, poems and oral traditions. One of these texts from G. was published by Littmann in 1904, and there was already a reference to G. in Littmann 1897. Many of these original transcripts by Sundström are now kept in the Carolina Redeviva Library, Uppsala, and some, seemingly incomplete, can be found in the Littmann Nachlass in Vienna. Sundström gave an important part of his collection to Littmann during his visit in 1905 for purposes of scholarship and for eventual publication. Sundström's list still exists. Littmann's and ↗Höfner's Təgre dictionary was created partially on the basis of information from these sources. However, only one text has been published so far (1961) by his collaborator Höfner, on the ↗ᶜAd Šek (s. a longer text on the history of the Mänsaᶜ: Sundström 1913).

G. lies in what today is the zoba ᶜAnsäba, in the homonymous district of G. The district of G. is inhabited by ca. 40,000 sedentarists and, according to the season, an additional 40,000 transhumant pastoralists. They speak three languages, Təgrəñña, Təgre and ↗Bilin, cultivate mainly corn, sorghum and barley, and grow fruits and vegetables on their farms (Saba Issayas 1996). In collaboration with civil society partners and UNICEF, the Eritrean government has started a new educational system adapted to the semi-nomadic life of the people of G., changing the pattern set at the establishment of the first school in which education was given almost exclusively to the sedentary population received education.

Ǧimma Sänbäte

Fitawrari Ǧ.S. (ጂማ ፡ ሰንበቴ, b. ca. 1876, Aleltu, Šäwa, d. 1940, Bulga) was one of the noted leaders of the patriots of northern ↗Šäwa from 1936 to 1940 (↗Resistance). He belonged, through his father, to the Maru sub-clan of the ↗Abbičuu clan of the Oromo while through his mother he came from a ↗Bulga ↗Amhara family. His father had taken part in all the campaigns of expansion of aṣe ↗Mənilək II and in the Battle of ↗ᶜAdwa.

As a boy Ǧ.S. was sent to the local church of Eğersa Giyorgis. As a young man he served in Addis Abäba as a clerk in court. He was then appointed judge (wänbär) of Bulga where he stayed for several years. Probably it was at this time that he was given a rifle by Empress ↗Zäwditu in recognition of his services, including his participation in the Battle of ↗Sägäle. He then returned to Addis Abäba to earn his living as a private (traditional) lawyer.

After the Italian invasion had reached Addis Abäba, patriotic forces moved from there to their native areas in different parts of Šäwa to start the guerrilla struggle. ↗Abbäbä Arägay and Ǧ.S. were among their most prominent leaders (Greenfield 1967: 229). Ǧ.S. quickly raised a force of thousands of followers. In the summer of 1936 they carried out attacks on Italian convoys along the Addis Abäba–Däbrä Bərhan road inflicting heavy casualties and fought against collaborators. In the years 1936 and 1937, Ǧ.S. coordinated his struggle with the patriots of Bulga and operated in Aleltu, Koremaš (where Mənilək had a big ammunitions depot) and Assagərt, Bulga. In early 1937 the Italian forces intensified their pressure and Ǧ.S. had to withdraw to the gorges of the ↗Käsäm valley (Ministero dell'Africa Italiana 1939:168). Family sources confirm this but reject an Italian claim that he had been wounded.

Ǧ.S. took part in the political activities of the patriots of Bulga and ↗Tägulät to crown a king who would coordinate the patriotic movement hopefully in all of Ethiopia (Taddäsä Zäwälde 1967/68: 105; Tabor Wami n.d.: 6). When, finally, their efforts led to the crowning of Mälakä Ṣähay, the son of ↗Iyasu, as Ethiopian king at the end of August 1937, he attended the coronation and was given, like several other Bulga patriots, the title of fitawrari (Taddäsä Zäwälde 1967/68: 105; Tabor Wami n.d.: 6). The new king died not long afterwards, thus depriving the movement of a much hoped for leadership.

Italian reinforcements in the region in 1939 led to greater pressure on Ǧ.S.'s guerrilla. In 1940 he suffered from malaria while hiding in the house of a relative near the Käsäm River in Bulga. After the Italian garrison in the area received a tip-off he was discovered, but, refusing to surrender, he was killed in a shoot-out. The plan of the collaborators to cut off his head and display it on various marketplaces was thwarted by patriot forces.

After the liberation Ğ.S.'s patriotism was recognized by aṣe Ḫaylä Śəllase I and, in 1942, his remains were brought to rest in the basement of the ↗Qəddəst Śəllase Cathedral together with those of other leading patriots of the Italian war. In the same year a school was named after him in Sändafa near Addis Abäba.

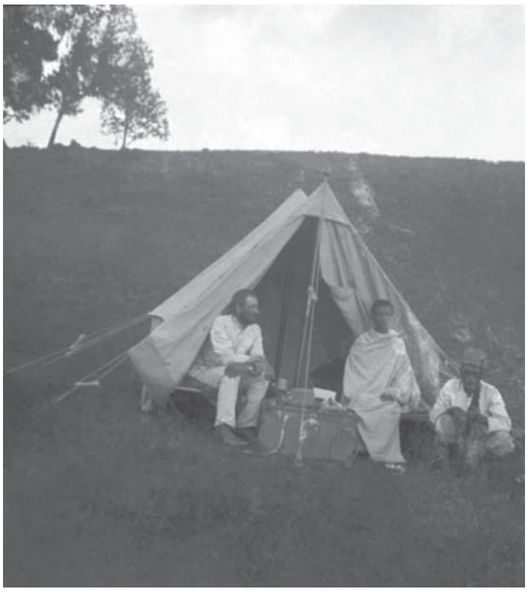
Gumilev, Nikolay

G. (Nikolaj Stepanovič Gumiljov; b. 15 April 1886, Kronshtadt, d. August 1921, Petrograd region [?]) was a prominent Russian poet, known as the founder of the "acmeism" school and of the literary group known as "Guild of Poets". His travels to Africa, and in particularly Ethiopia, significantly influenced his own poetry (though found full appreciation in ↗Russia only in recent time).

G. was born into a family of petty nobility. He started writing poetry in 1902, and in 1905 issued his first collection of poems, the Way of Conquistadors. In 1906–07 he travelled in Europe and eventually in Orient (Turkey, Egypt) which deeply impressed him. Inspired on the one hand by the poet Arthur ↗Rimbaud and such Russian travellers as ↗Ašinov, ↗Bulatovich, ↗Mashkov, and on the other hand looking for new adventures and impressions, G. got fascinated by the Horn of Africa.

G. briefly visited ↗Djibouti (the then French Somaliland) in December 1909–January 1910. In September 1910 he finally travelled to Ethiopia. He descended the Nile, then reached Djibouti, and from there, via ↗Dərre Dawa and ↗Harär, arrived in Addis Abäba. In the capital, he met the Russians then present in Ethiopia (Čemerzin, Kohanovskij; also, apparently, Senigov), and Ethiopian nobles (he was even invited once to a banquet in honour of ləǧ ↗Iyasu). Not many details about that stay are known (some of them appear legendary, cp. Bronguleev 1995:200ff.). Allegedly, G. was forced to leave in January 1911 after an unlucky incident in which his property and money were stolen from the Hôtel d'Impératrice (today, Ṭaytu Hotel). He is thought to have taken the route via ↗Čärčär and Djibouti with "a local poet ato Iosif" (Yosef Zägalan or ↗Yosef Nəguśe?), who helped him in collecting and translating a few popular songs (12 poems, said by G. to be literal translations of indigenous songs). However, there are hints that G.'s trip back was much more extensive, via ↗Ginnir, and then probably through ↗Käfa, to Kenya and Mombasa (s. Luknitskij 2010:234f.; esp. Stepanov 2006b) from where he went to Djibouti by sea and then back to Russia, where he arrived in March 1911.

After two years full of both achievements and frustrations (publications; marriage with Anna Akhmatova, which soon grew unhappy; birth of the son Lev; fierce criticism of G.'s "acmeism"), G. sought a new opportunity to go to Ethiopia. He arranged his next trip with the help of the St. Petersburg Museum of Ethnography (Kunstkammer, directed by Prof. V. Radlov) which entrusted him with the task of collecting samples of material culture from south-east Ethiopia. G. was supposed to enter Ethiopia through Djibouti, reach Harär via Addis Abäba–Djibouti ↗Railway and travel the wide areas between lakes Rudolph (↗Turkana), Margherita (↗Abbayya) and ↗Z^{w}ay, which by then were just incorporated into the Christian Ethiopian Empire and hardly studied. He left St. Petersburg on 7 April 1913, accompanied by his nephew Nikolaj Sverčkov. On 24 April they reached Djibouti



Nikolay Gumilev (left) during travels in Ethiopia with two attendants; photo 1913, from the collection of the Peter the Great Museum of Anthropology and Ethnography (Kunstkammer), Russian Academy of Science (2198-1330) (having befriended the newly appointed Turkish envoy ↗Maẓhar bey on the way), and then, by train, Dərre Dawa. In May they stayed in Harär where they met (and photographed) däǧǧazmač Täfäri Mäkʷännən (the future Emperor ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I), and his wife Mänän, and visited one of the first ↗theatre performance in Ethiopia (staged by Indian actors). On 4 June G. and Sverčkov, accompanied by the interpreter Fasika, embarked on the travel to ↗Šayḫ Ḥusayn and Ginnir which turned out to be tremendously difficult (s. the itinerary reconstructed in Brongulejev 1995: 341). On 25 July the travellers reached Laga Hardim, and by the mid-August returned, via Harär, to Djibouti. They returned to St. Petersburg on 20 September.

G.'s diary (published only in 1987; recently donated to the Kunstkammer) contains the story of the preparation of the 1913 trip, sketch of ca. 1,500-km-long route, and brief, partly indecipherable records of what happened on the way. Unfortunately, Sverčkov's diary, allegedly much more detailed and with many photographs, was lost during the Russian revolution of 1917 (Luknitskij 2010: 331).

Ethiopia left deep imprint in G.'s poetry; many of his most famous poems contain African images as well as memories of his Ethiopian travels (some still await proper analysis; e.g., "Aktostih", 1911; collection "Abissinskie pesni", 1911; "Roždestvo v Abissinii", 1911; "Risunok akvarelju", 1911; "Afrikanskaja noč", 1913; "Mik. Afrikanskaja poema", 1918; "Moi čitateli", 1920; "Šatjor" 1921, and others).

G. was arrested on 3 August 1921 on accusation of participation in a monarchist plot ("Tagantsev conspiracy"). He was executed between 24 August (date of decree) and 1 September (report of execution). He was rehabilitated in 1991.

The objects of material culture which G. brought from Ethiopia are of significant scholarly value. In the Kunstkammer they are organized in four collections (nos. 2155, 2156, 2131, 5376 of paintings), with 119 registered objects. They include items of the ↗Harari, ↗Somali and Afran Qalluu (↗Qottuu) and ↗Arsi Oromo (collected in Meetta, Bale, Anniya, Arsi). G. also brought to Russia a collection of nine ↗manuscripts from Harär and ↗Ǧimma (now in the Institute of the Oriental Manuscripts, St. Petersburg, s. Halidov 1986, nos. A 737–39, 741–42, B 1928, C 1169–70; s. also Dobronravin in PICES 15, 569ff.), in addition to photographed manuscripts (e.g., the Arabic manuscript containing hagiography of šayḫ ↗Ḥusayn; Gori 2008). All in all, 253 ↗photographs taken during the expedition are now preserved in the Kunstkammer, as well as seven religious and folklore ↗paintings (six by painter Mikaʾel Ǝngədawärq).

Gʷalu

Däǧǧazmač G. (ጓሉ; d. Däbrä Tabor) was an early 19th-cent. ruler of ↗Goǧǧam.

G. was powerfully connected: he was the son of ras ↗Märəd Ḫaylu and thus a grandson of ras ↗Ḫaylu Yosedeq and great-grandson of ↗Wälättä Ǝsraʾel, daughter of Empress Məntəwwab (↗Bərhan Mogäsa). A chronicler calls him a Qʷaräñña, the name by which Məntəwwab's governing clique was known (↗Qʷara; Täklä Iyäsus ms. IES 254, fol. 55). G. is principally to be noted for the role he played in linking the very active political careers of his grandfather, father and of his son, ↗Tädla Gʷalu.

The chronicle has him taking over his father's position after Märəd's death in 1799 (ibid. fols. 52f. = Girma Getahun ch. 22A). However, our only closely dated source has him emerge, with the support of ras ↗Gugsa, in 1805/06 as a challenger to däǧǧazmač ↗Zäwde of Damot (Rüppell 1840:391). In any event, Zäwde was his principal rival and däǧǧazmač Elyas of Agäw Mədər was an important ally. Zäwde was married to G.'s paternal aunt, Dənqənäš Ḫaylu, and G. was involved in breaking up this marriage, following which Dənqənäš took up with blatta Kʷəlalit, a lieutenant of G. (BlunChr 480). This, briefly, became a cause célèbre. In the struggles which followed the fall of Zäwde towards the end of 1813, G. lost out to Zäwde's son ↗Goššu Zäwde. The chronicler notes that G. ruled Goǧǧam for three years.

G. died in Däbrä Tabor and was buried at Dima. After his death, his son Yəmär Gʷalu tried to regain control over Goǧǧam but lost to Goššu Zäwde's son ↗Bərru Goššu (Girma Getahun 1991, ch. 22B).

G. is said to have completed Ṭaba Nolawi, a church founded by his father, Märəd, in the area of Fənotä Sälam in Damot. He arranged it in the same way his father had foreseen for another church he had founded, Yäwəš Mikaᵓel (south of Däbrä Marqos). According to Täklä Iyasus's Chronicle, Yäwəš Mikaᵓel later served model for Mənilək's foundation at ↗Ǝnṭoṭṭo (ibid. ch. 34).

Unlike his father, who would befriend peasants and restrain his soldiers from plundering them, G. favoured his soldiers, who oppressed the peasants (Täklä Iyäsus ms. IES 254, fols. 52f.).

H

Ḥabäša

The term Ḥ. (Tgn. ሐበሻ, Amh. ሃበሻ Habäša or አበሻ Abäša) is predominantly a self-designation used by the Christian highlanders inhabiting the regions between Asmära and Addis Abäba, i.e. mainly by ↗Təgrəñña- and ↗Amharic-speakers (the territorial core being the ↗Märäb Məllaš, ↗Təgray, ↗Bägemdər, ↗Goǧǧam, ↗Wällo and ↗Šäwa), with an ethnic connotation, despite a certain ambiguity and vagueness of the term. Depending on the specific region, it is either fully accepted as an actual local ethnic term and in this case used as a self-denomination, or it appears rather in a vague general sense, used mainly in idiomatic expressions differentiating the "we-group" (i.e. depending on the perspective of the speaker: the highlanders, lighter-skinned people, darker-skinned people, the Ethiopians, the Eritreans etc.) from "others".

Cultural label

This general cultural meaning is reflected by numerous popular expressions, such as (Amh.), yähabäša ləbs ('[cultural] clothes of the Ḥ.'), yähabäša qäṭäro (lit. 'appointment of the Ḥ.', i.e. being late), yähabäša mädhanit (lit. 'Ḥ. medicine', i.e. traditional medicine), etc. Especially in the modern urban context these national-cultural connotations have made the term very popular, e.g., as a name for restaurants serving traditional highlanders' food (yähabäša məgəb, 'Ḥ. food'), beauty salons, barbers etc. From the highlanders' perspective the cultural features of the Ḥ. were often identified with their respective region's "culture", totally forgetting about today's plurality of cultures even within their regions and thus unconsciously reproducing an age-old, deeply enrooted idea of domination by the Ḥ. highlanders.

Political designation

In its political meaning, the term is often linked with the idea of belongingness to a polity. In the Eritrean context, for example, Ḥ. may designate in informal parlance "the Eritreans", while in Ethiopian context it is popularly often understood as meaning "Ethiopian", while its connotations still remain largely ethnic-cultural (this modern identification with the respective states is a reflection of the older fact, that the Christian highlanders, i.e. the Ḥ., were those who de facto were linked with state structures). This identification, in turn, is often rejected by some of the populations of these states who would claim not to be Ḥ., such as ↗Kunama or ↗ᶜAfar in Eritrea, or ↗Oromo, ᶜAfar, ↗Somali or ↗Beni Šangul (↗Berta, ↗Gumuz) etc. in Ethiopia, which reconfirms the rather ethnic meaning of the term. However, the rejection is not general; the identification with a common "national" culture is widespread especially in more modern urban contexts, so that also Amharic-speaking Oromo often now call themselves Abäša.

Ethnonym

Depending on the region, the term Ḥ. can take an explicitly ethnic connotation or even an exclusive ethnic meaning. Areas where this is prominent (cp. recent research by Smidt 2005; 2012) are the Eritrean and Təgrayan highlands, among the Təgrəñña-speakers. While virtually all Təgrəñña-speakers use Ḥ. as a self-designation, some use it in a strong ethnic sense; less so in urban centres such as Aksum, but usually more in rural areas, seemingly roughly corresponding to the territory of the core of the Aksumite kingdom (in peripheries such as ↗Rayyaa the term is less used). Such populations do not yet use the modern ethnic self-designations Təgrəñña (used in Eritrea) or Təgray/Təgraway (now widely accepted in Təgray), but prefer "Ḥ." or the local group's name, such as ᶜAgamä, Wälqayte, Ḥamasenay, Ṣänᶜadäglä, Märätta, Däqqi Täsfa etc. Consequently, an ethnically mixed wäräda west of ↗Šire has been named Kunama-Ḥabäša wäräda, following the local usage of Ḥ. as a purely ethnic term. In a rural context, the term Ḥ. also appears as a language designation, meaning Təgrəñña. It is sometimes, but not necessarily preceded by the term qʷanqʷa ('language'). This follows the widespread tradition of using an ethnic term also for the language (this language designation was also used by a local linguist as an alternative to "Təgrəñña", cp. Agosṭinos Tädla 1994). There is a similar situation further south in Amharic-speaking regions, where the term Amara (↗Amhara) is barely used as an ethnonym, Ḥ. being preferred when regional self-designations are too narrow. This can be observed, e.g., in ↗Wällo (Ficquet 2012) where Amara is employed to designate Christians and cannot be applied to the local Amharic-speaking Muslims. The latter use the term Ḥ. in order to differentiate themselves from other Muslims.

Historical uses of the term and its derivatives

The term Ḥ. developed independently from and parallel to the Arab. al-Ḥabaša, clearly as a derivation from the ethnic term ↗Ḥabašat, which designated a group or a confederacy of groups which formed the core of the Aksumite state, besides the ↗Aksumites themselves. Hence the ancient self-denomination of the Aksumite kingdom or empire: ard Ḥabašat wa Aksuman (s. ↗Abyssinia; Ḥabašat). In the Aksumite period locally produced Greek inscriptions (s. RIÉ I, nos. 270, 270bis) translated the term Ḥabašat with Aithíopes (s. ↗Aithiopía), thus reflecting already the all-encompassing idea of the term as a wider and inclusive concept, possibly already with some connotation of skin-colour.

This combination was strengthened later, when starting from approximately the ↗Zagʷe period the Biblical term Ityopya (from Aithiopía, cp. also ↗Ityopis) was used as a self-designation of the state even in the local language, not only in translations, thus inaugurating the age-old, but never fully defined identification between the state of Ityopya and the "Ḥ.". In royal letters of the 19th cent., kings in Ethiopia called themselves nəguśä Ḥabäša (RubActa I, 187f.), or yäḥabäša nəguś (RubActa I, 193) and their country yäḥabäša märet/hagärä Ḥ. ('land of the Ḥ.'). However, the term Ḥ. always kept its mainly local ethnic connotations, different from the always more political, state-oriented term "Ethiopians".

The Arabic al-Ḥabaša, in its proper sense referring to the Christian highlands (the ethnonym being al-Ḥabaš, pl. al-Aḥbaš) and derived from the Aksumite toponym, appeared in the earlier medieval period together with the literary production in Arabic. In European languages, the term Abyssinia is a loanword derived from Arabic.

Ḥamälmal Wärq

Ite Ḥ.W. (ሐመልማል ፡ ወርቅ, also called Dəngəl Mogäsa; in Jesuit sources Amelmal Orc; d. 7 April 1616) was the mother of aṣe ↗Susənyos. She was the daughter of one azzaž Kolo Dəngəl (also called Komo) from the noble Šəme lineage of the ↗Agäw. Ḥ.W.'s brother, Gudamo, was ↗qaṭ of the Šəme Agäw and father of a powerful female opponent of the Jesuit mission, Amätä Krəstos, herself mother of a certain Mälkəʾa Krəstos. One Ḫadäro, from the same lineage of Šəme, was also Ḥ.W.'s relative (PerChron 3, 8, 78, 278, 374f.; BecRASO III, 300, 302; VI, 184).

Ḥ.W. also was the mother of important political and military figures, conceived with her numerous husbands and lovers, during the reign of Susənyos. By her husband azzaž Śärṣ̌ä Krəstos, she bore Hafä Krəstos, Mälkəʾa Krəstos and ↗Yämanä Krəstos. Whilst she was still married to Śärṣ̌ä Krəstos, she had a son, Susənyos, with ↗Fasil Gärräm. Finally, after the death of Śärṣ̌ä Krəstos, she married a nobleman from ↗Damot, Muso, who gave her ↗Śəʿəlä Krəstos. At least one daughter is attested, wäyzäro Wängelawit (PerChron 34, 266).

Ḥ.W. was also an active political figure. Around 1605 she mediated between aṣe ↗Yaʿəqob and Susənyos (PerChron 58f.). She also took an open stand against the ↗Jesuit mission. In 1613, together with her son Yämanä Krəstos, she sent letters to Susənyos trying to persuade him to change his pro-missionary leaning (BecRASO VI, 285).

Ḥ.W. died probably at an advanced age, apparently of natural causes. She was buried at Däbrä Ṣana (PerChr 110; BegCron 4; BassÉt I, 340 [text] = II, 123 [tr.]).

At least two other figures called Ḥamälmal, both male, were active during the same period. One abetohun Ḥamälmal flourished during the early years of Susənyos' reign (PerChron 62). Another Ḥamälmal was lord of ↗Kambaata and subject to Susənyos. In 1614, the latter for a few months hosted the expedition of the Jesuit António ↗Fernandes and Fəqər Əgziʾ and provided them with horses for their journey (BecRASO III, 464f., 467–74, 484; IV, 267ff.).

Ḫasgʷa

Ḫ. (ኀስጓ, ኃስጓ, also ሐስጓ, ḥasgʷa, አስጓ, asgʷa [?], etc.) is the title of a civil office attested in the ↗Zagʷe and the earliest Solomonic periods, to which major personalities were appointed, i.e. regional rulers and members of the royal family. The title surfaces at the latest in the second half of the 15th cent., when it seems to have lost its original connotation of title related to the ↗Təgray area and is rather associated with the region of ↗Fäṭägar.

The Golden Gospel of ↗Däbrä Libanos of Šəmäzana is the main source for our knowledge of the Ḫ. title, for which five appointees are quoted: Qərub (Ḫ. at the time of aṣe Lalibäla and his wife Mäsqäl Kəbra, cp. CRDLib 187.10, doc. no. 6b, dating to 1205/09); Yəᶜqäbännä (Ḫ. at the time of the same rulers, cp. ibid. 190.12, doc. no. 7b, dating to 1225); Əngəda Əgziʾ (son of Kʷəllu Sägädä, also səyyumä Əntərta [↗Əndärta] and ᶜaqqabe ṣänṣän: Ḫ. during the reign of Yəkunno Amlak, cp. ibid. 194.11, doc. no. 10); Täsfanä Əgzi (son of Əngəda Əgziʾ, also səyyumä Əntərta and ᶜaqqabe ṣänṣän: Ḫ. during aṣe Wədəm Räᶜad's reign, cp. ibid. 199.25, doc. no. 15, dating to 1305); Baḥrä Asgäd (son of aṣe ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon, also səyyumä Əntərta, maʾəkälä baḥr, maʾəkälä təwazat and aqanṣan: Ḫ. during the reign of ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon, cp. ibid. 208.24, doc. no. 22, dating to 1328).

A 15th/16th cent. additional note in the Biblical ms. EMML no. 1768, fol. 88r, from Däbrä Ḥayq Əsṭifanos, reports a list of ancestors of ras ᶜAmdu, an important political figure also known to have been the governor (mäkʷännən) of Fäṭägar in the middle of the 15th cent. ᶜAmdu is said to have been the descendant of a family of Jewish immigrants from Aden, Yemen, who settled in Ethiopia at the time of the Zagʷe dynasty: the last named of the descendants in the list is given as ḥasgʷa Wäsän (cp. Getatchew Hayle in PICES 15, 252ff.; Taddesse Tamrat 1970: 112ff.). A connection of Fäṭägar with the title is not for sure confirmed by the Chronicle of aṣe Bäʾədä Maryam (PerrZarY 112), mentioning a "Fä<ṭäga>r Asgʷa", where text ("Ṭäfägar" in the manuscript, likely to be emended) and interpretation are uncertain (ᶜAsgʷa could be also attested as a personal name, cp., e.g., qäñ geta ᶜAsgʷaᶜ in the Mäṣḥafä ↗Aksum, CRAxum 46 [tr.], doc. no. 43).

The term is finally attested in the Acts of ↗ᶜAbiyä Əgziʾ, active in Northern Təgray but also in Lasta, in ms. BL Orient. 695, fols. 5r–63r (Acts and Miracles were written by several different hands), as well as in ms. ANLin Conti Rossini 55. The Acts, probably composed in the second half of the 14th cent., report a conflict between the saint and the ḥawsəgʷa (var. ḫawsəgʷa and ḥasgʷe), named Yətbaräk, quoted also as ḫawzəgʷa (var. ḥasgʷe) in the Miracles (cp. Conti Rossini 1938: 425ff.). The title is definitely the same as Ḫ. and is likely to be explained on the basis of an Agäw etymology, either connecting it with "egwā" and related words, meaning 'head, upper part', i.e. 'chief', in several Agäw languages (cp. ibid. 427, n. 3), or even linking it directly to the name of the Zagʷe dynasty, as a writing such as ḫawzəgʷa would seem to point to.

Ḥaṣīb Idlibī

Ḥ.I. (Amh. ሐሲብ ፡ ኢድሊቢ also known as Ydlibi; b. 1866, Beirut) was an important personality and administrator during the reigns of aṣe ↗Mənilək II and ləǧ ↗Iyasu. His father, probably a Syrian Christian, ᶜAbdullahī Idlibī, was a Turkish Consul and his mother was English.

To evade military service in Turkey, or, according to other sources, to escape from the threat of being imprisoned after he embezzled a large sum of money from the Turkish Customs where he worked, Ḥ.I. entered the employment of the Government of Cyprus in 1889 and became Inspector of Cyprus Military Police at Paphos in 1893, a position which he held until 1897 (FO 371/4393)

Dismissed from his office the same year, Ḥ.I. proceeded to Ethiopia, while he was working for the Kordofan Trading Company. He entered the service of aṣe ↗Mənilək II and rapidly acquired a position of great influence. He obtained a huge concession from Mənilək II for 300,000 acres of land on the ↗Baro River. There he experimented in planting different kinds of crops, particularly ↗cotton, with the result that he succeeded in obtaining cotton which produced longer and finer thread than that obtained from Egypt.

Eventually Ḥ.I., as a supporter of ləǧ Iyasu, became ↗näggadras of ↗Harär and governor of ↗Dərre Dawa during the latter's reign. He was believed to be a supporter of German interests in Ethiopia during ↗World War I. At the customs office in Dərre Dawa he removed Täfäri Mäkʷännən's (later aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I) supporters, who appealed in the matter to Täfäri (the then governor of Harärge) which led to considerable difficulties for Täfäri from Iyasu.

Ḥ.I. took advantage of his official position to embezzle money belonging to the Ethiopian government (from the Dərre Dawa and Harär customs). As a consequence, after the 1916 ↗Coup d'état (s. EAE vol. 2, 1081) the Ethiopian government decided to take action against Ḥ.I., and condemned him to death, but he escaped to Djibouti where he was promptly incarcerated by the French authorities, on the grounds that "the presence of this Turkish subject might provoke a dangerous agitation". He was subsequently interned with his family in France. The French government ultimately released Ḥ.I.'s family in 1919. When Ḥ.I. left Ethiopia in 1916, the Bank of Abyssinia and the Ethiopian government had claims of £ 59,000 against him.

In the 1920s Ḥ.I. tried to get permission to return to Ethiopia to access his possessions and filed a claim against the Ethiopian government worth 1,800,000 Maria Theresa thalers concerning properties owned by him in Ethiopia. Both the Ethiopian and the British governments prohibited Ḥ.I. from entering either Ethiopia or British territories surrounding the country.

Ḥ.I. was married to a Syrian, Miss Nicholes, and had a daughter by the name of May, who wrote his biography.

Hāšim al-Mīrġanī

Sayyid H. (Arab. هاشم بن محمد عثمان بن محمد أبي بكر الميرغني, Hāšim b. Muḥammad ᶜUṯmān b. Muḥammad Abī Bakr al-Mīrġanī, b. 1849, Mecca, d. September-October 1901, Massawa) was one of the youngest sons of Muḥammad ᶜUṯmān al-Mīrġanī, founder of the Ḫatmīya ↗Islamic brotherhood, and of a woman believed to be an "Abyssinian".

H. was sent from the Ḥiǧāz (↗Arabia) to ↗Massawa around 1860. Undoubtedly owing to his young age, he did not take any significant role of leadership in the Ḫatmīya order before the death of his brother ↗Muḥammad al-Ḥasan al-Mīrġanī (EAE vol. 5) in 1869. His brother's death also signalled the gradual fragmentation of the Ḫatmīya in north-eastern Africa and H. came to be the de facto leader of the order's "branch" in Eritrea. Little detail is known about his activities in Eritrea during the 1870s, yet he undoubtedly exercised authority (appointing *ḫalīfa*s, i.e. 'representatives') over groupings that followed the Ḫatmīya, such as the ↗Beni ᶜAmər, ↗Ḥabab, ↗ᶜAd Təmaryam, ↗ᶜAd Täkles, ↗Asaorta and others. The few known sources do not reveal an especially strong and effective man of action, although being the son of the founder of the Ḫatmīya vested him with much prestige in the eyes of adepts. At some point, after having stayed for a period of time in western Eritrea – where he married a woman from the Beni ᶜAmər – he moved to the coast and settled in ↗Ǝmkullu, near Massawa.

Following the Italian occupation of Massawa in 1885, the administration sought to co-opt H. to assist them in controlling Muslim communities coming under their authority. They paid him a monthly stipend and offered him the post of muftī of Massawa, which he declined. Throughout the 1880s and 1890s Italian colonial governors sought to establish relations of cooperation with H. but these attempts usually resulted in their frustration and complaints about what they saw as his disinclined and lethargic attitude. This logic of relations came to a head in 1898, when Governor Ferdinando ↗Martini went out of his way to persuade H. to transfer his seat from Massawa to ↗Käränn, where his authority over the Muslim "tribes" in western Eritrea would, Martini hoped, deflect adverse influences from beyond the colony's borders in the Sudan. These pressures bore no fruit, and H. died in 1901. Calculatingly, Martini tried to transport his remains to Kärän, but that initiative was met with the vehement opposition of the Muslim community in Massawa. Finally, the authorities financed the construction of his tomb/shrine in ↗Ḥəṭumlo (Miran 2009: 179–86).

H. left no male heir. He had two daughters Maryam (b. 1870/71, d. 1952) and ᶜAlawīya (b. 1892/93, d. 1940, s. ↗Ǧaᶜfar al-Mīrġanī). Among his very few writings one finds a prayer on the Prophet in two parts, Ṣalāt ᶜalā an-Nabī (O'Fahey 1994: 208f.).

H. is still venerated by Eritrean Muslims as a foremost holy man and a visitation to his tomb in Ḥəṭumlo is performed every year on 2 Ǧumāda II.

Jonathan Miran

Hasselblatt, Gunnar

H. (b. 19 August 1928, Reval, Estonia, d. 12 July 1997, Berlin) was a pastor of the Lutheran Church who became a fervent advocate of human rights in Ethiopia. Born a member of the Baltic German minority, H. studied theology, philology and became particularly interested in Islam and features of religious coexistence in north-eastern Africa. After his studies of theology in Bielefeld, Tübingen and Göttingen, the Lutheran Church of Hannover ordained H. and assigned him as pastor to Stade and Gladebeck. H. continued his studies on Islam and was awarded a doctoral degree. In 1969 the Church of Hannover seconded H. to the Islam in Africa Project for six years and he was sent to Ethiopia by the ↗Hermannsburger Mission where he worked until 1975.

During his sojourn in Ethiopia H. visited numerous stations of the ↗Ethiopian Evangelical Church Mekane Yesus (EECMY) and those of other Christian denominations as well as prominent Muslim centres (e.g., ↗Abret, s. EAE vol. 5) all over the country in order to discuss theological and practical questions of mutual interest. Although his partners were well aware of his position as a leading representative of a rival church or religion, nevertheless many of them gladly accepted his invitation to his house in Addis Abäba.

H. held seminars, gave lectures at the Mekane Yesus Theological Seminary and worked in the evangelism department of the EECMY. In this capacity he had close contact with the General Secretary of the EECMY, ↗Guddinaa Tumsaa, who was arrested and finally murdered by the Därg (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council) in 1979. When the Därg had come to power in 1974 H. witnessed ethnic, socio-economic and religious oppression which steadily grew and against which he began to raise his voice.

H. left Ethiopia in 1975 and was called by the Church of Berlin-Brandenburg and the Berliner Missionswerk to serve as secretary of church development services in the Horn of Africa, from where he provided logistical and financial help to Ethiopian refugees and asylum seekers in Europe as well as to persecuted dissidents from other countries of the Horn of Africa.

Of particular concern to H. were the ↗Oromo, whose exile groups he supported with humanitarian aid and with material support for their campaign of alphabetization in their own language. It was at his initiative that educational materials were provided by the Berlin Mission. Although H. never propagated violent resistance, the Därg regime suspected him of being an active supporter of the ↗Oromo Liberation Front (s. EAE vol. 5). He was therefore placed at the top of a list of persons, including Ulrich Braukämper, to be liquidated as alleged enemies of the Ethiopian state. An attempt to kill him by a letter bomb in Berlin failed on 22 March 1982.

H. never tired of publishing and speaking up against what he regarded as injustice, economic exploitation and political oppression in Ethiopia in general, and in particular, where it affected the Oromo. In order to draw attention to victims of drought, land deprivation, military recruitment, enforced ↗resettlement, etc. he attended meetings and conferences, reported to humanitarian associations such as Amnesty International, the Oromo Relief Association and cooperated closely with the Society for Endangered Peoples at Göttingen, Germany.

H's deep commitment to what he considered to be human rights and his search for pragmatic solutions sometimes conflicted with the interests of political institutions as well as those of his church.

H. was married to Elisabeth H. née Heuer, with whom he had had five children.

Ḫayraddīn

Ḫ. (Arab. خير الدين بن سعد الدين, Ḫayraddīn b. Saᶜdaddīn, Amh. ከረዲን, Käradin; d. 25 or 26 December 1445, Däwaro) was the brother of the ↗Walašmaᶜ ruler of ↗Ifat, Šihābaddīn ↗Aḥmad Badlāy. While the latter is said to have resided in ↗Dakar southeast of ↗Harär, Ḫ. had, probably as his governor (deputy), his own residence in Raḫla.

Ḫ. took part in several insurrections against Christian Ethiopia and was famous for his braveness. He accompanied his brother during the invasion into the Ethiopian-ruled part of ↗Däwaro. After Aḥmad Badlāy was defeated and killed in a battle at Gomit (Agbära; ↗Egubba) by the troops of aṣe ↗Zärᵓa Yaᶜəqob on Christmas day in 1445, Ḫ. first managed to flee. He managed to escape as far as the River Awaš, but was captured and killed on a resting place by the Žan Ṣägäna, a ↗military unit (s. EAE vol. 5) sent after him by Zärᵓa Yaᶜəqob. Ḫ. was decapitated, and his head was brought to the Christian Emperor.

Franz-Christoph Muth

Henze, Paul Bernard

H. (b. 29 August 1924, Redwood Falls, Minnesota, d. 19 May 2011, Culpeper, Virginia) was an American intelligence officer in Ethiopia from 1968 to 1972 who subsequently travelled extensively in and wrote frequently about Ethiopia.

H. earned his B.A. from St. Olaf College, Minnesota, and his M.A. from Harvard University in 1950. He served in the U.S. Army in Europe during ↗World War II and spent many years with Radio Free Europe in Munich. His service with the CIA included tours in Ethiopia and Turkey. H. was a senior staff member in the National Security Council under President Jimmy Carter's security advisor Zbigniew Brzezinski. After the outbreak of the Ethio–Somali war in 1977, H. undertook a critical mission to Ethiopia to assess its prospects and the appropriate US response.

H. retired from government service in 1980 and became a Wilson Fellow at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington before joining the Washington based advisory think tank, RAND Corporation, in 1982 as a senior consultant. During this period, H. wrote extensively on Ethiopia and Central Asia. Funded by RAND he visited Ethiopia many times during the regime of the ↗Provisional Military Administrative Council (Därg) and returned to Ethiopia almost annually after the fall of the Därg until the last few years of his life.

H. often travelled in Ethiopia and collaborated with Stanislaw ↗Chojnacki (s. EAE vol. 5, founder of the Museum of the ↗Institute of Ethiopian Studies) on topics related to Ethiopian Church art and paintings. H. provided Chojnacki with many photographs which the latter used in his publications.

Although best known for his book on the 1981 attempted assassination of Pope John Paul II, H. wrote most frequently on Ethiopia. His first book, Ethiopian Journeys (1977), described his travels through Wällo, Təgray, Eritrea, Arsi, Harär, Bale and Goǧǧam from 1969 to 1972 (republished Addis Abäba 2001). An irrepressible traveller and an excellent photographer, his books often contained his own photographs. H. published a concise history of Ethiopia under the title Layers of Time (2000). He was a frequent presenter at conferences concerning the Horn of Africa, including many of the ↗International Conferences of Ethiopian Studies as well as contributor to the EAE. H. left an enormous archive of clippings, monographs, memorabilia and especially photographs on Ethiopia.

H.'s wife Martha Heck Henze, also involved in ↗Ethiopian Studies, died 2009. They are outlived by their six children.

Ḥusayn Aḥmad

Ḥ.A. (Ar. حسين أحمد, Amh. ሑሴን ፡ አሕመድ, Eng. Hussein Ahmed; b. 22 September 1952, Gädam Ančaro, Qalluu wäräda, South Wällo, d. 7 June 2009, Addis Abäba) was one of the most outstanding Ethiopian historians. It is mainly thanks to his scholarship that the study of ↗Islam in Ethiopia has become a fully accepted branch of ↗Ethiopian studies (Hussein Ahmed in PICES 16).

Ḥ.A. completed his schooling in ↗Däse, and subsequently enrolled at ↗Addis Ababa University (AAU) where he attended the history courses of ↗Märəd Wäldä Arägay (s. EAE vol. 5) and Taddäsä Tammərat. In 1977 he presented his senior essay on ↗Gäbrä Śəllase's chronicle of the reign of aṣe ↗Mənilək II and was subsequently invited to join the AAU staff.

In 1980, Ḥ.A. went to the ↗United Kingdom for graduate studies. He obtained his second degree in history from the University of Birmingham for his edition of the earliest version of the Mənilək chronicle (Hussein Ahmed 1985) and his Ph.D. from the same university for his thesis Clerics, Traders and Chiefs: A Historical Study of Islam in Wallo (Ethiopia), with Particular Emphasis on the Nineteenth Century (published by Brill in 2001 as HusIslam).

From 1978 until his death Ḥ.A. was active teaching at AAU, as Full Professor from February 2002. He attended numerous conferences, including eight ↗International Conferences of Ethiopian Studies and contributed to a large number of international publications and projects, including vols. 1–5 of the EAE, where he was also active as a field specialist.

Ever since the early 1980s, Ḥ.A.'s main research interest was the history and culture of Islam in Ethiopia. He was the first to demonstrate (in his Ph.D. thesis, and later, e.g., in PICES 8; in PICES 9; in HirKrSaints; 2005; 2010a) that the Muslim culture of ↗Wällo is in no way inferior to that of ↗Harär. Ḥ.A. was a keen observer of the concerns of the Ethiopian Islamic communities during and after the fall of the Därg regime (e.g., in PICES 12; 2006) and the main cultural and religious trends in contemporary Ethiopian Islam as mirrored in the newly created Islamic literary production and periodical ↗press (e.g., in PICES 11; 1998a; 1998b; 1998c). The connections of Ethiopian Muslims with the wider Islamic world both in the past as well as in the present are also recurring topics of Ḥ.A.'s articles (2000ab).

Ḥ.A. always founded his studies on an attentive critical review of first-hand sources (manuscripts, books, newspapers, magazines or oral informants) and of the available scientific literature: a methodology which should be considered exemplar for the next generation of scholars in Ethiopian studies.

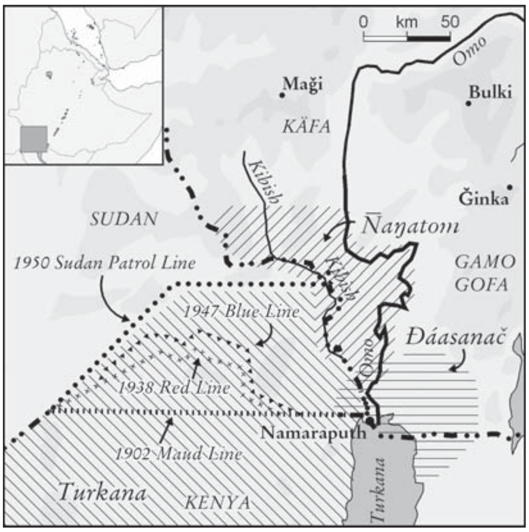
Ilemi Triangle

The I.T. (also Illemi Triangle, Ilembi Triangle, or Elemi Triangle) is a disputed triangular territory bordering Ethiopia in the east, the ↗Sudan in the west and ↗Kenya to the south. The size of the area varies between 10,000 km² and 14,000 km² according to the political point of view. Its eastern extremity is the northern tip of Lake ↗Turkana. The I.T. owes its existence to various, mostly disputed, border agreements, between the preceding administrations of the aforementioned states, since 1902 (↗Boundaries). The I.T. takes its name from the name of an ↗Añwaa king Ilemi Akwon (Amutabi 2010: 23; Collins 2005: 5) and is traditionally used by the Toposa, ↗Ñaŋatom, ↗Đáasanač and the ↗Turkana for pasture and grazing. Managing pastoral conflicts in the area as well as taxation were the prime concerns of the respective administrations of the region, especially the East African Protectorate. Thus various proposals for new borderlines in the region were made but were never finally ratified by the abutting states.

In 1907, aṣe ↗Mənilək II signed an agreement with the British defining the southern boundary of Ethiopia. This agreement provided for Ethiopia access to Lake Turkana and for the pastoralist groups of the region for grazing and water on either side of the boundary. The agreement was based on the 1902 Kenyan–Ethiopian boundary demarcation known as the Maud Line, after Major Philip Maud of the Royal Engineers.



The issues concerning the Ugandan–Sudanese boundary commission of 1914 included the Turkana grazing grounds, and Sudanese access to Lake Turkana "through a lozenge of land known as the Ilemi Appendix" (Nene Mburu 2003: 21). The Maud Line was ratified by the Sudanese, Ugandan and the Kenyan colonial administrations in 1914, referred to as the 1914 Line.

During ↗World War I the Ethiopian government armed the Ñaŋatom and Đáasanač, who intensified their raids on the Turkana. In 1918 the governments of Kenya, Uganda and Sudan collaborated in a patrol to pacify the three ethnic groups and pave the way for a civil administration of the region (Faisal 1975: 39). After the establishment of the Lokitaung post in 1928 proposals were made to create a proper border in order to protect the Turkana from ongoing raids. Prior to this, the Sudanese authorities gave the Kenyan authorities a free hand for military action in Sudanese territory (NAK, Secret. 1/15/20). This led to the establishment of the so-called Red Line in 1931, which was extended to include certain waterholes in 1932. Proposed as the 1939 Line – or Wakefield Line – it was still a weak border and, in 1939 and 1940, continuous raids on the Turkana were reported "well behind Red Line" (ibid.). The de facto transfer of Sudanese territory to Kenya was combined with an older idea to exchange the "Baro Salient" (cp. ↗Baro) of ↗Gambella with the I.T. (Faisal 1975; 1976). The idea to exchange territory and adjust the border was first proposed in 1913 (Collins 2005: 9). The aim was to put all Añwaa and ↗Nuer of Gambella under Sudanese authority and to place them in Sudanese territory. During the Italian occupation the administration of Ethiopia rejected this proposal however (ibid.). The development of ↗World War II had further far-reaching effects on the Turkana and Đáasanač. While the latter were armed by the Italians many Turkana came into the service of the British as irregular troops and frontier scouts and skirmishes between the groups intensified. In 1940 Turkana were also taking part in the ↗War of Liberation and the capture of the town of ↗Mağı (Lamphear 1992: 250). The Italians in Ethiopia had never exercised full control over the Ñaŋatom and Đáasanač, and raids on the Turkana continued, leading to punitive measures, including British air-raids in the region (Nene Mburu 2003: 24).

Between 1945–47 border issues between Ethiopia and Kenya were reported as "Ethiopian askaris made repeated attempts to establish themselves at Kibish [Kibiš] Wells 1000 yards (= 914.4 m) inside British territory" (NAK, Secret. 1/15/20). These territorial claims coincided with the establishment of the Blue Line (an extension of the Red Line) that was agreed upon by the Sudanese authorities and brought back the hope of finally demarcating the border "since the Ethiopians are demanding (in exchange for what is desired by the Sudan) a strip of territory which includes a part of the Ilemi Triangle […]" (NAK, Secret. 5/167/42). No agreement was made and on the contrary claims for Kenyan territory, especially on Namaraputh intensified in the 1950s (NAK, Secret.1/15/24) leading to diplomatic tension between the two administrations and to renewed attempts to define the Ethiopia-Kenya boundary between 1951–57 (NAK, BB/11/150).

The border negotiations came to a standstill at the outbreak of the first civil war in the southern Sudan and have not yet been resumed. During the war though, Kenya with the accord of the Sudan Peoples' Liberation Army occupied the area and in the 1990s expanded the grazing grounds of the Turkana through forced ↗resettlement of the other groups (Johnson 2010: 99).

The future of the I.T. is still uncertain and will closely depend on the developments in the South Sudan after independence from the Republic of Sudan as well as the outcome of consecutive oil explorations in the region.

Industry

I. Industry in Ethiopia until 1941

While ↗handicrafts in Ethiopia date back to ancient times, I. in the modern sense of the word, began slowly only in the 19th cent. Prior to that, production in Ethiopia was based almost entirely on domestic I. and subsistence ↗economy. Despite foreign contacts, and the advent of artisans from abroad, productive activity outside the home, let alone operated by machinery, was slow to emerge.

First mechanical establishments

The first recorded mechanical mill was a flour-mill at ↗Č̣äläqot, then capital of Təgray. Constructed early in the 19th cent. by a Greek Muslim called Nāṣir ^{c}Ali this machine was pulled by a horse (SalTrav 360f.).

Centres of productive activity were established in the 19th cent. by monarchs interested in ↗firearms, gun-powder and ammunition. At his palaces in ↗Ankobär and ↗Angoläla, nəguś ↗Śahlä Śəllase of Šäwa employed 600 craftsmen, a large proportion of whom served his military interests. Such artisans included ↗blacksmiths (↗Iron), gunsmiths, gun-powder-makers, and makers of ↗spears, ↗swords and shields, besides weavers (↗Weaving) of cloth and makers of decorations for the aristocracy. The first mechanical enterprise recorded was an iron works established during the 1840s near Śahlä Śəllase by the Čaha River, near Ankobär (HarAeth vol. 2, 100f.). He also had a stream-driven flour-mill, constructed by a Greek (↗Greece, relations with) called Demetrios, which was for a time abandoned on account of opposition from the clergy. On one occasion the nəguś expressed an interest in having a coin-making machine (Combes – Tamisier 1838: 349; HarAeth vol. 2, 31, 44, 100f., 261f.; IsKrapf 62, 137; Johnson 1844: 60; PankHist I, 289f.).

Starting from the 1860s aṣe ↗Tewodros, an innovator in many respects, availed himself of German and Swiss Protestant artisans-cum-missionaries (most of them from ↗St. Chrischona) and other Europeans in constructing cannon guns. They were stationed at ↗Gafat, in the neighbourhood of his capital, ↗Däbrä Tabor, but their equipment was primitive, consisting of 30 small crucibles heated on fires in the ground fanned with traditional skin-bellows. In 1867, their activities were abandoned on account of political instability (FusTeo 104–07, 116f.; Dufton 1867: 77–86, 93–104; PankEcon 53ff.; CrumMis 128, 132, 137; PankHist II, 61).

Some small-scale industrial activity was subsequently introduced into Təgray during the reign of aṣe ↗Yohannəs IV. Even before attaining the imperial throne he had a good foreign-equipped workshop at his palace at ↗ᶜAdwa (Girard 1873: 192, 142f.). Several foreign gunsmiths, among them the Frenchman Baraglion, later made their way to ᶜAdwa, which also had several gunpowder-mills run by a German (Smith 1890: 244f.; PankHist II, 101f.). A Frenchman at nearby Säbarguma meanwhile operated a mechanical saw-mill (De Cosson 1877: 36). There was likewise a royal workshop at ↗Däbrä Marqos in Goǧǧam, where nəguś ↗Täklä Haymanot had a smithy in his palace which allegedly constructed a carriage with wheels (Matteucci 1890: 250f.; PankHist II, 147). Small workshops were also set up at two European mission stations, ↗Ǝmkullu and Kärän (PankHist II, 138, 144).

Early industrialization

No further significant industrial activity occurred until the last years of aṣe ↗Mənilək II, when efforts were made, mainly by private entrepreneurs in Addis Abäba and beside the Aqaqi River, to process agricultural products for local consumption. In 1908, a mechanical grinding mill for grain operated by an internal combustion engine was erected opposite the Addis Abäba ↗gəbbi. In the next few decades several similar mills using either motor or hydro-electric power were established in the principal urban centres. In 1906 the Greek Polydoros Zecou set up an oil factory using Krupp's German equipment. Zecou's initiative was followed by several other entrepreneurs, including the Indian ↗Mohamedally & Company (↗Indians). Meanwhile, the first distillery had been established by a Greek concern, Divanakis-Ghanotakis, whilst the first brewery, St. George, was set up by a German concern in 1923. The first soap factory was established early in the 20th cent. by a Frenchman, M. Trouillet, who soon met with competitors, mainly of Greek origin, such as N.A. Halcoussis. The ↗Armenians Stephan Darakdjian and Avedis Sevadjian were the first to establish modern tanneries. In 1928, the first shoe factory was established. Mechanical weaving was introduced by a Greek, O. Scarpidis. The production of ↗tobacco and cigarettes, a monopoly of the State, was started by government-run manufacturers in Addis Abäba and Dərre Dawa (Altenburg 2010: 22).

Other early enterprises were also established to service local building activities. The early years of the century witnessed the setting up of several brick factories, mechanical saw-mills and carpentry shops as well as an ammunition factory run by hydro-electric power at Aqaqi, some 32 km south of the capital (Mérab 1922: 130, 134; ZerEth 144–47; PankEcon 710).

Though the subsequent Italian occupation (1936–41; ↗Africa Orientale Italiana) was characterized by massive Italian investment, I. received a much lower priority than both road and house-building. As with other colonialist policies, the Italian administration avoided competition between the colonies and Italian I.; the colonies should rather provide a market for the goods manufactured in metropolitan Italy. Industrial activity in the empire was therefore centred mainly in areas where it was difficult or impossible to rely on Italian imports. Industrial development was largely geared to transportation and construction needs as well as to the processing of foodstuffs for local (Italian) consumption. Activity during the occupation included the establishment of garages, car repair workshops, stone quarries, brick factories, a cement factory in Dərre Dawa and an electric power plant. Flour mills, oil presses, a macaroni factory and a number of bottling concerns were also built during that period (Fossa 1938; Sbacchi 1980: 245–347; Pankhurst 1971: 74f.).

Local production assumed enhanced importance after 1938, when expectation of Italy's imminent entry into the European war resulted in a policy of colonial autarchy (Basile-Giannini 1940).

II. Ethiopian industry from 1941

During the time of the ↗British Military Administration of Ethiopia (s. EAE vol. 5) some small-scale industries emerged; these were associated with the Italians who stayed after the fall of the ↗Africa Orientale Italiana (Spencer 2006: 111; but Pankhurst 1996). A few factories, using machinery left by the Italians also opened, such as the ↗Dərre Dawa cotton factory.

During the period of reconstruction, 1941–52, industrial development was weak (Eshetu Chole 1995: 199ff.). In 1943–44, a ten year programme of industrial development was worked out by the United States Technical Project Mission in Ethiopia. Foreign loans, mostly from the ↗United States, combined with state investment boosted capital expenditure in manufacturing I. In 1955, the number of manufacturers in Ethiopia and Eritrea was 71 and 79, respectively; the number of people employed in this sector being 20,000. Major producers in Ethiopia were working textiles, sugar, vegetable oils and wheat flour industries; in Eritrea, meat factories, salt works and breweries (EthObs 5, 1957, 146f.). Although I. only accounted for 1.6 % of the GDP, exports and imports almost tripled between 1944 and 1954. The chief export product was ↗coffee, whilst manufactured goods formed the bulk of imports (EthObs 3, 4, 1959, 105–35; 1, 5, 1957, 175; 3, 4, 1959, 132f.; 4, 6, 1960).

In the 1950s, manufacturing I. surged. Between 1953 and 1957 manufacturing nearly doubled and a number of modern enterprises were created (Eshetu Chole 1995: 205f.). These were mostly owned by expatriates or by Ethiopians with foreign background and continued to be concentrated in or near Addis Abäba. An exception was the sugar plantation and refinery in ↗Wänči, built in 1954 by the Dutch firm N.V. Handelsvereeniging Amsterdam (HVA). The new enterprises in the area of Addis Abäba included the state-owned slaughterhouse in ↗Aqaqi and the tannery and Darmar Shoe factories in Little Aqaqi, both owned by the Darakdjian family. Another family of ↗Armenian origin, Sevadjian, managed the Assco Shoe Factory in the capital. Other facilities were the Cerealia Factory, the Astron Macaroni Factory, the Diabaco Cotton Spinning Factory, the Sack and Rope Factory and the United Oil Mills and Soap Factory, the latter owned by the ↗Greek family Halcousis (Lentakis ca. 2005: 227; EthObs 1, 5, 1957, 152ff.; 6, 2, 1962, 115ff.). In 1957, with the help of Yugoslav experts, the First Five Year Plan of ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I's government was launched. Strategic areas of the plan were infrastructure development and processing industries catering for the domestic market (cf. Eshetu Chole 1995: 210).

The mining I. saw some developments during this period. In 1961 a concession was granted to the United States Parsons Company to mine potash in Dallol (↗ᶜAfar Depression). ↗Gold production at Adola continued but still used traditional methods. In addition, clay and Jurassic limestone was quarried at Dəre Dawa to produce cement. Other mineral undertakings included the production of manganese ore (EthObs 6, 3, 1962, 186ff.).

During the 1960s two more five year plans (1963–67 and 1968–73) were implemented. They continued to emphasize import substitution and also aimed at developing the energy sector, mining as well as commercial ↗agriculture and transport. Between 1960 and 1965, manufacturing grew by about 17 % annually and commercial agriculture, particularly coffee, surged.

The country's industrial structure changed considerably during this period. In 1972/73 the contribution of agriculture to the GDP declined to 54.6 %, while that of the industrial sector increased to 15.4 % and that of services up to 30 %. Employment in the manufacturing I. increased from less than 28,000 in 1961 to more than 48,000 in 1965. Similarly, the volume of manufacture exports increased, from 10 million bərr in 1961 to 18 million in 1965 (Eshetu Chole 1995: 216ff.)

In the late 1960s and early 1970s, however, industrial growth stagnated. This was the result of climatic and social factors, such as the drought and famine of 1973 (↗Famines), combined with lower investment and failure to implement institutional reforms (Eshetu Chole 1995: 218ff.). In addition, some aspects of Ethiopian I. faced chronic problems, hindering its development and efficiency; these included excessive protectionism and low competition within the manufacturing sector and extreme reliance on foreign capital and inputs (ibid. 223ff.). Hence, on the eve of the ↗Revolution industrial growth achieved its lowest level (5.5 %) since independence.

During the Därg (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council) period, major I., banking, insurance and land ownership were nationalized. The Socialist-driven regime implemented a radical land reform (↗Land tenure) and centrally directed planning of the economy. As of 1975, some 200 companies had been nationalized. The early years of the new regime were characterized by a sharp decline in production and discontinuation of investments (Clapham 1988: 114f., 148).

In the early 1980s a Ten Year Perspective Plan for the 1984–94 period was launched. The plan, with Eastern European help, focused on the construction of a small number of large factories, in order to boost growth in the different sectors of the economy. It failed, however, to secure its objectives and GDP increase and industrial output did not match the growth of the previous regime, or that of the population. Additionally, the balance of ↗trade was negative throughout most of the period, with the trade deficit becoming chronic (Clapham 1988: 117ff., 120, 148f.).

A remarkable development during the Därg regime was the intensification of foreign aid. Whilst, previously, aid had mostly been provided by the United States, under the new regime the number of donors and contributions grew. The main aid donors became the Soviet Union (↗Russia, relations with) and the European Union (Clapham 1988: 122f.; ↗Development issues).

After the fall of the Därg in 1991, the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front initiated a swift move towards controlled liberalization of the economy. The government privatized many state-owned firms, encouraged competition, and reduced government intervention in trade and factor markets. Ownership of land and strategic industries and services, however, remained with the state. During the first years of the new regime, industrial production has grown from the 3.6 % of the previous regime to 5.6 %. Skin and leather production became Ethiopia's main manufactured export product, accounting for 74 % of all manufacturing exports in 2002. The floral I. which had begun in the 1980s under the Därg, thanks to Indian and Dutch investment, grew in importance since the late 1990s (Altenburg 2010: 24f.).

Starting from 2004, and due to favourable agro-climatic conditions, high coffee prices, considerable inflows of aid and remittances, as well as a boom in construction, the Ethiopian economy has grown at 11 % annually. The share of manufacturing in GDP has stagnated at 5 %, and virtually all exports are still unprocessed or at best semi-processed. In recent years the country's dependence on coffee as the main earner of foreign exchange has increased. While in 1967 coffee exports amounted to 55.7 % of total exports by value, in 1998 it covered 67 %. Other important export products include oilseeds, ↗čạt, pulses, skins, meat and meat products (Love 2001: 236; Altenburg 2010: 5).

The technological level of firms in Ethiopia is very low. Chemical, electrical/electronic, metal-processing and other engineering I. are almost non-existent. Likewise, production of agricultural inputs is insignificant. Ethiopia has a huge and rapidly growing current account deficit and exports finance less than 22 % of imports. Fuel, most capital goods and manufactured consumer goods are imported (Altenburg 2010: 5f.).

According to Altenburg (2010: 8), a great majority of firms (↗Business organizations) in Ethiopia are to be classified as "micro" or "small". In 2003 the micro enterprise manufacturing sector employed 1.3 million people and only 98,000 worked in small manufacturing enterprises. This economic sector mainly relies on self-employment. About half of the micro enterprises produced food and beverages, 23 % textiles and garments. Grain mills make up 85 % of small scale businesses. Most of urban employment can be found in the informal sector (firms with less than five employees) which is growing faster than the formal sector. Between 1999 and 2005, informal employment increased by 144 % compared to only 16 % in formal employment (Altenburg 2010: 8).

Energy and environmental issues

Prior to the arrival of the Italians, electric power was in short supply and was operated by two Greeks, Petropulakis and Karlafiis (Lentakis ca. 2005: 57). Industries relied largely on their own production using private power installations. Later the Italians established Coniel, which became the main supplier of electricity for the capital and they built a modest hydro-electric dam on the ↗Awaš River (Spencer 2006: 109). In 1939–40, using earlier Italian surveys, a small dam and hydroelectric plant were built at Abba Samuʾel on the Aqaqi River. In 1960 the ↗Qoqa barrage, which was financed though reparation payments from Italy, was completed. The barrage more than doubled the output of electricity in Ethiopia and paved the way for the country's independence from thermal electricity, which relied on imported fuel (EthObs 4, 8, 1960; 6, 2, 1962, 117ff.). In the late 1960s, with the help of Russian engineers, a refinery was built (EthObs 11, 1, 1967).

Today, the vast majority of Ethiopia's existing capacity (85 %) is hydroelectric (↗Water). Most traditional energy sources are used for cooking and lighting, and thus energy consumption is dominated by the domestic sector, which represents 89 % of energy consumed, mostly in rural homes. Ethiopia has significant oil and gas reserves which are not being exploited. The Ethiopian Electric Power Corporation (EEPCO) is constructing several new generating facilities to provide electricity to Ethiopia (cp. ↗Täkkäze; ↗Abbay; ↗Gibe). Currently, less than half of Ethiopia's towns have access to electricity, though EEPCO electrified more than 80 towns between 2001 and 2003. Since most of Ethiopia's electricity is generated from hydroelectric dams, the country's power system is vulnerable to extended droughts.

I. development has given rise to environmental and health issues that need yet to be properly addressed. The Ethiopian workers from the Wänči sugar plantation have suffered from problems related to excess fluoride in local underground water. In addition, workers' dwellings were constructed using asbestos. In the floral I., use of fertilizers has provoked excess salinization of the soil and some of the agrochemicals used by the I. are carcinogenic. The Aqaqi and Moǧǧo rivers have been used for decades to discharge industrial waste from their surroundings thus turning them into the two most polluted rivers in the country. The two rivers flow into Lake Qoqa and this finally into the Awaš River, all of which have since been polluted to a large extent. The 1959-founded Ethiopia Tannery Share Company operates as a subsidiary of the British multinational Pittards Plc. Its Qoqa facility has discharged much chemical waste into the lake (Zinabu – Pearce 2003: 175).

Furthermore, the ecological impact of the hydroelectric projects carried out in the last decades as well as of those still under projection has not yet received due attention.

III. Industry in Eritrea

During the colonial times and the ↗Africa Orientale Italiana, the Italians fostered agriculture and the production of goods catering for local needs. Agriculture was concentrated in the west, in ↗Kärän, ↗ᶜAq̱ordät and along the ↗Gaš River, the chief products being doum palm and ↗cotton. In 1938, cotton production yielded 280 tons. However, after 1941 cultivation was abandoned but soon reintroduced by the Sviluppo Agricolo Industriale. The Barattolo cotton spinning factory was also opened. Other important agriculture and food – mostly fruits and vegetables – producers were the Ditta Barattolo, Casciani, De Nadai, Tagliero and Ortola. In ↗Massawa and ↗ᶜAsäb, salt and dried ↗fish factories have operated since Italian times, chief among them was the Saline di Massaua active since 1905.

During this period, most of the food processing factories were found in and around ↗Asmära. The capital's facilities included the INCODE (later SOPRAL) meat factory, Industria Vini Asmara, Ufficio Vendite Acque Minerali Sorgive. The Marazzani dairy company operated in ↗Ḫalḫal. In 1939, the Melotti Brewery and Distillery (Distillerie Eritree Melotti) was opened, which was later to change its name to Asmara Brewery. In the same year the Industria Ceramica Tabacchi started operating.

During the period of the ↗Ethiopian–Eritrean Federation, industrial capacity was intentionally largely shifted to Ethiopia, leaving the Eritrean industrial sector with outmoded capital equipment. I. established during this time included the African Match and Paper Factory (in 1954 by Giulio Biasiolo; EthObs 3, 7, 1959, 228ff.) and the Industria Maglieria Asmara.

By the time of its independence from Ethiopia in 1993, Eritrea's economy had been destroyed by war and was dependent on revenue from ports and its small agricultural base. Due to high operating costs, the country's sole oil refinery, at ᶜAsäb, was closed in 1997. It had a refining capacity of 18,000 barrels per day. Ethiopia nationalized Eritrea's 42 largest factories and systematically dismantled the Eritrean industrial sector during the protracted civil war. By the end of the war all production had thus stopped.

The onset of conflict with Ethiopia, which lasted from 1998 to 2000, halted all bilateral trade, severely reducing port activity and the associated revenue in Eritrea. Missed opportunities in the form of planting of crops in Eritrea's most productive western region caused food production to drop by 62 %. The displacement of one million Eritreans as a result of the war with Ethiopia, multi-year drought, and the widespread presence of land mines have all played a role in the decline of productivity of the agricultural sector. More recently, however, informal trade with Ethiopia has resumed across the border. The main products exchanged are Eritrean ↗salt and Ethiopian cereals.

In recent years, manufacturing has recovered. In 2002, there were approximately 2,000 manufacturing companies operating in the country. Items produced included beverages, processed foods, ↗tobacco, leather, textiles, metal products, chemicals, printing, non-metallic minerals, construction materials, salt, paper, and matches, and, at present, precious metals such as ↗gold. The government sought to privatize these industries and issued incentives such as exemptions from income tax, preferential treatment in allocation of foreign exchange for imports, and provisions for remittance of foreign exchange abroad.

In 2003 agriculture employed nearly 80 % of the population but accounted for only 12.4 % of gross domestic product (GDP) in Eritrea. Major agricultural products are millet, sorghum, ṭef, wheat and barley, beans and lentils, dairy products, meat and skins.

Eritrea exports fish and sea cucumbers from the ↗Red Sea to markets in Europe and Asia. In 2002 exports amounted to some 14,000 tons. Italian and Dutch investors built a fish processing plant in 1998 that now exports 150 tons of frozen fish every month to markets mainly in Europe and the Near East. However, tensions flared up in 1995 and again in 2002 with the ↗Yemen over fishing rights in the contested ↗Ḥaniš islands. The dispute was eventually settled through international arbitration in favour of the Yemen, which decreased Eritrea's capacity to export fish.

Sheep, goats, cattle (especially zebu), and camels make up the majority of Eritrea's livestock. In 2001, Eritrea had 2,100,000 sheep, 1,700,000 goats, 1,950,000 head of cattle, 75,000 camels, and 1.4 million chickens. Total meat production that year was 30,900 tons; cow's milk, 39,200 tons; and eggs, 2,000 tons. The government is emphasizing the development of agriculture and animal husbandry in order to decrease the reliance on international relief and aid.

Eritrea's substantial mineral deposits are largely unexplored as a consequence of the long-standing colonial occupation. The Mining Company Eritrea S.A. has been operating since the early 1950s in the mining centres of southwest Eritrea. Artisanal mining in 1998 collected 573.4 kgs of gold. The country also has excellent potential for quarrying ornamental marble and granite. As of 2001, some ten mining companies (including Canadian and South African firms) had obtained licenses to prospect for different minerals in the Gaš Barka zone.

In 2005, I. had a 26.3 % share of GDP; services were the largest sector with a 65 % participation in the economy; agriculture was the least economically important sector (with only an 8.7 % share in the GDP), but was by far the largest employer (80 % of the total labour force).

Households consume more than 80 % of total energy production. Electricity production in 2001 was estimated at 220.5 million kilowatt-hours. Consumption for that year was estimated at 205.1-kilowatt hours. An 88-megawatt electricity plant funded by Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, and Abu Dhabi was completed in ↗Ḥərgigo in 2003, but the completion had been delayed by nearly three years due to the war with Ethiopia. Annual consumption of petroleum in 2001 was estimated at 370,000 tons.

Infancy Gospel of Thomas

The I.G.T. (CANT no. 57) is an apocryphal gospel found in Greek, Latin, Syriac, Arabic, Georgian, Gəᶜəz, Old Slavonic, Irish and, fragmentarily, Coptic versions. It is believed that the text was originally composed in Greek, and that the Syriac version is the earliest translation.

The I.G.T. contains a varying number of episodes telling stories about Jesus's early years and the unusual deeds or miracles he performed at the time. However, the character of Jesus as presented in the I.G.T. is not in agreement with the ethical standards known from the canonical ↗Gospels. He appears as an arrogant and vengeful child who punishes other children and adults for petty offences (Chartrand–Burke 2008:135).

It is not certain where the I.G.T. was composed, but, due to parallels to some Jewish stories, Palestine seems to be a probable place, although Antioch has also been suggested (ibid. 132f.). As to the time of composition, the 2nd cent. is accepted as the most plausible because material of I.G.T. is found in other early Christian texts of a similar date, such as the Epistula Apostolorum (late 2nd cent.).

It is not known when the Gəᶜəz translation of the I.G.T. (without attribution to Thomas) was made. The Vorlage seems to have been Greek (cp. van Rompay 1980; Gerö 1988: 167; Voicu 1998: 19–23) which points to the Aksumite period. It was also observed that there are close parallels between the Gəᶜəz and the Syriac versions (Gerö 1971: 53).

One may surmise that the early transmission of the I.G.T. into Gəᶜəz took place as a separate composition, but there is no independent textual evidence for this supposition. The I.G.T. text appears to have been incorporated into the collection of The Miracles of Jesus (↗Täʾammərä Iyäsus, T.I.). This version (as published by Grébaut, his numbers in parentheses) includes the following episodes: 1 (1–2): Jesus forms birds of clay on the Sabbath and makes them fly; 2 (3): Jesus causes a boy who had destroyed his pond to wither; 3 (4–5): Jesus curses a boy who hit him, and the boy dies; 4 (6–9): Jesus shows his wisdom to the teacher Zacchaeus (Zäkewos); he recites the alphabet and embarrasses the teacher by showing that the teacher does not understand what alpha is; 5 (10): Jesus resuscitates a boy who had died after he had fallen from a roof; 6 (11): Jesus brings water home in his cloak; 7 (12): Jesus helps Joseph in his carpentry work; 8 (13): Jesus embarrasses another teacher by asking him what alpha and beta is; the teacher beats Jesus and dies forthwith; 9 (14): Another teacher is surprised by Jesus' knowledge; 10 (15): Jesus heals his brother James who had been bitten by a snake; 11 (16): Joseph and ↗Mary, looking for Jesus, find him in the Temple discussing the Scriptures with learned men (a paraphrase of Lk 2:41–52); 12 (17): Jesus walks on or rides a sun beam; 13 (18): Jesus reaps a rich harvest from a field.

In the T.I. manuscripts the I.G.T. material is gathered into a larger text item, i.e. one episode of T.I. contains all the miracles of the I.G.T. In some manuscripts their place within the collection respects the chronology of the narrative (Grébaut 1985:75–91), and they appear as the 8th or 9th miracle, whereas in others they are placed at the end (Arras – van Rompay 1975:139). This latter version is certainly older and is a result of a simple addition of the I.G.T. material to the already existing collection of T.I. (the Arabic original of which does not contain I.G.T.). The next step was, as might be expected, to move that addition to a chronologically more suitable place in the T.I.

However, not all the manuscripts of the T.I. contain I.G.T., and the number of episodes is not constant. In fact there are other versions of the T.I. that contain less episodes or, conversely, additions. One was indicated by Arras – van Rompay (1975:142), miracle 14: Jesus mixes the ink colours of his teacher and then separates them.

Another version can be found in the manuscript Gondar XXVI of the Ṭana Qirqos Church from the reign of aṣe ↗Täklä Haymanot II. According to Jäger (1960:383ff., his numbers in parentheses) there are only 5 episodes: (21) = 1, but in a different version: Jesus forms the birds together with other children; (23) = 4, here the teacher's name is spelled Sekios; (24) combination of 10 and 12; (25) = 6; (26) = 7, with the addition of healing a woman bitten by a snake (a variant of 10) and of a variant of 8.

Another set of I.G.T. tales found its way into the Story of Mary (↗Nägärä Maryam, s. EAE vol. 5; N.M.). The N.M. set often contains the episodes 1, 8, 11, 12 and 14 of those known from the T.I., usually in a developed version, and adds the following: 1. Jesus changes the children who were forbidden to play with him into monkeys (or donkeys in some versions) and chases ill-tempered dogs after them; 2. the parents are upset and plot to kill Mary but Jesus summons the angels to bring a beast which devours many of them; 3. (a variant of T.I. no. 6): Jesus is sent to fetch water, breaks the vessel; he is punished by Mary who hits him, but he brings the water in his garment and puts the pieces of the broken vessel together; 4. Jesus runs from home; Salome, the maiden, and Joseph bring him back; 5. Jesus destroys a place at a lake where the people offer sacrifice to idols; before disappearing the idols kill the worshippers.

In the manuscripts of N.M., which notoriously neglect the chronology of events and freely mix different stories from Jesus's childhood, the set based on the I.G.T. tends to be placed close to the end. In cases where the division for monthly readings is applied, it is placed in the month of Ḥamle.

In the present state of research it is not certain whether these accounts were translated, or originally composed in Ethiopia under the influence of the I.G.T. material.

Still another episode, an abbreviated version of no. 8, is to be found in the ↗Testamentum Domini in Galilee (Guerrier – Grébaut 1913:50), which is not surprising since it was already present in the Epistula Apostolorum (included in the Testamentum) before this work was translated into Gəᶜəz.

Infancy Gospel of Thomas in art

Most illuminated ↗manuscripts of the T.I. (the oldest dating to the middle of the 18th cent.) illustrate I.G.T. episodes. They follow the narrative of the text and consequently may appear either in chronological order, i.e. following the miracles connected with the Flight of the Holy Family (e.g., the ms. of Ṭana Qirqos church, miniatures 21–27 out of 90; BN d’Abbadie 226, mins. 7, 8 of 21), or, at the end, following the account of the Ascension or the Pentecost (BritLib Orient 8824, the last miniature of 40). As with the texts, which often gather several episodes in one story (‘miracle’), one miniature may contain more than one episode (e.g., Dublin, Chester Beatty Library ms. 913, in which five miracles are divided between three miniatures; in Orient 8824 five episodes are gathered in one miniature).

If the manuscripts of N.M., which are usually extensively illuminated, contain miniatures illustrating the I.G.T. material, they are numerous and include more than one episode, e.g. the ms. in the church of ↗Däbrä Ṣäḥay Qʷəsqʷam, with 245 miniatures, displays I.G.T. episodes in numbers 226–235; ms. BritLib Orient 607, with 260 miniatures, in numbers 222–236.

From the middle of the 18th cent. I.G.T. stories are found in most of the pictorial programmes of the circular churches, displayed on the southern wall of the ↗mäqdäs. They are mixed with the stories of Jesus the Child that belong in the N.M. collections, but always include the miracles of the flying birds made of clay and of the broken jar, as well as the tales about Jesus turning his playmates into monkeys and walking on or riding a sun beam. It should be noted that only the latter was included in the “pattern programme” sketched by the painter Kasa for Marcel ↗Griaule.

Institute of Archaeology

The I.A. together with the National Library (↗National Archives and Library of Ethiopia) was founded with the name Section d'archéologie de la Bibliothèque Nationale d'Éthiopie in 1952 in cooperation with a French archaeological mission (1952–72; ↗Archaeology) and financially supported by France and friends of Ethiopia. Its first head was ↗Käbbädä Mikaʾel. He was later succeeded by ↗Täklä Ṣadəq Mäkʷəriya. In 1962 the Section was renamed Institut Éthiopien d'archéologie, and then Imperial Antiquities Administration. In 1975 it was named The Archaeological Institute under the Ministry of Culture and Youth. It was restructured in 1977 as Institute of Research and Conservation of Cultural Heritage, with Berhanou Abbebe (↗Bərhanu Abbäbä in EAE vol. 5) as its director. Important founding members of the institute, apart from the mentioned directors, were Henri de Contenson, Francis Anfray and Roger ↗Schneider, Jean Doresse, Jean Leclant and André ↗Caquot (s. EAE vol. 5). Admassu Šəfärraw and ↗Gəzaw Ḫaylä Maryam, Käbbädä Mikaʾel's assistants, are also to be mentioned for the early phase.

In the period between 1952 and 1974 systematic archaeological fieldwork was carried out on an annual basis for a minimum of six to seven months a year. The findings of these decades brought new light to the origin of mankind through the discovery of ↗Australopitecus afarensis (s. also ↗Homo, ↗Hominids). Foreign experts involved were Italian, German, French, English and sometimes American. Their activity took the archaeologists to ↗Aksum, ↗Yəḥa, ↗Zula, the ↗Gondär castles, ↗Lalibäla, the provinces of ↗Wällo, ↗Goǧǧam, ↗Sidamo, ↗Harärge, Northern ↗Šäwa (↗Mälka Qunṭure) and ↗Mäṭära.

The findings and results of the pre-Revolution period were compiled in 14 volumes of ↗Annales d'Éthiopie, and in a booklet entitled Archaeological Findings of Adwa Region (December 1960, Addis Abäba). Other publications were Tarik: Gazette d'information archéologique, historique et littéraire publiée par l'Institut Éthiopien d'Archéologie (first published in 1963) by ↗Śərgəw Hablä Śəllase (Amh. part) and Francis Anfray (Fr. part), published twice, and the Cahiers de l'Institut Éthiopien d'Archéologie which saw only one volume in 1965.

The institute is still operational under the name Authority of Research and Conservation of the Cultural Heritage.

International Monetary Fund

The I.M.F. is an economical organization. Some of I.M.F.'s statutory purposes are to promote international monetary co-operation, facilitate the expansion and balanced growth of international trade, promote exchange rate stability and make temporarily available the resources of I.M.F. to members under adequate safeguards. It was established at a conference in Bretton Woods, New Hampshire, USA, on 1–22 July 1944. Its official existence began on 27 December 1945. The financial operations were commenced after two years on 1 March 1947. 181 countries are currently members of the I.M.F..

The I.M.F. made large structural adjustment credits to Ethiopia by drawing characteristics of specific fund supported adjustment programs; such as on monetary and financial policies (limit on credit expansion, ceilings on net domestic assets or total bank credit and interest rate reform); public sector (restraint of the central government expenditures, transfer of subsidies to food and fertilizers); tax system (income tax reform or extension); external debt policies (the control of level and maturity of external debt); exchange and trade policies (rationalization of the import system); wages and prices (to review or increase sector prices [agriculture, industry etc.] and increase energy prices; other structural adjustment measures [improvement in over all management, shift of resources from public to private and investment planning and execution procedure]).

After the end of the government-controlled economy on May 1991 (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council), the I.M.F. made a loan on 29 October of $70 million over a period of three years to support the programme of economic reforms. The budget for 1993/94 was adopted on 7 August. The 1992/93 economic program had been successfully implemented and the I.M.F. showed its approval by making a further loan of $30 million under a structural adjustment facility. The statistical data below shows in part the I.M.F. engagement in Ethiopia (in US$ million).

5 Debt service paid I.M.F. repurchases and charges

To support the government's economic and financial programme for the fiscal year 1998–99 the I.M.F. approved the second annual loan for Ethiopia under the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility (ESAF) of about $42 million. Since then, a primary goal of the I.M.F. has been to support the implementation of policies to reduce inflation and rebuild external reserves.

In 2001 Ethiopia qualified for the World Bank-I.M.F.-sponsored Highly Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) debt reduction program, which is designed to reduce or eliminate repayment of bilateral loans from wealthy countries and international lenders such as the World Bank.

In 2009, the I.M.F., based on Ethiopia's positive macroeconomic indicators, approved a loan of about $240.6 million to help buffer Ethiopia from the impact of the global recession. In 2010, the I.M.F. and the World Bank approved further loans and disbursements for the Ethiopian government. The World Bank participated with a loan of $130 million. In the same year the Executive Board of the I.M.F. approved the first review of Ethiopia's economic performance thus enabling Ethiopia to draw the final tranche of a $240.2 million package.

In 2011, the I.M.F. urged Ethiopia to shift its emphasis away from central economic planning and adopt more market-oriented policies. Analysts of the I.M.F. also raised concerns that the macroeconomic performance of the country had deteriorated markedly due to inflationary pressure and weak management of monetary policy.

There have been concerns about the benefits of I.M.F. programs with regards to the African nations and Ethiopia in specific. The North American economist Joseph Stiglitz became a staunch critic of I.M.F. programs (Stiglitz 2003).

Interpreters

Interpreters from ancient times to the 18th cent.

I. (typically known in the East as dragoman, tercüman [Turkish], trucheman and the like, all stemming from Ar. tarǧumān, Aramaic loan word, ultimately of Hittite origin, s. LesCDic 579–80) have probably served in Ethiopia and the Horn of Africa since early ages. Although there is scant historical evidence for it, the different polities that since at least Aksumite times emerged on the Ethiopian highlands and in the wider ↗Orbis Aethiopicus must have engaged I. for purposes of government, diplomacy, ↗trade and war.

With the rise of the ↗Solomonic dynasty the presence of foreigners at the Christian court, such as that of aṣe ↗ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon I, is well attested; it is likely that a few of these foreigners acted as I. and mediated in such activities as Mamluk-Ethiopian relations (↗Egypt, relations with; ↗Mamlūks). During the 15th cent., relations with ↗Italy intensified and a few Italians acted as envoys and I., chiefly Pietro ↗Rombulo. Another community that was often engaged in diplomatic duties, and hence probably as I. as well, were the ↗Armenians (cp. ↗Mateus).

With Portuguese (↗Portugal, relations with) expansion in Africa and Asia information on I., at least on I. mediating between European powers and local African rulers, becomes more abundant and precise. This, however, shall not be taken as evidence of the more important role played by I. during this period as opposed to earlier periods. Conversely, the information on 16th and 17th cent. I. may cast light on their role during earlier periods.

The Portuguese made frequent use of I. (called "lingoas" in their sources) during their wanderings in the east, including in the ↗Red Sea and Gulf of Aden (cf. Couto 2003; for a broader overview cf. Lewis 2004). During the famous expedition of Dom Rodrigo da ↗Lima to Ethiopia from 1520–26, several men acted as I. between the Portuguese officials and local people. Thus, one Fernão Dias, fluent in Arabic and probably an Arab himself, acted as their I. at ↗Ḥərgigo and during the trip of the Portuguese train to the Ethiopian plateau. Other men acting in similar duties were the foreman João Gonçalves, Alexandre d'Ataide and one Jorge, a freed slave from Hormuz (Alvares 1883: 3f., 9, 64, 93, 124, 130; Correia 1976: 587). Concerning the royal Ethiopian court, then headed by aṣe ↗Ləbnä Dəngəl, a method that seems to have been used and that was certainly widespread was that of a two-tier translation, the intermediate language most likely being ↗Arabic (implicit evidence in Alvares 1883: 90f., 185). Other times translation was made with the help of single I., such as Pêro da ↗Covilhã or ↗Ṣägga Zäʾab (Alvares 1883: 107, 127, 129, 150). Moreover, I. also crucially contributed in translation works, such as diplomatic letters, thus fostering diplomatic relations between the Portuguese and the Christian Ethiopian monarchies (Alvares 1883: 130f., 144f., 149, 185).

The next information concerning I. in the historical record occurs during the military expedition of Christovão da ↗Gama. Then a number of the soldiers who came from India acted as I., between the Portuguese and the local people, including the clergy and the royal court. Among them were Ayres ↗Dias and Afonso de França (BecRASO II, 314, 411; Couto 1783). Later, the Ethio-Portuguese community that was formed from the relationships between the Portuguese soldiers and Ethiopian women was to provide generations of men who, among other duties, acted as I. They chiefly assisted the ↗Jesuits during their 80-year long religious mission (e.g. BecRASO XII, 161; cf. Martínez 2011; Martínez 2008: 195f.). Similarly, a number of Ethiopians who studied and worked at the Jesuit residences, such as ↗Gorgoryos or one Denazios (BecRASO XI, 432), acquired linguistic skills and used these in translating between the Europeans and Ethiopians in both Africa and Europe (cp. Hiob ↗Ludolf).

Ulterior evidence of I. comes from the ↗travellers and explorers who from the late 17th cent. onwards ventured into the Horn of Africa and described their experiences. Most of them used several local I. during their trips, whom they had contracted themselves or had been provided with by their hosts.

In the mid-17th cent., during the visit of ↗Ḥasan b. Aḥmad al-Ḥaymī at the court of aṣe ↗Fasilädäs in ↗Gondär at least two I. are attested as active: one was Muḥammad ibn Mūsā, a Muslim apostate from the family of al-Ḥusayn b. ᶜAlī from Bukhara; another was the Ethiopian Muslim al-ḥāǧǧ Sālim b. ᶜAbdarraḥīm (DonMurad 8; DonHaySirat 61ff., 65, also 107, 153, 155, 157, 159). Later, in 1679, the Armenian envoy ↗Murād probably acted as "mätärgʷəmä ləsan", i.e. I., at the royal court between aṣe ↗Yoḥannəs I and bishop Hovhannes (GuiIohan 39 [tr.]; DonMurad 53). His example further supports the important role that foreigners, like Armenians and Greeks (cf. also Lewis 2004: 24), but also Muslim renegades and slaves (↗Slavery), played in the foreign relations of the Solomonic ↗monarchy. Additionally, locals who had travelled abroad such as pilgrims (↗Pilgrimages) and merchants are also reported to have worked as I. (Bruce 1791, vol. 3, 174, 184; evidence also in Rüppell 1840, vol. 2, 125). Similarly, Charles ↗Poncet was helped by several I. during his journey to Christian Ethiopia (Poncet 1709: 75, 92).

In the 18th cent., another Armenian, named Elias, had been appointed as official I. of the French consul Jacques Le Noir du Roule, who had been sent in 1704 to Gondär (Bruce 1791, vol. 3, 106, 126). Later in the same century, ras ↗Mikaʾel Śəḥul had several servants who expedited his affairs with the ↗Nāʾib and the merchants in Massawa and Ḥərgigo and who had linguistic skills. One of them, was the Greek Janni, who had already served two Solomonic rulers. He was then the head of the customs at ↗ᶜAdwa and assisted James ↗Bruce in dealing with the local population. Another I. was a slave of Janni who was fluent in Greek (ibid. 336, 338, 356f., 424, 447f.). In Gondär, the same Bruce reported of having used several I., one being "Ayto Heikel", Məntəwwab's (↗Bərhan Mogäsa) chamberlain (ibid. 530, 547f.).

Eduard ↗Rüppell also travelled with I., but their performance was allegedly not always satisfactory (Rüppell 1838–40, vol. 1, 428f., vol. 2, 165f.)

Interpreters in the 19th and 20th centuries

I. gained importance during the 19th cent. and were to play a major role up to the Italian invasion of 1935. Some I. served Ethiopian monarchs and provincial rulers; others were employed by visiting diplomats and foreign legations (where a few became known as "Oriental Secretaries"). The majority of them were Ethiopians, some having studied foreign languages abroad and others coming from the country's Arabic-speaking periphery. There were also foreigners, mainly ↗Armenians or of Armenian descent. I. were also important in the service of foreign powers that had contact with Ethiopia.

The best-known early-19th cent. I. was the Ethio-Armenian Wärqe Karapet. After undertaking a diplomatic mission to Egypt for däǧǧazmač ↗Säbagadis Wäldu of Təgray in 1812, he entered the service of both däǧǧazmač ↗Wəbe Ḫaylä Maryam of Təgray and nəguś ↗Śahlä Śəllase of Šäwa. Wärqe Karapet also interpreted for the British traveller Charles Tilsone ↗Beke (Pankhurst 1978–79: 259–69). At the time of the visit of Nathaniel ↗Pearce, one Wašär Gumhe Wäldä Maryam was the head I. at ↗ᶜAdwa, then capital of ras ↗Wäldä Śəllase (Pearce 1831, vol. 2, 199). An Armenian from Tiflis in Georgia, Betlehem, who spoke English and Arabic, worked both with Wəbe Ḫaylä Maryam and Śahlä Śəllase. He also interpreted for abunä ↗Sälama, and several foreign travellers, including the British missionary Joseph Wolff and the French scientist Charlemagne Théophile ↗Lefebvre (Pankhurst 1978–79: 270–75). Guglielmo ↗Massaja and the Catholic missionaries who travelled to Ethiopia in the 19th cent. used servants and local people with linguistic skills as I. (MasMis^2 vol. 2, 101, 174, 217). An important figure then was Nəguśe Dəmṭu, envoy and I. of the king of ↗Käfa (ibid. vol. 3, 19f., 32, 128, 130). Massaja himself acted as I. at the court of nəguś Mənilək (later aṣe ↗Mənilək II), between the ruler and Italian nationals (ibid. vol. 5, 226).

Aṣe ↗Tewodros II subsequently had several notable I. The most prominent were perhaps ↗Bərru Ṗeṭros and ↗Maḫdärä Qal Täwäldä Mädḫən. The latter was a youngster from Təgray who was taken to Paris by Lefèbvre, receiving further education in Malta and Egypt (Rubenson 1976: 433). Well acquainted with both French and English, he was quoted as stating that if, instead of staying in Mäqdalä, Tewodros had harassed the invader as ᶜAbdūl Qādir had done to the French in Algeria "not a single Englishman would have escaped" (Girard 1973: 195f.). Another notable I. was ↗Samuᵓel Giyorgis, also known as Samuᵓel b. ᶜAlī, the son of a Muslim from ᶜAgamä. He was a widely travelled man who became much involved in Tewodros's dealings with his British captives (Rubenson 1976, index, 435). According to the British envoy Hormuzd ↗Rassam, Samuᵓel Giyorgis was "better informed than any of his countrymen" (Rassam 1869, vol. 1, 258). Other I. in Tewodros's service included Wärqe Karapet's son, ↗Mərč̣a Wärqe, and his nephew, Yoḥannəs Mäšäša, both educated in Bombay (Rubenson 1976, s. index, 429, 434; Pankhurst 1978–79: 295–312). Tewodros, like his predecessors, also had several Arabic scribes and I. (Aleme Eshete 1973: 19). I., according to Clements Markham (1868: 221) later played a "most essential" role in the ↗Napier expedition.

Aṣe ↗Yoḥannəs IV subsequently also made use of Maḫdärä Qal and Mərč̣a Wärqe, as well as of the latter's brother, Gäbru Wärqe. Mərč̣a Wärqe emerged, according to Rubenson (1976:280), as "probably [the monarch's] most important adviser on foreign policy". Also noteworthy was P̣eṭros Giyorgis, from Ḥamasen or northern Təgray, who though employed as an I. by the Italians had promised Yoḥannəs "to communicate the whole truth about them" (Aleme Eshete 1973: 24f.; s. also Pankhurst 1990: 257–71).

Aṣe Mənilək II had his own interpreter, grazmač ↗Yosef Nəguśe, who in the late 1880s and 1890s played a notable role in the negotiations with the Italians, including in the ↗Italo–Ethiopian Treaty of Friendship and Commerce (Conti Rossini 1935: 486, index; Giglio 1968: 22f.; Rossetti 1910: 59f.). Other trusted aides of Mənilək who also acted as I. were ↗Gäbrä Ǝgziʾabəḥer Dästa and Alfred ↗Ilg. Pietro ↗Antonelli himself also acted as I. both in Ethiopia and in Italy (Giglio 1968: 24).

Mənilək's despatch of students abroad, the increased teaching of foreign languages within the country, and the growth of contacts with the outside world subsequently led in the early 20th cent. to a vast expansion in both the demand and the supply of I.

The Italian government had a corps of I. ("Corpo degli interpreti coloniali", 226f.) with regulated duties. In the administration of the ↗Africa Orientale Italiana I. were classified as I. writers ("redattori"), I. translators ("traduttori") and oral I. ("orali") and most of them were graduates from the ↗Istituto Universitario Orientale (Gazzetta Ufficiale del regno d'Italia, 8 February 1937, n. 31). Among the numerous Ethiopians and Eritreans working for the Italian colonial administration were ↗Ḥasän ʿAli, ↗Asfəḥa Wäldä Mikaʾel, ↗Asäffa Gäbrä Maryam, ↗Ibrāhīm Sulṭān ʿAlī and ↗Ǝmbayyä Habte.

After ↗World War II and with the modernisation of the Ethiopian state the need for I. grew exponentially. The expansion of the administration – at the national, regional and local levels, – the increase in diplomatic activities and the intensification of foreign presence in the Horn of Africa called for a large number of I., official and unofficial. Among some relevant figures accomplishing these duties were ↗Mälaku Amanuʾel Bäyyan, ṣäḥafe təʾəzaz ↗Wäldä Giyorgis Wäldä Yoḥannəs (ClapHS 110), fitawrari ↗Abbäbä Gäbre and grazmač ↗ʿAbdälqadər Käbirä. Amanuʾel Abrəham acted as I. and translator at the Ethiopian Legation in London in the late 1930s and early 1940s (Emmanuel Abraham 1995: 36, 49).

Irvine, Arthur Kinloch

I. (b. 23 August 1935, Glasgow, Scotland, d. 31 August 2011, London) was a British scholar and Semitist with a specialization in ↗Epigraphic South Arabian and ↗Ethio-Semitic languages. After reading Classics at St. Andrews, where he also first studied Arabic, in 1956 he went to Oxford to undertake research on Epigraphic South Arabian under Alfred Felix Landon Beeston on lexical materials associated with irrigation techniques.

Following a year's postdoctoral research in Tübingen, Germany, in 1959-60, and a year's national service in the British Navy, in 1961 he entered academic life at the ↗School of Oriental and African Studies (SOAS), London University, as Lecturer in Semitic Languages. Three years later, in 1964, he was joined there by Edward ↗Ullendorff (s. EAE vol. 5), whom he had first met whilst a student at St. Andrews, and it was under the latter's influence that his scholarly attention extended to Ethiopian Semitic, teaching both Amharic and Gəʿəz for much of the rest of his university career. He retired from SOAS formally in 1992 but continued to teach Classical Arabic there on a part-time basis until 1998.

He developed a reputation as a meticulous scholar and patient teacher. He was also interested in links between Ancient South Arabia and Ancient Ethiopia, publishing for instance a seminal article on the ↗Ḥabašāt of South Arabian ↗inscriptions (1965) as well as studies on linguistic links between Ethiopic and South Arabian (1978) or South Arabian epigraphy in Ethiopia (1984). He also published in cooperation with Beeston (1967; 1988).

I. served on the editorial board of the Bulletin of the School of Oriental and African Studies from 1981 till 1986, and was editor of the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society from 1973 to 1976, as well as English language proof-editor of the Encyclopaedia Aethiopica between 2000 and 2004.

I. Definitions

An unequivocal definition of what is an I. is hardly possible, since, systematically speaking, I. do not form a clearly identifiable category. Besides, the consensus as to what can be described as an I. has changed in time and in different circumstances. While at all times overlapping with both semantic fields of travel literature and ↗cartography, the degree of such overlapping varies greatly between two main definitions: 1) an I. as a narrative geographic account, in modern use sometimes used interchangeably with both "travelogue" and "travel guide", not necessarily accompanied by a graphic representation; and 2) an I. as a first, rough map of routes that have been followed, based on observation rather than measurement, used especially in the context of colonial conquest, and as such not necessarily accompanied by a text. The understanding as to the degree of the originality of information – whether an I. is based on first-hand external and internal observations or depends on pre-existing written and oral sources – is also subject to changes.

In their historical sense, I. are "cognitive maps" that predate the abstract projective, coordinate geometries and measured space of modern maps. They articulate, represent and codify spatial knowledge in a social and functional context (Woodward – Lewis 1998: 537–41). In the Roman empire, itineraria (from Latin iter, 'path, travel, journey') were compilations of localities and distances, either in form of written reports, lists or linear graphical maps, which served as "practical guides" for travellers (Wallis – Robinson 1987: 132; famous classical examples are the Antonini itinerarium from the 3rd cent. A.D. or the Itinerarium Burdigalense from the 4th cent. A.D.). Whether designed for research or military purposes, and whether based on a narrative or on a graphic map, the I. usually aspire not only to describe the route but to make it easily retraceable by future expeditions, whether civil, scholarly or military.

One can thus group I. on the basis of the way they present information into (1) narrative I., that may or may not be accompanied by a map of the route (such as the classical models, dating to pre-cartographic times) and (2) graphic I., that may or may not be accompanied by an explanatory text or a legend. Both groups may be subdivided further in accordance with the type and amount of details provided. On the basis of the scope, one can distinguish between (1) descriptions of travel routes for purposes of exploration or trade and (2) military I. for one-time incursions, or those for future dominance. On the basis of originality, one can distinguish between (1) I. produced by travellers themselves on the basis of their observations and (2) those summarizing previously collected data.

The width and the changeability of the understanding of the term render research of the I. preserved in libraries or archives particularly difficult. In the colonial era, several different kinds of documents might be entitled as "I.", including simple lines drawn upon existing maps and illustrating routes followed by travellers or expeditions. These, however, may be later used by the same travellers or their biographers for reconstruction of more narrative descriptions, still frequently defined as I. To these “I.” one should add the vast body of narrative or graphic representations of the I. type, sometimes forming separate works (cp. also the Arabic genre masālik, ‘routes’) or parts of larger travel accounts.

II. Itineraries of the Ethio–Eritrean region before the end of the 19th cent.

Geographical knowledge of the Ethio-Eritrean region in Europe was based on I. since ancient times. Even after the available information was transferred onto maps, new travel descriptions kept being produced by traders, diplomats, scholars and the military well into our time. The I. and periploi used for travelling around the ↗Red Sea (cp. also ↗Periplus of the Erythraean Sea) were exploited by ↗Ptolemy for his Geography. The I. (travelogues, riḥla) produced by the Arabic travellers and merchants became sources for the work of such geographers as the 9th-cent. al-↗Yaᶜqūbī (his Kitāb al-buldān providing details on localities esp. of Eritrea), the 10th-cent. ↗Ibn Ḥawqal, the 12th-cent. al-↗Idrīsī or the 14th-cent. ↗Ibn Baṭṭūṭa and Abū l-Fidā (the latter locating al-Ḥabaš in terms of distances and directions in the wider lands of the bilād as-sudān, ‘land of the blacks’; Abū al-Fidāʾ 1840: 151ff.). The masālik is a particular genre of Arabic literature that contains data typical of I. (cp. al-↗ᶜUmarī).

Embassies to the lands of the ↗Prester John resulted in a series of I. produced by European travellers (such as the Iter de Venetiis ad Indiam, reflecting the mission of Antonio Bartoli ca. 1402). The geographical information provided by Ethiopian monks in Europe (delegates to the ecumenical councils of Constance and ↗Florence; members of the community of ↗Santo Stefano dei Mori; pilgrims to ↗Jerusalem) was collected to create more I. (s., e.g., ↗Zorzi, compiled before 1524, data going back to 1400). Both I. compiled by travellers (Marco ↗Polo) and those based on the oral reports obtained from Ethiopians were, since at least the 15th cent., used to produce geographical maps (e.g., the Mappamondo of ↗Fra Mauro from ca. 1460 or the contemporary ↗Egyptus Novelo; s. Fiaccadori 2009; Hirsch 1986–87; CrawItin 3–27, 64ff.).

In the 16th and 17th cent. the systematic I. of the Portuguese (cp. ↗Alvares, 1540; ↗Lobo, 1640) and ↗Jesuits contributed much to the knowledge of Ethiopia in Europe. The report of the Yemenite mission of ↗Ḥasan b. Aḥmad al-Ḥaymī (ca. 1647) also employs the I. style (DonHaySirat). A comparison between Lobo’s itinerario and al-Ḥaymī’s report shows how the same locality, ↗Baylūl in the ᶜAfar region, meant less distance for an Arab Muslim traveller, who came from the coast, than for a Jesuit missionary, who had to use a more security-oriented strategy to travel.

Since the 19th cent. (or even the 17th–18th cent. if one considers ↗Bruce or ↗Ludolf), scholarly ↗expeditions provided a number of I. for the Ethio-Eritrean region, which also came to serve as sources for systematic mapping. Antoine d’↗Abbadie’s Géographie d’Éthiopie contains information typical of an I., as it extensively uses, beside modern techniques of cartography, geodesy and triangulation, oral traditions provided by merchants, slaves, elephant hunters and pilgrims (AbbGéogr 5f.). Interestingly, not all informants were willing to share their geographical knowledge with the scholar (e.g., the afčala Oromo traders, who feared competition should their routes and shortcuts become known; ibid. 6).

The I. produced by the 19th–20th cent. scholarly expeditions (such as the ones by ↗Heuglin, ↗Montandon or ↗Duchesne-Fournet) considerably advanced the knowledge of Ethio-Eritrean ↗geography in Europe, which gained particular importance during the time of ↗colonialism in North-East Africa.

III. Military and colonial itineraries

Military and diplomatic actions play an important role as both reasons and sources for creating I. – that have further implications of military exploration, mobility and control of the geographical areas to be conquered and are at the same time intended as a first step in an improving cartographic process. As early as since the French revolution and the Napoleonic wars, the I. have been seen as advanced strategic military tools used in intelligence.

Unlike the later Italian operations, the British punitive ↗Napier expedition to ↗Mäqdäla in 1867/68 was conceived as an incursion, with no intention of durable conquest of the country. The related I. reflect this in the scope of the areas covered and the degree of detail. The British expedition I. (s. Cooke 1867; cp. Simpson 2002) heavily draw on the heritage of the famous explorers of the 18th and 19th cent. (s. the previous subentry), scholars of encyclopedic skills, whose works, or at least parts of them, can sometimes be also compared to the I. The manuscripts of I. produced by the British expedition were (and still are) preserved in the Public Records Office and the Historical manuscripts commission (today the National Archives, which also include the collections of Ordnance Survey, Defence Geographic Centre, War Office and British India Office, the organizer of the expedition).

Other military actions in the Horn of Africa (e.g., Egyptian-Ethiopian war; British actions in Egypt, Sudan, Somaliland; French conquest) equally produced a series of I. (e.g., Route suivie par l'Armée Egyptienne, by a Colonel of American Confederate Army Samuel H. Lockett, 1876; Croquis de la Route militaire entre Massawah et Kayakhor, by a French Officer E.M. Dulier, 1876).

A special case is the period of Italian presence in Eritrea (Colonia ↗Eritrea) and Ethiopia (↗Africa Orientale Italiana, A.O.I.). Its length and the long-term perspective necessitated the production of a wide range of military – and civil – I. The colonial I. are meant as a sort of reconnaisance mapping, a first step in a progress that proceeds to approximate mapping (made by expeditious topographic surveys) and, finally, geodetic cartography. And thus, I. are important prerequisites for the implementation of the colonial goals. The majority of Italian colonial I. are based on first-hand observations and were drafted by the persons who travelled the route themselves. Most surviving I. of that time are preserved in the library and the archives of the Istituto Geografico Militare (IGM) in Florence. They could be chronologically grouped in three periods: (1) up to the Battle of ↗ᶜAdwa (1896); (2) from 1897 to 1922 (rise of Fascism); (3) from 1923 to 1941 (with a possible sub-period, from the creation to the fall of the A.O.I., 1936–41).

Military and colonial I. are graphic representations, sometimes, though not always, accompanied by text. The explanatory function of map and text is reciprocal.

Unlike proper maps, I. represent the geographical areas in a mimetic-pictorial way, more frequently than by the conventional cartographic symbols. The set of symbols and the amount of mimetic-pictorial details may vary greatly. The only element always present is the actual travel route – which is clearly indicated by lines of different design and colour. Seldom, a pre-existing map may be used, as in the 1920s I. Miesso-Gauani-Tihò (1:250,000), with the route traced over a geological map by M. Gortani and A. Bianchi for the Missione AGIP organized by the Accademia d'Italia. Most I. are limited planimetrically to narrow strips of land along the route. Frequently, the information provided is primarly concerned with the characteristics of the actual roads taken: their quality, the best mode of travel, possible encounters on the way, etc.

I. can be grouped on the basis of their cartographic features. The most obvious feature is the scale. The majority of I. range between 1:100,000 and 1:1,000,000. The largest-scale available I., at 1:25,000, is that drawn by Capt. Lorenzo Viglino for the Galla-Sidama government in 1936, Gimma-Bonga (5 folios, with detailed information on landforms and some indications of land use). The smallest is the summary I., at 1:7,000,000, entitled Etiopia e regioni circostanti con gli itinerari dei principali esploratori italiani …, drafted before 1924 (lost from IGM).

Further, I. are characterized by the quantity and quality of details (naturally, the smaller the scale the fewer the details, though this is not an absolute rule). The easiest division is between I. with and without the accompanying text (usually referred to as "logistic notes" and placed in boxes next to the appropriate leg of the route). Usually, the more elaborate and rich the symbols and the captions are, the more probable it is that the text is absent. The notes (s., e.g., Da Massaua al T. Barca al F. Mareb, by the officers Ravelli, Gastaldi, Manfredi, Piccioli, Guastone and civilian surveyors Borzini, Grufelli, Pira, Bodrero, 1896–97, 1:100,000, 27 leaves) primarily concern natural or man-made objects – and dangers – along the way and the information necessary for following the route (soil humidity, climatic peculiarities, accessibility of food, water and wood availability, etc.). Somewhat less frequent is the information on material and spiritual culture of the local population. Separate boxes may contain such details as the time needed to cover a certain leg (as in Capt. Latini's Mareb-Adua and Enticciò-Adigrat, 1930s, 1:100,000).

The geographical information contained in the most elaborate I. is, from the most important to the less frequent: routes, river system, relief and mountain passes, altitude and gradient, climate and vegetation, water and wood resources, settlements and place names, architectural buildings, economic production and ethnic distinctives. When the relief is represented, it is drawn from visual observations and simple instruments, without geodetic technical measurements, and rendered by an "artful" pattern of hachures or by contour lines. However, for the latter, their interval is never mentioned, rendering them very approximate. Hachures and contour lines may also be combined (e.g., Fenaroà-Socotà, IGM 7th topographic unit, 1936, 1:100,000: relief patterns).

With all the heterogeneity observed, the regularity in the choice and arrangement of the information (esp. in logistical notes) suggests that there existed specific manuals for the composition of the colonial I. (similar to the Norme per la compilazione degli itinerari and Taccuino per la compilazione degli itinerari published by the Italian government in Libya in 1930 and 1936, s. Masturzo 2010).

Numerous I. were also included in the 1938 Guida and its predecessors, all by the Consociazione Turistica Italiana (Possedimenti e Colonie – Isole Egee, Tripolitania, Eritrea, Somalia, 1929; Italia insulare, Possedimenti e Colonie, 1931). A number of (usually summarious and schematic) I. produced during the period continue the tradition of retracing the steps of scholarly expeditions (e.g., Itinerari percorsi nell'Etiopia sud-occidentale… dal dott. Enrico ↗ Cerulli, 1 folio, 1932, 1:500,000). In addition, one should consider I. documentation published separately (e.g., in the Bollettino della ↗ Società geografica italiana, as Antonelli 1882, or in the Bollettino della Società africana d'Italia, Capucci – Cicognani 1885) or also included, as references and explanatory leaves, in such works as Dainelli 1908; De Castro 1915; D'Esme 1928; Lessona 1958; Zammarano 1936; Vigoni 1881 – just to give a very few examples (s. also sources to this and other subarticles).

IV. Indigenous itineraries

Within the literate legacy of the Ethiopian empire, geographical information was recorded in different contexts (↗inscriptions; ↗hagiographies; land grants). Ethiopian chronicles (↗Historiography) contain descriptions of the movements of the royal camps and military campaigns. These documents are sources for historical geographical reconstructions (HuntGeogr; ↗Geography, historical; ↗Topography, historical s. EAE vol. 5).

Until modern times, local populations relied on oral geographical traditions and, apart from serving as informants for European compilers of I., did not produce I. of their own. The unwritten knowledge local populations had about places and their distances forms, however, a type of mental I. When Felix ↗Rosen compared his cartographic knowledge with the mental mapping of his Somali servant, he found it comparatively reliable. Many artefacts that Rosen bought for the Berlin Ethnographical Museum were classified according to local cognition in terms of linear directions, spots and distances (Rosen 1907: 239f.).

The first known modern map produced in Ethiopia is related to ras ↗Mäkʷännǝn Wäldä Mikaʾel's campaign in Bela Šangul (↗Beni Šangul) and the Eastern Sudan (1897). That map, however, deliberately concealed the extent of Ethiopian advances and of geographical knowledge towards the Sudan (Bassett 1998: 47; Conti Rossini 1943).

Iyasu Mängäša

General I.M. (ኢያሱ ፡ መንገሻ; b. 1916, Kärän, Eritrea, d. June 2005, Addis Abäba) was among the patriots who fought against Italian occupation (↗Resistance), and later a commander of the UN troops in the Congo (↗United Nations), a minister and an ambassador, and finally the leader of a militant opposition group against the Därg (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council).

I.M. was the son of the Protestant teacher and printer Mängäša Bǝrru and Sälome Habtä Giyorgis of ↗Ṣäʿazzäga, and a grandson of ↗Bǝrru P̣eṭros "Wälqayte", aṣe ↗Yoḥannǝs IV's envoy to Egyptian ↗Massawa. Thus, I.M. was also a nephew of aṣe ↗Mǝnilǝk's half-German interpreter Mikaʾel Bǝrru. I.M. received his initial education in Kärän and Addis Abäba and was then, in the 1930s, among the first to be selected to join the French Military Academy of Saint-Cyr in Paris.

When he returned in 1935, I.M. joined the ↗Imperial Bodyguard and was soon involved in the ↗Italian war of 1935–36. He participated in the decisive battle of ↗May Č̣äw, followed ↗Ḫaylä Śǝllase I to Djibouti, but returned to continue the struggle. Arrested by the Italians, he was interned in a camp in Somalia from 1937 to 1941, and was then invited by the British to join the British-led Ethiopian Army with the rank of captain to assist in building up the Ethiopian police under British command. He was soon elevated in rank.

Also after the transfer under Ethiopian command I.M. continued to work for the police for a while and then served as an interpreter and liaison officer for foreign contacts for the Minister of Defence, ras ↗Abbäbä Arägay. Following an unknown conflict with Ethiopia's leadership, I.M. was "exiled" internally to Maǧi in Käfa, nearby the British-Sudanese boundary for about a year, but kept his high rank. In the 1950s he attended the United States Military Academy of West Point.

When Ethiopia decided to offer troops to the UN in the Congo in 1960, I.M., then Brigadier General, was nominated their commander in the Province Orientale, and also acted as an unofficial Ethiopian "ambassador" to Prime Minister Lumumba in Léopoldville. At the request of UN General Secretary Hammarskjöld, I.M. became the Chief of Staff of the UN troops (Opération des Nations unies au Congo [ONUC]; s. I.M.'s important directives of 1960 in Findlay 2002: 411f.). He was first stationed in Léopoldville, then commanded the UN troops in Stanleyville (Kalb 1982: 419; Lefebvre 1991: 100). I.M. was subsequently assigned to inquire into Lumumba's murder in Katanga, but was hindered by the Congolese authorities. Ḫaylä Śəllase, following a request of Belgium, ordered I.M. to stop the deployment of Ethiopian UN troops to Katanga which had been demanded by I.M. to support his inquiry; but I.M. refused to obey as in this function he was not under Ethiopian authority. Back in Ethiopia, I.M. assumed several important posts, such as Chief of Staff (1968) and Minister of State in the Ministry of Defence.

In 1970 I.M. was nominated ambassador to London, also accredited to the Netherlands, acting until the ↗Revolution of 1974. An offer by Colonel Mängəśtu Ḫaylä Maryam to return to become the administrator of Eritrea was declined by him. I.M. was fired and remained in exile in London until 1991. In March 1975, he, together with the former Təgrayan governor ras Mängäša Śəyyum, founded the militant conservative Ethiopian Democratic Union (EDU), located in Khartoum and in London. I.M. functioned as its chairman, ras Mängäša as the deputy chairman. I.M. was a successful fundraiser, in the beginning convincing the Shah of Persia (↗Iran) to generously provide funds. In Ṣägädä in western Təgray I.M. hired local rebels for the EDU army. He got the permission by the Sudanese leader, Numeiri, to operate on Sudanese soil, and won over Ethiopian intellectuals to support the struggle, assuring them that their aim was not a return to feudalism (cp. a cartoon showing him as a "reactionary leader", Ottaway – Ottaway 1978: 90). The EDU soon controlled large parts of Gondär region (mainly today's western Təgray), and occupied ↗Ḥumära in 1976. After this, however, I.M. and Mängäša got into conflict, as contrary to I.M.'s original understanding, he now sensed Mängäša's aim to restore himself into the ancient feudal structures. I.M. therefore linked himself with the ↗Təgray People's Liberation Front (TPLF) instead and transferred his part of the EDU funds to Śəyyum Mäsfən in Khartoum, the later foreign minister as I.M. claimed in personal recollections. In 1992 I.M. was called back by the new government to become their first Ethiopian ambassador in Paris (until 1994), in personal union also at the ↗Vatican until 1995, and was an Alternate Member of the Executive Board of UNESCO, Paris, as a representative of Ethiopia (1995).

Juniper

J. (Juniperus procera, African pencil cedar, Amh. ጥድ ṭəd, Tgn. ጽህዲ ṣəhdi, Oromo gatira, hinḍeesa) is one of the main indigenous ↗trees in Ethiopia, along with ↗acacia, Hagenia abyssinica (↗Koso), Podocarpus falcatus and ↗sycamore. With a maximal height of ca. 40 m the African pencil cedar is the largest J. in the world. It is an evergreen conifer whose preferred ecological habitat is the moist and wet ↗wäyna däga and ↗däga. There it is associated with Podocarpus, Hagenia, Olea, Rhus, Ilex, Allophylus, Bersama and Schefflera, among others. Such ↗woodland has become rare due to human exploitation.

J. wood is traditionally used in ↗house construction for its termite-resistant properties. Especially the centre pole of the traditional goğo house may be a J. trunk. The timber is used for the construction of floors, roof shingles and the production of pencils and joinery. J. wood is traditionally used for carving of ritual objects like the ↗waakaa sculptures of the Konso. It is also frequently employed in ↗manuscript bindings. The bark, leaves, twigs and buds of the tree are valued in traditional medicine.

Due to the density of the foliage J. trees give shade and serve as windbreaks. They have a great potential for design and for this reason are popular in private and public gardens (hedges, single trees). In the urban context the branches of J. (also called የልደት ፡ ዛፍ, yälədät zaf, 'Christmas tree') are used for European-style Christmas decoration.

Justin I

J. (Lat. Flavius Iustinus Augustus, Gr. Ἰουστῖνος, Ioustînos, Eth. ዮስጢኖስ, Yosṭinos, b. ca. 450 or 452, Bederiana, in Dardania, d. 1 August 527, Constantinople) was a Byzantine emperor from 518 to 527. The uncle and predecessor of ↗Justinian I (appointed co-emperor on 1 April 527; s. EAE vol. 5), J. is partly overshadowed by his eminent nephew, who actually ruled the empire on behalf of J., and is often confused with him in Oriental sources, also on account of the similarity of their names; both are even mistaken there, at times, for Constantine I (e.g., Bausi – Gori 2006: 30f. and n. 1, 116f. and n. 2; Bausi 2010: 250). Yet, J.'s reign was more than a simple prelude to the "golden age" of Justinian.

Of peasant stock and almost completely illiterate, J. moved to Constantinople ca. 470, joined the army and made a military career under Emperor Anastasius I, rising to patrician and commander of the palace guard. He participated in wars against the Isaurians and the Persians, as well as in the suppression of the revolt of the usurper Vitalian (513–15). On Anastasius's death in July 518, J. ascended the throne thanks to the army and the circus factions.

Unlike his predecessor, who had supported ↗Monophysitism, he was a defender of Chalcedonian orthodoxy and more often sided with the papacy. He soon came to terms with Vitalian, a Chalcedonian champion (later assassinated, as a competitor, by Justinian), and was then able to put an end to the Acacian schism, which had started in 484 between the Churches of Constantinople and Rome. In 519, seeking an alliance with the pope, he abrogated the Henōtikón ('[Edict of] Unity') issued by Emperor Zeno in 482 with the aim of reconciling Chalcedonians and Monophysites, the latter being thereafter persecuted by J. In 523 he also took severe measures against the Arians (↗Arius), thus disquieting the Ostrogoth king Theodoric, who dispatched Pope John I to Constantinople, to plead, with little success though, for a mitigation of those measures.

Outside the boundaries of the empire, however, in no way was J. inflexible towards dissident Christians, of whom he often made allies and friends. Such was the case with Monophysites, in particular with Ethiopia, "converted" to Monophysitism in the age of the ↗Nine Saints, under King ↗Ǝllä ᶜAmida (I). As the great patron of Christianity, the interests of which far prevailed over theological differences (s. Fiaccadori 2006: 75f. and n. 169), in ca. 518 or 522, the Byzantine emperor requested and supported the intervention(s) of nəguś ↗Kaleb Ǝllä Aṣbəḥa in South Arabia (↗Ḥimyar), then ruled by the Jewish king Ḏū Nuwās (↗Yūsuf Asᵓar Yaṯᵓar). The latter was responsible for the anti-Christian persecution at ↗Naǧrān that, according to ↗Cosmas Indicopleustes who was then in ↗Adulis (s. ↗Monumentum Adulitanum), broke out precisely "at the beginning of the reign of Justin, emperor of the Romans" (Topogr. Chr. II, 56, ed. Wolska-Conus 1973: 369). With J.'s help, Kaleb defeated Ḏū Nuwās. Because of these events, Yosṭinos nəguśä Rome ('J. emperor of Rome', i.e. Constantinople; ↗Rom), as he is styled, e.g., in the Gädlä ↗Päntälewon (ed. Conti Rossini 1904: 54; cp. Brita 2010: 159f.), became "the most famous Byzantine emperor in the kingdom of Aksum" (Marrassini 1983: 385).

Against the background of the long-standing diplomatic and military confrontation between Rome, then Byzantium, and Sasanian ↗Iran (with which J. enjoyed peaceful relations, while endeavouring to surround it with such allies of his as Ethiopia and Ḥimyar), Aksumite hegemony over South Arabia was thus reinstated. At the same time, the whole ↗Red Sea area was definitively brought under Byzantine influence.

These political implications are evident and dealt with accordingly in Greek and Oriental ↗historiography. Sources include here the Martyrdom of ↗Arethas, the Life of Athanasios of Klysma, which is preserved in Arabic and Ethiopic versions alone (van Esbroeck in PICES 4, cp. Bausi [– Gori] 2006: 16f. and n. 63), and the Chronicle of ↗John of Nikiou (XC, 1–49: J. is Yust[ə]yanos, like his nephew). The South-Arabian war(s) and their outcome are also echoed in the "prophetic" ch. 117 of the ↗Kəbrä nägäśt, where the two kings, J. of Rom and Kaleb of Ethiopia, meet in Jerusalem at the end of times (BezKebr 170a–71a; ↗Eschatology). From the Martyrdom of Arethas and the Kəbrä nägäśt are derived the parts of the ↗Sənkəssar concerning Naǧrān (esp. on 26 Ḫədar; ColSyn VIII, 374ff.), which added to J.'s popularity in Ethiopian tradition.

Gianfranco Fiaccadori

Justinian I

J. (Lat. Flavius Petrus Sabbatius Iustinianus Augustus, Gr. Ἰουστινιανός, Ioustinianós, Eth. ዩስትያኖስ, Yust[ə]yanos, ዩስቲያኖስ, Yustiyanos, etc., b. Tauresium, in Dardania, today’s South-East Serbia, ca. 482, d. Constantinople, 13/14 November 565) was a Byzantine emperor from 527 to 565. Considered a saint among Orthodox Christians since the Sixth Ecumenical Council (Constantinople, 680–81), he is commemorated on 14 (together with his wife Theodora) and 16 November (Christou 1999: 64). His long tenure, chiefly aimed at the “renovatio imperii”, i.e. at reviving the greatness of the Roman Empire founded by Augustus half a millennium earlier, witnessed both the transition of the Mediterranean world from antiquity to the Middle Ages and the first blossoming of Byzantine culture. His intensive constructing or reconstructing activity included such renowned buildings as the great church of Hagia Sophia in Constantinople and the Monastery of Saint Catherine on Mount ↗Sinai.

J. and his age are dealt with in a number of Greek, Latin and Oriental sources, including Ethiopic writings, namely the ↗Sənkəssar and the Chronicle of ↗John of Nikiou (XC, 49–88; XCII 4–21; XCIV, 1–15): both texts depend on an Arabic Vorlage; the Chronicle in particular provides interesting details on the Byzantine impact of such social movements of Iranian descent (↗Iran) as Manichaeism and Mazdakism (Fiaccadori 2006). Yet, J.’s fame mainly rests on the contradictory works of his official historian, Procopius of Caesarea, who praised the emperor’s achievements in the Bella (‘Wars’) and in the De aedificiis (‘Buildings’), but depicted him as a venal, cruel and incompetent ruler dominated by Theodora in the Anecdota (the so-called Historia arcana, ‘Secret History’).

The nephew and successor of ↗Justin I (s. EAE vol. 5), who appointed him co-emperor on 1 April 527, J. was much more literate than his uncle. Nonetheless, he was a man of equally low origin and came soon into conflict with aristocracy. The conflict was further complicated by J. surrounding himself with capable but unscrupulous, though loyal, people who did not belong to upper classes of the Roman society. Besides his wife (d. 548), these were generals such as Belisarius and Narses and administrators such as Tribonian and John of Cappadocia.

Thanks to his generals, J. took the Vandal kingdom in North Africa (533–34), extending Roman control to the Atlantic Ocean. Then, after a protracted war, he conquered the Ostrogothic kingdom (534–55), restoring to the empire Dalmatia, Sicily and Italy with Rome and Ravenna, which had been under barbarian rule for over half a century. On the Danube frontier, he applied defensive tactics, and ensured peace by paying tributes and stationing troops against invading bands.

More dangerous was the situation in the East, because of the ongoing hostilities with the Sasanian empire: suspended first by the “Eternal peace” concluded with King Ḫusraw I in 532, they burst again when the Persians invaded the Roman territory in 540, and lasted with swinging results until the “Fifty-year peace” of 562. Among the Romans’ successes of that period is the long series of military campaigns by which J. eventually annexed Lazica (549–56), a region on the east shore of the Black Sea that had never been under the Romans before, but had been seized by the Persians in 542 – at the time of the devastating outbreak of bubonic plague (the ‘Plague of J.’). Originating ca. 541, perhaps in Egypt or rather in Ethiopia, such pandemic, arguably the worst ever to afflict humanity, had deep effects in both the countryside and the cities of the Near East (Conrad 1994), and put an end to the first part of J.’s reign, indeed an age of splendour. J. himself caught the disease, but recovered soon.

J. inherited from his uncle the struggle between Byzantium and Iran for the control of the ↗trade routes through which spices and silk – the latter a Chinese monopoly production until the early 550s, when two ↗Nestorian monks succeeded in smuggling eggs of silkworms from Central Asia to Constantinople – reached the ports of the Mediterranean. Within this framework, a significant part of J.’s eastern policy were the diplomatic missions to Ethiopia and South

Arabia headed by Julian in the late 520s and ↗Nonnosus (EAE vol. 5) in 530–31, i.e. during and after the Ḥimyarite wars. Always in search of new routes circumventing Persia, J. wanted the Aksumites, with whom he had friendly relationships, to act as trade mediators to his empire; they were, however, unable to compete with the Persian merchants in India (Procopius, Bell. I, 20, 12, ed. Haury 1905: 109f.).

With the help of his administrators, in order to create a strong unified state all over the Mediterranean area, J. proceeded to subsequent reforms of the tax system and, above all, promulgated the Corpus iuris civilis (a name comprehensively given to its four parts since the 16th cent.). To the Corpus, which still provides the basis of civil law in many modern states, considerable sections of later Oriental law books – mainly through such medieval collections as the Prócheiros nómos ('Law Ready at Hand'), the so-called Syro-Roman Book of Law and the Ecloga ('Selection [of the Laws]') – can be ultimately traced back (s. ↗Fətḥa nägäśt). Thus, the impact of his administrative and juristic legacy extends far beyond the boundaries of his time and domain.

J. had a keen interest in theology as well, and authored a few treatises on this matter. In his view, the much sought after unity of the empire presupposed a common religious basis that could only be ↗Christianity in the Orthodox denomination approved by the Council of ↗Nicaea in 325.

Therefore, J. decreed the total destruction of paganism, his provisions being zealously enforced, with severe persecutions, even of high-ranking people. In 529, the Neoplatonic Academy of Athens was closed, its members moving to Persia (according to the clauses of the "Eternal peace"). Likewise, the long-standing cult of Isis on the island of Philae, in Upper ↗Egypt, near the first cataract, was abolished in 535. The civil rights of the Jews were restricted and their religious privileges hindered. J. suppressed any political and ideological resistance, from the Samaritan movement in Palestine to the Nika revolt at Constantinople (532).

J. saw his empire particularly threatened by the ↗Monophysitism, with which he strove to bring about reunion. Albeit condemned at the Council of ↗Chalcedon in 451, Monophysitism had still a vast audience in the eastern provinces of Syria and Egypt, and kept causing major political problems. Continuing Justin's policy, J. tried to impose unity of faith by forcing his subjects to accept doctrinal compromises appealing to all parties, which proved to be unsuccessful. As a defender of the ecumenical council held at Constantinople in 553, he pressured Pope Vigilius to accept the condemnation of the "Three Chapters", i.e. as many 4th- and 5th-cent. representatives of the Antiochene School of theology – Theodorus of Mopsuestia, Theodoret of Cyrrhus and Ibas of Edessa – who were opposed by the Monophysites on account of their (alleged) Nestorian bias.

As a matter of fact, Empress Theodora had Monophysite sympathies: she sponsored ↗Jacob Baradaeus, the organiser of the Monophysite Church in Syria (↗Jacobites); and dispatched a Monophysite mission, led by the presbyter Julian, to Nobatia (↗Nubia), in 542–45. Almost at the same time, however before 548, J. tried to strengthen Christianity in ↗Ḥimyar by sending there a Monophysite bishop from Egypt (possibly ↗Gregentius), at the request of the local Ethiopian vassal king, ↗Abraha, whose Byzantine leanings are well known (Fiaccadori 2006: 74ff.). To decorate Abraha's most celebrated church, the Qalīs (from Gr. ekklēsía, 'church') in Ṣanᶜāᵓ, J. sent marbles and craftsmen (ibid., 75 and n. 167; cp. Hatke 2011: 270ff.).

This confessional situation is echoed (via its Alexandrian Vorlage) in the Sənkəssar, with three mentions of J.: he is labelled as "infidel" and "Chalcedonian", his initiative of summoning the 553 council being but an opportunity for trying, unsuccessfully though, to convert the true believers, ↗Severus of Antioch in particular, to the Chalcedonian creed (13 and 14 Yäkkatit, ColSyn X, [89–103] 533–47). In a further occurrence, J. tries to get Patriarch Theodosius of Alexandria relinquish Monophysitism: having no success either, the emperor expels him from his seat (28 Säne, GuiSyn I, [167–72] 685–90:[170] 688).

Conversely, in the same passage, the "God-loving Empress Theodora" is described as both a follower of the true faith (as in the entry of 13 Yäkkatit), prompting her to rescue Severus from J.'s deadly anger, and a supporter of Theodosius, whom she helps against Acacianus, the evil "archdeacon of the city of Alexandria".

On his death, J. was buried in the mausoleum church of the Holy Apostles at Constantinople. He left no children and was succeeded by his nephew, the son of his sister Vigilantia, Justin II, who had married Theodora's niece Sophia.

Käbte

ᶜAqqabe säᶜat (also qes aṣe) K. (ከብቴ or ሀብቴ Habte) was a prominent late 18th-early 19th cent. traditional scholar. He is believed to have been a native of Goǧǧam (possibly from Däbrä Wärq, but Təgray is also suggested, s. Yəkunno Amlak 1966: 106f.). He taught in Gondär where he was elevated to the rank of ↗ᶜaqqabe säᶜat during the rule of aṣe ↗Täklä Haymanot II. He died presumably during the tenure of ras ↗Ali.

K. was an aratᶜayna, having mastered and being able to teach all the four main disciplines (gubaᵓe) of exegesis (↗Mäṣḥaf bet). He was a highly talented scholar, with an extraordinary capacity of persuasion (BlunChr 296). The theological apologetic treatise directed against the ↗Ethiopian Orthodox (Täwaḥədo) Church (EOTC), Mäṣḥafä məkr "Book of advice" (anon., but to be ascribed to the 19th-cent. Catholic convert ↗Täklä Haymanot of Mämsaḥ, cf. CRReal 425f.), bears testimony to K.'s brilliance as a scholar and to aṣe Täklä Haymanot II's appreciation of his merits (Mäṣḥafä məkr 1891: 251). The same source accuses K. of incest (ibid. 252) – K. is indeed remembered as liberal, yet this accusation has to be treated with caution. K. adhered to the Christological formula known as Yäṣägga ləǧ (↗Ṣägga), which maintained that the humanity of the Son was honoured by the union (bätäwaḥədo) with the Word, but added that the flesh was anointed by the Holy Spirit. The very term Ṣägga was, according to the Mäṣḥafä məkr (ibid. 193f.), introduced by K.'s uncle and teacher, abba Mälkä Ṣedeq. K. then strengthened the Ṣägga Christology under aṣe Täklä Haymanot and aṣe Täklä Giyorgis (CRReal 442).

K.'s doctrine is expounded in a Gəᶜəz catechetical treatise known as ምዕላድ (Məᶜəllad), introduced as the "Haymanot rətəᶜət ('orthodox faith') that our Fathers transmitted to us". K.'s authorship is confirmed by tradition and by the Mäṣḥafä məkr (it quotes the Məᶜəllad extensively on pp. 194–255, reproducing fully its introductory part on p. 194). The Məᶜəllad is divided into five chapters, corresponding to the ↗Amməstu aᶜəmadä məśṭir. In chapter three, dedicated to the Holy Spirit, K. professes the Ṣägga and Śost lədät creed. Even if this teaching is denounced as heretical by the EOTC, K.'s theological acumen, supported by endless biblical and patristic witnesses, presented in a clear and elegant language, has made his Məᶜəllad a resource copied and used by several intellectuals of the EOTC.

K. also composed a treatise known as Mäṣḥafä śənä fəṭrät, known from several manuscripts (and apparently different from the text traditionally referred to as the ↗Śənä fəṭrät). Except for a few fragments quoted in the ↗andəmta commentaries, his biblical commentaries are lost.

Däǧǧazmač K.D. (ክፍሌ ፡ ዳዲ; b. 1905, Addis Abäba, d. 23 September 1975, Addis Abäba) was an influential member in the ↗government of aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I and one of the leaders of the Šäwan Moǧa family.

K.D. attended the Täfäri Mäkʷännən School and began his government service in the Ethiopian administration in 1927. Prior to the ↗Italian war 1935–36, he held a number of positions, such as that of the treasurer in ↗Dərre Dawa, as a judge for slavery trials (↗Slavery), and also as ↗näggadras in ↗Arsi.

Following the Italian invasion, K.D. first went into exile in ↗Kenya but later joined the ↗resistance assembled in Khartoum to liberate Ethiopia with British assistance (↗War of Liberation). When the Ethiopian army began the march on Addis Abäba, he was a member of the advance team that rallied patriots to attack and dislodge Italian forces on the way. He also served as one of the Emperor's aides de camp.

In the post-war period, K.D. continued to serve in various positions, including as governor of the ↗Təgray and ↗Wällo provincial administrations and was given the title ↗fitawrari. In 1950 he became the Deputy President of the Ethiopian ↗parliament and shortly after Vice Minister of the Ministry of Interior.

In 1957 K.D. was appointed ↗əndärase of Bägemdər and Səmen province with the title of däǧǧazmač. In 1960, following the ↗Coup d'état (s. EAE vol. 2, 1081–82) attempt of General ↗Mängəśtu Nəway (who was a second cousin of K.D.) he was transferred to ↗Käfa province as əndärase. In 1966 he was appointed one of the Emperor's Crown Councillors. Following the seizure of power by the Därg (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council), K.D. was detained on 1 June 1974 by the military, along with other high officials of the Emperor's government. He died in detention.

K.A. (ክልተ ፡ አውላዕሎ, Tgn. 'two mountain peaks') was one of eight *awraǧǧa*s of ↗Təgray before the 1991-reform of ↗administrative divisions. K.A. was located in north-eastern Təgray at the strategic cross-roads between the ↗ᶜAgamä, ↗Tämben, ↗Ǝndärta *awraǧǧa*s and the Eritrean ↗ᶜAfar territory, which constituted its borders. Today, the area is part of the Eastern Təgray Zone, since 2001 as one of its *wärädа*s.

The altitude of K.A. ranges between 500 m and 3,000 m A.S.L. The larger highland part encompasses the former districts of (from north to south) Ṣaᶜəda Ǝmba, Laᶜəlay Wəqro, Aṣbi Därа, ↗Ṣəraᶜ, and Wämbärta. The lowland comprises the ᶜAfar ↗salt producing district of Bäraḥle in the south-east.

The area is inhabited by three linguistic groups, ↗Təgrəñña speakers, ᶜAfar and ↗Sāho (↗Irob). They maintain intensive interethnic relations among each other through economic interdependence, typical for highland-lowland relations in north-eastern Təgray (Assefa Tewodros 1995). Major centres of K.A. are Sənqata, ↗Wəqro, Aṣbi, ↗Agulaᶜ, Hayq Mäshal and Bäraḥläy. These towns were engaged in the northern Ethiopian long-distance ↗trade to the ↗Red Sea. The salt trails starting from the Bäraḥläy lowlands placed the area at the heart of the salt trade upon which most of the Ethiopian regions depended.

There are important archaeological sites and ↗rock hewn churches in K.A., such as that of ↗Abrəha and Aṣbəha of ᶜAyba Gämad, Mikaᵓel Amba of Aṣbi and Wəqro Č̣erqos (↗Dängolo). K.A. also hosts the shrine of an-↗Naǧaši in the small town of ↗Nägaš.

K.A. as a political entity first appears in Italian sources by the early 20th cent. as the main source of the salt economy (Tancredi 1911). Official records cite the same in connection with lists of the reshuffles of Təgrayan district governors, e.g., däǧǧazmač Kaśa Səbḥat of ᶜAgamä was appointed as governor of K.A. in May 1934, while the long-reigning hereditary ruler, däǧǧazmač Tädla Abba Gubän was re-assigned to Haramat (later renamed Kələttä Bäläsa district), to the west (Bərhanənna Sälam 10, 21, 17 May 1934, 151). The ↗Italian war 1935–36 seems to have made these latest reshuffles obsolete. This seems also be the case with däǧǧazmač Tädla. Whilst his suzerain, däǧǧazmač ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase Gugsa, governor of eastern and southern Təgray, defected to the Italian camp, Tädla led a guerrilla war against the Italians. Economically, the presence of the Italians was of decisive importance for the region. K.A. particularly raised huge revenue from the salt trade partly due to the Italian custom and tax reforms that apparently encouraged the activities of local and long-distance merchants

K.A. retained its district status until 1956, when it was governed by the hereditary chief, däǧǧazmač Bäyyänä Tädla, the son and successor of däǧǧazmač Tädla. This situation began to change following the election of his son qäññazmač Məᶜuz Bäyyänä to the Parliament, representing his home district. Məᶜuz, together with others, actively lobbied and apparently succeeded in promoting K.A. to receive the status of an awraǧǧa in 1960. Population size, territorial extent of the district and the huge amount of annual tax levy were the major factors considered in elevating K.A. to awraǧǧa level.

Both ᶜAgamä and K.A. kept their awraǧǧa status throughout the Därg regime until 1991, when K.A. was temporarily dissolved as an administrative unit.

Kənfu Kidane

Däǧǧazmač K.K. (ክንፉ ፡ ኪዳኔ; b. 5 June 1892, Zana ᶜAddet, d. 5 December 1972, Asmära) was a renowned Ethiopian goldsmith, businessman and entrepreneur.

K.K. was the son of ato Gäbrä Mikaᵓel Rämәha and wäyzäro Tərfä Kasay. At the age of four, after the death of his father, his uncle Kidane Gäbrä Mikaᵓel, took him to ↗Aksum. When K.K. was ten they moved to ↗Asmära where the uncle opened a goldsmith shop. When Kidane died, K.K. opened a goldsmith shop of his own, which turned into a successful business.

His work became known not only for jewellery, but also for church artefacts, royal and wedding gifts and ornaments. He also taught himself to read and write Gəᶜəz, Təgrəñña, Amharic and Italian.

During the 1920s and 1930s K.K. participated in several Italian colonial trade and artisan exhibitions in Turin (1927), Rome (1931) and Brussels (1937), being awarded gold medals and certificates of merit. Later, he also participated in Eritrean and Ethiopian trade exhibitions. He was a very active member of the Ethiopian Yähagär Fəqər Maḥbär in Eritrea. He was elected member of the Municipality Council of Asmära. He became one of the few businessmen to be bestowed the title of ↗däǧǧazmač by aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I, and received several medals of honour (e.g. the Ethiopian Star, the Ḫaylä Śəllase I silver and gold medal; cp. ↗Orders and decorations).

In 1945 K.K. employed 30 Ethiopian gold and silver smiths in his business. From his thriving jewellery trade he expanded into a variety of ventures which included real estate, residential buildings, agricultural and dairy farms. By the 1960s he held 3,627 shares in twelve ↗business enterprises in Asmära and Addis Abäba, including shares in the Addis Ababa Bank, the Banco di Roma, Coca Cola, and the Wänǧi Sugar Factory. He was also a shareholder of Salvati, the Asmära City Bus Company, initially established by the Italians. He became one of the wealthiest businessmen in Ethiopia.

K.K. was well known as a collector of ancient coins of Aksum. Italian colonial scholars such as ↗Conti Rossini and ↗Cerulli were among his customers. Later in his life (in 1968) he translated Arturo Anzani’s Numismatica Axumita (1926) into Amharic (↗Coinage; ↗Numismatics).

Parts of K.K.’s own collection of Aksumite coins, certificates of merit, and awards in trade exhibitions both abroad and in Ethiopia, as well as his collection of gramophone records (↗phonograms) in Amharic and Təgrəñña issued by Kekkiya paša of Eritrea (1940) are deposited at the ↗Institute of Ethiopian Studies.

K.K. was married to wäyzäro Wägayyä Gäbrä Mikaᵓel and was survived by 9 children and 45 grandchildren.

King lists

K.l. are lists of Ethiopian kings transmitted in Ethiopic manuscripts, both as independent texts and as appendices to specific works (esp. the ↗Kəbrä nägäśt, cf. BezKebr 173 [text] = 138 [tr.], and historiographic texts). They essentially refer to the legendary or half-legendary ancient and early medieval period of Ethiopian history. They are to be interpreted as one of the various attempts of Ethiopians at reconstructing their own past in the later (medieval) period (probably starting from the 14th cent. at the earliest), by filling up the documentary gaps of the ancient and Aksumite phase with notices and information drawn from various sources (CRList 313–20; CRStor 113f., 249). The genre of K.l. was cultivated also in recent times (20th-cent. Ethiopian ↗historiography, e.g., in ↗Ḫəruy Wäldä Śəllase) with the attempt at reconstructing the continuous ancestral line of the Solomonic dynasty (cf. Kropp 2004; 2006; Zach 2002; 2004), even though the common notion of K.l. in scholarly contributions normally refers to the medieval lists of Aksumite, ↗Zagʷe and early Solomonic kings.

K.l. were first studied in pioneer studies by ↗Dillmann (1853) and Drouin (1882). They had been, however, known even earlier through Ethiopian informants or from manuscript sources (first collected by ↗Vittori 1552, reprinted in Schott 1603:1278 and Vecchietti 1621:69a–71b, probably on the basis of notices by ↗Täsfa Ṣəyon in Rome – as surmised by CRList 265 – or from a manuscript now kept in Florence – cf. CRStor 12 – in the Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana, Acq. e doni 38 [cf. Marrassini 1987:77, no. 13]). Similarly they were known from texts collected and published by Jesuit missionaries (Manoel de ↗Almeida and ↗Páez) and other travellers, such as ↗Bruce, ↗Salt, ↗Rüppell, d'↗Abbadie, and from manuscripts eventually acquired by the major European libraries (Oxford, Frankfurt, ↗Bibliothèque nationale de France, ↗British Library) and from the respective catalogues (cf. CRList 265f.): on these sources, ↗Basset (BassÉt), ↗Halévy (1874:131ff.) and others based their synthetic contributions.

Notwithstanding minor later integrations (cf. Grébaut 1912, who published a list from the beginning to aṣe ↗Bäkaffa: but the edition omits the kings preceding aṣe ↗Yəkunno Amlak; other lists in SerHist 202f.), the main study that has critically analysed the available materials – a respectable total of 86 K.l. – still remains that by ↗Conti Rossini (CRList; resumed also by Edwards 1918). He distinguished eight K.l.-types (A [= Dillmann's type C], B [= Dillmann's type B], C [= Dillmann's type A], D, E, F, G, H), with two main subtypes (F bis, and H bis) and minor subtypes (A1, A2, on which cf. Godet 1986–87:22).

K.l. A (22 witnesses) consists of 47 names and is the list also contained in the manuscripts (but not the most ancient ones) of the Kəbrä nägäśt. It starts with ↗Bazen (the king in the 8th year of whose reign Christ was born, in some mss. preceded by ↗Arwe) and ends with Dəl Naᵓad (↗Dəlnaᶜod), after whom the kingdom passes to the Zagʷe through ↗Tərdaᵓ Gäbäz (s. EAE vol. 5). Some of the lists (probably the earlier ones) omit Dəlnaᶜod and other kings after ↗Armaḥ, and insert queen ↗Ǝsato/Gʷədit. It includes 14 kings of the pagan and 40 of the Christian eras. Sometimes it continues K.l. C.

K.l. B (33 witnesses) consists of 69 names and is found in the Däbrä Libanos recension of the Gädlä Täklä Haymanot and in the Short Chronicles (cf., e.g., DombrChr 32ff. [text] = 144–51 [tr.]). It was probably conceived at ↗Däbrä Damo. It starts with Ǝbnä Ḥakim (↗Mənilək I) and ends with Dəl Naᵓad, including kings of the pre-Christian (25), Christian (11) and Christianized (33) eras.

K.l. C (16 witnesses) consists of 91 names and is characterized by the indication of the years of reign for each king. It was known by the ↗Jesuits (Almeida) and by Vittori. It includes kings of the pre-Solomonic (6), pre-Christian (20), Christian (32) and Christianized (33) eras, from Arwe to ↗Betä Ǝsraᵓel. Several names have an Ǝllä-prefix.

K.l. D (attested by six witnesses, among whom Páez, Melchior da Silva [cf. Couto 1616, liv. I, ch. VIII, fols. 19v–20], and Almeida) consists of 66 names. It includes kings of the pre-Christian (24), Christian (13) and Christianized (27) eras, from Ǝbnä Ḥakim to Dəlnäᶜad (↗Dəlnaᶜod). It is the earliest attested K.l.

K.l. E (in one manuscript only, cf. Conti Rossini 1903), from Ǝnda Śəllase in Akkälä Guzay, consists of 67 names, from Arwe to Dəlnäᶜad, and tends to establish a relationship between the ancient dynasty and the Ḥamasen region.

K.l. F (two witnesses) consists of 32 names. It includes kings of the pre-Christian (six), Christian (six) and Christianized (20) eras, from Ǝbnä Ǝlḥakim (↗Mənilək I) to Dəlnaᶜod. Some of its elements can be found in one version of the Gädlä Iyäsus Moᵓa (cf. Godet 1986–87:23; KurMoa 19 [text] = 23 [tr.]). K.l. F bis (only one witness, probably an abridged list) includes 17 names with an indication of years, from Agabos to Ləbdare.

K.l. G (only one witness) consists of 74 names and is an expansion of F. It includes kings of the pre-Christian (29), Christian (15) and Christianized (30) eras from Mən Yələḥəq (↗Mənilək I) to Dəlnaᶜod.

K.l. H (three witnesses) consists of 25 names, from Ǝbnä Ǝlḥakim (↗Mənilək I) to Luzay. K.l. H bis (in one manuscript of the Kəbrä nägäśt) consists of 27 names, but with the addition of the years of reign and also intermingling kings of the 17th and 18th cent. Both H and H bis state that they cover a range of 1,200 years. Two additional fragmentary list types, S1 and S2 (only partially published), were singled out by SerHist 202f. (cf. Godet 1986–87: 24).

The K.l. can be categorized – still according to CRList – in three main types: 1) A, B, C, D, E; 2) F, G; and 3) H. H is probably related to B; F, also related to B, is probably the primary one between F and G; and G is an expansion of F, also implemented by B; D is intermediary between A/B and C, while E has been influenced and determined by local traditions; C was probably compiled by someone who knew list A, a list of pre-Christian kings, and probably also D, but definitely not B (cf. CRList 304–09).

In a more recent analysis still mainly based upon CRList, Godet (1986-87: 11ff.) has singled out six periods covered by the K.l. and regrouped them in three stages and subsequently three layers: a) from the origins of the dynasty to Bazen (ancestors of Mənilək, from Mənilək to Wärädä Nägaś, from Awsyo to Rämḥay, and from Haden to Bazen); b) from Bazen to ↗Abrəha and Aṣbəḥa (Christianization) and from Abrəha and Aṣbəḥa to ↗Kaleb and his successor ↗Gäbrä Mäsqäl; c) from Gäbrä Mäsqäl and Qʷäsṭänṭinos (Ǝllä Śahəl) to Dəlna Näᶜad (↗Dəlnaᶜod) and the end of the Aksumite dynasty. (Periods five and six cover the Zagʷe dynasty and parallelly the ancestors of ↗Yəkunno Amlak, and the ↗Solomonic dynasty.) Godet (ibid. 24f.) concludes his analysis by proposing four independent sources which gave origin to five families of lists: D-A (to which C for the beginning and G for the end are to be added); B and E (to which S2 for the end is to be added); C (in his layer b): A, B and C being the most frequent lists; then H–H bis and F–F bis (from which G depends for the layer a); S1 cannot be classified.

The K.l. are consistent starting from Yəkunno Amlak, whereas they are at great variance for the Zagʷe dynasty and earlier. K.l. might therefore have a substantially political meaning, having been dressed in order to establish a direct connection between the kings of the pre- and post-Zagʷe periods in supporting the ideology of the Solomonic dynastic "restoration". The first occasion for that was the implementation of the Kəbrä nägäśt with a K.l. according to the model of biblical and Copto-Arabic historiography. Various monastic centres, in particular in Təgray (↗Däbrä Damo, Däbrä Bänkʷäl, etc.) might have developed their own lists, which would account well for the respective differences; but other (Amhara) or more precise regional contributions can be guessed at (e.g., the list from ᶜAgamä with names in -dəm/-təm of Sāho origin, cf. Godet 1986–87: 23). The sources used for this reconstruction are still difficult to determine in detail. They might have included numismatic sources (legends on ↗coins), ↗inscriptions, possibly early literary or documentary texts (manuscript notes and historical records, but also information from royal ↗archives [s. vol. 5] or what remained of them, cf. ibid. 13), as the precise correspondence of some names with historical characters documented in these sources would lead one to think (e.g., Armaḥ, Ǝllä Azgʷagʷa, Ǝllä Gäbäz, Ǝllä Ṣäḥam, Ǝllä Śahəl, Ǝsraᵓel, Kaleb etc.; cf. Fiaccadori 2006). Oral traditions, also aiming to interpret local antiquities and ruins might have been used. Much less likely is the survival of memories from South Arabian antiquity (as proposed by CRList 313f.), whereas some elements might have been derived from Arabic texts and traditions, but not from the ↗Sənkəssar, which did not have any influence on the K.l.

Alessandro Bausi

Konovalov, Fjodor Evgenjevič

Colonel K. (b. 10 January 1888, Georgia [?]; d. 9 June 1970, Durban, South Africa) was a Russian military officer who supported Ethiopia during the ↗Italian war of 1935–36.

Trained as an engineer and soldier in the Russian military, K. commanded the Russian 10th Aviation Division during ↗World War I and participated in military missions to France and Great Britain. After the collapse of the Tsarist government in early 1917, he served the Provisional Government as aviation inspector of the Caucasus Army.

As World War I ended and the Russian Civil War began, in February 1919, he commanded the 1st Aviation Division of the “White” Volunteer Army. He then served as Deputy Head of Aviation in the Crimea. Later, in spring 1920, he was evacuated to Constantinople. From there, he went to Egypt and finally to Ethiopia, where he worked in the office of Public Works and became an Ethiopian citizen.

During the Italian invasion K. served as a military adviser to aṣe ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I and observed several important battles, including that of ↗May Č̣äw.

After the Italian occupation had begun, K. remained in Addis Abäba for several months and drafted a semi-autobiographical and historically important account of the campaign in defence of Ethiopia. Later appearing in several variants, K. gave a copy to the journalist George ↗Steer who translated and published passages in his own book (Steer 1937). Meanwhile revised and translated, K.’s work appeared in Italian under the title La guerra italo–etiopica vista da un testimone. Downplaying K.’s earlier friendly comments on Ethiopia, this new version added passages lauding Italy. Even so, this draft needed further modification before the Italian authorities would publish it. The task fell to Commander Stefano Miccichè, who had known K. in Ethiopia before the war. Adding a chapter describing the looting of Addis Abäba by the Ethiopians in the final days of the war, Micciché’s version appeared with a new title, Con le armate del Negus; ↗Mussolini enthusiastically praised K.’s book.

After the war, K. went to Spain to assume the rank of Colonel in the Fascist Falangist ranks during the Spanish Civil War.

Despite Micciché’s edition and unproved allegations that K. had always been working for the Italians, Ḫaylä Śəllase forgave K. after Ethiopia’s liberation in 1941. He lived in Addis Abäba until 1952.

While in the capital, K. drafted a History of Ethiopia, probably in Russian. The Hoover Institution in California and the ↗Institute of Ethiopian Studies hold copies of the manuscript translated into English though the Russian original was lost. This work is important, because it challenges K.’s Fascist slant. Praising Ethiopia’s efforts in modernization, the most interesting parts of the text describe those events in which he took part or which he witnessed, for example, improvements in infrastructure before and during the war. Furthermore, K.’s comments on Italy’s occupation policy and the guerrilla resistance by Ethiopia’s Patriots provide an intriguing mix of Italian brutality and positive accomplishment, the latter especially in building a physical infrastructure and forging personal relationships with individual Ethiopians.

After leaving Ethiopia, K. eventually turned up in South Africa, where he died.

Languages and peoples in Ethiopia and Eritrea

The Ethio-Eritrean domain is marked by a large and diverse array of languages and peoples. The two countries have since 1991 designated officially recognized ethnic groups or peoples, in state parlance called "nationalities". Eritrea has nine, defined after formal independence in 1993, Ethiopia some 74, the delimitation of which was based on the work of the Institute for the Study of Ethiopian Nationalities (ISEN) set up in the early 1980s under the auspices of the Därg regime. As for languages, nine are spoken in Eritrea and from 70 to 90 (according to different estimates) in Ethiopia. The ISEN produced a detailed map in 1984 with all the ethno-linguistic groups, the classification of which was taken over virtually unchanged by the post-1991 Ethiopian Peoples' Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) government.

The ethnic and linguistic diversity was probably for tens of thousands of years a characteristic of the ↗Horn of Africa. Various groups of hunter-gatherers, pastoralists, cultivators and traders coexisted within its boundaries. Later, in the written records of ↗Aksum we find names of ethnic groups whose exact relation to the Aksumite kings is not certain; at least some of them were paying tribute to Aksum (cf., e.g., RIÉ I 186:7–8, 10–11). In Adulis ↗inscriptions and the 4th-cent. ᶜEzana inscriptions the Bəga and Barya people are mentioned, who are traditionally identified with ↗Beǧa and "Barya" (or ↗Nara), respectively (e.g., RIÉ I nos. 188:4; 185 I:2,3; 189:9; s. also SerHist 63). However, this identification operates under a too strict and closed view of ↗ethnicity or language. Group labels disappear and emerge. Some groups or subgroups known from the historical record (like ↗Gafat, ↗Noba, Gomba [↗Gämbo], ↗Zälan) have disappeared through assimilation; others perhaps soon will (like ↗Ongota [Birale], ↗Mäsmäs, ↗Mao, ↗Harro, Ganza [Mao] and Omo ↗Murle). Of the Judaic ↗Betä Ǝsraᵓel (Fälaša) only a small number remain in Ethiopia after their mass emigration to ↗Israel since the mid-1980s (Ben Ezer 2002).

In the historical sources, it is often difficult to distinguish between ethnonyms, region names and language names. The names of a region and a people became often co-terminous, as in the case of ↗Təgrəñña. On the other hand, language and ethnic boundaries are not always identical. A language tends to expand and be adopted beyond a specific ethnic group, leading to blurring of boundaries. Thus, it is difficult to assert overlap between linguistic identity and ethnic identity. The assumption of present-day political elites in the region that language forms the core element in the formation and existence of an ethnic group is quite debatable. It underestimates socio-cultural traditions or economic specialization. It also excludes the recognition of mixed populations or of those falling outside the classification. This is most obvious in the case of urban populations, who often lived for several generations in the towns, intermarried with others, speak a dominant language (↗Amharic or ↗Oromiffa in Ethiopia and ↗Təgrəñña or ↗Arabic in Eritrea), but if asked would identify themselves under a variety of "ethnic" labels. One contemporary example is that of the ↗Wälaytta people: in recent decades, tens of thousands of Wälaytta-speakers left for economic reasons their crowded area of origin to settle elsewhere. The second generation growing up in the new environment usually loses the Wälaytta language, adopts Amharic or Oromiffa as a first language and has only a tenuous connection to ethnic heritage (Planel 2003).

Languages

In Ethiopia and Eritrea two of the four large language phyla of Africa are represented: ↗Nilo-Saharan and ↗Afro-Asiatic. Within Afro-Asiatic three large units are present in Ethiopia and Eritrea: ↗Semitic (represented with ↗Ethio-Semitic and Arabic), ↗Cushitic and ↗Omotic. Nilo-Saharan languages are spoken predominantly on the western fringes of the region.

In the following two tables, all recognized languages of the two countries are enumerated, with the corresponding ethnic groups. The list is not definitive and not exhaustive. The numbers of language speakers in Ethiopia are from the 1994 and 2007 Ethiopian censuses (CSA 2009: 98f., 117f.), slightly adjusted upwards to account for the statistically probable increase. They may thus differ, even considerably in some cases, from the figures provided in the corresponding EAE entries so far, but it seems important to provide the up-to-date numbers. Some language and ethnic designations and groupings in the census differ from those used throughout the EAE (marked with asterisk [*] before the name). The tables also give the groups that disappeared from the 2007 census (they are marked with an asterisk after the name). The Eritrean figures are less secure as there are not sufficient published statistics. Neither was a population census held since 1991 Eritrean independence. The numbers given in the Tables are "minimum" population numbers

There are also a number of as yet unclassified languages, such as ↗Ongota and ↗Šabo. The tables do not reflect the usage of some languages, notably Amharic, Oromiffaa and Təgrəñña, as second or third languages (s. Hudson 1999). One can also mention that Ethnologue reports for Eritrea a number of native speakers of ↗Italian (Lewis 2009).

The lists above show the inherent problems of ethno-linguistic classification: some languages have more, or less, speakers than their ethnic groups; people are not equivocal in their ethnic self-identification, giving rise to various labels for one group, and some language groups have for various reasons split up into more units, e.g., the "Jebelawi" of the 1994 census were in 2007 distinguished in "Fedashi" (4,050) and "Gebato" (1,497). Some groups have dropped dramatically in numbers (like the Dime, still 32,099 in 1994) or seem to lag behind in the population growth trends (like the Amhara), suggesting that people may hide or deny their "identity".

Another indication that the CSO census lists of peoples and language groups are not authoritative is that compared to the 1994 Ethiopian census (CSA 1998:66f.), and for unexplained reasons, in the 2007 census report (CSA 2009:90f.) new groups have emerged while others disappeared.

Among the new ones listed in the 2007 census are (transcribed as in the Census): Kusume, Fedaše, Derashe, Bacha, Brayle (= Birale), Bena (= Banna), Dawuro (= Kullo), Konta, Donga (part of the Käfiččo group), Mer (formerly under Benç), Mashola, Qechem, Shekecho, Silte, Zelmam (= Baale), and Werji (formerly under Oromo).

Among those that disappeared in the 2007 census as ethnic groups are the Ganğule, Bayso, Zay, Gawwada, Fälaša, Šita, Kwama, Kunfäl, Kač̣ama, Libido (= Maräqo), Mabaan and Kəmant (but see Zelealem Leyew 2003:31). Some were renamed, such as the Ethiopian Sāho (now Irob), and Suri (now Surma), others redefined as part of other groups (Ganğule now under Gidiččo/Harro).

This statistical dynamics shows the problem, in Ethiopia like elsewhere, of the nature of an ethnic group and when it must be accorded a status. It reveals local-level political dynamics and changing self-identification that lead to certain groups being newly 'recognized'.

A language community – e.g., Oromiffa or Amharic – may comprise people from different ethnic origins who may have the dominant language as their first language, hence the difference between the numbers in the second and the fourth columns of the tables. This explains why according to some census figures (CSA 1998:79) the number of Amharic speakers was the highest, although in terms of ethnicity the Oromo formed the largest group (CSA 1998:66). In the 2007 census report, however, a significant change occurred in the figures (CSO 2009:118), with Oromo mother tongue-speakers 3.2 million above native Amharic speakers.

In the map issued by the Ethiopian federal authorities in 1992 (with 63 ethno-linguistic units), in the Ethiopian Constitution of 1995 and in the Ethiopian Censuses of 1994 and 2007 we find names of "nations, nationalities and peoples" that are not language groups, and also language names that do not refer to separate ethnic groups, are misnomers, or whose status is unclear. A notable case is ↗Gurage, which is not a cohesive 'ethnic group' but a cover term for a number of different but usually related dialects/languages spoken in the Gurage region (e.g., the Səlṭi now no longer see themselves as Gurage, although linguistically there are some common features). Similarly, the ethnic unit Suri includes Baale, Čai and Tirmaga, of which the latter two groups speak varieties of the same language, Čai-Tirma-Mursi.

In addition, large population groups/peoples like the Təgre in Eritrea and the Oromo (Wärği, ↗Guğği, ↗Arsi and ↗Boorana) have significant internal linguistic differences and also diversity in terms of self-identity. The status of occupational caste groups like Wata or Fuga is also ambiguous: are they part of the wider societies they live in or still separate group? (Freeman – Pankhurst 2002). Finally, small and as yet undescribed ethno-linguistic minorities exist among various peoples, like the Manğa or Band, Šabo and Sabuye in south-western Ethiopia.

In Eritrea, the nine recognized "nationalities" are: ᶜAfar, Hadareeb (part of the Beğa, s. ↗Hadándowa), Rašāʾida, Bilin, Kunama, Nara, Sāho, Təgre and Təgrəñña (Tekle 2003: 120). These groups are coterminous with linguistic groups, except for the Hadareeb, who speak Beğa, and the Arabic-speaking Rašāʾida, but there is significant internal differentiation as to group identity, e.g., among Kunama and Təgre. Standard Arabic was used for literary, diplomatic and educational purposes (Drewes 1976); colloquial Arabic is now spoken as a second language by many Eritreans, especially ↗Beni ᶜAmər and Təgre.

History, state formation and ethnicity

The peopling of Ethiopia and Eritrea was a complex process of ethnogenesis and interaction, spanning more than six millennia and infused by regular immigrations from neighbouring regions like ↗Yemen, ↗Arabia, ↗Sudan and the Somali coastal areas (s. Haberland — Straube 1979). A standard theme repeated in all histories is the immigration of tribal Semitic-speaking groups from southern Arabia in the first millennium B.C., reinforcing communities of Semitic speakers already settled in the highlands. This influx had a formative role for the emergence of early city states, architecture, religious cults and agrarian cultivation systems in the region of north-central Ethiopia and Eritrea, with ↗Aksum emerging in the 1st cent. A.D.

Agäw-speaking and Omotic-speaking groups were perhaps the most ancient populations settled in Ethiopian-Eritrean highlands. The agrarian ↗Agäw peoples were likely present in the area at the time of the more large-scale South Arabian ('Sabaen') migrations in the 2nd half of the first millennium B.C. The Agäw languages also form the substratum of the South Semitic languages Təgrəñña and Amharic. Since the 6th cent. A.D., Agäw peoples were gradually integrated into the expanding Christian culture and political system. Agäw groups are still found across the northern highlands.

Nilo-Saharan-speaking groups were present or moved into the south-western border areas (not part of the medieval Ethiopian highland state) since at least the 12th–13th cent., but remained very marginal to socio-political developments of the imperial state (cf. Bender 1975: 18). Proto-East-Cushitic-speaking pastoral peoples (ancestors of the Somali and ᶜAfar) lived in the coastal plains on the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean, migrating towards the interior since at least the 9th cent. Southern Cushitic groups (Oromo) gradually moved north from the southern borderlands especially in the 15th–16th cent. The fertile Ethiopian highlands thus came to be inhabited by a fusion of Semitic-speaking and Cushitic-speaking peoples that in the medieval age since the 9th cent. developed a variety of states – an imperial state in the central highlands, kingdoms with so-called divine ↗kingship, regional conquest states based on trade and military expansion, as well as various tribal federations in the western and southern fringes (e.g., among Somali, Oromo and Omotic-speaking groups). Muslim sultanates emerged in the eastern coastal regions up to Ifat and Bale, and more democratic assembly societies (Boorana-Oromo, Gamo groups) in the South. While these state formations had emerged relatively independently in the later medieval era, before the late 16th cent., there was certainly a process of mutual influence between them in terms of symbolism and regalia, political ideology, structures of governance and rituals. The cases of the ↗Käfa kingdom, the ↗Gonga states, and the Oromo kingdoms, being in some political and religious contact with northern Christian power-holders, made this clear.

The decline of Aksum starting from the 7th cent. had been followed by the development of a state in central Ethiopia ruled by the "Agäw" ↗Zagʷe dynasty, but its continuity with the heritage of the Aksumite state was notable, e.g., in adherence to the Christian faith, royal ideology, mode of administration, and monumental architecture. The establishment of the ↗Solomonic dynasty in 1270 marked the ascent of the ↗Amhara people. In the centuries of expansion up to the 17th cent., military confrontation with peripheral peoples and contesting regional elites led to ethno-regional rivalry, e.g., with the Agäw-speaking Betä Ǝsraʾel, especially since the late 14th cent., and Islamized peoples in the coastal plains (ancestors of the Somali and ʿAfar). In the devastating 16th-cent. war between Christian Ethiopia and the Muslims of ʿAdal, led by ↗Aḥmad b. Ibrāhīm al-Ġāzī ("Grañ"), religion not ethnicity was the idiom of war, but the subtext was again an opposition between Amharic-, Təgrəñña- and Agäw-speaking peoples on the one hand and Somali, ʿAfar and Harari people on the other. This war took a heavy toll of the population of the highlands and adjacent lowlands. Correct figures cannot be calculated, but judging from contemporary accounts, the protracted war reduced the population an estimated 15 to 20 % in some areas, led to depopulation of large stretches of border land, and destroyed the means of livelihood of tens of thousands of people. Both opponents thus came out severely weakened. After the war, in the late 16th cent., the largely but not exclusively pastoral Oromo people expanded from their homelands south-east of Lake Abbayya near the upper Ganaalee River to the north, conquering and settling large tracts of territory. According to some authors (Asmarom Legesse 1973; VSAe II, but contra s. Hallpike 1976), this extraordinary movement was related to a relatively sudden population expansion of Oromo in the 16th cent., which apart from northward migration and conquest, led to the formulation of the ↗gadaa, the Oromo generation-grading system, which put ritual limits on procreation. Due to the unprecedented upheavals in the political, economic and demographic sense, the mid-16th cent. was a watershed in the political and ethnic history of Ethiopia.

Other Cushitic-speaking areas such as Kambaata and Hadiyya maintained their own independence, although they were reduced in size. In the southern highlands, Omotic-speaking peoples, most of whom were sedentary cultivators (of ənsät, grains, root crops) developed their own small-scale polities, relatively untouched by developments in the centre and north of the country. Among these were the Käfa kingdom (Bieber 1920–23), which successfully warded off an Oromo attempt at submission in 1540, other Gonga kingdoms like Hinnario (↗Ǝnnarya), ↗Boša and Šeka, and the smaller divine kingdoms or chiefdoms like in Gofa, Maale, Wälaytta, Dawro (Kullo), Konta and ↗Dizi. They may have adopted kingship ideas and symbolism from the north (HabKön; Haberland 1981), but then developed their own particular forms of it.

The lowlands surrounding the Ethiopian highland area in the south and west were long settled by pastoral-nomadic peoples speaking Nilo-Saharan and Cushitic languages. While trade and raiding relations existed between the highlanders and these people, the latter were not politically incorporated into the various states and largely retained their decentralized, segmentary social systems where leadership did not reside in kings or chiefs but in ritual leaders ('priests', diviners) and age or generation sets. Such non-state societies were predictably more egalitarian than other political formations but structured by gerontocratic rule (↗Gerontocracy) or prestige-based clan group hierarchies.

Ethnic identities, based largely on language difference and certain shared ritual complexes, were always important (although its explicit, political articulation is a modern phenomenon). Still, migrations, political rivalry and conflicts, although culturally interpreted and validated, emerged from an economic logic of competition and conflict (often land issues). While groups were no doubt aware of their cultural, religious and other differences and took pride in their traditions, the conscious use of ethnicity for political purposes is a late 20th-cent. phenomenon.

Peoples, ethnicity and politics

Power and political hierarchy were always in one way or another tied to ethnicity in that a dominant state-building group or other elite usually emerged within a specific ethnic or linguistic community. It has not been otherwise in Europe or Asia. In Ethiopia, the Ethio-Semitic-speaking groups played this role in the Aksumite period, the Agäw possibly in the time of the Zagʷe dynasty (12th–13th cent., s. Taddesse Tamrat 1988: 9; SerHist 237, 265) and the Ethio-Semitic-speaking Amhara in the post-1270 imperial Solomonic state. Likewise, in the "divine kingdoms" formed by the Gonga and other peoples in the south, certain ethnic or clan-based elites came to rule quite heterogeneous populations, often augmented with immigrants and fugitives. This was the case in the powerful kingdom of Käfa (Bušašo rule) and especially in Wälaytta, a good example where peoples of very diverse origins united under an expansive dynasty, whereby state formation under the kingship forged a new "collective" identity among the people, i.e. a primarily political one.

In the 18th and 19th cent. the Oromo in southern and western Ethiopia were significant state builders in the Gibe region (MHasOr) and also became part of the northern state elite (s. Ficquet 2000). In the margins of these emerging states, other ethno-regional groups continued to exist in segmentary political units or emerged as reactive formations against states and predatory overlords (examples are the Gumuz, Meʾen, Hamär and Guǧǧi). In the semi-arid plains not suited to sedentary agriculture and the formation of towns, pastoral nomads retained their mobile and decentralized way of life: Təgre, Beǧa, Beni ᶜAmər, Sāho, Somali, Boorana, Suri, Ñaŋatom, or ᶜAfar.

In the 20th cent. an Ethiopian national state gained ground leading to political centralization, military and educational modernization, and to a new framework of codified law drawn up in the 1950s and challenging customary law traditions. These processes were accompanied by a certain measure of bureaucratization of the countryside, enormously reinforced under the Därg regime after 1974. Due to economic and political inequalities in the modernization process, ethno-linguistic and ethno-regional identities were not extinguished but reproduced in hierarchies of power, differential access to central resources, and cultural prestige.

Political protest and mobilization on the basis of ethno-regional identities has played a large role in the politics of Ethiopia and Eritrea in the past 30 years. Due to the geographic, economic and political inequalities that characterized group relations and state formation in the region, some groups (notably the Amharic speakers, Təgrəñña-speakers and Oromiffaa speakers) emerged as the most powerful, and came to rule or assimilate peoples and ethnic groups in their orbit. The Ethiopian empire up to 1974 is an obvious example. Due to its political expansion from the 14th to the 19th cent., various pre-existing ethnic groups were subjected and relatively marginalized in a political-economic and cultural sense, although this mainly applied on the level of elites. The common people were similar in their poverty and lack of power. While not closed to upwardly mobile people of other groups, the empire was dominated notably by Amhara (mainly those from the Šäwa region) and to a lesser extent by Təgrəñña-speaking people as part of the elite. Under the imperial regime the Orthodox Christian faith was expanded and upheld as a civilizational model (s. Teshale Tibebu 1994), and linguistic "amharization" was an ongoing process (Bahru Zewde 2004). Despite this, significant minorities of non-Christians (notably Muslims) always existed within the Amhara and Təgray regions. In the Oromo areas, conquered and minority groups were usually assimilated by the dominant group in the political, linguistic and cultural sense (s. MHasOr). On the other hand, Oromo groups conquered in the late 19th cent. by the imperial state, such as the Arsi and the Afran Qalluu (↗Qottu), were reduced to an inferior position and many adopted Islam as a form of resistance (Mohamed Hassen 1994; Abbas Haji Gnamo 2002). The remarkable generation grading system called gadaa system of the Boorana, Guǧǧi and related Cushitic-speaking peoples like Konso, Burǧi, and Gideʾo (s. VSAe II, 171f.) remained in place well into the 20th cent., but its egalitarian and local character was gradually eroded and absorbed into state structures.

In the years of Därg rule from 1974 to 1991, the "ethnic" profile was largely shed, certainly as compared to the imperial regime that had imposed linguistic "amharization". The Därg's literacy program used 15 languages and there was rhetorical recognition of ethnic diversity. Still, insurgent movements based on ethnic and/or regional identities emerged in many parts of Ethiopia to combat the government's policies and the perceived lack of democracy and respect of ethno-cultural rights. Examples are movements among the Somali, the Oromo, the Təgrayans, Sidaama and ᶜAfar, and of course the Eritreans. Led by educated but unemployed or socially blocked youngsters, students, and sidelined politicians, administrators or military, they usually demanded autonomy or self-determination. In the absence of developed class relations, political parties or other collective identities, the political and military mobilization of marginalized, disenchanted and largely illiterate people on the basis of ethnicity was relatively easy to do in a country with few economic opportunities and a highly authoritarian political system. The metaphorical "family identity" suggested by this appeal to ethnicity had a more emotional resonance among people than any other identity.

In ethno-federal Ethiopia after 1991, a new political regime was introduced based largely on ethnic identity (s. James et al. 2002). The insurgent movement ↗Tigray People's Liberation Front (TPLF), which came to form the core of the post-1991 government, itself has its roots in an ethno-regional resistance movement against the central Ethiopian Därg government. Under the TPLF-EPRDF regime since 1991, ethnic identities and languages were given explicit recognition, and "nationalities" defined from above became the units for decentralisation, district borders, educational reform and local administrative autonomy. Ethnicity came to be defined as a vehicle of identity politics (for one early example, s. Markakis 1998). This has led to the use of mother tongue education and to new forms of ethno-linguistic consciousness and feelings (or demands) of recognition. One remarkable case of ethnic redefinition resulted some years ago in the disengagement of the Səlṭi from the Gurage people as a separate nationality (by referendum). On the basis of this (contested) decision the Səlṭi achieved their own administrative zone. The political use of ethnicity also produced a certain freezing of identities, a possible limitation of social interactions (e.g., of intermarriage), more "border conflicts" fuelled by real or perceived resource competition, and a decline of socio-economically induced migration of people. In the present era of globalization, most larger ethnic groups also have ↗diaspora communities outside Ethiopia and Eritrea. Through publications and modern media their educated elites are engaged in the discursive reconstruction and shaping of ethnic identities. This discourse has an important impact, e.g., by emphasizing ethnic boundaries and identities, but may not bear close resemblance to the facts on the ground in the home country. Indeed, while the political elite in both countries is still dominated by members of one or two groups and ethnic tensions exist and frequently erupt in violence, the social and economic problems of Ethiopia and Eritrea affect all ethnic groups and peoples, having made them more interdependent than in the imperial or Därg era. This is the paradox of ethnicization: rhetorical construction of difference but greater interdependence in everyday socio-economic life.

Lebanon

The presence of Ethiopians in L. is confirmed by two written sources, both analysed by ↗Cerulli (CerPal vol. 1, 325–33).

An Arabic colophon in the 15th-cent. Ethiopian ↗Psalter Berlin, Staatsbibliothek, ms. Or. qu. 172 (= DillmBerl no. 7), fol. 164v, states that the manuscript belonged to priest Melyos (Miliyos), the head of the Ethiopian monastery on Mount Libanon (Ǧabal Lubnān) and that it was purchased in 1791 of the Seleucid era (1479 A.D.) for 52 drahmas, by Abd as-Sayyid, an Ethiopian from the monastery of Libanos, who in 1794 (1482 A.D.) sold it for 24 drahmas to qes Muse (?) from the monastery of ↗Däbrä Bizän in Ethiopia.

Also dating to the end of the 15th cent. is a note in the chronicle written by the Maronite patriarch Isṭifān ad-Duwayhī (Estephan II Boutros El Douaihy; 1629–1704). This records that, in 1470 A.D., a certain churchman by name of Yaᶜqūb (Yaᶜəqob), who emigrated from Ethiopia together with his companions, joined Mār Yaᶜqūb in Ehden, the Maronite monastery in the Qādīša valley, which for that reason was called Dayr al-Aḥbāš. In 1488, as a result of regional conflict between the Maronites and the ↗Jacobites, the Ethiopians, unwilling to accept dependence on a Maronite bishop, were forced to move to the Jacobite monastery of Mār Ǧirǧis in the Ḥadšīt valley. When the Jacobites were expelled from the place and left for ↗Cyprus, the Ethiopians (or some of them) moved to ↗Syria, to the monastery of Mār Mūsa situated in the Qalamūn massif near the village of Nabk. The monastery was later known as [Dayr] Mār Mūsā al-Ḥabašī, perhaps due to the presence of the Ethiopian monks, or to a local church tradition connected to the Egyptian hermit Moses the Ethiopian (↗Moses the Black) whose grave was supposedly located there.

Today the two Lebanese monasteries do not preserve any traces of Ethiopians' presence. However, in 1990, on a wall of the chapel dedicated to the anargyros and martyr Mār Āsīyā, and also located in Qādīša, a Gəᶜəz ↗inscription was discovered. Carefully written in large letters (ca. 10 cm tall) and in a trained hand, it was hidden under a layer of whitewash. Only partly uncovered and damaged in the middle by a large crack in the wall, it is difficult to reconstruct but the visible fragments suggest an invocation to ↗Mary. Close to the inscription there are painted ↗crosses (one of them with the sigla) but their forms do not show similarity to Ethiopian crosses. The sketchy figures of horsemen depicted in the vicinity of the inscription bear no Ethiopian characteristics either.

The sources do not provide any information from where the Ethiopians arrived to L. Cerulli points out that there was not a regular community but a group of monks originating from different Ethiopian monasteries, and expresses the hypothesis that they arrived, albeit not directly, from ↗Jerusalem. It cannot be ruled out that they arrived from nearby Cyprus where, in the middle of the 14th cent., an Ethiopian monastic community was established by the exiled monastic leader ↗Ewosṭatewos.

Literature: Ethiopia and Eritrea in literature

I. Introduction

Ethiopia, Eritrea and the whole of the Horn of Africa have exerted in other cultures from Antiquity through modern, colonial and contemporary times a steady curiosity, interest and fascination that have often been expressed in literary and imaginative form.

Generically understood as the "land of the black people", ↗Aithiopía was already the subject of literary compositions from pharaonic Egypt. Ancient Egyptian traditions had a lasting influence on the image of (the unspecific) regions of black people, for which the Egyptian term ↗Kush was used, also found in the Bible, loaned into the Hebrew Bible as kûš, and in turn translated in the Greek Bible as Aithiopía.

From Ancient Greek through Hellenistic, Imperial Roman and Late Antique times, historians (↗Historiography: Greek sources; ↗Herodotus) and geographers (↗Red Sea; ↗Strabo [s. EAE vol. 5]) wrote on Ethiopia and Eritrea at the best of their knowledge as a field of scholarly and scientific investigation. Also literates (↗Heliodorus) and poets used the concept of Aithiopía as an inexhaustible imaginative background, to the extent that in the latter case the mention of the Ethiopians (Aithíopes) became a mandatory tópos in the epic genre, from Homer, Od. I, 23, to the 4th cent. A.D. last great epic poet Nonnus of Panopolis (e.g., Dionys. XIII, 347, XXVI, 340–42, etc.). The importance of this perception is confirmed by the fact that in the same 4th cent. A.D. the Aksumites (↗Aksum) identified themselves with the "Ethiopians", as Greek ↗inscriptions show, and in the course of time the Greek loan-word Ityopya became the regular self-designation for the country.

From Roman to medieval times, the concept of ↗India also played the same role as "Ethiopia", and was used to designate East African coasts from the Red Sea to the Indian Ocean including the Horn of Africa.

Later on, diverse texts, from geographic works to fiction literature, and even maps in later times, came to identify Ethiopia with "Abassia" or "Habassia" (from the Arabic al-Ḥabaš, ↗Abyssinia), as for the well-known case of Marco ↗Polo's (s. EAE vol. 5) "Abasce".

The moving of the legend of ↗Prester John to Africa in the 14th cent. and the growing relationships with Ethiopian communities outside of Ethiopia (↗Jerusalem, ↗Sinai [s. EAE vol. 5], and later Rome [↗Santo Stefano dei Mori]) provided further elements for imaginative and literary inspiration in the European vernacular literatures and arts (↗Moors [s. EAE vol. 5]).

In the 16th cent., the first serious studies on Ethiopia started with the editorial efforts by Johannes ↗Potken, the first extensive and detailed eye-witness report of Ethiopia by Francisco ↗Alvares, and the first historiographic attempt by Mariano ↗Vittori (s. EAE vol. 5). In the following decades the ↗Jesuits' missionary enterprise on the one hand, and the profound linguistic, historical and ethnographical contribution by Hiob ↗Ludolf on the other, fostered an increasing interest and curiosity strived by religious motivation, and along with L. combined to depict a definitely less fanciful Ethiopia at times, at times yet a deliberately utopian or even more imaginative and fictitious land in the works of some authors (Luis de ↗Urreta): Ethiopia actually entered the scene of the modernity as an ideological battlefield.

Since the beginning of the modern period, the focus remained on Christian Ethiopia, but some literary works (especially of geographical nature, but Ludolf's contribution as well) started to be interested also in the diverse non-Christian kingdoms of the region, from ↗Käfa to the Muslim sultanates (↗expeditions, ↗itineraries [s. EAE vol. 5]). Between the 18th and 19th cent., narratives relating to Ethiopia as a "savage" country of feudal warlords and dangerous tribes were the expected outcome of renewed, yet often failing missionary and pre-colonial attempts, while in the 19th cent. adventurous reports and travelogues about "exotic wildlife" also became a widespread custom.

The beginning of an actual colonial interest in the Horn of Africa (↗Colonialism) left a special multifaceted mark in more European literatures, and especially on the Italian one – obviously in consideration of its central role in colonial matters in the Horn and the total amount of people therein involved – where it triggered multi-layered ideological constructions and exerted a lasting and sometimes subterranean imaginative influence.

It is finally only in the 20th cent. that the tópos of Ethiopia as a country of poverty and famine appeared in Western literary production, and never remained disjoined from the parallel persistence of utopian fascinations and the everlasting literary and religious popularity of the Solomonic national saga (↗Kəbrä nägäśt, ↗Makədda, ↗Rastafari/Rastafarianism).

The evocative power of the Ethio–Eritrean region has thus found its reflection in most literary traditions of the Occident. While most of ancient and medieval works of L., used also as historical sources in ↗Ethiopian studies, have been dealt with in the encyclopaedia entries mentioned above, the present article cluster is dedicated to the pre-modern and modern L. The major modern Western literatures (Italian, English, German and French) are dealt with in detail in the sub-articles below. However, most of other world literatures, too, have at different times and to a different degree made use of the Ethiopian back-drop in their imageries. While many of the authors are mentioned in the entries dedicated to the respective countries' relationships with Ethiopia, examples from several literary traditions including Spanish, Portuguese, Russian, Armenian, Swedish, Danish and Polish are provided below.

In ↗Spain and ↗Portugal, the earliest writings on Ethiopia were either translated or inspired by already existing works. Heliodorus' Aithiopiká was rendered in Castilian as Historia etiópica de los amores de Teágenes y Cariclea (Anvers 1554) by Fernando de Mena. In Juan de Seguars' text Processo de cartas de amores (Venezia 1553), a "collection of love letters", one account is dedicated to an imaginary Ethiopian prince called Luzindaro, who claims he is a prisoner of love. The renowned Spanish author Dom Pedro Caldéron de la Barca wrote a full-length play on Makədda, Queen of Sheba, La sibila del Oriente y gran reina de Saba (Madrid 1750).

As for many other Christian countries the legends of Prester John fostered the discussion on his whereabouts by many Portuguese authors. Most Jesuit writers, e.g. ↗Páez, negated the association of him as Ethiopian king. Balthazar ↗Téllez, however, kept this idea in his História geral da Etiópia a alta, ou Preste Ioam (Coimbra 1660) and also on a map of Africa. This map served as model for many subsequent writers (e.g., Ludolf) and thus led to manifest the location of the Prester's kingdom. The 17th-cent. Portuguese missionary Jerónimo ↗Lobo, famous for the writings on his missionary travels, Itinerario e outros escritos inéditos (written ca. 1640, ed. by Manuel Gonçalves da Costa, Barcelos 1971), inspired, amongst others, the Spanish Alonso de Sandoval to his De instauranda Aethiopum salute (Madrid 1647), and later the English Samuel ↗Johnson to his The History of Rasselas, Prince of Abissinia (London 1759).

Later Portuguese colonial interest focused, however, more on other parts of the world – the literary imagery concerning Ethiopia being therefore rather small. Out of the rare exceptions one could mention Antonio Lobo Antunes's semi-autobiographic novel Os cus de Judas (Lisboa 1979). In this novel the author compares the colonial arrogance of the Salazar era in Angola and Mozambique to that of the 16th cent. Portuguese's interference in Ethiopia. A similar motif is seen in Lidia Jorge's A Costa dos Murmúrios (Lisboa 1988).

The Spanish-language Basque poet Bernardo Atxaga's first collection was entitled Etiopia (Pott 1978). Recent Spanish writings concerning Ethiopia include, e.g., Juan González Núñez Etiopia: hombres, lugares y mitos (Madrid 1990), and Javier Reverte's Dios, el diablo y la aventura (Barcelona 2003).

↗Russia's literary interest in Ethiopia has long centred largely on the belief that the African country was the place of origin of Russia's most famous slave: Abraham Ganibal, the great-grandfather of Alexander ↗Pushkin. The poet often reflected to his African root in his poetry and prose and even dedicated to his African ancestor an unfinished seven chapter novel, entitled Arap Petra velikogo (St. Petersburg 1829).

Because of its Orthodox Christian heritage, Russia displayed sympathy with ↗Mənilək II in his resistance to (Catholic) Italy's imperialist pretentions. This resulted in the late-19th-cent. exchange of envoys between the two countries, and the dispatch of a ↗Russian Red Cross Mission to Addis Abäba. Aleksandr ↗Bulatovich, Lieutenant of the Tsar's Life-Guard Hussar Regiment, accompanied the Mission in 1896. Besides his official duty he travelled the country and delivered vivid first-hand descriptions of how Mənilək II reorganized his Empire, in his two books Ot Entoto do reki Baro (St. Petersburg 1897) and S Vojskami Menelika II (St. Petersburg 1900). Bulatovich himself became a literary character, e.g., in Valentin Pikul's Husar na verbljude (published in the collection Tajnyj sovetnik, Moscow 1988), or, alongside ↗Leontiev, in Yurij V. Davydov's Zemnaja Atlantida (publ. in Id., Izbrannoe, vol. 3, Moscow 1996).

In the following, Russian literary interest in Ethiopia was largely initiated by the author Petr Nikolaevich Krasnov, who wrote a notable travel book, Kazaki v Afrike: dnevnik načal'nika konvoja Rossijskoj imperatorskoj missii v Abissinii v 1897–98 (St. Petersburg 1899). He was subsequently inspired by his Ethiopian experience to write the first Russian novel related to Ethiopia. It was entitled Ljubov' abissinki (Teruneš) (St. Peterburg 1903). Krasnov's literary career came to an end when as a monarchist and a White Russian he led the Don Cossacks against the Bolsheviks. Several of his short stories set in Ethiopia were however later published in post World War I Germany, in Teruneš: Aska Mariam. Povesti (Berlin 1921). Nikolay ↗Gumilev (s. EAE vol. 5), a prominent Russian poet of the "Silver age", travelled extensively in Ethiopia and reflected his experiences in a series of romantically-coloured poems.

Subsequent Ethio–Soviet contacts in the post-World War II period resulted in the publication of four state-favoured Russian novels. The first was Vladimir I. Sinenko's Strana Ofir. Istoričeskij roman (Moscow 1960) which told the story of the early Russian traveller E.P. Kovalevskij. Two other Soviet works deal with the battle of ↗ᶜAdwa and the support Ethiopia received from the Russians. One was Nikolaj N. Kit'jan's Zemeča (Rostov-on-Don 1966); the other was a children's book, by the aforementioned Yurij V. Davydov, O druzjah tvoih, Afrika (Moscow 1962). A fourth novel was Evgenij P. Golubev's Uale Alemu nahodit druzej. Priključenčeskaja povest (Kostroma 1963) which recalled the Russian Red Cross mission of 1896/97.

The ↗famine of the 1970s became the backdrop of the childrens story Mal'čik iz podnebesja by Vladislav Bahrevskij (Moscow 1987). In the recent decades, Ethiopia has been frequently used as Russian-language fantasy fiction domain. The story of the Ethiopian slave Ganibal was revived in Boris Stern's fantasy novel Efiop, ili poslednij iz KGB (Kiev 1997), and Aleksej Šehovṣov's satire Čornyj vlastelin (Moskva 2012) transforms a 21st-cent. Russian into the 13th-cent. Solomonic ruler ↗Yagba Ṣəyon.

Diplomatic, scholarly and missionary contact between Ethiopia and Scandinavia led to the publication of several literary works in ↗Sweden and Denmark. Ten Swedish poems by Dr. Eyvind Bratt, the Swedish chargé d'Affaires in Addis Abäba, were published in an attractive volume, entitled Arcadia Ethiopica: Etiopiska landskap skildrade i sonetter (Stockholm 1961). They were illustrated by Björn von Rosen. This was followed by the publication of Anna Riwkin-Brick's book of black and white photographs of Ethiopia, entitled Gennet bor i Etiopien (Stockholm 1967).

A notable Danish woman writer of juvenile literature at this time was Cecil Bødker, who was invited by a compatriot, Gunner Pauldon, a forestry expert, to "write a novel" set in Ethiopia. Complying with this request she produced two literary works: Leoparden (København 1970) and Dimma Gole: en fortaelling om en ethioperdreng (København 1970). Both works were almost immediately also published in Swedish.

The life of the 19th-cent. Swedish Protestant missionary Johan Carlsson provided the background to two literary works by a Swedish author Kai Henmark (Den som älskar sover inte: en resa i det kristna språket, n.p. 1975; and Kärleken är ett träd: en övning i det kristna språket, n.p. 1976).

A fictional account of Ethiopia's Armenian community by William Semerjibashian was published in his "Ethiopian Sketches" in the journal Ararat (12, 3, 1981, 22–34).

Apart from a few travellers' accounts translated into Polish prior to ↗World War II, Polish writers began to take interest in Ethiopia in the 1960s and 70s under stimulation by the foreign policy of socialist ↗Poland, which favoured the so-called Third World countries, including Ethiopia. Wacław Korabiewicz, a physician by profession, recorded in Eskulap w Etiopii (Warszawa 1963) his working experience in a hospital in ↗Gore in 1954–56. He subsequently also authored Słońce na ambach (Warszawa 1970) and Śladami amuletu (Warszawa 1974), telling about his own fascination with Ethiopian crosses. Ethiopia appears also in his book about East Africa, Dobry Simba (Warszawa 1979), as well as in his autobiography Złowiłem życie (Warszawa 1973).

Marian Brandys's Z Panem Biegankiem w Abisynii (Warszawa 1962) gives a vivid account of the country, which he visited together with two fictitious heroes – a modest businessman Paweł and amusing Mr. Albin Bieganek – creating a rather bright, though sketchy, portrait of Ethiopia towards the end of the ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I's regime. By contrast, Królestwo za bramą łez (Warszawa 1971) by Andrzej Bińkowski depicts the same period in fairly dark colours. Another travelogue, Koniec cesarstwa na dachu Afryki (Warszawa 1976) by Leon Onichimowski, gives a detailed account of the ↗Coup d'état 1960 (s. EAE vol. 2, 1081f.). In Każdemu według marzeń (Łódź 1976), Andrzej Wilczkowski documents a pioneering Polish expedition to the ↗Səmen mountains.

The book which has most attracted the attention of Polish readers to Ethiopia and perhaps has shaped to a certain extent the view of the country is Cesarz (Warszawa 1978) by Ryszard ↗Kapuściński, who also authored Wojna futbolowa (Warszawa 1978), covering the Ethiopian ↗Revolution of 1974, and Heban (Warszawa 1998). In the latter reportage, the author describes ↗Eritrea after gaining the independence in 1991.

More recent and comprehensive travel books are Etiopia. Ale czat! (Warszawa 2009) by Martyna Wojciechowska, which gained a vast readership, and Trzy filiżanki Etiopii (Poznań 2009) by Wojciech Bobilewicz. Ignacy Karpowicz's Nowy kwiat cesarza (i pszczoły) (Warszawa 2007) is a reflective reportage about his journey to the northern part of Ethiopia.

The second volume of the Czech travellers' Jiří Hanzelka and Miroslav Zikmund Afrika snů a skutečnosti (Praha 1952) is almost entirely dedicated to Ethiopia and Eritrea.

II. Ethiopia and Eritrea in Italian literature

Pre-colonial literature

Until the 19th cent. descriptions of Ethiopia, Eritrea and their inhabitants were not common in Italian poetry and literature. However, some important literary or semi-literary examples can be found:

Late 13th cent., Marco ↗Polo's (s. EAE vol. 5) Milione with references to Abasce (Abyssinia) and its king (Sergio Solmi, Il Libro di Marco Polo detto Milione: nella versione trecentesca dell'"ottimo", Torino 1954: CLXVIII–CLXX); end of 15th cent., Giuliano Dati's poems on an imaginary India and Ethiopia, including Gran Magnificentia de Prete Janni, Signore della India Maggiore et della Ethiopia (Roma 1493–94), and Secondo cantare dell'India (Roma 1494–95); early 16th cent., Ludovico Ariosto's poem Orlando Furioso (ed. Lanfranco Caretti, Firenze 1954 [3rd ed. 1532]), mentioning Etïopia, its inhabitants Etïopi, their kings Senapo and Preteianni (↗Prester John); Ludovico de ↗Varthema's Itinerario (Milano 1928 [ed. Paolo Giudici]), whose last part is called Libro della Ethiopia (while the appendix mentions Etyopia), actually referring to different areas in Southern Africa; Paolo ↗Giovio's Historiarum sui temporis libri (Pauli Iovii, Opera, cura et studio Societatis historicae Novocomensis denuo edita, III: Historiarum tomus primus, Roma 1957 [ed. Dante Visconti]), devoted some attention to Ethiopia, both in reliable and legendary ways; 16th cent., Giovanni Battista Ramusio's Navigationi et viaggi (Venezia 1550), translating Francisco ↗Alvares's report of his visit to Prester John's kingdom; late 16th cent., Torquato Tasso's Gerusalemme liberata (Venezia 1745, canto xii) portraying Clorinda, daughter of the Ethiopian Christian king Senapo (as already mentioned by Ariosto).

Colonial literature

With the rise of Italian colonialism in the Horn of Africa (s. ↗Colonia di Assab; ↗Eritrea, Colonial history; ↗Africa Orientale Italiana), Italian literature started to devote more attention to Ethiopia and Eritrea. In the 19th cent. Italian explorers and missionaries had already travelled widely in the region and reported on it (cp. Antonio ↗Cecchi, Gustavo ↗Bianchi, Guglielmo ↗Massaja, Giuseppe ↗Sapeto, etc.). They were followed by numerous travellers and writers who, in their semi-literary descriptions, often described colonialism as a beneficial encounter between civilizations and a tool for Italy's nation-building rather than as a moment of oppression and exploitation:

Carlo Piaggia's travel reports of 1871/73 (Le memorie di Carlo Piaggia, Firenze 1941 [ed. Giovanni Alfonso Pellegrinetti]); Emilio Salgari's (Ammiragliador) numerous articles, referring to Asia, Africa (^{c}Asäb) and colonialism (A Tripoli!! Il Mahdi, Gordon e gli italiani ad Assab nelle "corrispondenze" per la Nuova Arena (1883–1885), repr. Padova 1994); Ferdinando ↗Martini wrote semi-literary accounts whose purpose was to provide reliable descriptions of Eritrea, by combining literary, documentary and administrative scopes (Nell'Affrica italiana: Impressioni e ricordi, Milano 1891). Martini describes "Affrica" not only as a miserable place, but also as a pure and primordial one, where the human spirit can elevate itself and meet God; Rosalia Pianavia-Vivaldi, Tre anni in Eritrea (Milano 1901); Gabriele D'Annunzio's Più che l'amore (1905; publ. in: D'Annunzio, Tragedie sogni e misteri, Milano 1939, 1065–1231) implied imperialistic intent by evoking the values of Rome; Enrico Alberto d'Albertis, Una gita all'Harrar (Milano 1906).

In Martini's texts we start perceiving a tópos that would characterize Italian regard onto the Horn of Africa: the so-called mal d'Africa is a sort of "colonial nostalgia" for a fantasized pre-colonial Africa to which the metropolitan citizen would surely become addicted (in 1934 Mal d'Africa is also the title of Riccardo Bacchelli's novel). The battles of ↗Dogᶜali (1887) and ↗ᶜAdwa (1896) also left their mark in Italian literary production:

Martini published Cose Affricane: Da Saati ad Abba Carima (Milano 1896), analyzing Italian colonialism in the Horn following the battle of Dogᶜali; this was followed in 1889 by Alfredo Oriani's collection of writings, Fino a Dogali (Bologna 1923), a semi-literary essay in which the heroic description of the Italian army turns the Dogᶜali battle into a new local Thermopylae; in 1911 Giovanni Pascoli's La grande Proletaria si è mossa (publ. in: Giovanni Pascoli, Prose vol. 1, Milano 1946, 557–58), evokes Italy's efforts at nation-building in the ancestry of Rome and recalls the trauma of ᶜAdwa; despite the defeat of ᶜAdwa, Enrico Corradini depicts Italian colonialism in Africa as a heroic phenomenon in such novels as La patria lontana (Milano 1910) and La guerra lontana (Milano 1911).

Around 1900, a number of Italian scientists and intellectuals were apt to stress cultural or genetic links between Rome, the Mediterranean Sea and the Horn of Africa, thus implicitly sanctioning the legitimacy of Italian colonialism. Anthropologist Giuseppe Sergi formulated the theory of the "Euro-African species", and the Homo eurafricanus. The shape taken by Futurism (the Italian literary and artistic movement founded by Marinetti in 1909) was also influenced by the issues raised at home by Italian colonialism, although Futurism rejected the myth of ancient Rome as the glue between Italy and its colonies.

Filippo Tommaso Marinetti, influenced by Nietzsche's philosophy, wrote the novel Mafarka le futuriste: Roman africain (Paris 1909, Italian tr. as Mafarka il futurista, Milano 1910). Here Marinetti uses invented words inspired by Arabic and Berber, Amharic, and other languages of Eritrea and Somalia. Moreover, he wanted "Italian colonial literature" to become more realistic, getting rid of sentimental frippery.

Fascist influences

A particularly large number of literary and semiliterary texts were published during Fascism. In 1926 the winner of the newly founded colonial novel prize (Piccolo amore beduino by Mario dei Gaslini, Milano 1926) introduced the colonial model of the brave "fascist man" and opened the path to a new "political" literature, committed to building a colonial and imperial image of Africa for common people. During Fascism representations of colonial Africa shifted progressively towards political propaganda and increased racist elements during 1930s:

Raimondo Franchetti, Nella Dancalia etiopica: Spedizione italiana 1928–29 (Milano 1930); Guelfo Civinini, Ricordi di carovana: Abissinia settentrionale 1924, Abissinia occidentale 1926 (Milano 1932); Arnaldo ↗Cipolla, Un'imperatrice d'Etiopia (Firenze 1930), In Etiopia (Torino 1933) and L'Abissinia in armi (Firenze 1935); Lidio Cipriani, Un assurdo etnico: L'impero etiopico (Firenze 1935); Vittorio Tedesco Zammarano, Auhér mio sogno: Romanzo di terra lontana (Milano 1935) and Da Adua al lago Tana: Alle sorgenti del Nilo Azzurro (Milano 1936); Sem Benelli, Io in Africa (Milano – Verona 1936); Mario Appelius, Il crollo dell'impero del Negus (Milano – Verona 1937); Giuseppe Bottai's diary, Quaderno affricano (Firenze 1939); Alba Felter Sartori, Vagabondaggi, soste, avventure negli albori di un Impero (Brescia 1940); Ciro Poggiali, Albori dell'Impero: L'Etiopia come è e come sarà (Milano 1938); Alberto ↗Pollera, La donna in Etiopia (Roma 1922) and Storie, leggende e favole del paese dei Negus (Firenze 1936); Orio Vergani, La via nera. Viaggio in Etiopia da Massaua a Mogadiscio (Milano 1938); the collection of publications I grandi italiani d'Africa (including Martini's Il diario eritreo, Firenze 1942–43, and Piaggia's Le memorie di Carlo Piaggia).

Erotic elements and ↗sexuality always took an important place in Italian colonialism. Relations between Italian men and African women played a central role in colonialist practices. In 1937 the Italian government classified "inter-racial" concubinage a crime, thus opening the road to the wider racist legislation. During Fascism, popular and commercial "erotic-love novels" set in colonial Italian Africa tended to portray a white Italian hero who lived with a black, "docile", North-east-African woman, who was portrayed as "naturally" prone to submit to the man's superiority, thus opening the path to the Italian "mission of civilization" in Africa (s. for instance: Gino Mitrano Sani, Femina somala. Romanzo coloniale del Benadir, Napoli 1933; Vittorio Tedesco Zammarano, Azanagò non pianse. Romanzo d'Africa, Milano – Verona 1934). Such colonial "erotic-love novels" (which displayed various racist nuances with different degrees of intensity) did not survive the rise of State racism which banned "inter-racial" relationships and their representations during the 1930s.

The Ethiopian campaign

The ↗Italian war of 1935–36 influenced literary production in the following years:

Gabriele D'Annunzio wrote Teneo te Africa: La seconda gesta d'Oltremare (Gardone Riviera 1936), a collection of writings (including the pamphlet Adua), meant to praise the Italian occupation of Ethiopia, as a final revenge for the ᶜAdwa defeat; Filippo Tommaso Marinetti's support and participation in the Ethiopian Campaign is evident in Il Poema Africano della Divisione "28 Ottobre" (Milano 1937), where he mentions, among others: Adua, Tigrai, Axum, Amba Aradam, Abbi Addì, Addis Abeba. Marinetti also exalted Italian Africa, suggesting that it gave energy to poetry and art (L'Africa generatrice e ispiratrice di poesia e arti, Roma 1940); Indro Montanelli, a volunteer in the Ethiopian Campaign as an officer of the ↗Askari troops, published his memoir XX Battaglione eritreo (Milano 1936), followed by Guerra e pace in A.O. (Firenze 1937), Ambesà (Milano 1938), and Qui non riposano (Milano 1945); Dino Buzzati, journalist for the leading newspaper Corriere della Sera, wrote semi-literary texts on Eritrea, such as Messaggero del Sud (1939, republished as Ombra del Sud in: Buzzati, Opere scelte, ed. Giulio Carnazzi, Milano 1998, 637–43) and Notte dancala con ingegnere e gattopardo (1939, republished in Buzatti 1998, 1373–79) that supports Italy's "civilizing" mission.

Post-colonial literature

Even in the post-colonial period, important writers (such as Ennio Flaiano's Tempo di uccidere, Milano 2000 [1947] and Giovanni Comisso's Le mie stagioni, Treviso 1951) described Eritrean brothels. Riccardo Bacchelli's novel Mal d'Africa (Milano 1934), although written during the period of Fascism, did not glorify the "Italian colonial hero", as in Ennio Flaiano's Tempo di uccidere (Milano 1947), written right after the end of Italian colonialism and partly based on Flaiano's experiences as a second-lieutenant in the Horn during the Ethiopian campaign. Both Bacchelli's and Flaiano's novels – even if their literary value is greater than the colonial "erotic-love novels"– feature some stereotyped African sex-scenes (or rather rape-scenes). The encounter between an Abyssinian woman and an Italian man is crucial to the development of Tempo di uccidere, which is probably the only Italian novel set in a colonial African background that is still well-known in Italy and abroad.

The early post-colonial era sees many accounts of authors who had spent time in the region and had tried to come to terms with their experiences in literary form:

Giovanni Comisso, journalist for Gazzetta del popolo in 1937, wrote Le mie stagioni (Treviso 1951): a memoir spanning from 1918 to 1945; referring to the "Abyssinian war", Africa Orientale Italiana and numerous sites in the Horn (Massaua, Dancalia, Gondar, Asmara, Lago Tana, Dessiè, Gimma, Harrar, etc.); the memoir of a military doctor and high-grade colonial official, Alberto Denti di Pirajno, Un medico in Africa, was published in Italy in (Venezia) 1952; in (Milano) 1971 Ciro Poggiali's Diario AOI: 15 giugno 1936–4 ottobre 1937. Gli appunti segreti dell'inviato del Corriere della Sera was published posthumously, providing details of the occupation of Ethiopia, colonial life, ↗Graziani's assassination attempt, its revenge and the related massacre in 1937.

Around 1970, the writer and filmmaker Pier Paolo Pasolini (s. also Film, EAE vol. 5) travelled to the Horn of Africa. Some of his writings focused on Ethiopia and Eritrea:

The travelogue La grazia degli Eritrei (publ. in: Pasolini, Corpi e luoghi, Roma 1981, 50–54 [1968; ed. Michele Mancini – Giuseppe Perrella]), the poem Poesia amarica (ca. 1969, publ. in: Id., Tutte le poesie, Milano 2003 [ed. Walter Siti], 282f.), the travelogue Post-scriptum a "La grazia degli Eritrei" (1973, in: Pasolini 1981, 55-58) and the article Le mie "Mille e una notte" (in: Playboy, September 1973, re-publ. in: Pasolini, Romanzi e racconti, vol. 2, Milano 1998 [ed. Walter Siti], 1884–1921).

These texts, of an autobiographic and narrative nature, provide accurate but disturbing descriptions of people and landscapes, exalt the "grace" and beauty of Eritreans and allow Italian colonial memory to emerge.

Many later accounts were written by travellers or expatriates:

Giorgio Manganelli's description of his 1970's travel, Viaggio in Africa (Milano 2006); Erminia Dell'Oro, born and raised in Asmära, moved to Italy in the late 1950s. Dell'Oro wrote (love-)novels that focus primarily on Eritrea and Eritreans, Jewish migration to Africa, and Italian colonial memory, sometimes showing nostalgic feelings (Asmara addio, Pordenone 1988; L'Abbandono. Una storia Eritrea, Torino 1991; Il fiore di Merara, Milano 1994); the novel Regina di fiori e di perle (Roma 2007) by Gabriella Ghermandi, born in Addis Abäba to an Ethiopian mother and an Italian father, bases on family saga and storytelling. Ghermandi's novel also focuses on Ethiopia, Italy–Ethiopia relations, migration, on the memory of war and colonialism.

Some of the fictional literature was:

Umberto Eco's Baudolino (Milano 2000) "featuring" Prester John and his fabulous kingdom; Carlo Lucarelli's historical-thriller L'ottava vibrazione (Torino 2008) which takes place in Massawa of 1896, right before the battle of ᶜAdwa. Lucarelli's novel somehow resembles Italian colonial fictional literature, in particular in its representation of African women; Andrea Camilleri's short novel Il nipote del Negus (Palermo 2010) ironically portrays fascist imperialism by focusing on the life of ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I's nephew, prince Bərhanä Śəllase, who studied in Sicily in 1929–32.

III. Ethiopia and Eritrea in German literature

Influenced by the legend of ↗Prester John, the regions beyond Egypt, roughly identified as Ethiopia, with its "exotic" cultures and peoples, had an early fascination for German writers. Following the 16th cent. reformation in Germany, interest in "Christians beyond the Catholic sphere" became especially strong in Germany, and out of this, a firm interest in "Abyssinia", in her culture, religious traditions and languages developed. This was further nourished by the rigorous Semitist training of theologians at numerous universities, which, starting from the 17th cent., often included Gəᶜəz in their studies (cp. ↗Germany, relations with).

Two factors eventually led to the rise of Ethiopia as a theme in fiction: from the mid-19th cent. onwards, reports by "explorers" of Africa and of scholarly ↗expeditions (e.g., to Christian Ethiopia, ↗Käfa etc.) often received wide attention; in addition, Ethiopia as an internationally recognized independent state awoke much interest, especially in its (partially only imagined) ancient past. In the later 20th cent., ↗warfare and ↗famine were added as topic, while the fascination with Ethiopia as an ancient land continued to play a role in publications.

Medieval literature

The first reference to "pagan lands of blacks" was by Wolfram von Eschenbach in his monumental epos, Parzival around 1200 A.D. (tr. by Dieter Kühn, Frankfurt am Main 1994), referring to a legendary Belacane (Belakane), a black "oriental queen" who fell in love with a Christian French crusader and conceived her son Faireviz (lit. 'mixed son'; Baum 1999: 202; cp. Kühn 1994). This son later went to Europe in search of his father and then, after many adventures Christianized ↗"India". There he becomes the father of Prester John, king of "India". It has been hypothesized that the story is influenced by a medieval version of the myth of the Queen of Sheba (↗Makədda), transferred to Europe through Arabic sources, and thus even antedating the ↗Kəbrä nägäśt. Interesting is also the early reference to Prester John, a narrative on an "utopia" outside Christian Europe (Smidt 2006), which was eventually linked with Christian Ethiopia.

Early modernity

The 16th cent. reformation which marked especially the northern princedoms of the Holy Roman Empire of the German Nation, had a peculiar influence on the image of Christian Ethiopia. The reformers continued the quest of the humanists for lost manuscripts and lost knowledge (the so-called "philosophia perennis") – in an attempt to recover traditions independent of the Catholic Church, traditions which might help to understand the Biblical word of God. Johannes ↗Potken published the first ever printed Gəᶜəz text in 1513, thus raising the interest especially of Protestants in the idea of finding the ancient Biblical "Chaldaic" language.

Due to the systematic collection of (sometimes unpublished) geographic data over generations from the most diverse sources, geographic works are among the most detailed works treating northeast African regions – often mixing facts with legend and misinterpretations. Isaac Vossius (De Nili et aliorum fluminum origine, Den Haag 1666), with detailed maps, was one of the first to correctly attribute the rise of the ↗Nile to the heavy rainfall in Ethiopia.

Ethiopia did not appear much in early modern fiction, Happel's Africanische Tarnolast of 1689 (Ulm 1689) being a rare exception. More important was the philosophic, geographic and anthropological literature, Immanuel Kant's writings being one example. Kant's imagination of Christian Ethiopia (in German then "Abessinien") was based on extensive reading and thus may be taken as representative of his period: there was a German legend of a "Schlaraffenland" (a 'land of plenty'), which Kant linked to Ethiopia, at least etymologically, explaining it through "schlauer Affen Land" ('land of intelligent monkeys'; Immanuel Kant, Sämmtliche Werke: In Chronologischer Reihenfolge, ed. by Gustav Hartenstein, Leipzig 1868, 417ff.).

Also in the 18th cent., the famous German writer Knigge (Adolph Freiherr von Knigge, Benjamin Noldmanns Geschichte der Aufklärung in Abyssinien oder Nachricht von seinem Vetters Aufenthalte an dem Hofe des großen Negus, oder Priesters Johannes, Göttingen 1791) used Ethiopia as the scene for his dissident novel on the introduction of enlightenment into a monarchy. He seems to have been inspired by the travel account of James ↗Bruce (cp. BruNile), and also to some degree by Johann Heinrich ↗Michaelis's biography of Peter ↗Heyling, who had become a leading courtier, just as Knigge's hero "Joseph Wurmbrand" (Sonderbarer Lebens-Lauff Herrn Peter Heylings, aus Lübec, Und dessen Reise nach Ethiopien …, Halle 1724).

Geographers, explorers, researchers until the 20th cent.

The era of the enlightenment created a new approach to the world, soon translated into a thirst for scientific – especially geographic and ethnographic – expeditions. Starting from the early 19th cent., north-eastern Africa, one of the first areas in Africa to open itself up to explorers, attracted German scholars (such as ↗Rüppell) and even settlers, such as Wilhelm ↗Schimper, who partially lived from their writings.

German 19th-cent. literature on Ethiopia is marked by a number of sometimes artfully produced travel reports, some of them with a rather popular approach, addressed to the well-educated, others quite scientific, and often richly illustrated:

Johann Martin ↗Bernatz (s. EAE vol. 5) published his book, Bilder aus Äthiopien (Bilder aus Äthiopien. Nach der Natur gezeichnet und beschrieben. In zwei Abtheilungen: I. Aden und das heisse vulkanische Tiefland der Danakil, II. Das Hochland von Süd-Abyssinien oder Schoa, Hamburg 1854), with his paintings and drawings from his travels to the Southern ↗Red Sea coast, ↗ᶜAfar, and ↗Šäwa in 1854. He was also asked to illustrate a number of other travel accounts to the East-Sudan and Abyssinia (e.g., ↗Heuglin or ↗Harris); a German prince, Ernest II of Sachsen-Coburg-Gotha travelled the northern "Abyssinian borderlands" (see his work of 1864, partially written by Gustav Freytag and Friedrich Gerstäcker, illustrated by the painter Kretzschmar; Reise des Herzogs Ernst II von Sachsen-Coburg und Gotha nach Ägypten und den Ländern der Habab, Mensa und Bogos, Leipzig 1864).

During that period German Protestant missionaries (↗Protestantism) became very active in Ethiopia. The missionaries' writings on Ethiopia shaped the image of Ethiopia especially around the time of the ↗Napier expedition. However, of greater influence were the writings on the Oromo, especially by ↗Krapf (who imagined a country "Ormania", i.e. the unified country of all Oromo, a precursor of Oromiyaa, as a future factor in a radical religious reform of the whole region; cp. ↗Fathme, Pauline; ↗Ruufoo).

As the number of Germans present in Ethiopia rose, especially after 1902 (e.g., ↗Erlanger), there followed an increasing number of publications. The Italian–Ethiopian conflict in the mid-1930s led to a boom; many who had spent time in Ethiopia felt the urge to publish on their experiences, sometimes many decades after their travels. These works can be grouped roughly as follows:

a) rather romantic approaches to Ethiopia; such as Ernst Heinrich Schrenzel's Land ohne Hunger, Land ohne Zeit (Berlin 1926);
b) badly-informed, rather curious combinations of touristic travel reports and re-constructed imagination, exaggerations mixed with precise descriptions of persons and events; such as Kurt Herzbruch (Abessinien, Eine Reise zum Hofe Kaiser Meneliks II, München 1925) or Rupert Recking (Ein Kaiserreich auf Aktien: Ein Journalist erzählt, Stuttgart – Berlin 1936);
c) some exceptional, well-informed cases, creating the image of a "quasi-medieval", feudalistic Ethiopia with ancient, i.e. "original", Christian tradition reminiscent of ancient times; such as ↗Rosen or ↗Grühl;
d) the strictly scholarly works; such as Enno Littmann (Abessinien, Hamburg 1935).

In general, the image conveyed of Ethiopia is very positive (which is also reflected in the ↗film [s. EAE vol. 5] production of the time, cp. Martin Rikli, Wie ich Abessinien sah, Berlin 1935; a photo book accompanying the film). After Italy's victory over Ethiopia in 1936, the production of books on Ethiopia virtually stopped; the few publications that appeared tended to reproduce the new official friendship with fascist Italy, such as a reportage published by a reporter of the Völkischer Beobachter (the official organ of the ruling NSDAP). Another work of a pro-fascist German writer was Harun el-Raschid Bey's novel Schwarz oder Weiß?, Berlin 1940, which treats the Ethiopian–Italian war of 1935/36 and which was dedicated to Mussolini. The real name of this author was Wilhelm Hintersatz, a high-ranking SS officer, writing under an Arabic pseudonym. Scholarly imagination also found its way into the purely academic scene. Ethiopia encouraged the self-image of an ancient Christian state, and this is reflected in scholarly literature into the 1970s (a classical example being Ernst Hammerschmidt's Äthiopien, Christliches Reich zwischen gestern und morgen).

The 19th and 20th cent. saw a great number of richly illustrated books. The visual aspect of these publications, however, has not yet been well studied. These photo books fostered the image of the "exotic other".

20th cent. fictional literature

The rising interest in Ethiopia also led to the publication of novels set in the region or alluding to it:

The first such work was one by the then very popular novelist Karl May, Der Scheik von Harrar (Hannover 1966 [Das Waldröschen 27]), in the late 19th cent., written in the tradition of an adventure novel, on the basis of the wide popularity of explorers' travel accounts (Smidt 2004; Dohrmann 2006); allusion to Ethiopia is made in Josef Eckerskorn's one act play Der Prinz von Abessinien ('The Prince from Abyssinia', Bonn 1913) as an "exotic" place of origin for one character, who is however never seen on the stage.

Several other German works of fiction relating to Ethiopia followed in the 1920s. The first, which reflected increasing international awareness of ↗Betä Ǝsraʾel (Fälaša), was Selig Schachnowitz's Salomo der Falascha: Eine Geschichte aus der Gegenwart (Frankfurt 1921).

Soon afterwards, the increasing German interest in early-20th cent. Ethiopia was reflected in the publication of two fictional works:

Kurt von Gagern-Frankenthal's two works published both in Leipzig in 1926, Der Abessinier ('The Abyssinian') and Kaiser Menelik ('Emperor Mənilək'). The latter work, which was intended for young readers, told how Prince Mənilək had escaped from detention at Mäqdäla, to become King of Šäwa, and was later renowned as the victor of the Battle of ʿAdwa in 1896; scarcely less exciting was Edwin Demel's novel In der Gewalt der Galla: Abenteuererzählung aus dem abessinischen Hoheitsgebiet (Reutlingen 1928).

Another feature of this time are biographical novels:

Alfred ↗Zintgraff, who had briefly been councillor of state of Mənilək II, published a autobiographical novel based on his experiences in Ethiopia (Der Tod des Löwen von Juda, Dichtung und Wahrheit aus Kaiser Meneliks von Abessinien letzten Tagen, Berlin 1926). It is an account of the situation at the court and can be used as a historical source (Bairu Tafla 1981). Although it is a novel, it stays close to the known historical facts, and can be seen as a personal view of the events of those days (Lorenz ↗Jensen etc.); other examples are works on the lives of Werner ↗Munzinger (Valter Keller-Zschokke, Werner Munzinger Pascha, Aarau 1891) and Eduard ↗Zander (Friederike von Krosigk, Ein Weizenkorn fliegt gegen den Wind, Abenteuer eines Deutschen in Äthiopien, Mühlhausen 1938).

Sundry works, depicting Ethiopia as a sphere of adventure, but with a rather positive undertone, continued to appear in the decade prior to the Italian invasion:

They included Willi Wolff's Der Magier Good: Roman aus Abessinien (Hamburg 1931), published under this alias by Georg Westfalen; Othmar Krainz produced a novel about oil diplomacy, Öl um Rickfett: Spiel mit Abessinien (Berlin 1935); Hedwig Weiss-Sonnenburg followed with the children's story, Arme Kleine Prinzessin: Abenteuerliches Schicksal in Abessinien (Köln 1935); in the following year Alfons Zech, using the nom de plume Peter Rauenberg, published Weisse Mädchen in Abessinien (Niedersedlitz 1936).

The ↗Italian-Ethiopian war of 1935–36 and ↗World War II are also the subject of fictional novels, but in a rather poor way in German literature:

Wilhelm Hintersatz's novel Schwarz oder Weiss: Ad Imperium Romanum versus (Berlin 1940), introduced a racial element lacking in previous German writings on the war; Heinrich Maria Tiede's Korporal Giambetta: Erzählung aus dem Feldzuge Italiens gegen Abessinien (Reutlingen 1941) was likewise unusual in looking at the Italo–Ethiopian war from the side of Italy rather than that of Ethiopia; in the tradition of cheap soldiers' novels, there is Hans von Derp's story of a German officer in the ranks of the Italian army fighting together with "loyal ↗askaris" against the advancing British (Auf verlorenem Posten in Abessinien, Deutscher Offizier führt italienische Askaris im abenteuerlichen Kleinkrieg, München 1941 [Soldatengeschichten und Fliegergeschichten 134]).

Following this tradition, there are also cheap adventure stories produced in later years (such as the fight of a hero against a crazy Italian gangster and ᶜAfar warriors, hiding an atomic bomb in the Danakil desert), but that genre disappeared in about the 1970s/80s.

With Ethiopia's liberation in 1941 the scope of German writings naturally changed. Works in this period included such titles as:

Herbert Hahn's Im Lande des Bül-bül: Romantische Tierfangreise durch Abessinien (Berlin 1946); Johannes von der Planitz's Erdöl in Harar: Abenteuer im Lande des Negus (Hannover 1954, written under the nom de plume of Hans von Derp); Helmut Wozonig's short story Schifta (publ. in: MERIAN Magazine 19, 10, 1966, 76–80); Ernst Otto Gläser's Die Zeit – es ist noch weit: Ausgewählte Gedichte (Addis Ababa 1967) with only very indirect references to Ethiopia.

The continuous presence of Germans in Ethiopia before and after the war continued to inspire novelists; as an example one should mention Brigitte Beil's novel of 2003 on the family of Mənilək's architect, Carl Haertel (Maskal, Köln 2003), based on family papers and elements of fiction. Alex Capus' novel Munzinger Pascha, an award winning bestseller, likewise treats a historical personality (Werner ↗Munzinger), based on a thorough study of historical sources, mixed with purely fictitious elements.

In line with a new educational and more progressive children's literature, north-eastern Africa also appears in children's novels, starting from the 1970s; novels such as:

Hedwig Weiss-Sonnenburg's Man nennt mich Lillith (Stuttgart 1955), and Taffara, Fürstensohn aus Abessinien (Düsseldorf 1964); Otto Strada's Karawane ins verbotene Land (Berlin 1957); Corry Blei-Strijbos's Mark und Anne in Äthiopien (Konstanz 1977). In more recent years literature for children has regularly mentioned poverty and even famine (e.g., Reinhard Burger Der Wind und die Sterne, Weinheim 1991; and Hans-Martin Große-Oetringhaus, Partisanen in einem vergessenen Land – dokumentarischer Roman über den Befreiungskampf in Eritrea, Würzburg 1984, on the independence struggle in Eritrea).

The influence of Ethiopian literature itself is minimal, as there are only very few translations (e.g., Daniachew Worku, Die dreizehnte Sonne, Olten 1980; ↗Amharic Literature).

A new category is German literature produced by migrants of Ethiopian, Eritrean and Somali origin. The most prominent author is ləǧ Asfa Wäsän Aśśərate, in whose books memories of imperial Ethiopia have a prominent place (Asfa-Wossen Asserate, Manieren, Frankfurt am Main 2003; Id., Ein Prinz aus dem Hause David und warum er in Deutschland blieb, Frankfurt am Main 2007; Id., Draußen nur Kännchen: Meine deutschen Fundstücke, Frankfurt am Main 2010; Id., Integration oder die Kunst, mit der Gabel zu essen, München 2011). His works continue the much older category of literature focusing on the long history of Christian highland Ethiopia. The Ethiopian-Eritrean singer Sännayt Gäbrähəywät Mähari should also be mentioned with her best-selling child memories of war in Eritrea; these works belong to the tradition of German "compassionate" literature fascinated by regions in crisis. These memoirs are also highly contested in debates on their authenticity (Senait G. Mehari [with Lukas Lessing], Feuerherz, München 2004; Ead., Wüstenlied, München 2006). A recent successful author in German is the Eritrean Zäkaryas Kəbräᵓab, who reflects on his experiences as a refugee (Zekarias Kebreab, Hoffnung im Herzen, Freiheit im Sinn – Vier Jahre auf der Flucht nach Deutschland, Köln 2011). Literature produced by authors from the region itself will be an important factor in the formation of a partially new literary image of the region.

IV. Ethiopia and Eritrea in French literature

Probably the first notion of "Ethiopia" within a French text can be found in the anonymous medieval poem La Chanson de Roland, produced between 1075 and 1110. Roland, the hero, is fighting against Marganice, ruler of Carthago and Ethiopia, from "a cursed race which is blacker than ink and which has nothing white except its teeth" (Masse 1933: 226).

At the beginning of the Renaissance the poet Jean Lemaire de Belges (Épîtres de l'Amant Vert, Lyon 1511) dedicated a number of poems to his patroness, Margaret of Austria (Duchess of Savoy). The first person narrator in these frivolous texts is the Ethiopian parrot of the Duchess, reporting episodes from her bedroom. In the 17th cent. the Ethiopian traveller ↗Ṣägga Krəstos (s. EAE vol. 5) appeared in the country. This inspired the publication of an anonymous novelette entitled La reine d'Éthiopie. Historiette comique (Paris 1670). Its author, presumably seeking to distinguish the Ethiopians from the Negroid peoples of Africa then better-known in the West, noted that his hero was handsome, with an aquiline nose and without thick lips.

The publication in London almost a century later of Samuel ↗Johnson's celebrated allegory The Prince of Abyssinia: a Tale (London 1759) also had a significant impact in France, where Johnson's novel was immediately translated into French and published in Paris in the following year.

French awareness of the Ethiopian city of ↗Gondär, which had become the country's capital in the early 1630s, was articulated many years later in an anonymous two-volume work, Grandor ou le Héros Abyssin, Histoire héroi-politique (Trèves 1789). Supposedly "sold by a Copt in Egypt to a European traveller" the story abandons Johnson's "happy valley" and is set instead in Gondär and several other parts of Ethiopia during the reign of "Saghed", a distortion of several Ethiopian royal names then known in Europe. The work's main thrust was however to introduce the reader, in the year of the French Revolution, to a variety of political terms then coming into increasing usage in France, such as aristocracy, despotism, democracy, arist-democracy, etc.

Subsequent French interest in Ethiopia, in the third quarter of the 19th cent., owed much to the rise of Emperor ↗Tewodros II and in particular to his resistance to the British expedition of 1867–68 (↗Napier Expedition). This resulted in the composition of two French plays set in Ethiopia: Théodore Barrières Théodoros: Drame en 5 actes (Paris 1868) and Jules Renard's Deux prisonniers de Théodore: Pochade abyssinienne en une acte (Paris 1869).

These dramatic essays were followed shortly afterwards by a fictitious French travelogue: Emil Jonveaux's Deux ans dans l'Afrique Orientale (Tours 1871), which supposedly described conditions in Ethiopia towards the end of the Emperor's reign. An English translation, Two Years in East Africa appeared in London in 1875, with the more explicit sub-title*: Adventures in Abyssinia and Arabia, with a Journey to the Source of the Nile*. The French edition states that the author had never actually visited Ethiopia, but this information is omitted in the English edition in which the translator claims to have "carefully revised the details" in the original text and "added many new and interesting particulars from authentic sources". The result, we are assured, was that the Nile and its "mysteries" and the "bloody tragedy" of ↗Mäqdäla were "more truly interesting than the most striking fictions".

Subsequent French perception of Ethiopia was influenced by ↗Mənilək II's unexpected victory at the battle of ↗ᶜAdwa in 1896. This was reflected in François de Courel's play La fille sauvage: Pièce en six actes (Paris 1902), which was first performed in Paris at the Theatre Antoine. The drama is largely set in a "barbarous country", referred to as the country of Mənilək, which, we are told, had long since "submitted to Christian culture", with the result that it would one day "astonish the universe" by "the rapidity of its progress". This play subsequently inspired a very different American drama. The silent film star, Clara Kimball Young, wrote the script and starred in the film with the title A Savage Woman in 1918.

The first largely factually-based French novel set in Ethiopia was Le soleil d'Éthiopie: Novel (Paris 1929) written by the French nobleman, Viscount Jean Esménard, an accomplished traveller who wrote under the name Jean d'Esme. The book features the imaginary journey across the country of three Europeans, a British couple and an Italian. The author had previously also written a popular travel book À travers l'empire de Ménélik (Paris 1928).

This pioneering work was immediately followed by another travel-based novel: André Armandy's La voie sans disque: Roman (Paris 1931). Its author had previously described his own travel experiences in a travelogue entitled La désagréable partie de campagne: Incursion en Abyssinie (Paris 1930), and later wrote the amusing novel Quartier des légations (Paris 1951). Set in an imaginary town called Atbara, capital of the supposed empire of Arafani, it told of sundry diplomatic intrigues among the foreign envoys.

Other publications of this period include a popular French historical novel: Le passant d'Éthiopie (Paris 1936) by Jérôme and Jean Tharaud, which highlights some of the more exciting events in the country's history from the time of the Portuguese in the 16th cent. onwards.

The most prolific French author of this period was, however, Henry de ↗Monfreid, whose numerous works include a mixture of fact and fiction, much of which has been widely translated into other languages.

Subsequent French writings on Ethiopia include several further historical novels. Among them we may mention Makeda, reine vierge: Roman de la reine de Saba (Paris 1940) by Gabriel d'Aubrède; Le mystère du Mahteb (Paris, n.d.), translated from the English Mystery of the Mahteb (New York 1942), a fantasy by two American authors, Alice Lide and Margaret Johansen; Pierre Benoîts, Le Prêtre Jean: Roman (Paris 1952). Also of interest was a collection of French poetry on Addis Abäba and other Ethiopian towns composed by E. Karam, in Juvénalia (Beirut 1932).

Life among the teachers at the University College of Addis Abäba was subsequently caricatured by a staff member, Jean Godbout, a French Canadian in his novel L'Aquarium (Paris 1972). His colleague, the prolific professor of philosophy Claude Sumner, later produced three volumes of French Poésies éthiopiennes (Addis Ababa 1976–78) and a French translation of some of the Ethiopian playwright, Tsegaye Gabre-Medhin's drama in La couleur de mon chant (Yaoundé 1977).

Also in the educational field was Marc de Gouverain's novel Retour en Éthiopie présenté par Hugo Pratt (Paris 1970), in which a French volunteer teacher in Ethiopia returns after an absence of many years and reports some fantastic as well as many highly probable developments. Gérard de Villiers, author of many dime novels, located one of his sleazy works in Ethiopia, Le Trésor du Negus (Paris 1977).

Ethiopia also found its way into some French writing for children already in 1952 through the renowned cartoonist Alain Saint-Ogan. In one episode his famous protagonists Zig and Puce are sent to Éthiopie (Zig et Puce en Éthiopie, Paris 1952). Later publications are Noël aux Quatre Vents (Paris 1968) by Dominique Saint-Alban, and François Balsan's Embuscade en Éthiopie (Paris 1971).

As examples of contemporary writing one could mention Jean-Christophe Rufin's best-seller L'Abyssin (Paris 1997) on the basis of Charles Jacques ↗Poncet's travels, showing an Ethiopia of marvels, wonders and intrigues. Another best-selling novel of Rufin, Asmara et les causes perdues (Paris 1999), treats the trip of French humanitarian aid workers during the 1985 civil war. The French writer Alain Borer dedicated much of his time to Arthur ↗Rimbaud, thus delivering semi-fictional novels on the latter's life in Africa and especially in Harär (Rimbaud en Abyssinie, Paris 1984; Id., Un sieur Rimbaud, se disant négociant, Paris 1985; Id., Rimbaud d'Arabie, Paris 1991; Id., Rimbaud, l'heure de la fuite, Paris 1991).

V. Ethiopia in English-language literature

Writing until 1800

Ethiopia makes an appearance very early in English literature. The first known reference to "Ethiopia" in English texts is found in John of Trevisa's translation in 1387 of Ranulf Higden's Polychronicon, a theological history of the world in Latin and one of the first books ever printed (in 1482). In it, "Ethioppe" is described as "moste habundante in miracles" and threaded by the Nile. Another early manuscript is the translation of Historia Trium Regum, as The Three Kings of Cologne, an extremely popular text of the late 1300s, with garbled information about Prester John, Saba, and "Ethiopes". Many of the histories and geographies translated from Latin in the 15th and 16th cents. mention Ethiopia.

The first novel in English to focus on Ethiopia was a translation of the 3rd-cent. A.D. Greek romance Aithiopikà, entitled An Aethiopian History of Heliodorus, which was published by Thomas Underdowne in 1587. The country there depicted was, however, ↗Meroë rather than Ethiopia as we know it today. Yet, their allies in the book are the "Axiomitæ".

The detailed information on Ethiopia gathered by the Portuguese diplomatic mission of the 1520s and by the ↗Jesuits half a century later, began to percolate into English literature in the late 1500s. The Ethiopia in which there is a "Mount Amara" in which a "Negus" (who is "wrongfully called" Prester John) keeps his sons imprisoned is first mentioned in an English text in Thomas Blundeville's Exercises (London, 1594). It also appeared in the hugely influential work, Samuel Purchas's geography Purchas His Pilgrimage: or Relations of the World (London, 1613). A recognizable Ethiopia appears regularly in original English literary texts after that, starting with Thomas Peyton's poem about paradise The Glasse of Time (London 1620) and then Peter Heylin's Microcosmus (Oxford 1621), Edward Stradling's Divine Poems (London 1625), Thomas Bancroft's Epigrams (London 1639), David Lloyd's The Legend of Captain Jones (London 1648), Vincent Le Blanc's Travels (London 1660), and Samuel Butler's Hudibrus (London 1663), among others.

Peyton's work may have served as a model for one of the most famous works of English literature, John Milton's Paradise Lost (London 1667), in which he mentions "Abassin kings" living on "Mount Amara", which "some supposed True Paradise." Since all later English authors read this masterpiece, Ethiopia began to appear more frequently in English literature after that and often as a type of Eden. One of the most famous instances was the Scottish poet James Thomson's Seasons (London 1727), among the best loved English poems, but even obscure poems like Bevil Higgons's Poem on Nature (London 1688) might mention that the Abyssinian kings were descended from the Queen of Sheba.

In all of these early texts, however, Ethiopia was a subject only in passing. Then, in the early 1700s, a French version of the memoirs of the Jesuit Jeronimo ↗Lobo, published in 1728, came into the hands of Samuel ↗Johnson, an impoverished young English man of letters, who produced an English translation of it (A Voyage to Abyssinia, London 1735). This experience was to have a profound, life-long effect on Johnson's fiction (Belcher 2012).

Johnson, subsequently renowned as one of the most important authors of English literature, produced several fables about Ethiopians in his literary periodicals The Idler and The Rambler, and then a novel, The Prince of Abyssinia, which was published in (London) 1759. It became known by the name of its hero, Rasselas, and was translated into many foreign languages, including Amharic. It was the first piece of English literature to deal with Ethiopia at length.

Through Milton and Johnson, Ethiopia came to take a more prominent place in English letters. Influenced by Milton, the Romantic poet Coleridge wrote about an "Abyssinian maid" in his famous poem "Kubla Khan" (London 1798). Influenced by Johnson, Ellis Cornelia Knight wrote a now little known sequel to Rasselas, entitled Dinarbas (London 1770). Archibald Campbell wrote the parody of Rasselas titled Lexiphanes (London 1767) and George Colman's farce The Spleen (London 1776) references Abyssinians eating raw beef. One understudied volume is George Cumberland's remarkable novel The Captive of the Castle of Sennaar: an African Tale (London 1798), set in Meroë but also engaging Abyssinia. William Dimond wrote the oriental drama The Aethiop, or Child of the Desert (London 1813), in which the Persian monarch Alraschid is somehow an Ethiopian magician. Then Raynor Taylor made this over into one of the first American operas.

Travel literature about Ethiopia fuelled the next phase of representations in English literature, with James ↗Bruce's Travels to Discover the Source of the Nile (London 1790) having the most impact. Spoofs of Bruce's work—including Peter Pindar's Complimentary Epistle (London, 1792) and John Marjoribanks's Trifles in Verse (Edinburgh 1798)—were especially popular.

Writing until 1900

The 19th cent. saw a surge of works in English by English explorers—such as George Annesley Mountnorris, Henry ↗Salt, Nathaniel ↗Pearce, and Mansfield ↗Parkyns—but also military officers involved in the ↗Napier expedition to ↗Mäqdäla of 1867–68 and the ↗ᶜAdwa war of 1895–96. This proved fertile soil for English creative authors, inspiring, for instance, the second English novel set in Ethiopia: William Dalton's Tiger Prince (London 1863), a children's adventure story. The 1868 expedition inspired authors for a long time, for instance forming the backdrop to George MacDonald Fraser's novel Flashman on the March (New York 2005).

Then Sir Wallis ↗Budge, began to translate the Kəbrä nägäśt into English in the 1880s. He had a number of literary friends so several related novels came about. One was Walter Besant's comedic novel Herr Paulus: His Rise, His Greatness, and His Fall (London 1888), in which the American hero seduces female listeners through a lively and detailed retelling of the story of the Kəbrä nägäśt. Verney Lovett Cameron, a British soldier who served in the campaign of 1868, wrote a novel titled The Queen's Land, or Ard al Malakat (London 1886) about a race of Africans descended from the Queen of Sheba. Budge's good friend Rider Haggard also wrote about the Queen of Sheba in books that remain some of the best-selling ever published, influencing several generations of popular writers. Two feature the Queen of Sheba by name—his third novel King Solomon's Mines (London 1885) is about a "walda nagast" named Maqueda. The Kəbrä nägäśt continued to exert an effect over time on English literature, also inspiring George Post Wheeler's The Golden Legend of Ethiopia: the Love Story of Makeda, Virgin Queen of Axum and Sheba, and Solomon the Great King (New York 1936) and more recently Prue Sobers's Makeda (Victoria 2011).

Writing in 1900–1950

The early 1900s saw quite a few English novels or dramas set in Ethiopia. They included the British author Gilbert Frankau's Masterson: the Story of an English Gentleman (London 1926), which told of a European at Emperor ↗Mənilək II's court. For the first time, an American text focused entirely on Ethiopia, with the African American playwrights Jesse Shipp and Alex Rogers writing a humorous drama Abyssinia (New York 1906), also focused on politics in Mənilək's court. This perhaps inspired African American playwright Willis Richardson's drama In Menelik's Court (Washington, DC 1935) about a love affair between an Ethiopian commoner and princess.

Awareness of Ethiopia was much enhanced by Emperor ↗Ḫaylä Śəllase I's spectacular ↗coronation in 1930. This was attended by many foreign observers, including the aspiring author Evelyn ↗Waugh. He described his travels in a work differently entitled Remote People (London 1931) and They Were Still Dancing (London 1932), after which he proceeded to author a satirical novel, Black Mischief (London 1932), which did not mention Ethiopia by name, but was clearly a skit on Ḫaylä Śəllase's court. Waugh returned to Ethiopia at the time of the ↗Italian war of 1935–36, after which he produced another travelogue, Waugh in Abyssinia (London 1936), followed by a further work of imagination: Scoop (London 1938), which was set in an imaginary Republic of Ismailia. Waugh's two novels became classics, and were translated into many languages.

Italy's entry into ↗World War II, and the ensuing extensive fighting in the Horn of Africa, resulted in further novels. The first of these, Frederick H. Rose's Four Kings in the Street of Gold (London 1942), featured the Ethiopian Patriots, while several other writings highlighted the role of British officers: Alan Samuel Lyle-Smythe's Rogue Gambit (London 1955), Gerald Gordon's The Crooked Rain (London 1957) and James A. Brown's The Anthill (London 1958), later renamed Seven against the Sun (London 1960), which was converted into a play.

Consciousness of Ethiopia was also fostered by the publication of English adventure stories for children: E. Malcolm Shard, Flying for Ethiopia (London 1936), Air Commodore L.E.O. Charlton, The Secret of Lake Tana (London 1936), and Dennis Wheatley's highly acclaimed The Secret War (London 1937). One of the popular Tarzan series, Edgar R. Borroughs's Tarzan and the City of Gold (London 1936), featured the hero encountering some "šəfta" while in Ethiopia.

Meanwhile, the invasion of Ethiopia produced a strong reaction among African American authors. African American playwright Theodore J. Ward wrote the drama Falcon of Adowa (New York 1938), which focuses on Ḫaylä Śəllase. Joseph Harvey Lowell Baxter came out with Sonnets for the Ethiopians and Other Poems (Roanoke, VA 1936). Other African American writings included Charles Henry Holmes, Ethiopia, the Land of Promise (New York 1917), and Clarence L. Blakely, The Ethiopian (New York 1931), while George S. Schuyler contributed two serialized stories to the Pittsburgh Courier: "The Ethiopian Murder Mystery: a Story of Love and International Intrigue" (1935–36) and "Revolt in Ethiopia: a Tale of Black Insurrection against Italian Imperialism" (1938/39). It seems likely that many African American novels that did not mention Ethiopia were nevertheless inspired by tales about the place, such as Pauline Hopkins's pan-Africanist epic Of One Blood (New York 1902).

Writing after 1950

The post-war period witnessed such a large growth in Ethiopia-based English literature that it is not possible to do justice to it here. Some was historical fiction focussing on specific periods. The ↗Zagʷe dynasty thus provided the background for the American writers Alice Lide and Margaret Johansen's Mystery of the Mahteb (New York 1942), while religious rivalry in the country over the centuries provided the leitmotiv of John Trench's Beyond the Atlas (London 1963). Age-old customs were illustrated in the West Indian Dave Talbot's The Musical Bride (New York 1962) and in Dorothy Farella's The Straw Umbrella (London 1968), while the American journalist Edmund P. Murray's Kulubi (New York 1973), had much to say about pilgrimage and the making of vows in Ethiopia. Emperor Mənilək's redoubtable consort Queen ↗Ṭaytu Bəṭul meanwhile caught the attention of an Italian American author, Settimo Salbucci, who wrote by no means flatteringly of her in his His Taitu: Empress of Ethiopia (New York 1961).

In sharp contrast to the above was Alan Scholefield, The Hammer of God (London 1973), which featured the modernising reign of Emperor ↗Tewodros II. Tewodros later inspired Mason McCann Smith's When the Emperor Dies (London 1983) and Philip Marsden's The Barefoot Emperor: An Ethiopian Tragedy (New York 2007). Fascination with the life in Ethiopia of the sometime French poet Arthur Rimbaud led to the composition of two novels: James R. Ullman's The Day of Fire (London 1959) and Paul Strathern's A Season in Abyssinia (London 1972).

A variety of books for children were also published in both Britain and the United States. These included Duane Bradley's Meeting with a Stranger (Philadelphia, PA 1964), Laura Bannon's Nemo Meets the Emperor (Chicago, IL 1965), Wendy Kindred's Negatu in the Garden (New York 1970), and part of Pat Baldwin's widely read children's reader A Streatley Family Story (London – Eastbourne 1970). Two books were also written by Richard Sherrington, a British Council employee: The Treasure of Lebna Dengel (Addis Ababa 1970) and Adventure in Addis Ababa (Addis Ababa 1972), set in contemporary Ethiopia. More recently, Jane Kurtz, who grew up in south-west Ethiopia, has written a series of children's novels, including Fire on the Mountain (New York 1994), retelling an Ethiopian folktale; Pulling the Lion's Tale (New York 1995) and Only a Pigeon (New York 1997), telling stories of two Ethiopian children in the 1990s; Faraway Home (Orlando, FL et al. 2000), about a migrant child discovering her Ethiopian roots, and Saba: Under the Hyena's Foot (New York 2003), set in Ethiopia of 1846. The Scottish novelist Elizabeth Laird won numerous awards for The Garbage King (London – New York 2003), about street children in Addis Abäba. Getty Ambau published an adventure novel Desta and King Solomon's Coin of Magic and Fortune (Guilford CT 2010).

The religion of ↗Rastafari inspired quite a few works as well. Derek Walcott's 1976 drama O Babylon! addresses those who long for a visit from "Emperor Selassie, Jah Rastafari, Lion of Judah and King of Kings […] the one God". Roger Mais's Brother Man (London 1954) is about a Messianic folk Rastafarian healer.

The fate of the ↗Betä Ǝsraʾel in Israel motivated a number of works including Sonia Levitin's The Return (New York 1987) and Jeffrey Schrier's On the Wings of Eagles: An Ethiopian Boy's Story (Brookfield, CT 1998).

A book that had a massive impact on the portrayal of Ethiopia in popular English-language fiction was the pseudo-academic Graham Hancock's The Sign and the Seal: The Quest for the Lost Ark of the Covenant (New York 1992).

In the 21st cent., English readers showed no sign of losing interest in Ethiopia. Rather, Abraham Verghese's novel Cutting for Stone (New York 2010), about twins born in a mission hospital in Addis Abäba, sold over a million copies and was on the New York Times paperback fiction list for more than two years. Ethiopia and Eritrea have served as the backdrop of Robert Cohen's Amateur Barbarians (New York 2009), Thomas Keneally's To[wards] Asmara (Sydney 1989) and the award-winning Sweetness in the Belly by Camilla Gibb (Toronto 2005). Several thrillers were also set in the region, including Wilbur Smith's Cry Wolf (London 1988), set on the eve of the Italian invasion, and the present-day Gryffyn Jade Phoenix's Seat of God (Miami, FL 2013) and Anne-Marie Ruff's Through these Veins (Trenton, NJ 2011).

The memories and stories of the numerous refugees from the Horn of Africa, including Ethiopia and Eritrea, found their way into such books as Dave Egger's bestseller What is What (New York 2006). Meanwhile, important memoirs about experiences in Ethiopia have been written in English, inclusing Daniel Coleman's The Scent of Eucalyptus: A Missionary Childhood in Ethiopia (Fredericton, Canada 2003), Tim Bascom and Ted Hoagland's Chameleon Days: An American Boyhood in Ethiopia (New York 2006), and Dawit Wolde Giorgis' Red Tears: War, Famine, and Revolution in Ethiopia (Lawrenceville, NJ 1988).

Many migrants of Ethiopian and Eritrean descent have emerged as widely acclaimed English-language writers.

These include Nega Mezlekia, Notes from the Hyena's Belly (New York 2001) and The God Who Begat a Jackal (New York 2003); Dinaw Mengestu, The Beautiful Things That Heaven Bears (New York 2008); Maaza Mengiste, Beneath the Lion's Gaze (New York 2010); and Benjamin Zephaniah, Refugee Boy (New York 2001).

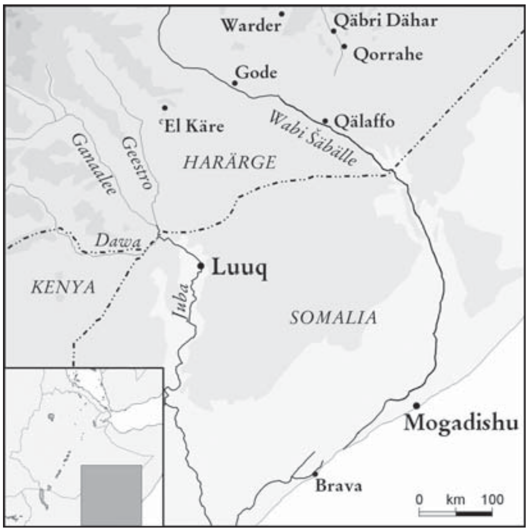
Luuq

L. (also Luuq Ganaane; 3° 49' N, 42° 33' E) is a town in ↗Somalia, and capital of the homonymous district (Degmada Luuq) in the Gedo region (Gobolka Gedo), some 300 km from the coast near the present Ethiopian border. Most part of the ca. 35,000 inhabitants of L. are the pastoralists of the Gasar Gudda group (a section of the wider Digil and Mirifle clan family) and the marginalized group of the Gubahin (of Bantu origin; ↗Marginalized people). Marreḥān Somali (Marrexan, ↗Daarood clan family) are also well present in L. town and in the region.

L. is located on a sinuous bend of the Juba River which encircles the whole town. The Dawa, ↗Ganaalee and Geestro rivers merge together to form the Juba in the vicinity of L. which is thus an important point to control the whole hydrographic basin.

The first mention of L. can apparently be found in the report of Captain Thomas Smee who in January 1811 was sent by the Bombay Government to collect information on the African coast of the Indian Ocean: according to Captain Smee's informants, at that time L. (called "Gannana, a town on right bank of the Govind" in the source) was composed of 300 "huts" (Smee 1814: 73; Alpers 1983: 444).

On 15 March 1893 Matteo Grixoni, a member of the Juba expedition, who, after a dispute, abruptly abandoned Vittorio ↗Bottego's group in Arsi, headed towards L. and according to some sources entered the village (Bottego 1895: 373; Ferrandi 1903: 7). It is, however, more likely that Grixoni was not allowed to enter L. and that he only camped in the vicinity (Bonati 1997: 177f.).



On 2 June 1893 engineer Walter Borchardt, member of the second ↗Ruspoli expedition, fell ill and was sent with Emilio Dal Seno to L. to recover (ibid.: 209–12): thus the two were most probably the first Europeans to enter L. (ibid.: 284f.).

Between the 17th and the 21st of July 1893, Vittorio Bottego, still on his Juba expedition, stayed in L. before leaving to Brava together with Dal Seno and Borchardt (Bottego 1895: 360–72). Bottego's travelogue contains a long descriptive chapter on L. (ibid.: 373–454) in which the Italian explorer – as it was recently demonstrated (Bonati 1997: 286, 291 n. 41) – almost all copied of Dal Seno's field notes without any acknowledgment.

The strategic value of the village on the trade route connecting the port towns of Somalia to the Ethiopian and Kenyan hinterland was immediately evident to the Italian colonialists (in particular to the Compagnia Filonardi administering the Benaadir coast on behalf of the Italian government). Also the Ethiopians in their southeast expansion tried to get control of L. and repeatedly raided it. Local population asked for the protection of the Italian costal authorities against the Ethiopian incursions. On 18 November 1895 the Italian explorer Ugo ↗Ferrandi arrived in L. together with the second Bottego expedition. In L. he established a permanent commercial station and had a small fortress built. He was then appointed residente on behalf of the Filonardi Company. He successfully repulsed several attacks of the Ethiopian troops led by däggazmač Wäldä Gäbrəʾel and däggazmač Asfa Wässän, who were definitively defeated in December 1896. While staying in L., Ferrandi collected an impressive amount of information on the history, the culture and the economy of L. which was published in a first report in 1902 and then in a full-fledged monograph in 1903.

In 1897 Ferrandi was succeeded as governor of L. by Saᶜid Muḥammad Sayf, brother of the wali of Brava. In 1905 L. was eventually incorporated into the Commissariato Regionale dell'Alto Giuba of the colony of Somalia Italiana. In 1933 it was renamed Lugh Ferrandi by the Italian administration and was confirmed in its status of residenza counting about 5,000 inhabitants (Guida 594).

In the Somali Republic, L. was considered of crucial military importance due to its proximity to the Ethiopian and Kenyan borders, its exceptional location on the Juba River and its key position in the trade routes of the costal merchants. Moreover, the fame of L. was enhanced by the never officially confirmed rumour that President Siyaad Barre was born there.

After the fall of the Somali state, in July 1992, an Islamic court was created in L. under the influence of the Islamic radical movement al-Ittiḥād al-islāmī, and with the support of clan elders and influential learned men. The court, however, exerted its jurisdiction only on the local Marreḥān clan and functioned until August 1996 (Marchal 2009: 384f.). Subsequently, the town of L. and its region remained under the military and political control of both Ḥizb al-Islām and Ḥarakat šabāb al-muǧāhidīn Islamic militias who eventually joined forces in December 2010. On 7 March 2011 the army of the Transitional Federal Government of Somalia announced that it had conquered L., expelling all insurgent forces from the town. However, reports from L. confirm that clashes between the Somali government and the Šabāb continue to the present day.

M

Mäftəḥe śəray

The M.ś. (መፍትሔ ፡ ሥራይ, 'the loosening of the spell') is the general title of closely related Gəᶜəz ↗magic texts which have a protective function.

The M.ś. are transmitted in a large number of manuscripts, both in miscellaneous collections and as isolated texts, as well as on ↗magic scrolls. The only edition of M.ś. was prepared by Strelcyn (1955; s. pp. LII–LVIII for the list of manuscripts), therefore large parts of this article are based on Strelcyn's work. The text is frequently accompanied by magic drawings; a good example is the ms. Vat. Aeth. 128 (GréTisVat 504–19) written by bälambaras ↗Giyorgis, who completed the text with a rich collection of magic drawings in Gəᶜəz, Latin, Greek, and Arabic.

The texts referred to as the M.ś. vary considerably in length and composition, mostly due to the manuscript format: scrolls often feature only excerpts from the M.ś. Unlike other texts of magic literature, they are all intended to protect against all possible evil spells and ↗demons and sorcerers who command them, up to the extent of throwing back the curses and excommunicating the evil magicians (cp. Strelcyn 1955: XVI, 11). In this the M.ś. shows a certain degree of violence, since it tends not only to defend but also to attack.

Part of the magic of the M.ś. comes from the magic names (↗asmat), words (qalat) and ↗ṭälsäm-drawings (such as angelic alphabet and magic squares; cp. ibid. XXXVIIIff., LXf.); these elements can be found in most manuscripts and indicate the Hellenistic background of this text type (similar sigils appear in Coptic and Copto-Arabic magic papyri; cp. ibid. XL–XLVII). Other elements of the M.ś. typical of magic literature include references to "melos the fiery sword", the ↗moon, the stars and the ↗sun, the Archangels Michael and Gabriel. A special role is assigned to the magician and martyr ↗Cyprian of Antioch, to whom the M.ś. refers on several occasions. The M.ś. is sometimes referred to as the Qopriyanos (i.e. 'St. Cyprian'). The so-called "long" redaction of the Ethiopic Prayer of Cyprian (tr. by Basset 1896 and ed. and tr. Grohmann 1917–18) is very similar to the M.ś. in requesting to loosen the spells with the support of Cyprian (s. Strelcyn 1955: 177).

The M.ś. provides instructions on how to draw ṭälsäm, or recipes on how to prepare magic ink, for instance: "collect seven leaves of ləbč̣, awəṣ and couch grass from seven different places, let the leaves soak in green ink. Squeeze the juice of a lemon and mix with the ink, then write with a reed pen" (cp. ibid. 293). Recipes for certain ↗diseases are also provided, such as eating special roots against vomiting (ibid. 295f.). Many of these are written in a mix of Amharic and Gəᶜəz. Allusions to the recipes can be found in the collection published by Griaule (1930, s. index).

The M.ś. features extensive descriptions of black magic. Mention is made of actions performed by the sorcerers "who bring chronic disease [...] who touch the ↗tabot, who pocket earth, who knot threats, who engrave stones, who break trees [...]" (cp. Strelcyn 1955: 13; cp. also the similar list in Littmann 1904: 20).

Next to the general denomination of sorcerers, witches and wizards, the M.ś. addresses representatives of certain social, geographic or ethnic groups as the evil adversary (old women, slaves, "Galla" [↗Oromo], ↗Kəmant, "Fälaša" [↗Betä Ǝsraᵓel], ↗šanqəlla, ↗Barya, Egyptians, Turks, Europeans; cp. Dobberahn 1976: 59f., 153–57; s. lists in Strelcyn 1955: 337–58).

Mäḥammäde

Mäḥammäde (መሐመዴ, also Mäḥammäd) was the local ruler of ↗Yəfat in the first half of the 18th cent. He carried the title of ↗wälasma and acted in close political and military alliance with the first ↗märəd azmač of ↗Šäwa ↗Səbəstyanos (1703–19) and his successor ↗Abbəyye (1719–43).

Biographical information on M. is very scanty. He was present in Šola Meda at the official mourning celebration held by Səbəstyanos in honour of his father ↗Nägaśi Krəstos. On that occasion, Səbəstyanos wanted to consult M. personally before officially proclaiming himself märəd azmač (BTafA 506f.; AWTarik 40, 78). The cooperation of M. with the emerging Šäwa dynasty continued and was even strengthened under the rule of märəd azmač Abbəyye. Together with Abbəyye M. fought and defeated the Karrayyu (↗Baarentuu) Oromo (BTafA 430f.). Subsequently, M. supported the märəd azmač of Šäwa against the troops of king ↗Iyasu II (AWTarik 42, 82f.), which were crushed at Ayne (BTafA 430f.).

It is not fully clear whether the wälasma Amäde to whom Abbəyye granted the newly conquered lowlands up the ↗Käsäm River (BTafA 508f.) was the successor of M., Amäde possibly being another form of his name.

The reliability of the mention of a "Walasma Mohammed of Goncho" defeated by Abbəyye in the battle of Kaso and made tributary of Šäwa (Stitz in USCES 191), lacking any reference to written sources, remains difficult to ascertain.

Maḥṣ́äntä Maryam

Abba M.M. (ማሕፀንተ ፡ ማርያም; d. 1699/1700) was an ecclesiastic and historian from ↗Ṣäᵓazzäga, prominent for having started the compilation of the so-called Annals of ᶜAddi Näᶜammən, a short chronicle of the ↗Däqqi Täššəm and ↗Ḥamasen covering the period from ca. 1347 to ca. 1780.

M.M. was ordained priest ca. 1642/43 (KolTrad III, A11), and it is probable that he started compiling the Annals soon after, adding the narration for contemporary events and markedly re-editing an earlier text, which possibly originated from ↗Däbrä Bizän (ibid., A13). The compilation was continued after the death of M.M., since at least two more hands can be distinguished in the manuscript for the period after M.M.'s death (one appearing in 1700 and the other in 1703/04, ibid., A11).

This M.M. should not be confused with his older contemporary, M.M. of Mändabba, a member of the Ethiopian community in ↗Jerusalem, who in 1637 brought a 14th-cent. copy of the Biblical Books of Kings (↗Historical Books) – once a gift of aṣe ↗ᶜAmdä Ṣəyon – to ↗Santo Stefano dei Mori (Borg. aeth. 3; GréTisVat I, 782–87; Roupp 1902: 303; Rahlfs 1918: 185ff.). The manuscript served as a Vorlage for the ms. BN éth. 1–2 (ZotBNat 1–4), copied in 1666 by ↗Wansleben together with the colophon mentioning M.M.

Mälläs Zenawi

M.Z. (መለስ ፡ ዜናዊ, born as Läggäsä Zenawi; b. 9 May 1955, ᶜAdwa, d. 20 August 2012, Brussels) was a guerrilla fighter and Prime Minister of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia, a position he held between 1995 until his death.

Läggäsä was the son of Zenawi ᶜAsräs from Təgray and Alämaš Gäbrä Ləᵓul from ᶜAddi Ḵʷala, near Asmära. He later assumed his nom de guerre as a tribute to the student activist Mälläs Täkle, who was killed by the Därg (↗Provisional Military Administrative Council).

M.Z. received his elementary education at the Queen of Sheba Junior Secondary School in ᶜAdwa. He completed high school in 1972 at the General Wingate School in Addis Abäba after which he joined the Medical Faculty of the Ḫaylä Śəllase I University (↗Addis Ababa University) where he studied for two years and became actively involved in the student union of the university (↗Student movement).

In 1974 M.Z. joined the newly formed ↗Tigray People's Liberation Front (TPLF). In 1976 he was transferred to the TPLF Political Department, heading the cadre schooling section. In 1977 he was co-opted as a senior cadre into the leadership committee, he was elected to the committee in 1979 and to its executive committee in 1983.

M.Z. was a key member of the forces that toppled the Därg regime. Since 1989, he had been chairman of both the TPLF and the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front, a political alliance of the four main political organizations in the country. Upon the defeat of the military junta, M.Z. became President of the Provisional Government of Ethiopia (28 May to 10 August 1991), and then President of the Transitional Government (August 1991 to August 1995). When, in 1995, the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia was proclaimed M.Z. became its Prime Minister.

From June 1995 to June 1996 M.Z. served as chairman of the ↗Organization of African Unity, as chairperson of the New Partnership for African Development and of its Heads of State and Government Orientation Committee as well as co-chairman of the Global Coalition for Africa. He also served as a regional spokesman on international platforms.

In 2009 M.Z. was appointed as Chair of the African Heads of State and Government on Climate Change representing the African continent at the climate talks. He was also the chairperson of the Inter Governmental Authority on Development for five years and was actively involved in the efforts to end the conflicts in the ↗Sudan and ↗Somalia.

During his 21 years as head of government, M.Z. earned himself two university degrees in business through distance learning. He was married to Azeb Mäsfən. They had three children. He was buried on 20 September 2012 in the Qəddəst Śəllase Cathedral in Addis Abäba.

Mammo Wəddənäh

M.W. (ማሞ ፡ ውድነህ, also ᶜAlämayyähu [name used by M.W.'s mother], baptismal name Gäbrä Mikaʾel; b. 22 October 1930 or 1934, Təlala, Wäg Həmra, Wällo, d. 2 March 2012) was an Ethiopian journalist, translator and author.

M.W.'s parents died when he was young (he later remembered that his mother was killed in bombings during the Italian war of 1935–36) and he was brought up by relatives. He started his traditional ↗education in a priest-run school in ᶜAmdä Wärq just after the death of his mother. After four or five years in this school, he worked for two years as a clerk for a relative who was a judge. When he read from newspapers for the illiterate people in the place, he was praised as a "scholar", and that is when M.W. decided to become a journalist and writer. When he was about 15, he was helped to get into the Nəguś Mikaʾel School in Däse (directed by an Indian recorded as Mr. Daniel). After five-six years, he was taken ill and not re-admitted to the school, so he went to Addis Abäba, where, after several months, he was able to get work for a relative during the day and go to evening classes in the Bərhane Zare Näw School (where David ↗Talbot was the director). He completed grade 10 two years later.

At about the age of 25, M.W. was employed in the distribution office of the film section of the United States Information Service (USIS), and he learned to use film projectors. At this time, he started to write newspaper articles, mostly translating them into Amharic. The editor of ↗Addis Zämän at the time was the well-known author blattengeta ↗Wäldä Giyorgis Wäldä Yoḥannəs, and he taught M.W. to become a journalist. After some years, he was employed in the film section and library of the Soviet Permanent Exhibition in Addis Abäba. He continued to publish translated articles and became well known, eventually becoming a senior reporter for Addis Zämän. He also married about this time, and he got six children (four sons and two daughters) by his wife. They remained married for about 50 years.

In September 1960, M.W. was transferred to ↗police headquarters in order to start their newspaper Polisənna ərməǧǧaw, which became very popular. The first copy appeared 2 November 1960, and 25 January 1961 there was an important article about the abortive coup d'état attempt in December 1960. During the five years M.W. spent with the police, he grew interested in espionage, and he started to write and translate books in this field; the first was Yäsetwan fätäna (1961/62). He was to publish 13 such books, among the most popular of the over 60 books (eight of them plays) that he wrote or (mostly) translated.

During this time, M.W. had been able to travel widely in Ethiopia. Due to articles M.W., who was then working for the Ministry of Information, had written after interviews with the governor of Eritrea, ↗Aśratä Kasa, he was invited by the governor to come to Asmära to work in the press department there. M.W. stayed in Eritrea from 1965 until the Ethiopian revolution of 1974. In addition to newspaper articles and policy papers about "the Eritrean problem", he wrote twelve books on Eritrea, among them a historical novel about ras ↗Alula Ǝngəda (Alula Abbanäga; turned into a play and staged in 1973).

After his return to Addis Abäba, he continued to write about the Eritrean question and other political matters, but he met much opposition, and many of his books were banned by the censors. Then he started to write sociological novels, about the various voluntary mutual help organizations in Ethiopia: ᶜƎqqubtäññočču (1983/84), and in quick succession came, Ǝddərtäññočču and Maḫbärtäññočču. After that, he continued to write on such subjects as espionage, politics, history, economics, and social questions.

M.W. was not given government employment after his return from Eritrea, but he kept his salary (and for many years he had a small office in the library of the ↗Institute of Ethiopian Studies at Addis Ababa University), and he had income from his many books and (as he said) thousands of articles, practically all in Amharic, and only a few in English. He died of heart disease and was buried at the cemetery of the Qəddəst Śəllase cathedral.

Mantel-Niećko, Joanna

M.-N. (b. 14 August 1933, Warsaw, d. 28 October 2009, Warsaw) was a prominent Polish scholar of ↗Ethiopian Studies.

M.-N. enrolled at the Department of Semitic Studies of the Institute of Oriental Studies of Warsaw University in 1951. In 1956 she graduated with an M.A. thesis on the Old Amharic Royal Songs: Grammatical Analysis, Translation and Commentaries (in Polish) and was employed as assistant lecturer. In 1966 she completed her Ph.D. thesis, devoted to a topic in ↗Amharic linguistics (publ. 1969).

M.-N. subsequently focused on history, producing, together with Andrzej Bartnicki, one of the few comprehensive textbooks on Ethiopian history (1971, ^{2}1987). In 1976 M.-N. was awarded the degree of Doctor habilitatus for her study on Ethiopian ↗land tenure (publ. 1980).

From 1977 to 1987, M.-N. headed the Department of African Languages and Cultures which she had established. In 1993 she became full Professor. She also launched and edited the periodical Studies of the Department of African Languages and Cultures. For many years, she represented Poland on the International Organizing Committee of the ↗International Conferences of Ethiopian Studies.

M.-N. was also involved in other aspects of academic life. The documents she collected during her activity as a secretary for the Warsaw University Senate Committee for the Imprisoned (1982–86) were the basis for her 1991 monograph on the history of Warsaw University. From 1987 to 1990 she was secretary for the Committee for Social and Law Assistance at the office of the President of the University.

M.-N.'s broad research interests, which ranged from linguistics and philology to history and social studies, allowed her to publish on different subjects and apply different research methodology. To this end, she often collaborated with other specialists, co-authoring many publications.
